Four quaternions of ſoldiers.] Peter being impriſoned, obſerve, What an exceſs of care and caution Herod takes for ſecuring his priſoner: Sixteen ſoldiers are ſet to guard him; four at a time, and to take their turns at the four watches of the night, to relieve one another Thence learn, That the enemies of the church make the ſureſt work they can, when at any time God permits his ſervants to fall into any of their hands. Thus they dealt with the head, when they had apprehended him; The watch-word was, "Hold him faſt," St. Matth. xxvi. 48. When they crucified him, they "nailed him to the croſs:" When they buried him, they "made the ſepulchre ſure, ſealing the ſtone, and ſetting a watch:" And thus they deal with the members; St. Peter has guard upon guard ſet over him; ſome ſoldiers chained to him, and others always ſtanding at the door to obſerve him. But all this care, concern, and caution, to ſecure the priſoner, did illuſtrate the glory of the miracle in his wonderful deliverance. (B.)

After eaſter to bring him forth.] He was reſerv'd till then, either, 1. In honour of the feaſt: Or, 2. That the Chriſtians, who, tho' they were hated by the rulers of the Jews, were yet in "favour with all the people," ch. ii. 47. might not prevail with others to beg his life according to the cuſtom of that feaſt; Or, elſe, 3. To avoid a tumult. (W.) See the notes on Matth. xxvi. 5. xxvii. 15. Mark xv. 8. and Luke xxiii. 17.

Prayer was made without ceaſing.] That is, fervent and importunate prayer was put up to God by the church on Peter's behalf: With the united ſtrength of their whole ſouls they ſtormed heaven, and took him by force out of Herod's hand. Learn, 1. That when the church is plunged into deep perplexities, the only help ſhe can hope for, muſt come unto her in the way of prayer. 2. That when God ſuffers any of the miniſters of the church to fall under the rage of perſecutors, it is the church's duty, to wreſtle with God by prayer in an extraordinary manner on their behalf. 3. That when God intends to beſtow any extraordinary mercy upon his church, he ſtirs up the hearts of his people to pray for it in a very extraordinary manner. (B.) That ſuch prayers are prevalent, for the preſervation of very eminent members of the church, we learn, not only from this inſtance, but alſo from thoſe words of St Paul, "I know this ſhall happen to my preſervation, thro' your prayers," Philip. i. 19. and, "I hope, I ſhall through your prayers be given to you," Philem. 22. The word ectenes primarily ſignifies extended: But becauſe the fervency of our deſire is uſually the cauſe that we pray much, or long, for any thing; therefore to pray ectenoos, is alſo to pray fervently, and importunately, Luke xxii. 14. (W.) Thus the Litany, or ſupplication of the church, frequently, for ſome ſpace, to ſeveral matters applying the ſame words, "We beſeech thee to hear us," and the like, is, in the ancient Liturgies, called ectenes, the vehement, fervent, importunate form of ſupplication. (H.) And hence the deacon was wont to call often upon the people, Ectenoos deethomen, Let us pray earneſtly; And then again, ecteneſteron, more earneſtly: And the ſame vehemence and earneſt devotion does our church call for, in theſe words, "Let us pray;" warning us thereby, to lay aſide all wandring thoughts, and to attend to the great work we are about. (Sparr. and Wheatly) See the notes on Luke xviii. 1.

Peter was ſleeping.] Obſerve, 1. Peter continued in priſon till the very night before "Herod intended to bring him out to the people;" and if they deſired it, 'tis probable, he intended to put him to death the next day. Learn thence, That God oft-times ſuffers his children to come to the pit's brink, and then delivers them; that they may be the more ſenſible of his mercy, and have the greater cauſe to magnify his power. Peter was now come to his laſt night; the tyrant Herod probably intended his execution next morning: Now was the time for God to ſtep in. Our extremity is his opportunity. Obſerve farther, That, notwithſtanding Peter's imminent and impending danger, he ſleeps very ſoundly; reſigning up himſelf into the hands of Chriſt, and reſolving that if he may no longer live Chriſt's ſervant, that he will die his ſacrifice. I queſtion, whether Herod that impriſoned him ſlept half ſo ſoundly. Lord! how ſoft and ſecure a pillow is a good conſcience, even in the confines of death, and in the very jaws of danger! Obſerve laſtly, That God takes moſt care of Peter, when he was able to take leaſt care of himſelf: When he was aſleep, and altogether inſenſible of his danger, God was awake, and acting effectually in order to his deliverance. Happy priſoners! who have God with them in priſon: Such are priſoners of hope indeed; and ſhall certainly experience divine help. (B.) The more a good man is treated like a criminal, the more ought he to comfort himſelf, in bearing the reſemblance of Jeſus Chriſt, humbled under the injuſtice of men. He who can ſleep in ſuch circumſtances as theſe, ſhews plainly the extraordinary peace and tranquility of his mind in the greateſt dangers, his exceeding contempt of life, and his firm truſt and confidence in God. (Q.)

The angel of the Lord came.] Obſerve here, 1. That God hath ſometimes made uſe of the miniſtry of angels to effect deliverance for his people. 2. The ſeveral good offices which the angel now did for Peter, in order to his enlargement. Peter is aſleep, the angel awakes him; he is laid, the angel raiſes him; he is amazed, the angel directs him; he is bound, the angel unties him; he knows not where he is, the angel goes before him, and guides him; He is to paſs through many difficulties, the angel conducts him. Lord! how innumerable are the good offices, which at thy command the holy angels do for us; tho' they are not ſenſibly in this manner apprehended by us! What love and ſervice do we owe to thee! What honour and reſpect ſhould we pay to them, for their care over us, and attendance upon us! 3. Peter muſt ariſe, gird himſelf, bind on his ſandals, caſt his garment about him, follow the angel, and uſe his own endeavours in order to his own deliverance. God will have him uſe the means, even then when he was about to work a miracle for him: What a tempting of God is it then, to neglect the means, when we cannot expect miracles? As to truſt to means, is to neglect God; ſo to neglect the means, is to tempt God. We muſt always ſubſerve the providence of God, in the uſe of ſuch means as his wiſdom has appointed and directed us unto. Laſtly, that this deliverance was ſo amazing and ſurprizing, that Peter thought it a dream only, ver. 9. "He wiſt not that it was true, but thought he ſaw a viſion." Learn thence, That ſometimes the deliverances of the godly from imminent and apparent dangers, are ſo very wonderful, and attended with ſuch a crowd of improbabilities, that they have much ado to believe them, tho' they ſee them with their eyes. When God turned the captivity of Peter, he was "like unto them that dream." Pſalm cxxvi. 1. (B.) See the notes on chap. v. 19. and Heb. i. 14.

His chains fell off.] That ſome ſoldiers of Herod, converted to the Chriſtian faith, ſhould mark, and take away theſe chains, and give them to the biſhop of Jeruſalem; and that they ſhould be kept as a treaſure, not only through all the Jewiſh wars, but about four hundred years after, till Juvenal, biſhop of Jeruſalem, gave them to Eudoxia, wife to Theodoſius the younger, who gave one of them to the church of St. Peter in Conſtantinople, and ſent the other to Rome, is a tale of Surius, that ſmells too rank of ſuperſtition to deſerve the leaſt credit. (W.) And yet, in the Roman Breviary, this legend is gravely appointed to be read, as if it were a leſſon of the Goſpel; wherein theſe very chains are ſaid to be (auro gemmiſque ornatæ) adorned with gold and jewels. And an hymn is ſolemnly addreſſed to St. Peter, in theſe words, (Accipe vota precantum, & peccati vincula reſolve, tibi poteſtate tradita, qua cunctis cælum verbo claudis, aperis) Receive our prayers, and looſe the chains of our ſins, by the authority given to thee, whereby thou, with a word, doſt ſhut or open heaven to all. See the notes on ver. 3.

The angel departed.] When he had done all things requiſite, on his part, for his deliverance, and which could not be done by Peter, he leaves what was farther requiſite, to compleat the deliverance, and render him ſecure from danger, to his own induſtry and prudence, hereby inſtructing us, not to expect an immediate aſſiſtance from God, in things he hath already put into our power, and given us abilities to perform. (W.)

Named Rhoda.] The vigilance, joy, faithfulneſs, zeal, and ſimplicity of this damſel are thought worthy to be taken notice of by Holy Ghoſt. God leaves the names of conquerors in oblivion, and delivers down to the church of all ages the name of a poor maid. By this he teaches us to eſteem and value goodneſs wherever it is found, without any regard to the condition of perſons. (Q.)

Then ſaid they, It is his angel.] The word angelos, angel, which by way of excellence is put to denote the immortal ſpirits attendant on God, doth primarily, and in the common uſe, ſignify a meſſenger; and from thence only denotes thoſe ſpirits, becauſe they are meſſengers of God, employed by him. And, conſequently, 'tis as certain, that it may ſignify here no more than a meſſenger from St. Peter. So it doth, Matt. xi. 10. Mark i. 2. Luke vii. 27, &c. And ſo the angels of the churches, Rev. i. 20. were not thoſe immortal ſpirits: But, as the apoſtles ſent meſſengers to ſeveral churches, who were to do according to their appointment, and ſome in their ſtead to rule and govern there, ſo were theſe the rulers of the churches appointed by the apoſtles. The only queſtion therefore will be, of theſe two poſſible notions of the word which is the fitter and more probable for this place: And for the rendering it, meſſenger, and not, angel, I ſhall only ſay, that the ſtory will thereby be very clear and intelligible, thus, That Peter knocked at the door, and Rhoda asking who was there, he anſwered, Peter. Thereupon ſhe knew his voice, and aſſured them within, that Peter was there: They having not heard the voice, but only hearing her affirm confidently that he was there, thought that ſome meſſenger had come from Peter, and made uſe of his name, and that ſhe had, by miſtake, believed it to be Peter himſelf; and ſo they thought they muſt reconcile the difficulty, betwixt the conceived impoſſibility of Peter's being there, on the one ſide, and the maid's affirming confidently that he was there, on the other ſide, viz. by this medium, betwixt both, that a meſſenger ſent from Peter was at the door, who made uſe of his name to obtain admiſſion. Whatſoever can be ſaid for the other rendring will, I conceive have more difficulty in it. (H. Howel, and Maſſey) See the notes on Matt. xviii. 10.

Go ſhew theſe things unto James.] That is, to St. James, who was then the biſhop of Jeruſalem; and to whom, as ſuch, this juſt deference was due. See the notes on chap. xv. 19.

He departed, and went into another place.] Obſerve here, the prudential care which St. Peter takes for his own preſervation. He could not think himſelf ſafe whilſt Herod was ſo near, no more than a lamb could be ſafe near the lion's den. He knew he ſhould be hunted for, therefore eſcapes for his life! And, beſides his own danger, he was not willing to endanger his friends, who did now entertain and harbour him; but both for his own and their preſervation, "he departs to another place." Learn, That a prudential uſe of all lawful means, for our own and others preſervation, in ſubſerviency to the Divine Providence, is our duty, our wiſdom, and intereſt, both as men and Chriſtians. (B.) See the notes on chap. ix. 25.

He went down from Judæa to Cæſarea.] That it was not Peter, as ſome imagine, but king Agrippa, who "went down from Judea to Cæſarea," we learn from Joſephus; who gives us a full account, both of this journey, and the occaſion of it, informing us, That he went down to the city of Cæſarea, to perform the ſolemnity, or the games celebrated there every Olympiad to the honour of Cæſar, and that the nobles and governors of the province of Syria repaired to that city on the ſame account; that on the ſecond day of the feſtival he came early into the theatre, cloathed with a wonderful garment, wholly made of ſilver, on which the ſun ſhining, it caſt forth a glorious ſplendour. Antiq. l. 19. c. 7. p. 678, 679. He farther adds, that flatterers came about him, calling him a god; and that the king did not repel or reprehend the impious blaſphemy. (W.) See the notes on ver. 23.

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. And Herod was highly diſpleaſed with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and having made Blaſtus the king's chamberlain their friend, deſired peace; becauſe their country was nouriſhed by the king's country. And upon a ſet day, Herod arrayed in royal apparel, ſat upon his throne, and made an oration to them. And the people gave a ſhout, ſaying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man. And immediately the angel of the Lord ſmote him, becauſe he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghoſt. But the word of God grew and multiplied. And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jeruſalem, when they had fulfilled their miniſtry, and took with them John, whoſe ſirname was Mark.

Highly diſpleaſed with them.] Thumomachoon. That is, he made war upon them in his heart, and bore hoſtile inclinations towards them.

Their country was nouriſhed by the king's country.] This appears from 1 Kings v. 9, 11. and Ezek. xxvii. 17.

The angel of the Lord ſmote him.] That he was ſmitten by the Lord, immediately on his receiving this impious flattery, is evident from Joſephus: For he ſaith, That after a while, he ſees the owl which was the meſſenger of his calamity; that a ſudden torment came upon him; and that thereupon he inſtantly tells the ſame auditors, He muſt die. Again, Joſephus doth not ſay, That he was "eaten up of worms:" But he ſaith, He had vehement torments in his bowels; which increaſing upon him, in five days he died; and they in that time might breed worms in him, as he confeſſes they did in his grandfather. And examples of the like exits of the perſecutors of the Chriſtian faith, we have many in church hiſtory. Thus Tertullian ſaith of one Claudius Heminianus, one of their perſecutors, That when worms broke forth of him whilſt he was alive, he ſaid, Let no man know it, leſt the Chriſtians ſhould rejoice. And Euſebius ſaith of Maximinian, That ſudden ulcers roſe in his fundament, and ſecret parts; from which ſprung an incredible multitude of worms: And, of the uncle of Julian the apoſtate, who perſecuted the Chriſtians, and trampled upon the ſacred veſſels, Theodoret and St. Chryſoſtom inform us, That he periſhed by this diſeaſe. An inſtance like to this, we have in Pherecydes Syrus, eaten up of lice, for boaſting of his great wiſdom and his pleaſant life, tho' he ſacrificed, ſaith Elian, to no god at all. So alſo was it under the Jewiſh ſtate: For, of Antiochus Epiphanes we read, That "worms ſprung out of the body of this wicked man," 2 Maccab. ix, 9. And of Herod the great, Joſephus owns, That he had a putrefaction producing worms, Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. p. 597. See Bochart. Hieroz. part 2. l. 4. c. 26. p. 620, 621. (W.) Euſebius, citing this paſſage from Joſephus, omits all that is ſaid of the owl, and inſtead of that has ſubſtituted an angel; mente quidem pia, at mala fide. But probably he might ſee both. (Cave) The Greeks are peculiarly happy in their compound words. Two or three beautiful words in this noble language naturally and eaſily incorporate together, to make one very elegant and very expreſſive word. This compoſition multiplies the ſtores and beauties of that language; and enables the writers to expreſs themſelves with compactneſs, variety and magnificence, ſuperior to moſt languages that mankind ſpeak. Thus, as the word thumomachoon, in ver. 20. is ſtrong both in ſound and ſignification, ſo the ignominy and tortures of that moſt odious and inſupportable diſeaſe, with which this haughty-ſpirited and tyranous mortal was immediately puniſhed, is here expreſſed in proper words, harſh-ſounding, and ſuitable to the direful occaſion; genomenos ſcolecobrotos exepſyxen, he expired, being devoured by vermin. (Blackw.)

The word of God grew and multiplied.] Obſerve, Herod the tyrant and perſecutor being dead, the Goſpel proſpered; and was preached up and down with great ſucceſs. Perſecutors, by their weak endeavours to pull down the church, do build it up the ſtronger. The church in Egypt never grew ſo high, as when Pharaoh laboured moſt to keep it low: The more he moleſted them, the more he multiplied them. Thus here, after Herod's death, and Peter's deliverance, "the word of God grew and multiplied:" that is, the number of believers increaſed through the preaching of the word, as ſeed is multiplied by the ſcattering of the hand: The word preached is the ſeed ſown in the furrows of the field: The ground was now harrowed by the hand of the perſecutors, and the ſeed grew the better, and the fruits of faith and obedience did by every ſhower of perſecution more and more abound. The truth of God may for a time be oppreſſed, but it ſhall never be fully and finally ſuppreſſed; ſtill "the word of God grew and multiplied." (B.) See the notes on chap. vi. 7.

Returned from Jeruſalem.] To which place they had carried the relief to the poor brethren, chap. xi. 29, 30.

John, whoſe ſirname was Mark.] To diſtinguiſh him from St. Mark the Evangeliſt. See more of him in chap. xv. 37, &c.

CHAP. XIII.

Paul and Barnabas ſent by the Holy Ghoſt, to preach to the Gentiles. Elymas the ſorcerer ſtricken blind. Sergius Paulus converted. Paul preaching at Antioch in Piſidia, many of the Gentiles believe in Chriſt: But the Jews, being obſtinate, are left to themſelves.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. NOW there were in the church that was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. As they miniſtred to the Lord, and faſted, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had faſted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they ſent them away.

Prophets and teachers] Here is ſome controverſy among the learned, of what order thoſe "prophets and teachers" were. Dr. Hammond thinks, they were biſhops of the churches of Syria. But Dr. Whitby will by no means admit this. Father Turrian fanſies, that by teachers here were meant presbyters, and by prophets biſhops; ſuppoſing alſo, that Barnabas and Saul were as yet only of the former order, till now that they were advanced to the latter by Simeon, Lucius, and Manaen, whom he reckons to have been already biſhops. But for this diſtinction, as Mr. Maſon well obſerves, there can be no good reaſon. For ſince the text ſays, "There were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers, as Barnabas, and Simeon, and Lucius, and Manaen, and Saul;" what reaſon can there be to think, that the firſt and laſt of the five ſhould be teachers, and the other three prophets? Much more probable is the opinion of Lorinus, who applies both titles to them all in common: Whence it follows, that Paul and Barnabas are to be reckoned both in the number of teachers and prophets. Wherefore, if theſe prophets were biſhops, as Turrian imagineth, then it will follow, that Paul aud Barnabas were biſhops, before this laying on of hands upon them; and conſequently Turrian, who fanſies they were then made biſhops, falls foul upon the rock of re-ordination. Moreover, St. Paul was "an apoſtle, not by men, but by Jeſus Chriſt," Gal. i. 1. And the apoſtleſhip comprehended in it all eccleſiaſtical power, and conſequently the epiſcopal; as is proved by Bellarmin, Fran. de Victoria, and others: He could not therefore receive the epiſcopal power from men. Wherefore, this laying on of hands was not to give them the epiſcopal power; but, as the text ſaith, "to ſeparate them for the work, whereunto the Holy Ghoſt had called them," ver. 9. and to "recommend them (with faſting and prayer) to the grace of God, for the work which they fulfilled," chap. xiv. 26. To which truth Suarez the Jeſuit giveth teſtimony, affirming, that this laying on of hands was only precatory, not conſecratory; and denying that Paul and Barnabas were either ordained or confirmed biſhops or prieſts: Which ſeemeth alſo to be the opinion of Aloyſ. de Leon, and other late writers. But this is enough. See the notes on chap. iv. 36. and xv. 32. and 1 Cor. xii. 28.

Simeon, that was called Niger.] He is by Epiphanius declared to have been one of the Seventy-two. (W.)

Manaen.] He was of that high rank and quality, that he was "brought up with Herod the tetrarch," at court, as his foſter-brother; and there probably converted by the preaching of John the Baptiſt. (Aſſ. H. Lightf. and B.)

As they miniſtred.] In the publick ſervice of God; as prayer, preaching, adminiſtration of the ſacraments, and other miniſterial offices. (Aſſ.)

The Holy Ghoſt ſaid.] By a prophetical revelation, either to ſome one or more of them. (Aſſ.)

Separate me Barnabas and Saul.] This aphoriſmos, this ſeparateneſs in the function of the clergy, does infer upon them a ſeparateneſs in life and converſation; and they who are thus ſet apart from the world, muſt "keep themſelves unſpotted from the world," James i. 27. To ſeparate and conſecrate are but two words for the ſame thing. "Separate three cities," is the command in Deut. xix. 2. and they ſanctified three, Joſh. xx. 7. Our offices aſſume them both; and all are holy orders. Now, ſeparate and pure are both ſo primitive, and ſo eſſential notions of Holy, that truly I cannot determine which of them is original, and which ſecondary. The conſecration does challenge both: And as the clergy are ſeparate in their calling, ſo they muſt be ſeparate in their lives, "not conforming themſelves to the world," Rom. xii. 2. for "I have choſen you out of the world," ſaith Chriſt, John xv. 19. A torrent licence of an age muſt not carry them along; an univerſal cuſtom of the world muſt be no precedent, and can be no excuſe for them to do what is irregular: They are aphoriſmenoi, ſeparate: And that the world does ſuch things, is no more a plea for them to do ſo, than that becauſe the world is common ground, therefore the church is ſo too; fit to be put to all the uſes of the field, or of worſe places. (Alleſt.)

For the work.] Tho' the office of the miniſtry be an honourable office, yet withal it is a laborious work. "Separate them for the work whereunto I have called them." 'Tis a work that requires attendance, and zealous application, both in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon: Praying, preaching, adminiſtring ſacraments; guiding and governing the flock by private admonition, and publick cenſure. Theſe are weighty works; found ſo now by thoſe that perform them faithfully, and will be found ſo at the great day by the ſlothful and negligent. How can that be eſteemed by any a ſlight and inconſiderable work, unto the faithful performance whereof, ſo great a reward is promiſed, and to the omiſſion whereof ſo dreadful a woe is denounced? If Satan deſtroy mens ſouls, he ſhall anſwer for them as a murderer only, not as an officer entruſted with the care of them: But if the watchman doth not warn, if the ſhepherd doth not feed, if the prophets do not inſtruct, if the ſteward doth not provide, he ſhall anſwer not only for the ſouls that have miſcarried, but for an office neglected, for a talent hidden, and for a ſtewardſhip unfaithfully adminiſter'd. Lord! how unable ſhall we be, at the making up of our accounts, to endure the hideous outcries of diſtreſſed ſouls, ſaying, Parentes ſenſimus parricidas! Our guides have miſled us, our watchmen have betrayed us, our ſtewards have defrauded us, and the following of their evil example has undone us. (B.)

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. So they being ſent forth by the Holy Ghoſt, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they ſailed to Cyprus. And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the ſynagogues of the Jews: and they had alſo John to their miniſter. And when they had gone through the iſle unto Paphos, they found a certain ſorcerer, a falſe prophet, a Jew, whoſe name was Barjeſus: Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and deſired to hear the word of God. But Elymas the ſorcerer (for ſo is his name by interpretation) withſtood them, ſeeking to turn away the deputy from the faith. Then Saul (who alſo is called Paul) filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſet his eyes on him, and ſaid, O full of all ſubtilty and all miſchief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteouſneſs, wilt thou not ceaſe to pervert the right ways of the Lord? And now behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou ſhalt be blind, not ſeeing the ſun for a ſeaſon. And immediately there fell on him a miſt, and a darkneſs; and he went about, ſeeking ſome to lead him by the hand. Then the deputy, when he ſaw what was done, believed, being aſtoniſhed at the doctrine of the Lord. Now when Paul and his company looſed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia; and John departing from them, returned to Jeruſalem.

Sent forth by the Holy Ghoſt.] When a man is called, and ſent by the church, which is enlightened and guided by the Holy Ghoſt, he is called and "ſent by the Holy Ghoſt" himſelf. (Q.) See ver. 3.

Sailed to Cyprus.] An iſland near the coaſt of Syria, ſo famous for its fertility, as to obtain the name of the rich and happy iſland: But withal very infamous for the worſhip of Venus, thence called Cypris, and Cypria; they conſecrating their women to adultery and whoredom, and by a law compelling them to lie with ſtrangers, as the Babylonians did. It was memorable among the Jews, who abounded ſo there, that at once, in Trajan's time, they ſlew, as Dio Caſſius relates, 240,000 men there; and St. Jerome, That the Jews overthrew Salamis, killing all the Gentiles therein: But 'tis much more deſervedly renowned among Chriſtians, for the birth of St. Barnabas the apoſtle. (W.) See the notes on chap. iv. 36. and xxi. 16.

In the ſynagogues of the Jews.] Tho' Saul and Barnabas were ſent forth to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles; yet they made the firſt tender of it to the Jews, wherever they came. Accordingly, here in Cyprus, there being a great number of Jews, the apoſtles went into the ſynagogues, and preach'd to them. (B.) See the notes on ver. 46.

John, to their miniſter.] That is, They ſent him on any part of their charge whither themſelves could not go. (Howel) See the notes on ch. xv. 37, &c.

A certain ſorcerer, a falſe-prophet, a Jew.] God having raiſed up prophets in the Chriſtian church, and given the apoſtles, and other teachers of the word, a power to confirm it with miracles; the Jews, who oppoſed Chriſtianity, pretended to be prophets alſo, and endeavour'd by magick and enchantments, to work miracles, to cure diſeaſes, and to caſt out devils: Of which their magick and enchantments, ſee Dr. Lightfoot's Harmony of the New Teſtament, p. 95. and of their attempts to cure diſeaſes, ſee the notes on ch. xix. 13. (W.)

The deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus.] Anthypatos; the proconſul. The difficulty, which ſome find, in giving the title of proconſul to the prætor, or preſident of Cyprus, is ſolv'd by Valla, Elegant. l. iv. who tells us, That not only he who is ſent to adminiſter a province with conſular power, is ſtiled a proconſul, but he alſo who is a prætor, or preſident. (W.) The Greek word doth ſignify one who ſupplies the next place to the ſupreme; as not only Plutarch, but alſo St. Luke ſheweth, by the uſe of a participle from the ſame verb, ch. xviii. 12.

Elymas the ſorcerer.] The word Alem, or Alim, in Arabic, ſignifies knowing or skilful, and is applied to thoſe who know things divine and humane, from Alam, ſcivit: And ſo Magos (perhaps Magoſh from Gaſh, which in Syriac and Arabic ſignifies to ſearch, will ſignify the ſame alſo. From which concurrence of the words Elymas and Magos in the ſame notion, 'tis clear, that neither of them here was a proper name, (that having before been ſet down to be Bar-jeſus, ver. 6.) but both, in ſeveral languages, the title of their wiſemen, skill'd in their ſecret learning, whom we ordinarily call magicians; and Magos being in ſo common uſe among the Grecians, tho' perhaps of an eaſtern origination too, is here ſet as an interpretation of the other. (H.)

Saul, who alſo is called Paul.] Several accounts are given of Saul's two names. St. Ambroſe ſaith, he was at his baptiſm named Paul by Ananias. St. Auguſtin will have it an effect of his converſion, and ſo of his own impoſing; and that his humility wou'd not own that name of a proud tall king of Iſrael, but preferred the contrary one of Paulus, a little one: Agreeable to which it is, that he calls himſelf Elachiſtoteros, (a word made by himſelf on purpoſe,) "leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints," Eph. iii. 8. St. Jerome will have it a token of this his firſt victory over the Heatheniſm of Sergius Paulus here, in this chapter, where he is firſt called by this name; whoſe name he was therefore to bear, by way of triumph, as Scipio Africanus, and the like. But Origen (in Pref. to the Epiſt. to the Romans,) ſaith, That he being a Jew born, in a city of the Romans, Tarſus, had at his circumciſion two names, Saul a Jewiſh, and Paulus a Roman name. And this is moſt agreeable to the form of ſpeech here, "Saul, who alſo is called Paul;" noting him to have had two names at once, not to have changed one for the other. (Idem.) While he preach'd to the Jews, he was called by his Jewiſh name, Saul: And by his Roman name, Paul, when he preach'd to the Gentiles. (W.)

Thou child of the devil.] That is, His diſciple. For the quality of ſons or children, joined to another word, ſignifies in ſcripture-language, not only what they do in ours, wherein they denote any perſon's immediate off-ſpring; but alſo a diſciple, or a perſon who applies himſelf to ſome particular thing, and is a maſter of it: As when the ſcripture ſpeaks of the children of wiſdom, the children of Abraham, the ſons of diſobedience, &c. And the Jews have a ſaying, That whoſoever teaches the law to another, is to be look'd upon as if he had begotten him. (Eſſay) Note here, The character given of this vile man by the apoſtle, "O full of all ſubtilty and all miſchief; thou child of the devil; thou enemy of all righteouſneſs!" Intimating, 1. That to be ſubtil to do miſchief, is the genius or diſpoſition of the devil's children. 2. That to be an oppoſer of good, is to be conformable to the devil: It is the heighth of wickedneſs, not only to do evil, but to oppoſe good: To be an enemy to, and oppoſer of goodneſs, is the very character of Satan and his children: So much as any man oppoſes goodneſs, ſo much he has of the devil's diſpoſition in him. (B.) Falſe teachers are unworthy to be treated with any manner of gentleneſs. According to the apoſtolical rule and practice, they muſt be "rebuked ſharply," either to confound, or to convert them, or to hinder them from doing miſchief. The love of truth would be leſs holy and leſs beneficial, were it leſs vehement againſt ſuch, as are deceivers by their very office, and calumniators as it were by profeſſion. It is both prudence and charity, to ſhew the world what they really are. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 25. and John viii. 44.

The hand of the Lord is upon thee.] That is, The power of God, which ſheweth it ſelf in puniſhing his enemies. (Aſſ.)

Blind, not ſeeing the ſun for a ſeaſon.] Obſerve here, The judgment inflicted by God on this wicked inſtrument of the devil, and the ſuitableneſs of it to the ſin committed. He wickedly ſhut the eyes of his underſtanding againſt the light of the Goſpel, and God deprives him of his bodily ſight. Thus the wiſdom of God doth oft-times ſo ſuit his judgment to the ſins committed, that a perſon may even read his ſin in his puniſhment. Yet how did God temper mercy with the judgment, inflicting blindneſs upon this vile wretch only "for a ſeaſon:" Even the very judgments of God are medicinal and in mercy: When God puniſhes, it is with deſign not to ruin but to reform. (B.)

John departing from them.] See the notes on ch. xv. 37, &c.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41. But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Piſidia, and went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day, and ſat down. And after the reading of the law and the prophets, the rulers of the ſynagogue ſent unto them, ſaying, Ye men, and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, ſay on. Then Paul ſtood up, and beckning with his hand, ſaid, Men of Iſrael, and ye that fear God, give audience. The God of this people of Iſrael choſe our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as ſtrangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it: And about the time of forty years ſuffered he their manners in the wilderneſs. And when he had deſtroyed ſeven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot. And after that he gave unto them judges, about the ſpace of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet. And afterward they deſired a king: And God gave unto them Saul the ſon of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the ſpace of forty years. And when he had removed him, he raiſed up unto them David to be their king: To whom alſo he gave teſtimony, and ſaid, I have found David the ſon of Jeſſe, a man after mine own heart, which ſhall fulfil all my will. Of this man's ſeed hath God, according to his promiſe, raiſed unto Iſrael a Saviour Jeſus: When John had firſt preached before his coming, the baptiſm of repentance to all the people of Iſrael. And as John fulfilled his courſe, he ſaid, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But behold, there cometh one after me, whoſe ſhoes of his feet I am not worthy to looſe. Men and brethren, children of the ſtock of Abraham, and whoſoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this ſalvation ſent. For they that dwell at Jeruſalem, and their rulers, becauſe they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every ſabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him: And though they found no cauſe of death in him, yet deſired they Pilate that he ſhould be ſlain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a ſepulchre. But God raiſed him from the dead: And he was ſeen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jeruſalem, who are his witneſſes unto the people. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promiſe which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us their children, in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus again; as it is alſo written in the ſecond Pſalm, Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he raiſed him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he ſaid on this wiſe, I will give you the ſure mercies of David. Wherefore he ſaith alſo, in another pſalm, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruption. For David, after he had ſerved his own generation by the will of God, fell on ſleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and ſaw corruption: But he whom God raiſed again, ſaw no corruption. Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins: And by him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes. Beware therefore, leſt that come upon you which is ſpoken of in the prophets, Behold, ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and periſh: For I work a work in your days, a work which ye ſhall in no wiſe believe, though a man declare it unto you.

Men and brethren.] Andres Adelphoi; men brethren. See the notes on ch. vii. 2. But whereas this ſame phraſe, in ch. i. 16. has been made uſe of, to enforce an argument for the people's right to chuſe their own clergy, Let it be conſidered, that the particle and is not in the original text; and therefore in our tranſlation it is printed in a different letter: So that the holy penman's language there denotes no more, than if St. Peter had only ſaid, My brethren. Now, that the whole congregation were his brethren, in a general ſenſe, is not to be diſputed: But, neither can it be denied, that the apoſtles there preſent were, in a ſingular and more eminent ſenſe, St. Peter's brethren, as united in the apoſtolic college with him. And therefore, ſince the ſubject of the diſcourſe appropriates the ſpeech peculiarly to them, there is greater reaſon, that that evidence ſhould explain the meaning of an indefinite term in the title, than that the equivocal ſenſe alone, againſt the tenor of the whole diſcourſe, ſhould determine for us otherwiſe. And perhaps, the andres adelphoi, on which the contrary is grounded, does rather add an emphaſis in the title, to denote the ſenſe we take it in: For I ſhould think it no unexceptionable tranſlation of it, were it rendered thus, Ye men, who are peculiarly my brethren; which ſhews a kind of emphatical diſtinction of ſome there preſent from all the reſt. (Slater) See alſo the notes on ch. i. 26. and vi. 2, 6.

If ye have any word of exhortation.] Here note, How wonderfully God over-ruled the hearts of theſe rulers of the ſynagogue; not only to ſuffer, but to deſire, the apoſtles to preach to them. (B.)

Suffered he their manners.] Etropophoreſen autous. But that the true reading is etrophophoreſen, he carried them as a nurſe, there is little reaſon to doubt; this being the very word twice uſed by the Septuagint, Deut. i. 31. So the Roman and Baſil editions have it, for that which is, in the Hebrew, Hath born thee; as a parent, or nurſe, doth a child; not only bearing in arms, but feeding and ſuſtaining: As ſure God did thoſe Iſraelites, when he ſent them quails and manna, bread ready dreſt, and ſent down, from heaven for them; and farther undertaking all the trouble of his education: And therefore the Syriac interpreter uſes here a word which ſignifies feeding or nouriſhing: And ſo Heſychius, and Phavorinus alſo. Thus Macarius, ſpeaking of a mother and her little child, She takes up, ſtroaks, and nurſes with great affection. And 2 Mac. vii. 27. when the mother entreats the ſon to pity her, trophophoreſaſan, that bare, and did for him as a nurſe doth; anſwerable to the Hebrew. This did God miraculouſly even to thoſe murmurers: But ſuffering his vengeances to fall upon them, and ſweeping them all away that came out of Egypt, but Caleb and Joſhua, he cannot ſo fitly be ſaid to have born their manners, or to have born with them. (H.) But, tho' this makes a very good ſenſe, and very appoſite, yet it ſeems not neceſſary: For Origen, citing Deut. i. 31. thrice reads it, as here, etropophoreſen, he bore, or "ſuffered their manners;" ſaying, It ſignifies, to accommodate himſelf to the infirmities of his children: Procopius ſaith, tropophorein ſignifies, to carry about, and appeaſe a froward child, by prattling with, and accommodating our ſelves to him: And, in the ſcholiaſt on Ariſtophanes, to bear with the manners of another; And ſo the word is uſed by Cicero ad Attic. l. xiii. ep. 29.

Divided their land to them by lot.] If it be asked, How is the dividing of the land of Canaan by lot conſiſtent with the equality required, Numb. xxvi. 54. I anſwer, The moſt likely account ſeems to be, That the ſeveral borders, or provinces, of the whole land, were aſſigned to the ſeveral tribes by lot: And the general diviſion being thus made, the extent of ground each tribe was to poſſeſs, was meaſured according to the number of perſons it conſiſted of; And to this ſecond diviſion the pſalmiſt may refer, Pſal. lxxviii 55. "He divided them an inheritance by line." (F.)

Judges, about the ſpace of 450 years.] Grotius, and archbiſhop Uſher, note here, that other copies read thus, He divided to them their land about four hundred and fifty years, and after that he gave them judges: And they begin the time of this computation from the birth of Iſaac; of whom it was ſaid, "In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called," Gen. xxi. 12. From his birth to the children of Iſrael's going out of Egypt, was four hundred and five years; their ſtay in the wilderneſs was forty years; ſeven years after their land was divided to them: Theſe years put together made four hundred and fifty-two; and ſo the apoſtle ſaith, the ſpace from God's election of them, to the dividing the land to them, was "about four hundred and fifty years." But, 1. This reading is not owned by Chryſoſtome, or Oecumenius, or by the Syriac or Arabic; who all read as we do. 2. The words ſeem not to bear this ſenſe. For the apoſtle goes on orderly thus; 1. "God choſe our fathers;" 2. He "brought them out of Egypt;" 3. He led them "in the wilderneſs forty years;" 4. "He divided the land to them:" And therefore 'tis reaſonable to conceive, he ſhould go on to tell what was done after the diviſion of their land. Moreover, the apoſtle doth not ſay, And all theſe things were done in "the ſpace of four hundred and fifty years:" But he divided their land to them about the ſpace of four hundred and fifty years; which according to this reading ſignifies, he was ſo long in dividing their land. I therefore prefer the other computation, which refers this to the judges, becauſe, if you compute the years of the judges till Samuel, you will find them three hundred and thirty-nine, and the years of the tyrants one hundred and eleven, which put together make four hundred and fifty. 3. Becauſe this computation then obtained among the Jews: For Joſephus ſaith, Solomon began to build the temple after five hundred and ninety-two years of the children of Iſrael's going out of Egypt. Now if you make the time of the judges four hundred and fifty, the computation is exactly five hundred and ninety-one years: He therefore here, as in the following verſe, accords with the computation of his nation at that time, that ſo they might not except againſt his words.

Wilderneſs	40
Joſhua	17
Judges	450
Samuel and Saul	40
David	40
	591

And yet he ſaith about, to ſhew that computation was not exact. Some here tell us, the true reading here is three hundred and fifty years. But, ſince I find not one copy, verſion, or father, to countenance that reading, I think it dangerous to admit of that ſolution of this difficulty: Eſpecially if we conſider, that St. Luke continually follows exactly the computation of the Septuagint, and of the Jews; as we learn from his inſerting Cainan, Luke iii. 36. His making Saul to reign "forty years," ver. 21. here; and from this verſe, in which he accords exactly with Joſephus. (W.)

God gave unto them Saul.] Some people, to ſerve a turn, take the liberty to aſſert, That Saul's title to the throne was meerly popular; That God ſubmitted him to the people's election; That he had no more than heaven's connivance, &c. But the holy ſcripture is moſt expreſs to the contrary, 1 Sam. viii. 5, 6, 22. ix. 15, 16, 17. x. 1, 22, 24. as well as in this place; where St. Paul declares, That they only "deſired a king, and God gave unto them Saul."

The ſpace of forty years.] So Joſephus ſaith, He reigned, while Samuel lived, eighteen years; and, after his death, two and twenty. But, tho' this reckoning ſeems to have obtained in the time of Joſephus, 'tis far from being true, that Saul reigned two and twenty years after the death of Samuel: It is rather true, as the Jews conceive, that they both died in the ſame year. So that the words, "forty years," are to be connected thus; "Until Samuel the prophet;" who having judged them about thirty years, "afterward they deſired a king: And God (by Samuel) gave unto them Saul;" whoſe reign, with that of Samuel's, was "about the ſpace of forty years." So ſaith Sulpitius Severus, I ſuppoſe the years of Samuel alſo are added to the reign of that king, by Paul: As doubtleſs they were; they making together juſt forty years. (W). And with this opinion alſo agree Beza and Grotius.

A man after mine own heart.] David was a man who fell into temptation, and offence before God, as in the matter of Uriah, 2 Sam. xi. 27. Therefore, 1. This character of him is to be underſtood comparatively, in reſpect of Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 28. Saul was an hypocrite: He had not a ſound and faithful heart unto God; but all his obedience was in outward pretence and ſhew: But David's heart and deſire was ſet to pleaſe God, howſoever he failed in ſome outward acts. Therefore this ſaying muſt be expounded according to that rule of the apoſtle, 2 Cor. viii. 12. David "had a willing mind;" as he ſaith, Pſal. lvii. 7. and therefore God accepted of his obedience, tho' imperfect. 2. David was alſo a type of Chriſt; who was indeed abſolutely "after God's own heart," in whom the Lord "was well pleaſed." And, 3. In that David, of Judah, of deformed Leah, not of beautiful Rachel, was choſen to be king, and the Meſſiah was to come of David of Leah; this ſhewed the myſtery of Chriſt's deformity, as it were, in his ſufferings, and eſpecially in his paſſion upon the croſs; as the prophet ſaith, Iſa. liii. 2. "He hath no form nor comelineſs; and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty that we ſhould deſire him." (Willet)

To you is the word of this ſalvation ſent.] The Goſpel is a meſſage of glad-tidings: The glad-tidings, which the Goſpel brings, is ſalvation: And the way and manner how the Goſpel brings ſalvation, is, 1. By way of patefaction and diſcovery. The Goſpel makes a diſcovery of ſalvation, excluſively to any other way; no angel in heaven could have diſcovered it, if God had not firſt declared it, in and by the Goſpel. 2. By way of tender and offer: This joyful meſſage of ſalvation is ſent to every man's door! Free grace falls upon, and begs of every ſinner to accept it. 3. By way of efficacy and power. The Goſpel brings with it a convincing and converting power to put men into a ſtate of ſalvation; and hath alſo an eſtabliſhing and confirming power to preſerve them in that eſtate. Bleſſed be God: that to us, even to every one of us, "is the word of this ſalvation ſent." What monſters then are they who are enemies to the preaching of the Goſpel? They are enemies to our ſalvation. The only way to heaven is by Chriſt, the only way to Chriſt is by faith, and the only way to faith is by the word. It "cometh by hearing." (B.) God hath fulfilled the ſame.] Obſerve, That to take away the ſcandal of the croſs, the apoſtle ſhews, That our Saviour's reſurrection was as glorious, as his death was ignominious. God wiped away the reproach of the croſs, by raiſing up Chriſt from the grave; and declared him to be his ſon with power, by the reſurrection from the dead: And accordingly the apoſtle applies that prophecy to Chriſt, in Pſalm ii. 7. "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." As if the Father had ſaid, Now thou haſt again recovered thy glory, and thy reſurrection-day is to thee as a new birth-day. Three ways is Chriſt ſaid to be begotten: 1. Of the eſſence of the Father before all worlds. 2. When his body was formed of the ſubſtance of the virgin's fleſh. 3. When God raiſed him from the dead; "This day have I begotten thee:" that is, declaratively: For he was the Son of God before, even from all eternity; but whilſt he was in a ſuffering condition, his divinity was veiled: Whereas after his reſurrection, it was more apparent, and he was then declared to be the Son of God; not then made the Son of God, but then made manifeſt to be the Son of God by the reſurrection from the dead. Learn, That the Lord Jeſus Chriſt was the Son of God, antecedent to his reſurrection, even from all eternity; he was declared and manifeſted, but not made or conſtituted, the Son of God by the reſurrection: Then it was that his divinity brake forth as the ſun, after it had been ſhut up under a dark and thick cloud. Chriſt was the eternal Son of God; but his reſurrection was a declaration, and full manifeſtation of it to the world; Rom. i. 4. "Declared to be the Son of God with power, by the reſurrection from the dead." (B.)

The ſure mercies of David.] That is, of Chriſt the ſon of David: For David, both in the language of ſcripture, and of the Jews, frequently ſignifies Chriſt. And that here it bears this ſenſe, both Kimchi and Aben Ezra confeſs, and the following verſe aſſures us: For of this very David it is ſaid, Iſa. lv. 4. "Behold I have given him for a witneſs, a leader and commander to the people;" and he being thus raiſed up to be a king for ever, ſo as to ſee no more corruption, the bleſſings he confers upon his ſubjects muſt be ſure and laſting. (W.)

To ſee corruption.] See the notes on chap. ii. 27, &c.

David, after he had ſerved.] The Holy Ghoſt here gives us a compendious account of David's life and death: Of his life, He "ſerved his generation according to the will of God:" Of his death, He "fell aſleep, and was gathered to his fathers, and ſaw corruption." In the account given of David's life, Note, 1. His activity and zeal for God; he ſerved, as well as reigned: This ſerving implies not a ſingle or individual act, but a ſeries and ſucceſſion of good actions throughout the whole courſe of his life. 2. The publickneſs of his activity; he ſerved not himſelf; but "his own generation." 3. The rule of his activity; and that was the will of God: As he ſerved his generation, ſo he ſerved God in his generation faithfully, according to his will. All our ſerviceableneſs for God and our generation muſt be guided and directed by the word and will of God. "David ſerved his own generation by the will of God." This is the account of his life. Obſerve next, the relation of his death, "He fell aſleep, was gathered to his fathers, and ſaw corruption." Note, 1. He fell aſleep. Death to the ſervants of God is as a ſleep, and but a ſleep; As a ſleep it gives reſt and ceſſation from labour; and as a ſleep it gives refreſhment after labour; and as they that ſleep ſhall certainly awake, ſo thoſe that ſleep in Jeſus ſhall awake in the morning of the reſurrection, to ſee their glorified Redeemer face to face. 2. No ſerviceableneſs to God in our generation can exempt from death; for David fell aſleep: This is the lot of the faithful as well as of the ſlothful ſervants. 3. It is a bleſſed thing when we fall aſleep with our work in our hand; when death meets us after a life ſpent in the ſervice of Chriſt. "David after he had ſerved his generation fell aſleep;" It follows, he "was gathered to his fathers;" that is, he was buried amongſt his anceſtors; "and ſaw corruption;" that is, his body corrupted in the grave like other men. (B.)

Through this man is preached.] The apoſtle having proved his point, that Jeſus was the true, the promiſed, and expected Meſſias, by his reſurrection from the dead; he now applies it to his auditory, and tells them, That by the meritorious ſatisfaction and prevailing interceſſion of this Jeſus, remiſſion of ſins is to be obtained, and deliverance from the wrath of God, from which the law of Moſes could not, with all its ceremonial waſhings and ſacrifices, cleanſe and free them. Here note, The impoſſibility of our being juſtified by the law, and the certainty of our juſtification by faith in Chriſt; "By him all that believe are juſtified." Where obſerve, The procurer of our juſtification, Chriſt; the qualification of the ſubjects juſtified by him, "them that believe," and the extent and meaſure of our juſtification; not from ſome, but from all things; "By him all that believe are juſtified from all things." Next, the apoſtle exhorts his hearers to take heed, leſt by their obſtinate rejecting and refuſing this way of ſalvation now preached to them, they bring ſuch a remarkable deſtruction upon themſelves now, as God threatned to bring upon their fore-fathers of old. The ſenſe is, If ye reject this Jeſus, and the way to life and ſalvation by him, ye ſhall be deſtroyed by the Romans, as your anceſtots were by the Chaldeans. (Idem) See the notes on chap. ii. 38. iv. 12. v. 31. and Luke xxiv. 47.

Behold, ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and periſh.] The firſt part of this ſeems to be taken from Iſa. xxviii. 14. where the prophet ſaith, "Hear the word of the Lord, ye ſcornful men;" or, as it is in the original, anſhe latſon, ye men of deriſion, mockers, and deriders of God's word: The reſt, for ſubſtance, out of Habak. i. 5. which by analogy and proportion he accommodateth to his preſent purpoſe. (Aſſem.) The word aphanisthete, here render'd periſh, ſhould rather be tranſlated diſappear, or be gone. (Maſſey) See the notes on Luke x. 16.

Ver. 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52. And when the Jews were gone out of the ſynagogue, the Gentiles beſought that theſe words might be preached to them the next ſabbath. Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proſelytes followed Paul and Barnabas; who ſpeaking to them, perſuaded them to continue in the grace of God. And the next ſabbath-day came almoſt the whole city together to hear the word of God. But when the Jews ſaw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and ſpake againſt thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul, contradicting and blaſpheming. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and ſaid, It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you: But ſeeing ye put it from you, and judge yourſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For ſo hath the Lord commanded us, ſaying, I have ſet thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou ſhould'ſt be ſalvation unto the ends of the earth. And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord; and as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed. And the word of the Lord was publiſhed throughout all the region. But the Jews ſtirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raiſed perſecution againſt Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coaſts. But they ſhook off the duſt of their feet againſt them, and came unto Iconium. And the diſciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghoſt.

The next ſabbath-day.] Eis to metaxu ſabbaton. This phraſe doth not ſignify the intermediate week, as ſome conceive, or on the ſecond and fifth day of the week; but on the following ſabbath: For we learn from the 44th verſe, that they came not together till the following ſabbath. So Joſephus ſpeaks of David and Solomon, eti de toon metaxu toutoon baſileoon, and of the following kings of Judah; for there came none between them. (W.)

And judge yourſelves unworthy.] Not directly and formally, but interpretatively and practically. They thought very well of themſelves, no doubt; and judged themſelves worthy of everlaſting life: But their practice pronounced them unworthy, and gave ſentence againſt them, while they acquitted themſelves; for this their contempt of the grace of the Goſpel did declare them unworthy of eternal life. (B.) This unworthineſs, ſaith the apoſtle, crinete, ye diſcover, by thus contradicting and blaſpheming it. This is alſo the ſenſe of the word crineſthai, (viz. to diſcern, diſcover, or make known) when the apoſtle ſaith, He that comes into the aſſemblies, anacrinetai, is diſcovered of them all, 1 Cor. xiv. 24. and "He that is ſpiritual," anacrinei, diſcovereth all things, 1 Cor. ii. 15. (W.)

Lo, we turn to the Gentiles.] Not from the Jews every where; for we find St. Paul ſtill preaching to them in every ſynagogue where he came, chap. xvii. 2. But from thoſe of Antioch in Piſidia, to the Gentiles there: it being not reaſonable, that the Jews of other places ſhould be deprived of the Goſpel for the perverſeneſs of thoſe here. (Idem)

As many as were ordained to eternal life.] Theſe words cannot ſignify a fixed number of perſons, abſolutely by God ordained to eternal life; ſo that they, and they only ſhall obtain it, and all others be excluded from it, as upon this ſuppoſition it muſt be: For if God, by his ordination or decree, hath fixed the number of thoſe whom he will bring unto ſalvation, all they who are not of that number will not partake of that ſalvation. And this is evident, from theſe conſiderations: 1. That if the reaſon why theſe men believed, be only this, That they were men "ordained to eternal life;" the reaſon, why the reſt believed not, can be this only, That they were not ordained by God to eternal life: And if ſo, what neceſſity could there be, that "the word of God ſhould be firſt preached to them?" as we read, ver. 46. Was it only that their damnation might be the greater? This ſeems to charge that Lover of ſouls, whoſe "tender mercies are over all his works," with the greateſt cruelty; ſeeing it makes him determine, from all eternity, not only that ſo many ſouls, as capable of ſalvation as any other, ſhall periſh everlaſtingly; but alſo to determine, that the diſpenſations of his providence ſhall be ſuch towards them, as neceſſarily tends to the aggravation of their condemnation. And what could even their moſt malicious and enraged enemy do more? What is it the very devil aims at, by all his temptations, but this very end, viz. the aggravation of our future puniſhment? And therefore, to aſſert, that God had determined, that his word ſhould be ſpoken to theſe Jews for this very end, is to make God as inſtrumental to their ruin as the very devil; and ſeemeth wholly irreconcileable with his declarations, that he "would have all men to be ſaved," and "would not that any man ſhould periſh." 2. The apoſtle gives this reaſon, why he turned from the Jews to the Gentiles; viz Becauſe the "Jews had thruſt away the word of God from them, and judged themſelves unworthy of eternal life," ver 46. Whereas, according to this ſuppoſition, this could be no ſufficient reaſon of his turning from them to the Gentiles. For it was only they, among the Jews, whom God had not ordained to eternal life, who thus refuſed to believe, and to obey the word of God: And as many among the Gentiles as were not thus ordained to eternal life, muſt neceſſarily do the ſame; and ſo there could be no ſufficient cauſe, why he ſhould turn from the Jews to the Gentiles on that account. And, 3. Were this the reaſon why the Jews believed not, that they were not by God ordained to eternal life, why doth St. Paul by God's commiſſion, ſpeak here to them thus; "Be it known to you, brethren, that by this Jeſus is declared to you remiſſion of ſins?" Why doth he add, "And by him every one that believeth, is juſtified?" &c. Why doth he vehemently exhort them to "beware, leſt that ſaying of the prophet Habakkuk ſhould be verified of them, "I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, tho' one declare it to you?" ver. 38, &c. For, could God have determined, that theſe very perſons ſhould not believe to life eternal, and yet commiſſionate his apoſtles to tell them, that remiſſion of ſins, and juſtification to life eternal, was propoſed to them? Could it be revealed to St. Paul, that they could not believe to life eternal, as being not by God ordained to it, and yet would he ſo paſſionately exhort them to that faith in Jeſus, which he well knew, by virtue of this revelation, belonged not to them, nor could they poſſibly exert? Theſe things ſeem clearly to evince, that this cannot be the proper import of the words: But they will very well admit of theſe two ſenſes, viz. 1. As many as were diſpoſed for eternal life, believed: Or, 2. As many as were diſpoſed to do it, believed to eternal life. And, 1. 'Tis highly probable, the genuine import of theſe words is this, "As many as were diſpoſed for eternal life, believed:" For this word tetagmenos by this very author is uſed in this ſenſe to ſignify a man not outwardly ordained, but inwardly diſpoſed; or one determined, not by God, but his own inclinations, to do ſuch a thing: As when 'tis ſaid, chap. xx. 13. St. Paul went on foot to Aſſos, houto gar een diatetagmenos, "for ſo he was diſpoſed to do:" So the ſon of Syrach ſaith, hegemonia ſunetou tetagmene eſtai, "The conduct or government of the wiſe man will be well ordered or diſpoſed," Ecclus. x. 1. Thus Philo ſaith to Cain, Thou needeſt not fear being killed by them who are tetagmenoi, rank'd on thy ſide; i e. of the ſame diſpoſitions and affections with thee: And he ſaith, of thoſe children who, having had vicious parents, have themſelves proved virtuous, that they are ameino tetagmenoi taxei, placed in a better rank: And, ſpeaking of Eſau and Jacob, he repreſents Eſau as fierce, ſubject to anger and other paſſions, and governed by his brutiſh part; but Jacob as a lover of virtue and truth; and ſo tetagmenon, placed in a better rank of men, or one of a better temper and diſpoſition; and adds, that Samuel was tetagmenos Theo, one well diſpoſed towards God. So Simplicius interprets this word: For when Epictetus had ſaid, If thou haſt a deſire to be a philoſopher, ſo retain thoſe things which ſeem beſt to thee, as being by God placed in that rank; that is, ſaith he, as being incited by God to it; for philoſophy (ſaith he,) eternal ſalvation ſaith the ſcripture) is the greateſt gift that God hath given to mankind. And to this ſenſe, the very context leads; the perſons oppoſite to thoſe diſpoſed for eternal life, being thoſe who, for their indiſpoſition to embrace the offer of it, were "unworthy of eternal life." The ſecond import, of which theſe words are capable, is this, That "as many as were well diſpoſed, believed to eternal life:" And accordingly, we are ſaid to "believe in Chriſt to eternal life," 1 Tim. i. 16. and "to the ſaving of the ſoul," Heb. x 39. and they who truly do believe, are ſaid to do it to eternal life, becauſe they by believing do obtain a perfect right to that life of which they cannot fail, but by departing from that faith, or ſuffering it to become unfruitful in thoſe works of righteouſneſs, which make them meet to be partakers of eternal life. (Idem) See alſo Dr. Hammond more at large, and Mr. Fox, to the ſame purpoſe, on the ſame place.

Stirred up the devout and honourable women.] Who had embraced the law of Moſes, and the Jewiſh religion, and were led with blind zeal againſt the Goſpel which they knew not; ſo that, calling them devout, the Evangeliſt ſpeaketh according to the world's eſtimate of them. The corruption of the beſt is worſt. Where Satan can but gain ſuch agents to his party, there are commonly the bloodieſt perſecutions of the prophets and miniſters of Chriſt. Jezebel, Herodias, and theſe Piſidians here are examples enow. (Aſſ.)

They ſhook off the duſt of their feet againſt them.] This emblematical action ſignified, 1. That the very earth was polluted where ſuch refuſers of the Goſpel did inhabit; and was therefore to be ſhaken off, as a filthy thing. 2. That they were a baſe people, vile as the duſt; and that, as ſuch, God had now ſhaken them off. 3. That the duſt of the apoſtles feet there left might be as a witneſs againſt them, that the Goſpel had been preached to them. This action was a diſmal ſignification of a forſaken people. (B.) See the notes on Matt. x. 14.

Filled with joy.] See the notes on chap. v. 41.

CHAP. XIV.

Paul and Barnabas are perſecuted from Iconium. Paul healeth a cripple at Lyſtra; whereupon they are reputed as Gods: But afterwards, at the inſtigation of the Jews, they ſtone Paul. He and Barnabas depart to Derbe, and other places, confirming the churches, and ordaining them elders; and then return to Antioch.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. AND it came to paſs in Iconium, that they went both together into the ſynagogue of the Jews, and ſo ſpake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and alſo of the Greeks, believed. But the unbelieving Jews ſtirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil-affected againſt the brethren. Long time therefore abode they ſpeaking boldly in the Lord, which gave teſtimony unto the word of his grace, and granted ſigns and wonders to be done by their hands. But the multitude of the city was divided; and part held with the Jews, and part with the apoſtles. And when there was an aſſault made, both of the Gentiles and alſo of the Jews, with their rulers, to uſe them deſpitefully, and to ſtone them, They were ware of it, and fled unto Lyſtra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about: And there they preached the goſpel.

But the unbelieving Jews.] Apeithountes; Thoſe who believed not, or thoſe who obey'd not the Goſpel; as not ſuffering their hard and obſtinate hearts to be perſwaded to receive the truth thereof. (Aſſ.) N. B. This whole verſe is to be read as in a parentheſis. (W.)

Long time.] Icanon chronon; a ſufficient time. (Aſſ.)

Speaking boldly.] That is, openly in the ſynagogues; and there with great freedom and plainneſs of ſpeech, aſſerting truth, condemning error, reproving ſin, and denouncing judgments againſt impenitent ſinners: And this with a wiſe but convincing boldneſs, with a meek but zealous boldneſs; knowing, that if they had not now been bold for Chriſt, they could not, at the great day, be bold before him. That miniſter, who is afraid to ſpeak and plead for Chriſt now, will certainly be aſhamed to look him in the face then A ſerious thought of this, when they are going to preach, would make the clergy ſhut all baſe fear out of the pulpit (B.) To enable a man to ſpeak thus boldly, even in the midſt of dangers, his heart muſt not be ſet upon any thing here below. This boldneſs ought not to proceed from preſumption, or human generoſity, but from a zeal for the glory of God, and from a true confidence in him. He never abandons thoſe who expoſe themſelves to all events for his cauſe: And frequently, by extraordinary inſtances of his power, he gives teſtimony to them who, by the word of truth, give teſtimony to him. (Q.) See the notes on ch. iv. 29. and Mark xvi. 20.

The multitude of the city was divided.] Obſerve here, 1. How, upon the preaching of the Goſpel, there follow great diviſions. "The multitude was divided:" Not that the Goſpel is the cauſe of diviſion, but the occaſion only; and that by accident too. The ſacred inſtitutions and ordinances of Chriſt, are not to be quarrelled with, or objected againſt, becauſe through man's corruption they breed differences, diſcords, and diviſions. Obſerve, 2. How this diviſion was the cauſe of perſecution: "The city was divided, and an attempt was made to uſe the apoſtles deſpitefully, and to ſtone them." Lord! What ill uſage have thine ambaſſadors met with from the firſt publication of the Goſpel! The unkind world has treated them, as if they were not fit to live; driving them from place to place, and perſecuting them from city to city. But Obſerve 3. The prudential care which the apoſtles uſe for their own preſervation: "They were aware of it, and fled to Lyſtra and Derbe;" according to Chriſt's command, "When they perſecute you in one city, flee unto another:" Chriſt allows his miniſters a liberty of flight in time of perſecution, that they may preſerve their lives for future ſervice: We muſt not expect ſafety by a miracle, when we may have it in the uſe of means. Yet probably it might not be fear, or deſire to ſave their lives, which made the apoſtles flee; but becauſe they were unwilling to loſe time there, when their miniſtry was obſtructed, and when they ſaw the Goſpel was rejected. Accordingly they "fled to Derbe and Lyſtra, and there preached the goſpel." From whence note, How greatly perſecution, by ſcattering, tends to the increaſing of the goſpel: Thouſands had never heard of Jeſus Chriſt, if perſecution had not driven the miniſters of the goſpel unto them. The wiſdom of God well knows how to order thoſe things which are deſigned for the prejudice, to tend "to the furtherance of the goſpel." Phil. i. 12. (B.)

And fled.] See the notes on ch. ix. 25. and Matth. x. 23.

Lycaonia.] See the notes on ver. 11.

They preached.] See the notes on ch. viii. 4. and xi. 19.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. And there ſat a certain man at Lyſtra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mothers womb, who never had walked. The ſame heard Paul ſpeak: Who ſtedfaſtly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed, Said with a loud voice, Stand up right on thy feet: And he leaped and walked. And when the people ſaw what Paul had done, they lift up their voices, ſaying, in the ſpeech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeneſs of men. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, becauſe he was the chief ſpeaker. Then the prieſt of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done ſacrifice, with the people. Which when the apoſtles, Barnabas, and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out, And ſaying, Sirs, why do ye theſe things? We alſo are men of like paſſions with you, and preach unto you, that ye ſhould turn from theſe vanities unto the living God, which made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all things that are therein: Who in times paſt ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheleſs he left not himſelf without witneſs, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling our hearts with food and gladneſs. And with theſe ſayings ſcarce reſtrained they the people, that they had not done ſacrifice unto them.

Impotent in his feet.] See the notes on ch. iii. 2.

Perceiving that he had faith.] Faith, being an act of the underſtanding, could not be diſcerned by the eye of ſenſe. This therefore is an inſtance of that power of diſcerning the inward workings of men's ſpirits, mentioned, 1 Cor. xii. 10. (W.) The gift of working miracles, and the gift of diſcerning of ſpirits, were for a time conferr'd upon the apoſtles, for confirming their teſtimony, but are long ſince ceaſed in the church; the reaſon of them ceaſing, the Goſpel being ſufficiently eſtabliſhed and confirmed. (B.)

To be healed.] Sothenai. See the notes on ch. iv. 9.

He leaped and walked.] See the notes on ch. iii. 8.

In the ſpeech of Lycaonia.] A province in the leſſer Aſia, accounted the ſouthern part of Cappadocia, having Iſauria on the weſt, Armenia-minor on the eaſt, and Cilicia on the ſouth: Its chief cities are all mention'd in this chapter, viz. Iconium, Lyſtra, and Derbe; and their ſpeech ſome dialect of the Greek tongue. (W.)

The gods are come down.] This was not only the imagination of the poets, Homer, and others, here cited by Grotius; but even of their philoſophers: For Cicero hence proves, The gods muſt be of human ſhape, becauſe they never appeared in any other form. (Idem.)

Becauſe he was the chief ſpeaker.] Mercury is accounted, ſaith Juſtin Martyr, logos hermeneuticos, The word, that is, the interpreter and prophet, of divine things: He is, ſaith Porphyry, the exhibiter or repreſenter of reaſon and eloquence: And he is called Mercury, ſaith Seneca, quia ratio penes illum eſt. (Idem.)

Then the prieſt of Jupiter.] Obſerve, 1. How far Paganiſh ſuperſtition did tranſport and carry theſe men: They come to the gates of the houſe where the apoſtles had lodged, and bring oxen with them, trimmed with garlands of flowers, according to their heatheniſh rites; verily intending to offer ſacrifice unto them. Learn, How forward the devil is to put honour upon the miniſters of Chriſt, when it is to contradict their doctrine, and gain advantage to himſelf by it. The devil laughed to ſee the blind ſuperſtitious Lyſtrians adore the apoſtles, and adorn them with the names of their Heathen Gods; hoping to make advantage thereby to himſelf. 2. With what indignation and diſdain, deteſtation and abhorrence, the apoſtles reject this vile idolatry: Telling them they were "men of like paſſions," and in the ſame condition of mortality with themſelves, and that their buſineſs was to turn them from their idols, which were mere vanities and nothing, compared with the living and true God; who made them and all the world. Learn hence, 1. That the worſhipping of idols is the moſt ſenſeleſs and irrational vanity that ever the devil put into the ſtupified heart of man. 2. That all good men hate idolatry in others, and abhor to be idolized themſelves. 3. The deſcription which the holy apoſtle gives of the true God, to draw the people off from worſhipping idols; he ſtiles him "the living God, that made the glorious fabrick of heaven and earth, the ſea, and all things therein:" A good God, that "giveth rain, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling his creatures hearts with food and gladneſs;" Intimating, 1. That whatſoever concerns the happineſs and felicity of man in this life, is wholly derived from God. 2. That there is no nation, nor perſon, under heaven, to whom God exhibits not evident tokens of his goodneſs. "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works." 4. The character which the apoſtles give of the former times, in which the Heathen world lived; "In times paſt they were ſuffered to walk in their own ways:" That is, of old God ſuffered all nations (except the Jewiſh nation) to walk in their own ways: The meaning is, He did not check nor ſtop them in their ſinful ways and courſes, as he did his own people the Jews. Yet we muſt not underſtand the apoſtle abſolutely, but comparatively only: There never was any man, much leſs any nation, whom God ſuffered to go on in a courſe of ſin without any ſtop. Every perſon, and every nation, has had the light of nature at leaſt: But every nation has not had the light of the Goſpel, the ordinances, the preaching of the word, the motions of the holy ſpirit: Theſe the Jews had; but the Gentiles had not. In this ſenſe God "ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways:" He did not give them his word, his ſtatutes, or his judgments, to ſhew them his ways, or to hinder them in walking in their own ways; and this was a ſore judgment. To ſuffer either nation or perſon to walk without controul or check, from word or rod, from ordinances or providences, in the ways of ſin and wickedneſs, is a very dreadful and tremendous judgment: "In times paſt, he ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways." (B.)

Brought oxen and garlands.] The prieſt of Jupiter brought oxen for ſacrifice, and ſtemmata, crowns or garlands, either to put upon the heads of Paul and Barnabas, according to the Heathen cuſtom of crowning their gods, mentioned in Jeremy's epiſtle to the Jews in Babylon, ver. 9. and eſpecially of offering golden crowns to Jupiter, as Briſſonius ſhews they did; or to put on the ox or heifer to be offered: Hence have we mention in Virgil of the Vittæ juvencum, garlands of the heifers, where, ſaith Servius, velatum auro vittiſque juvencum, is coronatum auro vittiſque; i. e. an heifer crowned with them. Athenæus, from Ariſtotle, ſaith, This was done, becauſe nothing but what is perfect, was to be offered to the gods: Now to crown ſignifies perfection; whence operi coronam imponere is to perfect a work. (W.)

They rent their clothes.] See the notes on Matth. xxvi. 65.

Men of like paſſions.] Theſe words have no relation to any good or bad diſpoſitions in men; and therefore they cannot adminiſter any comfort to people who indulge their ſinful luſts and corrupt paſſions, and will not be prevailed with to forſake their ſins: But the ſenſe of them is this; We are men as ye are, ſubject to the ſame afflictions, ſufferings, and even to death it ſelf, as ye are; And therefore 'tis abſurd for you to offer ſacrifice to us, &c. (Fox.)

He left not himſelf without witneſs.] From theſe words it appears, 1. That the giving of rain in its ſeaſon, and of fruitful ſeaſons of the year, is, even to the Heathens, a teſtimony of the divine providence: For this rain, coming from the clouds of heaven, and theſe fruitful ſeaſons depending ſo neceſſarily on the ſun, moon, and other luminaries of heaven, and being ſo conſtantly produced by them, muſt demonſtrate, that they muſt derive them from, and owe them to, him who "made the heavens and the earth," ver 15. and therefore, that they ought to worſhip, and to be thankful to him for them. 2. Theſe being good things, and ſuch as "filled their hearts with food and gladneſs," and being conferred freely and conſtantly on them, who daily provoked him by their idolatries and ingratitude, were alſo a clear teſtimony of his goodneſs to them; and therefore an aſſurance to them, That if they, knowing him by theſe means to be God, would turn from their dumb idols, and worſhip him as God, they might find grace and favour in his eyes, who was ſo good unto them, even whilſt they did continue to provoke him. Now the knowledge of the God that made heaven and earth, as the only true God who is to be worſhipped, and whoſe providence affords us all the bleſſings we enjoy, and the belief that he is well inclined to ſhew mercy to all that thus turn to him, and to reward all that thus ſerve him, and are thus thankful to him, ſeems to be all that God expected from the Gentiles, as may be gathered from Rom. i. 20, 21. (W.)

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who perſwaded the people, and having ſtoned Paul, drew him out of the city, ſuppoſing he had been dead. Howbeit, as the diſciples ſtood round about him, he roſe up and came into the city: And the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe, And when they had preached the goſpel to that city, and had taught many, they rerurned again to Lyſtra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, Confirming the ſouls of the diſciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we muſt through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with faſting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed: And after they had paſſed throughout Piſidia, they came to Pamphylia. And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia: And thence ſailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God, for the work which they had fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearſed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. And there they abode long time with the diſciples.

Perſwaded the people.] Note here, 1. The ill requital St. Paul had for his excellent diſcourſe to theſe blaſphemous idolaters: They ſtoned him to death, in their own apprehenſion. The ſharpeſt and keeneſt edge of perſecution is uſually turned againſt the miniſters of Chriſt, and falls heavieſt on the prophets of God. The devil will do his utmoſt to take away their lives, who are continually endeavouring the deſtruction of him and his kingdom. 2. The great inconſtancy and incredible fickleneſs of the common people; who one day would ſacrifice to the apoſtles as gods, and the next day ſtone them to death as malefactors. What wiſe man will value himſelf by the applauſe of the multitude, and live upon the breath of the people, (that contingent judge of good and evil) which rather attend the vain than the virtuous. But thus the common people dealt with Chriſt himſelf, crying one day Hoſannah! and the next day Crucify. 3. The miraculous recovery of the apoſtle, after his perſecutors had ſtoned him; "He roſe up, and came into the city:" His recovery ſeems to be miraculous, elſe his ſtoning would have diſabled him from walking. God had farther work for this great apoſtle to do; and therefore neither the wrath of men, nor the rage of the devil, could at that time cut him off. (B.) Woltzogenius ſays, God permitted this ſtoning Paul, for the puniſhment of his ſin, in being active and aſſiſtant at the ſtoning Stephen, ch. vii. 58. and ch. viii. 1. (W.)

Preached the goſpel.] See the notes on ch. viii. 4.

And had taught many.] Matheteuſantes hicanous, Made a good many diſciples. (Trem. Beza, H. and W.) The Aſſembly of Divines render it, "Had taught a ſufficient number; that is, had by teaching brought many to the faith of Chriſt." But this phraſe ſeems to me to import, not only the bare act of teaching, but the making diſciples and members of Chriſt's church, to wit, by the ſacrament of baptiſm, ſo many as were ſufficiently inſtructed in the firſt principles of Chriſtianity, and were thereby made worthy, that is, apt, meet, or ſufficiently fitted for it. That the word hicanos hath this ſenſe, is agreed on all hands: And that the verb matheteuſate is properly to be thus underſtood, in Chriſt's commiſſion to his apoſtles, Matth. xxviii. 19, 20. is evident to all, who can and will obſerve, That tho' we defectively render it, "teach all nations," the meaning is, Make all nations my diſciples; "baptizing them in the name," &c. And then follows, didaſcontes, "Teaching them to obſerve," &c. So that, by the way, there is no argument to be drawn from thence, in favour of the anabaptiſtical notion, that baptiſm is to be adminiſtred to none, but ſuch as are of a competent age to be taught, and already inſtructed in what is neceſſary for them to underſtand.

They returned again to Lyſtra, &c.] Notwithſtanding the apoſtles had been perſecuted at Lyſtra, and Iconium, and Antioch in Piſidia, yet they returned again that way, to viſit the churches which they had planted there, to confirm the diſciples in the faith, to exhort them to conſtancy and courage under afflictions, and to ordain proper miniſters for the regular government of the church in every place. (B.)

Continue in the faith.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 43. and Luke xxii. 28, 29.

Through much tribulation.] Afflictions, like the waters of Marah, muſt be met with, in our way to the heavenly Canaan: There is no coming at the crown but by the croſs; the head having been crowned with thorns, 'tis unſuitable that the feet ſhould tread on roſes: Chriſtianity is the doctrine of the croſs, which the miniſters of Chriſt ought to let their people underſtand and know; that they may "not think ſtrange of the fiery trial, as if ſome ſtrange thing had befallen them; but rather rejoice, inaſmuch as they are partakers of the ſufferings of Chriſt; that when his glory ſhall be revealed, they may be glad alſo with exceeding joy," 1 Pet. iv. 12, 13. Chriſt hath his inheritance in heaven by two rights; 1. As he is the firſt begotten ſon of God; And, 2. By his obedience. He ſaith of himſelf, "Ought not the Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory?" Luke xxiv. 26. Now, in reſpect of the firſt, we can have no conformity with him; but the right we muſt claim by, is the other, which is ſuffering. In man's law it is a principle, that inheritance which deſcends from one to another, muſt be held by no other title, than by that which he, that was formerly poſſeſs'd of it, held it by: And therefore the apoſtle pleads here, that "we muſt through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." This is the tenure: And leſt any ſhould think himſelf excepted, he tells us, "All that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer perſecution," 2 Tim. iii. 12. And, for this cauſe, the church militant hath ſix reſemblances, the nature of all which require, patience. 1. It is compared to a camp: And a ſoldier muſt "endure hardneſs," 2 Tim. ii. 3. 2. To a ſhip; which is ſubject to wind and ſtorms, and to be toſſed with the waves of the ſea. 3. To a building; which requires much labour with axes and hammers. 4. To corn; which comes not to the table, before it has paſſed under the flail and milſtone. 5. To wine: But the grapes muſt be troden and paſs through the wine-preſs, before it is fit to drink. And 6. To a flock; which muſt be ſhorn, and carried to the ſhambles. (Andr.) See the notes on Luke xxi. 19.

Ordained them elders in every church.] Here we have two farther inſtances and evidences of the apoſtles care of the new-planted churches. And the firſt was, to ſettle them in church-order; "ordaining elders in every church," to be guides and teachers of the reſt; and this with faſting and prayer, in regard of the great ſolemnity and importance of the work. Hence learn, That ordination of miniſters is a miniſterial act: The officers of the church, and not the people, muſt ſeparate and ſet apart, conſecrate and ordain, the perſons who are to attend upon God and his church in holy things. "When they (that is, Paul and Barnabas) had ordained them elders in every church." Learn, 2. That this ſolemn action ought to be very ſolemnly performed, by faſting and prayer, "They ordained elders in every church, and prayed with faſting." The ſecond inſtance of this apoſtolical care was, "their commending them to the Lord, on whom they had believed:" That is, they committed them, as young converts, to the power of Chriſt, to ſtrengthen and confirm them; and they committed them as their treaſure to the care of Chriſt, to preſerve and keep them. The greateſt and beſt thing that the miniſters of God can do, either preſent with, or abſent from their people, is to commit and recommend them to the power and care of Chriſt, "who is able to keep them from falling, and to preſent them faultleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy," Jude xxiv. (B.) Dr. Whitby acknowledges, that Dr. Hammond and Mr. Selden have fully proved, that cheirotonein preſbyterous is not to chuſe elders by common ſuffrage, or by liſting up the hands: But he is not convinced, that this conſtituting elders in theſe churches was making them fixed biſhops of thoſe churches. Now, to avoid unneceſſary repetitions on this ſubject, I refer the reader to what has been already noted, on ch. ii. 1. vi. 6. viii. 17. xi. 30. and xiii. 1, 3. And whoever is not ſatisfied therewith, may farther conſult the reſpective writings of biſhop Beveridge, biſhop Potter, Dr. Hickes, Dr. Comber, Dr. Maurice, Dr. Brett, Mr. Maſon, Mr. Sclater, and other learned authors, who have treated on this ſubject profeſſedly, and at large.

They commended them to the Lord.] Here we may obſerve, That the ſame perſons who "ordained the elders," did alſo "commend them to the Lord:" The word (commended) in this latter clauſe, and the perſons who ordained in the former, having as direct a reference to, and connexion with, one another, and appropriating the action of the one to the perſons of the other, as entirely as 'tis poſſible for true ſyntax to do in any ſentence whatſoever: And therefore, unleſs the people "commended themſelves to the Lord," in the latter clauſe, they could not be included among the perſons who ſtretched out their hands for ordination in the former; for they who did the one, as clearly as language can make it, did the other alſo (Slater)

Sailed to Antioch.] This is not the Antioch in Piſidia, mention'd in the foregoing part of this chapter, but Antioch in Syria, from whence they ſet out, upon this their apoſtolical or epiſcopal viſitation. See the notes on ch. xiii. 1, &c.

CHAP. XV.

Great diſſenſions ariſing at Antioch, concerning the neceſſity of circumciſion, Paul and Barnabas, and others, go up to Jeruſalem; where a general council is held, and the queſtion ſolemnly determined. They ſend their decrees by letters to the other churches. Paul and Barnabas, afterwards propoſing to ſet out again, on another viſitation, take different roads, and go apart.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND certain men which came down from Judea, taught the brethren, and ſaid, Except ye be circumciſed after the manner of Moſes, ye cannot be ſaved. When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no ſmall diſſenſion and diſputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, ſhould go up to Jeruſalem, unto the apoſtles and elders about this queſtion. And being brought on their way by the church, they paſſed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the converſion of the Gentiles: and they cauſed great joy unto all the brethren. And when they were come to Jeruſalem, they were received of the church, and of the apoſtles, and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them. But there roſe up certain of the ſect of the Phariſees which believed, ſaying, That it was needful to circumciſe them, and to command them to keep the law of Moſes.

Certain men which came down from Judea.] Epiphanius ſays, Cerinthus the Heretick was one of the principals in this diſſenſion. (Aſſem.) But whoever they were, no doubt, of the devil's ſending, to diſquiet the brethren, and diſtreſs the church. (B.) See the notes on ver. 5.

Except ye be circumciſed.] Here note, 1. That we find the Jews of different opinions, in this matter, even as to mens admiſſion into their religion. Some not only permitted thoſe of other nations, who owned the true God, to live quietly among them, but even to embrace their religion, without circumciſion, whilſt others by no means would permit them ſo to do: And this controverſy continued after they had embraced Chriſtianity; ſome allowing them to embrace Chriſtianity without ſubmitting to circumciſion and the Jewiſh law; others contending, that, without circumciſion and the obſervance of the law, they "could not be ſaved." And theſe were the falſe apoſtles, which troubled the churches of Corinth, Galatia, and Philippi, and were great enemies to St. Paul who taught the contrary. 2. That circumciſion obliging thoſe Heathens which ſubmitted to it to obſerve "the whole law," Gal. v. 3. it is the ſame thing to ſay, they muſt "be circumciſed, after the manner of Moſes," as to ſay, they muſt "be circumciſed, and keep the law of Moſes," ver. 5, and 24. 3. That they held this neceſſary to ſalvation; and by that doctrine "ſubverted the ſouls" of the Gentile converts, ver. 24 cauſing them to fall from the grace of the Goſpel offered to them without circumciſion, Gal. v. 4. Now this they did, agreeably to their common maxim, That all uncircumciſed perſons go to hell, P. Eliez. c. xxix. p. 66. And, 4. That they who did this, went out "from Judea," and were as men who "went out from the apoſtles," ver. 24. and therefore St John ſaith of them, "They went out from us, but they were not of us," 1 John ii. 19. (W.) See the notes on ver. 10.

Diſſenſion and diſputation.] Obſerve, With what warmth of zeal the meek apoſtle, St. Paul, oppoſes this antichriſtian deſign, of introducing circumciſion into the Chriſtian church: "Paul and Barnabas had no ſmall diſputation with them:" He that could "become all things to all men," could not become ſin to any man; He therefore enters the liſts with them, and earneſtly contends for the faith of the Goſpel; urging that by the death of Chriſt, we are freed from the whole ceremonial law; and that if circumciſion were retained, for the ſame reaſon, all the other ceremonies ought to be reſtored; for the circumciſed perſon was obliged to obſerve the whole ceremonial law. (B.) Condeſcenſion and compliance ought never to proceed ſo far as to weaken the truths of the faith: Not to defend it vigorouſly on ſome occaſions, is to betray it. (Q.)

Determined, that Paul and Barnabas.] St. Paul declares, that he went then up to Jeruſalem, cat' apocalypſin, "by revelation," Gal. ii. 2. As therefore the prophets and teachers at Antioch had before ſeparated Paul and Barnabas, by revelation, to preach to ſome of the Gentiles, ch. xiii. 2. and they, having fulfilled that work, returned to Antioch, ch. xiv. 26. So is it probable, that, by another revelation, made to the ſame perſons, they were ſent up to Jeruſalem, as being fitteſt to convince thoſe of the contrary perſuaſion; by "declaring what God had wrought among the Gentiles by them," ver. 4, 12. and his acceptance of them, without circumciſion, or the obſervance of the law of Moſes. Hence St. Paul tells us, That, by what he had declared to them, "they ſaw the Goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed to him, as the Goſpel of the circumciſion was to Peter," becauſe "he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apoſtleſhip, of the circumciſion, was mighty in him towards the Gentiles," Gal. ii. 7, 8.

And certain other of them.] Who theſe others were, who accompanied them to Jeruſalem, the text does not inform us. Du-Pin ſays, they were ſome of thoſe who were of the contrary opinion; which conjecture ſeems indeed to be countenanced by the "much diſputing," which we read, ver. 7. to have been in the council: But others think, they were ſome of the moſt conſiderable elders of the church of Antioch, who were ſent up, as proctors or repreſentatives of the reſt. And to me this latter opinion ſeems the more probable, becauſe if it had been only thoſe who "came down from Judea," and diſputed with Paul and Barnabas, it would more properly have been ſaid, that they returned to Jeruſalem, than that they did (anabainein,) go up thither, in purſuance of the determination of the church of Antioch, of which they were no ordinary members.

Unto the apoſtles and elders.] See the notes on ver. 6.

Being brought on their way by the church.] Beza, Grotius, and the Aſſembly-men, interpret this as only a reſpectful attendance, or accompanying them. Dr. Whitby renders it, "being ſent forth." But Dr. Hammond ſhews, that the verb propempein has a ſtill farther ſignification, to bear the charges of their journey, as in 1 Cor. xvi. 11.

Received of the church, and of the apoſtles and elders.] That is, of the whole ſociety of Chriſtians; and eſpecially "of the apoſtles and elders," then aſſembled at Jeruſalem: Where, tho' the number of converts had increaſed to many thouſands, ch. ii. 41, 47. iv. 4. v. 14. and vi. 7. and was ſtill increaſing every day, inſomuch that it was impoſſible they could all be of one congregation, and eſpecially where the chief rulers were ſuch inveterate enemies to the faith, that it is not credible that they could have any publick place at all for the exerciſe of their religious offices; yet 'tis certain, they were eſteemed but one church, (as here the church of Jeruſalem, the church of Antioch, &c. tho' there muſt have been ſeveral congregations in each city:) And therefore, even according to the ſcriptures, church and congregation are not convertible terms, as our Diſſenters would pretend; neither can a biſhop's dioceſe and a modern pariſh, with any propriety or truth, be ſaid to have been the ſame, either in name or thing; as hath been often and fully demonſtrated by many learned and orthodox writers. As to the elders, ſee the notes on ver. 6.

But there roſe up certain.] This ſeems to be part of the report made by Paul and Barnabas, to the other apoſtles at Jeruſalem, of the unhappy diſſenſions newly happened at Antioch; and ſo it is underſtood, not only by Tremellius, Beza, and the Aſſembly-divines, but alſo by Hammond, Whitby, and others: And yet D. Heinſius ſays, He who does not perceive, that theſe words begin the relation of a freſh oppoſition, here actually ariſing at Jeruſalem, (and not the report only of what had before happened at Antioch,) ſeems to have overlook'd the following words; which (he ſays) do plainly prove, that all this chapter is hiſtorical, and the words not of St. Paul and Barnabas, but of the author St. Luke himſelf, till we come to the ſpeech of St. Peter, in verſe 7.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. And the apoſtles and elders came together for to conſider of this matter. And when there had been much diſputing, Peter roſe up and ſaid unto them, men and brethren, ye know, how that a good while ago, God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth ſhould hear the word of the goſpel, and believe. And God which knoweth the hearts, bare them witneſs, giving them the holy Ghoſt, even as he did unto us: And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the diſciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear? But we believe, that through the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we ſhall be ſaved even as they.

The apoſtles and elders came together.] That "the apoſtles and elders came together," on this occaſion, in the way of a council or ſynod, ſeems to be agreed on all hands; and that the ſame was held about A. D. 51. But what ſort of a council or ſynod it was, is matter of great debate. Some think it was what we now commonly underſtand by the title of a general council: Becauſe not only thoſe five great apoſtles, James, Peter, John, Paul and Barnabas, appear to have been preſent at it, ver. 7, 12, 13. and Gal. ii. 9. but, for ought appears to the contrary, all the reſt of the apoſtles or biſhops, then in the Chriſtian church, (either in perſon or by proxy;) who as yet were but few, and thoſe not very remote from Jeruſalem: And this notion of it ſeems to be favoured by the inſcription of their decretal letters, which runs in general words, "The apoſtles, and elders, and brethren," ver. 23. and that without any ſuch limitation, as Now aſſembled together at Jeruſalem, &c. Others look upon it, as at moſt but a ſynod of that province, under its metropolitan of Jeruſalem; to which, they ſay, not only the churches of Judea, but thoſe of Syria and Cilicia, and even that of Antioch it ſelf, were ſubordinate. And others again labour hard to prove, that it was no more than a meer dioceſan ſynod; as if it had conſiſted only of St. James, the biſhop of Jeruſalem, and the clergy of his own proper diſtrict, as ſuch. But this laſt notion, tho' ſeemingly favoured by Grotius, Whitby, and ſome few more, is manifeſtly contrary to the texts of ſcripture herein before quoted. Another great queſtion is, Who are here properly meant under the title of the presbyteroi, which our tranſlation calls elders? Now, That lay-elders can be here meant, (which were utterly unknown to all antiquity,) is nothing but meer Fanaticiſm to imagine: For not only Beza, but even the Aſſembly of Divines (ſo called) do agree, that theſe were all eccleſiaſtical miniſters. It remains therefore only to inquire, Of which order they were in the church? and particularly, Whether they were biſhops, or only what we now call presbyters, thas is, prieſts? Dr. Hammond (as is already noted on ch. xi. 30.) is of opinion, that theſe elders were the biſhops of Judea: But in this notion that very learned divine ſeems to be ſingular, and to have the whole ſtream of authority againſt him. The moſt probable, in my judgment, is that of Dr. Brett; from whoſe learned Vindication of the authority of presbyters in provincial ſynods, we may obſerve, 1. That the presbyteroi here were clergymen of the ſecond order, inferior to biſhops, and ſuperior to deacons; and ſuch as are now commonly called presbyters or prieſts. 2. That theſe presbyters, who now came together with the apoſtles, to conſider of the matter in queſtion, were not ſelected by the apoſtles, as their occaſional attendants or arbitrary aſſiſtants; but deputed and ſent by the body of presbyters of the ſeveral churches of Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, with thoſe of Jeruſalem, as their proxies to repreſent them in this council or ſynod. 3. That when they were come together, the presbyters were admitted to debate, vote, determine, and decree, together with the apoſtles, as an authoritative part of the council or ſynod. 4. That this apoſtolical council or ſynod was purpoſely deſigned to be the example or pattern of thoſe which ſhould be held in after-ages: And accordingly. 5. That it does not appear, that any council or ſynod was ever held without the presbyters, or their repreſentatives, in the firſt and beſt ages of the church; nor any buſineſs of moment diſpatched without their concurrence. 6. That, whether the apoſtles did now give them this right, or acknowledge them to have this right, it amounts to the ſame thing; viz. to prove, that this right of the presbyters is apoſtolical, and conſequently divine. And, 7. That it is a popiſh doctrine to ſay, that none but biſhops have voices in eccleſiaſtical councils.

To conſider of this matter.] Peri tou logou toutou; Of this word: For it is a common Hebraiſm, to put word for the buſineſs ſpoken of. (Aſſ.)

Peter roſe up and ſaid.] Here the Papiſts (and Dr. Stapleton in particular) make a great noiſe about St. Peter's exerting himſelf, as the viſible head of the church, the prince of the apoſtles, and Chriſt's vicar; affirming that he ſpake firſt and laſt, and that St. James, and all the reſt, yielded to his ſentence. But none of all theſe points is true. For that St. Peter ſpake not firſt is clear from theſe words, "When there had been much diſputing, Peter roſe up and ſaid," &c. And that he ſpake not laſt, appeareth alſo; for the ſcripture mentioneth no ſpeech of Peter's in this ſynod but one. After him ſpake "Barnabas and Paul," ver. 12. "And, after they had held their peace, James," ver. 13. And the ſynod acquieſcing in the judgment of James, concluded the matter according to the words of St. James, ver. 20, 29. yea, according to a ſpecial point in his ſpeech not mentioned by St. Peter. Neither were the acts of the ſynod ſet forth in the name of St. Peter; but a ſynodical epiſtle was ſent in the names of them all: Neither did St. Peter ſubſcribe unto it, as the vicar of Chriſt, &c. but he was only put in among the reſt, "It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us, ver. 28. Where is now St. Peter's ſupreme and ſupereminent authority? If ever he ſhould have ſhewed it, this was the time, this was the preſence, this was the place; eſpecially ſince he was preſent in this ſynod, not by his legate, but in perſon. (Maſon) See the notes on ver. 19.

A good while ago.] Viz. At our beginning to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles. (Aſſ.) The Greek words, aph' hemeron archaion, from days of old, are uſed in the ſame ſenſe, as Mnaſon is called, "An old diſciple," ch. xxi. 16. and the firſt preachers of the Goſpel are ſaid to have been "from the beginning," Luke i. 2. and the word preached is called "the old commandment, which they had heard from the beginning," 1 John ii. 7. (W.)

God made choice among us.] Or rather, God, (who worketh) in us, made choice. (Maſſey)

That the Gentiles.] See the notes on ch. x. 5, &c.

Even as he did unto us.] See the notes on ch. ii. 4. viii. 15. x. 44. and xi. 12.

Put no difference between us and them.] Ouden diecrine; He made no diſcrimination. The argument here is plainly to this effect, That God, by pouring his holy ſpirit on the uncircumciſed Gentiles, as he had done upon the circumciſed Jews, had plainly demonſtrated, that he had received them to his favour, and made no diſcrimination, as to his choiceſt gifts, betwixt them, and the Jews: And that legal purification, which ſeemed wanting to them on the account of their non-circumciſion, he had fully, and abundantly ſupplied, in "purifying their hearts by faith:" And therefore, ſaith he, your endeavour to impoſe upon them theſe legal obſervances, to render them acceptable to God, after ſo ſignal an evidence that he accepteth them without 'em, muſt be a "tempting God;" as that phraſe conſtantly imports a diſtruſting or disbelieving him, after ſufficient evidence vouchſafed of his good will and pleaſure. (W.)

A yoke upon the neck.] Tho' theſe words are by moſt interpreters applied to the numerous ritual precepts, the coſtly ſacrifices, and the frequent tedious journeys up to Jeruſalem, required by the law, which made the obſervance of it difficult and irkſome, I rather would refer it to that defect, which the apoſtle hath obſerved in it, that it could not purge the conſcience from the guilt of ſin, Hebr. ix. 9. and x. 1. that it "could not give life," Gal. iii. 21. that it was a killing letter, leaving them under condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 7. and ſo making it neceſſary for men to "believe in Chriſt, that they might be juſtified," Gal. ii. 16. and "redeemed from the curſe of the law," ch. iii. 13. according to thoſe words of St. Paul, Acts xiii. 38, 39. "Be it known unto you, that through this man "is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins; and by him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes:" For to this ſenſe the following words here do incline, We could not bear this yoke; "But we believe, that, through the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we ſhall be ſaved." (Idem) See the notes on Matth. xxiii. 4. and Luke xi. 46.

We ſhall be ſaved, even as they.] Almoſt all interpreters refer theſe laſt words to the fathers, mentioned in the foregoing ſentence, as if it were, "Even as they," i. e. our fathers were ſaved. But, what is this to the matter in hand? The queſtion in debate was not concerning the ſalvation of the fathers, but of the believing Gentiles: What they ought to do; whether to be ſubject to the law of Moſes or not: St. Peter's whole ſpeech is about theſe Gentiles; only he once mentions the fathers by the by: And if theſe words be referred to them, he will ſeem to have wandered from the point, and the cloſe of his ſpeech to have varied from the foregoing parts of it. But if we apply them to the Gentiles, whoſe cauſe was then under the conſideration of the ſynod, a very ſmall change of our tranſlation will make the matter plain, and the inſpired apoſtle will ſpeak, as he always did, to the purpoſe, thus, "We believe, that through the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt we ſhall be ſaved;" cath' hon tropon ca' keinoi; and they (Gentiles) after the ſame manner. (Maſſey)

Ver. 12. Then all the multitude kept ſilence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.

Gave audience to Barnabas and Paul.] Theſe two apoſtles declared, in like manner as Peter had done, what miracles God had enabled them alſo to do, in converting the Gentiles; which was another teſtimony from heaven, that no difference was now to be put between Jews and Gentiles. (H.) And that the believing Gentiles, without circumciſion, ſhould find no leſs acceptance with God than the believing Jews who were of the circumciſion. (B.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And after they had held their peace, James anſwered, ſaying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me. Simeon hath declared how God at the firſt did viſit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will ſet it up: That the reſidue of men might ſeek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, ſaith the Lord, who doth all theſe things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world. Wherefore my ſentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God: But that we write unto them, that they abſtain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things ſtrangled and from blood. For Moſes of old time hath in every city them that preach him; being read in the ſynagogues every ſabbath-day.

James anſwered, ſaying.] Some doubt has been made, and that pretending to ſome little countenance from antiquity, whether this James was one of the twelve apoſtles, or a third perſon, diſtinct from both the apoſtles of this name: But it is a very great miſtake, and built upon a ſandy foundation. For, beſides that the ſcripture mentions no more than two of this name, and thoſe both apoſtles, nothing can be plainer, than that James the apoſtle, whom St. Paul calls "the Lord's brother," and reckons, with Peter and John, as one of the pillars of the church, Gal. i. 19. and ii. 9. was the ſame who preſided here in this apoſtolical ſynod at Jeruſalem. Nor do either Clemens Alexandrinus, or Euſebius out of him, mention any more than two; viz. St. James, who was put to death by Herod, (ſee the notes on ch. xii. 2.) and St. James the Juſt, biſhop of Jeruſalem; whom they expreſly affirm to have been the ſame with him whom St. Paul calls the brother of our Lord: For tho' Euſebius does once indeed ſpeak of our St. James as one of the ſeventy; yet elſewhere he numbers him with the chief of the apoſtles, and expreſly diſtinguiſhes him from the ſeventy diſciples. Nay, St. Jerome, who, repreſenting the opinion of others, ſtiles him the thirteenth apoſtle, nevertheleſs does ſufficiently prove that there were but two; James the ſon of Zebedee, ſirnamed The greater, and this James the ſon of Alphæus, ſirnamed The leſs: And the main ſupport of the other opinion is built upon the authority of Clemens his Recognitions; a book, in doubtful caſes, of no eſteem and value. (Cave) However, If St. James of Jeruſalem was one of the twelve, then we have in him an inſtance of one of the apoſtles being a ſettled biſhop; for we have no account of his leaving that ſee: If he was not one of the twelve, but another perſon, then here is an inſtance of the apoſtolical power derived to others; for that he was of great authority, is evident from his behaviour in this apoſtolical ſynod. (Barclay) A more particular account of this apoſtle may be expected, when we come to his general epiſtle.

Simeon hath declared.] That is, Simon Peter, in his ſpeech before explained.

The words of the prophets.] Obſerve here, How St. James, in deciding this controverſy, appeals to ſcripture; "To this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written," &c. Not to the authority of the council. The holy canon of the ſcriptures ought to over-rule all debates: This is the infallible judge, which all the councils are to appeal to, and none muſt preſume to appeal from. (B.) The written word of God is the rule, by which the apoſtles themſelves proceeded: They equal not human traditions with it: They take not upon them to judge the ſcriptures; much leſs to determine any thing againſt them; For there is but one truth, and one ſpirit of God, ſpeaking both in the prophets and apoſtles. (Aſſ.)

Build again the tabernacle of David.] The moſt ancient way of dwelling, being in tents and tabernacles, a man's houſe or habitation is uſually, in the Hebrew language, called miſcheneah, his tabernacle; as may be ſeen in the book of Job, and in the prophets. So here, "the tabernacle of David" is the houſe and family of David. (W.) And the meaning is, that the church of God ſhould be reſtored and repaired by the meſſiah. (Aſſ.)

Upon whom my name is called.] It ſeems, that all the places where 'tis ſaid the name of God is called upon men, ſhould be rendered thus, That they bear the name and quality of the children of God; as the moſt learned commentators do acknowledge. (Eſſay) See the notes on ch. ix. 21.

My ſentence is.] Ego crino; I judge: That is, ſaith Chryſoſtome, I with authority ſay this: And this determination of the queſtion was made by St. James, ſaith he, becauſe he had the government committed to him. There are many things contained in this chapter, which ſhew, that the Chriſtians then had no apprehenſion that St. Peter was by Chriſt appointed to be the monarch of the church, or chief judge of controverſies. For, 1. St. Paul, and St. Barnabas, and the reſt, went up for the deciſion of this controverſy, not to St. Peter in particular, but "to the apoſtles and elders" in general, ral, ver. 2. 2. The decretory ſentence was given by St. James, and not by St. Peter, as is plain from this verſe. And, 3. The letters, directed to the Gentile churches, run in this manner, "The apoſtles, and elders, and brethren, ſend greeting;" ver. 23. without any particular mention of St. Peter, the ſuppoſed judge of this and all other controverſies, and the ſuppoſed ſupreme governor of theſe and all other churches. (W.) See the notes on ver. 7.

That we trouble not them.] That is, with the obſervation of our law and ceremonies. (W.) Men muſt not overload new converts with too many external obſervances, tho' good and uſeful to be practiſed; nor give them occaſion thereby to put too much confidence in them. (Q.)

That they abſtain.] See the notes on ver. 29.

For Moſes of old time.] I cannot conſent to the interpretation of theſe words, given by Grotius, and the reverend Dr. Hammond; viz. That the Chriſtians could not be ſuppoſed to contemn the law of Moſes, becauſe that law was read in the Chriſtian ſynagogues every ſabbath-day, as of old was done by the Jews. For, 1. St. James doth not ſay that Moſes was read in their ſynagogues, but abſolutely "in the ſynagogues;" By which word, not the aſſembly of Chriſtians, but the Jews, is always ſignified. 2. He doth not ſay, as Dr. Hammond paraphraſes the words, that Moſes was read in their ſynagogues as from former ages; but that Moſes, from former ages, had thoſe that preached him in every city, being read from old times in the ſynagogues; which cannot agree to the aſſemblies of Chriſtians, which began but a few years before. And 3. The Chriſtians did, more certainly, and frequently, read Moſes, and the prophets, on the firſt day of the week, as Juſtin Martyr teſtifies, than on the ſabbath-day; and therefore their reading of him could not fitly be reſtrained to that day. I therefore think, with Chryſoſtome, that St. James here gives the reaſon why they ſhould write only to the Gentile converts; viz. Becauſe there was no reaſon to write to the Jewiſh converts; they ſtill adhering to the ſynagogue, where Moſes was read every ſabbath; and ſo this liberty here granted to the Gentiles only, could be no occaſion to turn them from the obſervation of the law of Moſes. (W.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. Then pleaſed it the apoſtles and elders, with the whole church, to ſend choſen men of their own company to Antioch, with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas ſirnamed Barſabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren: And wrote letters by them, after this manner, The apoſtles and elders, and brethren ſend greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia. Foraſmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, ſubverting your ſouls, ſaying, Ye muſt be circumciſed, and keep the law; to whom we gave no ſuch commandment: It ſeemed good unto us, being aſſembled with one accord, to ſend choſen men unto you, with our beloved Barnabas and Paul; Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. We have ſent therefore Judas and Silas, who ſhall alſo tell you the ſame things by mouth. For it ſeemed good to the holy Ghoſt and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than theſe neceſſary things; That ye abſtain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things ſtrangled, and from fornication: From which if ye keep your ſelves, ye ſhall do well. Fare ye well.

The whole church.] Here was an holy, and no leſs happy unity. As the matter was referred and judged, ſo all reſted ſatisfied; and the people modeſtly conſented. So Clemens Romanus, who lived in thoſe times, Phil. iv. 3. ſpeaking of ordinations by the apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, intimateth, that they were done, the whole church thereto willingly conſenting. (Aſſ.)

Judas, ſirnamed Barſabas.] Brother to Joſeph before-named. (G.) See the notes on ch. i. 23.

And Silas.] The ſame who is elſewhere called Silvanus; as appears by comparing ch. xviii. 5. with 2 Cor. i. 19.

Chief men among the brethren.] Hegoumenous; that is, leaders, or governors. See this word more at large explained in the notes on ver. 32.

Wrote letters by them.] In this decretal epiſtle we may obſerve, 1. That the falſe apoſtles, who ſtarted this controverſy, are ſharply reproved, ver. 24. 2. Barnabas and Paul, for their courage and conſtancy, are highly commended, ver. 25, 26. 3. Judas and Silas are mentioned, to teſtify, that theſe decrees were not forged nor counterfeited, ver. 27. And, 4. That it would conduce much to their advantage, to have theſe duly obſerved. (B.) See the notes on ver. 7, and 19.

The apoſtles and elders.] See the notes on ver. 6.

And brethren.] By this it appears, that the brethren, that is, laity, were preſent in this ſynod, and gave their approbation to its decrees: But it does not appear, that they were called thither to conſult or "conſider of the matter," which the text ſays, "the apoſtles and elders came together for," ver. 6. but they were allowed to be preſent at the debate, that, by ſeeing and hearing the grounds, upon which the ſynodical reſolutions were framed, they might be ſatisfied with the juſtneſs of them, and more readily receive them. And when "the apoſtles and elders" had fully "conſidered the matter," and agreed upon the determination, they then drew up their ſynodical epiſtle, and put the brethren into the inſcription of it; not that their conſent was any ways neceſſary to give ſtrength to the decree, but to ſatisfy the churches to which it was ſent, that this was no private determination, but a matter that had been openly diſcuſſed and fully debated in a publick aſſembly. Or, upon what account ſoever the brethren are added to the inſcription of the epiſtle, 'tis very plain, from the text, that only "the apoſtles and elders" debated the point, and St. James, the preſident of the council, gave the concluſive or determining vote, before any notice is taken of the brethren: Beſides, they are afterwards expreſly called "The decrees that were ordained of the apoſtles and elders, which were at Jeruſalem," ch. xvi. 4. (Brett)

Certain which went out from us.] "They went out from us, but they were not of us," 1 John ii. 19. It is a miſchievous artifice of Satan to divide Chriſtians. He knows, where there is holy unity, there God is; and therefore he can never prevail: Therefore he laboureth to have a party in us, againſt us. He can never ſo dangerouſly wound religion, as by the ſeeming religious; and therefore he raiſeth up men among ourſelves, to "ſpeak perverſe things," ch. xx. 30. (Aſſ.)

Have troubled you with words.] See the notes on ver. 19.

Subverting your ſouls.] Anaſceuazontes; a word which cometh from a verb ſignifying (amongſt other things) to demoliſh, and caſt down: And 'tis fitly uſed here, ſince the falſe apoſtles, by their ſuperſtructions, or laying other foundations for ſalvation beſides the free mercy of God in Chriſt, deſtroyed ſouls. He builds to ruin, who builds his ſalvation on any means, but the ſole merits of Chriſt. "Other foundation can no man lay, than what is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt," 1 Cor. iii. 11, 12. Gal. i. 8. Eph. ii. 20. He ſubverteth and caſteth down, who buildeth not on Chriſt alone. (Aſſ.) The church being in ſcripture frequently expreſſed in the terms of building and edification, thoſe who diſturb its peace and diſtract its unity, by hereſies, ſchiſms and unneceſſary diſputes, are properly deſcribed, under the ſame metaphor, as demoliſhing, overturning, or undermining it: Or elſe, for the ſame reaſon, according to biſhop Andrews, they may be ſaid to unravel what was before well knit, united, or wound up, as it were, in one bottom.

Saying, ye muſt be circumciſed.] This refers to thoſe turbulent ſpirits, in ver. 1. who held that circumciſion was ſo eſſentially neceſſary, that without it there could be no ſalvation; tho' it was plainly peculiar to the Jews, and never obligatory upon Chriſtians.

We gave no ſuch commandment.] That is, no manner of commiſſion or inſtruction ſo to do. (H.)

Judas and Silas.] See the notes on ver. 22.

It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us.] That is, to us, being herein led and guided by the Holy Ghoſt. (Hall) Here it is ſaid, Vain is the pretence, from theſe words, that other councils may uſe this preface to their deciſions. For the reaſon why the council here aſſembled uſe theſe words, is not becauſe they challenged to themſelves any infallible aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt in their conventions, rather than in their diſperſions; but only upon this account, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt had, by a miracle, declared the truth of what they had then decreed: That is, by falling down upon Cornelius, and his friends and kinsfolk, who were Romans, and only proſelytes of the gate at moſt, and ſo not circumciſed, (but obliged only to obſerve the precepts given to Noah, to abſtain from things ſtrangled, blood, idolatry, whoredom, &c.) I ſay, by falling down upon theſe Gentiles, as he did upon our Lord's diſciples, he evidently declared, that without their ſubmiſſion to any farther Jewiſh rites, the Gentiles might be acceptable to him, and might enjoy the promiſe of the father; and therefore, that it was not needful in order to their acceptance with God, to require their ſubmiſſion to the Judaic rites. This is the inference St. Peter makes from this miracle, when he firſt ſaw it, ch. x. 47. This is the anſwer he gives to them by whom it was objected, that he held communion with the Gentiles, ch. xi. 17. This was the anſwer by which the ſticklers for the Jewiſh rites were then ſilenced: And when the queſtion was renewed by them, and it was vehemently contended, that the Gentiles muſt be "circumciſed after the manner of Moſes," St. Peter proves the contrary, by reminding them of the ſame inſtance; declaring here, ver. 8, &c. that "God who knew the hearts, bare them witneſs," that without circumciſion they were acceptable to him, "giving them the Holy Ghoſt, even as he did to the apoſtles;" and therefore, by impoſing of this yoke upon them, they would "tempt the Lord," by a diſtruſt of that which by this miracle he had perſpicuouſly taught. This being then the very reaſon why they here ſay, "It ſeemed good unto the Holy Ghoſt;" it is apparent, that no council can have hence any warrant to uſe the ſame phraſe or preface to their decrees, who have not the like confirmation of their doctrine, by a miraculous operation of the Holy Ghoſt, deſigned purpoſely to confirm their ſentence. (W.) But ſince the right which the church has to its councils or ſynods is plainly divine, as may be inferred from our Saviour's words, Matth. xviii. 17, &c. where he conferred a judicial power on his church; and promiſed to be preſent in the midſt of their aſſemblies, by the operation of his holy and divine ſpirit, with whom he is one, as well as with the father: Since 'tis plain, the apoſtles were of this opinion, by their aſſembling thus together with the elders to conſider and determine this matter: Since they who, being guided by an infallible ſpirit, might ſingly have determined it, did aſſemble thus together ſynodically, on purpoſe to inſtruct their ſucceſſors, how they ought to proceed, in putting an end to controverſies, when the gift of that immediate divine inſpiration ſhould ceaſe: And ſince Chriſt's preſence with his church, by his holy ſpirit, was not confined to the apoſtolical age, but promiſed to continue "alway, even unto the end of the world," Matth. xxviii. 20. Why may not their ſucceſſors, when aſſembled together, in the like ſynodical manner, and by the ſame authority, uſe the ſame preface to their deciſions, while they come together, not to gratify their own deſires, but to ſanctify Chriſt's name, by detecting errors, reſiſting wolves, maintaining truth, curing the ſores and maladies which peſter and poiſon his church? (Bilſon and Brett) He who duly conſiders the meaniug of this expreſſion, will eaſily be convinced, that any other council might in this caſe have uſed the ſame. For the import of theſe words cannot be, that the apoſtles had any immediate impulſe of the Holy Ghoſt, to require the Gentiles to "abſtain from blood and things ſtrangled;" for then there had been no occaſion for their coming together to argue and conſult, no more than there was to do the ſame in order to give leave for the baptiſm of Cornelius, and his companions. And the reaſon why they aſſembled upon one point and not on the other, was, becauſe there was a revelation made to St. Peter in the caſe of Cornelius, but none either to St. Peter or any other concerning the eating of blood, &c. Therefore, when they ſay, "It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt," their meaning is, that the Holy Ghoſt had in part determined this controverſy, viz. the non-neceſſity of circumciſion, by commanding Cornelius and others of the uncircumciſed to be baptized: And this appeared to them upon the teſtimony of Peter, ver. 7. and of Barnabas and Paul, ver. 12. (Johnſ.)

To lay upon you no greater burden.] The modern adverſaries of the Rights of the Chriſtian church are wont, with their uſual modeſty, to call eccleſiaſtical canons and determinations impoſitions upon the people; and ſo, if they pleaſe, they may ſay, the apoſtles and elders, in this council, and the Holy Ghoſt, who was preſent with them, impoſed upon the Gentiles this abſtinence: For the original word here is epititheſthai, "It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and to us, to impoſe upon you no greater burden," &c. Indeed all orders, commands, and decrees of lawful ſuperiors are impoſitions: And the canons and injunctions of the church are in no other ſenſe ſuch, than all the acts, and edicts, and definitive ſentences of kings, or ſenates, or courts of laſt appeal, in all the nations of the earth. (Hickes) See the notes on ver. 10. and 19.

Than theſe neceſſary things.] There are ſeveral degrees of neceſſity. Some things are abſolutely neceſſary; as to abſtain from fornication: Others are only neceſſary, in that ſenſe of the word, in which St. Paul takes it, 2 Cor. ix. 5. that is, proper and convenient. (Johnſ.) But, becauſe there is not, perhaps in this whole book, any one paſſage, in which learned men have both found, and left, more difficulty ſtill unexplained, than in this; (D. Heinſ.) Therefore we ſhall further conſider what has been ſaid upon theſe particulars, ſeverally, in the notes next following.

That ye abſtain from meats offered to idols.] Apecheſthai idolothyton; or as it is in the former words of St. James, ver. 20. Apo ton aliſgematon ton idolon, "from pollutions of idols." Now here is to be conſidered, 1. What are the aliſgemata, or idolothyta, here mentioned; And, 2. How far the prohibition apecheſthai, to "abſtain from" them, is to be extended. (D. Heinſ.) As to the firſt, it is certain, that this prohibition to "abſtain from meats offered to idols," or "from pollutions of idols," doth comprehend two of the ſeven precepts given to the ſons of Adam and Noah; viz. the rejecting of idols, and the worſhipping the true God. (H. Cave and Parker) The worſhipping the true God is the affirmative part, which, 'tis ſuppoſed, can't be left out, when all the idol-worſhips are prohibited; and therefore are they prohibited, that the true God may not have any rival: And the negative part is the rejecting of idols, or the not worſhipping them, contained in the abſtaining from things offered to them. For the beaſts being a part of the Gentile ſacrifices, and a table for the worſhippers being always furniſhed with the remainders of the ſacrifices, the abſtaining from thoſe feaſts was the abſtaining from that worſhip: And therefore, when the apoſtle ſaith, "Flee from idolatry," 1 Cor. x. 14. it is clear from what follows, ver. 19, 20. that the idol-feaſts, together with the conſequents thereof, is the thing forbidden by him. (H.) The Heathens of that age uſed the ſame arts to ſeduce the Chriſtians, and bring them to their temples, as the Moabites had formerly done to corrupt the Iſraelites; calling, or inviting, them to eat of the ſacrifices which they had offered to their falſe Gods: And Chriſt, in the Revelations, mentions ſome looſe men in the church of Pergamos, who "held the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak, to caſt a ſtumbling-block;" that is, "to eat things ſacrificed to idols," Rev. ii. 14. Great reaſon there was then, to forbid Chriſtians this profane practice; becauſe, as St. Paul expreſſes his ſenſe of this matter, We "cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils," 1 Cor. x. 21. For 'tis highly unfit for Chriſtians, who eat the ſacrifices offered upon the altar of the church, to defile themſelves with meats that had been ſacrificed to what the Gentiles called gods, but were indeed no better than devils. (Johnſ.) And, as to the ſecond queſtion, How far the prohibition to "abſtain from meats" thus offered, is to be extended? I preſume, we need not to look any farther back, than to St. Paul's own determination of it, who, undoubtedly underſtood the import of it, and after this time, expreſly defines, That it is not unlawful to eat of theſe things, unleſs in one particular caſe; viz. the giving ſcandal or offence to the weak brethren, 1 Cor. viii. 4, &c. and x. 25, &c. Who thoſe weak brethren were, we may learn from Rom. xiv. 2, &c. viz. the Jewiſh believers, who yet thought themſelves obliged to obſerve the Moſaical law, and on that ſcore did "eat herbs," abſtaining from many ſorts of meats, which other believers freely made uſe of. (Aſſ. H. W. B. and Johnſ.)

And from blood.] In order to ſet this curious queſtion in as fair a light, as I am capable of within the compaſs of this undertaking, I ſhall endeavour to lay before the reader the ſubſtance of what ſeems to be moſt material, under the following obſervations, viz. 1. That, in the antediluvian world, neither blood nor fleſh ſeem to have been uſed as food: For tho' we find no expreſs prohibition of either, ſo early; yet, as there was a poſitive grant to them of the vegetables for that uſe, Gen. i. 29. they might reaſonably look upon themſelves as confined to that, and therefore abſtain from the other. 2. That, after the flood, when mankind were allowed to eat fleſh, they were expreſly forbid to eat it with the blood, Gen. ix. 3, 4. 3. That under the law, the ſame prohibition is repeated to the Jews, with a reaſon annexed, becauſe the blood was to be "an atonement for their ſouls, upon the altar," Lev. xvii. 11. that is, by way of ſacrifice. 4. That this was alſo the very reaſon of the blood, being reſerved out of the former grant to Noah, ſeems at leaſt very probable, becauſe God condeſcended to give this as the reaſon of it to his peculiar people the Jews, and we find no other (nor indeed any particular reaſon) given to Noah and his poſterity in general, who were to re-people the new world. 5. That there ſeems to be no foundation, either in the reaſon of the thing, or in the prohibition, to believe the eating of blood to be immoral: And the rather, becauſe, tho' the Jews were reſtrained from eating it themſelves, yet they were permitted to ſell or give a creature which died in its blood, to ſtrangers, or aliens; and thoſe were allowed to eat it, Deut. xiv. 21. 6. If that prohibition had any force upon Chriſtians, by virtue of the Levitical law, then the eating of fat is as much prohibited as blood, Lev. iii. 17. But we do not meet with any ſcruple of the eating fat, either among the Chriſtians or Jews themſelves, Neh. viii. 10. 7. That the prohibition, thus founded, not upon a moral, but meer poſitive inſtitution, the uſe of it upon the altar being now at an end ſince the death of Chriſt, the reaſon for abſtaining from it ſeems conſequently to be ceaſed. 8. That tho' the apoſtles in this council at Jeruſalem wrote to the Gentile converts to "abſtain from blood," it ſeems to have been done, that offence might not be given to the Jewiſh converts: And the rather becauſe St. Paul himſelf, in his epiſtles to the Romans and Corinthians (who were Gentiles) declares, of meats in general, ſaying, "I know, and am perſwaded by the Lord Jeſus, That there is nothing unclean of it ſelf: But to him that eſteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean," Rom. xiv. 14. And "All things indeed are pure: But it is evil for that man who eateth with offence," ver. 20. And again, "Meat commendeth us not to God: For neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not, are we the worſe, 1 Cor. viii. 8. Nay, he reckoneth the "commanding to abſtain from meats," among the Antichriſtian doctrines, 1 Tim. iv. 3. To which might be added divers other paſſages of the like import, (which may be farther enlarged upon, with reſpect to this queſtion, if we ſee occaſion, hereafter in their proper places:) And all theſe ſeem exactly agreeable to that determination of our Saviour himſelf; "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man," Matth. xv. 11. and Mark vii. 15. But this may ſuffice at preſent here.

And from things ſtrangled.] 'Tis agreed on all hands, that the prohibition to eat things ſtrangled is founded on the ſame reaſon with that of eating blood; becauſe ſuch creatures, not having their blood let out, their fleſh could not be eaten, but the blood it ſelf muſt of courſe be eaten in it. Such Chriſtians therefore, as are not perſwaded of the neceſſity of abſtaining from eating blood, can have no objection to the eating things ſtrangled. Nay, beſides what has been obſerved on the former, we are aſſured by St. Auſtin, That even in the primitive church, while the doctrine of abſtaining from blood was in its greateſt force, thoſe who ſcrupled to eat a little bird, or a hare, becauſe they were killed without letting out the blood, were ſo few and ſingular, that they were laughed at by the reſt. (H.)

And from fornication.] That we are abſolutely and neceſſarily to abſtain from fornication, no good Chriſtian can ſeriouſly make a matter of diſpute. For how favourably ſoever the Gentiles in general might look upon it, or how much ſoever it might obtain among ſome of the Jews, under the name of polygamy, nothing is more plain, than that fornication was eſteemed an heinous crime under the Old Teſtament. Witneſs the indignation and bloody reſentment of the ſons of Jacob, when their ſiſter Dinah was "dealt with as with an harlot," Gen. xxxiv. 31. the ſhame of Judah, and the ſentence of Tamar, ch. xxxviii. 23, 24. the puniſhment of Zimri and Cozbi, &c. Num. xxv. 1, &c. and 1 Cor. x. 8. the rejection of Eli and his houſe, 1 Sam. ii. 22, &c. the expreſs laws againſt it, as an abomination, Lev. xix. 29. and xxi. 9. Deut. xxii. 28. xxiii. 2, 17, 18. and many more. The ſeventh commandment it ſelf prohibited all ſuch commerce between men and women, except their own wives; as is plain from our Saviour's making no diſtinction between adultery and fornication, in the caſe of divorce, Matth. xix. 8, 9. And, even among the Gentiles, the wiſeſt of them always eſteemed chaſtity a virtue. However, ſince the greateſt part of them acted as if they thought fornication as little or no ſin, and a thing indifferent, this might, on that account, be properly join'd with thoſe other things which in their own nature were confeſſedly indifferent.

From which if ye keep your ſelves, ye ſhall do well.] Here Dr. Hammond (who is very large on this point) argues, That at the very time when this canon was made, it cannot fitly be deemed a precept; there being then no need of ſuch: For they who were concerned in this queſtion, and to whom the decree was ſent, did already obſerve the ſeven precepts given to the ſons of Noah; and therefore needed not to be commanded by the council to obſerve them. This (ſays he) appears, in that the apoſtle, when he preached in any city, did it as yet in the ſynagogues of the Jews, whither the Gentiles could not come, unleſs they were proſelytes of the gates, and ſo had received the ſeven precepts, ch. xiii. 5, 24, 16, 26, 42, 43. and ch. xiv. 1. And accordingly, the words of the decree are here in the preſent tenſe, diaterountes, "from which keeping your ſelves ye ſhall do well;" noting them to keep them already, as all ſuch proſelytes did. And, as there was no need of making any command to them who did it already; ſo the words are not deliver'd in the form of a precept, but only ſo as to pronounce them free from any further obligation: Doing this, which ye do already, "ye ſhall do well;" that is, no more ſhall be impoſed upon you. Here, (ſays he) I ſuppoſe, it will be objected, That the abſtaining from all theſe here named, and ſo from the pnicta, things ſtrangled, which is one of them, is called "theſe neceſſary things;" and therefore that theſe are look'd on as neceſſary for Gentile Chriſtians. To which I anſwer, That the word epanangces, neceſſary, muſt here be interpreted by the context; not neceſſary to all Chriſtians, but neceſſary to all proſelytes of the Jews. And this will appear, by conſidering that there were many more things neceſſary to Chriſtians in the latitude, than thoſe which are here named; whereas the text ſaith that only "theſe neceſſary things" are by the apoſtles and the ſynod required; which makes it needful to underſtand this neceſſity in reference only to thoſe proſelytes of the Jews: And then the mention of that will ſignify no more, but that the obſerving thoſe ſeven precepts was neceſſary to the loweſt ſort of Jewiſh proſelytes, thoſe of the gates; not that it was here required of the Chriſtians, being, as was ſaid, already perform'd by them, and the deſign of the canon being only to pronounce their liberty, or that circumciſion was not requir'd of them, and medling no farther, unleſs by way of counſel, (as the epiſteilai, "writing to them," ver. 20. may import) not of command: Thus far, at the preſent, to comply with the Jews, for unity and amity ſake, to do what the loweſt ſort of their proſelytes did; that ſo they might not abhor them as profane perſons, and refuſe to live among them. (H.) But this is lately controverted, by Dr. Delany and others: Who have ſhewn, that the apoſtles made converts from idolatrous and non-proſelyted Gentiles, before this decree at Jeruſalem was made; and conſequently that the Jewiſh proſelytes could not be the only perſons it was deſign'd for. After all that has been ſaid on the ſubject of this decree, by learned men on both ſides, and eſpecially ſince the controverſy is now on foot, and likely to be continu'd ſtill farther, I ſhall not preſume to determine upon the queſtion, but leave it to every one to act as he is perſwaded in his own mind; only with this caution of the apoſtle, in the very caſe, That howſoever we may differ in our judgment, "Let not him that eateth, deſpiſe him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth," Rom. xiv. 3.

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. So when they were diſmiſſed, they came to Antioch: And when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epiſtle. Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the conſolation. And Judas and Silas, being prophets alſo themſelves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them. And after they had tarried there a ſpace, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apoſtles. Notwithſtanding it pleaſed Silas to abide there ſtill. Paul alſo and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others alſo.

Judas and Silas being prophets alſo.] That is, ſaith Dr. Hammond, two biſhops of Judea. But, if ſo, ſaith Dr. Whitby, Why "pleaſed it Silas to abide there ſtill," ver. 34. rather than go back to his charge? Yea, Why, after ſo long a ſtay at Antioch, doth he go along with Paul, in his travels "through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches?" ver. 41. And why do we find him ſtill with Paul, in the three next chapters, preaching at Theſſalonica, Corinth, and other places, but not at all returning to his ſee? In anſwer to which objection, it may be obſerv'd, That St. Paul kept all the churches of his own plantation under his immediate care and inſpection for ſome time: And the better to diſcharge his care over ſo many diſtricts, he took to his aſſiſtance ſome perſons whom he had advanced to the epiſcopal or apoſtolick order, without aſſigning them immediately to any particular place, but only occaſionally ſending them to viſit and inſpect ſome of his churches as he ſaw expedient. Thus, having made Timothy an apoſtle, or biſhop at large, when he was at Lyſtra, (ch. xvi. 3. compar'd with 2 Tim. i. 6.) he took him along with him, to aſſiſt him in the work of the miniſtry. And thus Silas, otherwiſe called Silvanus, was another conſtant companion of his, who aſſiſted him in his office: And that both theſe were of the ſame order with himſelf, is fairly concluded, from their being join'd with himſelf, in the inſcription of his epiſtles, as perſons who had the ſame common care with him of thoſe churches to which thoſe epiſtles were directed, 2 Cor. i. 1. Phil. i. 1. Col. i. r. 1 Theſſ. i. 1. and 2 Theſſ. i. 1. Whereas Luke and Epaphras, and others of his companions, of the like gifts, but not of the ſame order, are not join'd with him and diſtinguiſh'd in the ſame authoritative manner, but only their ſalutations mention'd in the body of the epiſtles, Col. iv. 12, 14. as is prov'd more at large by Dr. Brett. And hence it is, that Judas and Silas are called Hegoumenoi, "chief men among the brethren," as is noted on ver. 22. See the notes alſo on ch. xiii. 1.

With many others alſo.] At this time it was, that St. Peter came down to Antioch; where that remarkable conteſt happen'd between him and St. Paul, mention'd Gal. ii. 11, &c. (Cave, Du Pin, and Fleury)

Ver. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41. And ſome days after, Paul ſaid unto Barnabas, Let us go again and viſit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and ſee how they do. And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whoſe ſirname was Mark. But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed form them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work. And the contention was ſo ſharp between them, that they departed aſunder one from the other: And ſo Barnabas took Mark, and ſailed unto Cyprus; And Paul choſe Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God. And he went through Syria, and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

Let us go again, and viſit our brethren.] Obſerve here, The pious and prudential care which St. Paul, who had planted churches, takes to viſit and inſpect them; that he might ſee and underſtand how they did thrive and grow in the knowledge of Chriſt, and in their ſincere obedience to him. This great apoſtle had been ſowing the good ſeed of the word of God; his next care is, to examine and enquire, whether the envious One had not ſowed tares in his abſence. A miniſter's work, and an husbandman's buſineſs, are never at an end, but runs round in a circle: Redit labor actus in orbem: After plowing and ſowing, there muſt be weeding and watering, before reaping and in-gathering. Accordingly St. Paul reſolves upon the viſitation here mention'd. Where note, 1. The viſitors, Paul and Barnabas. 2. The viſited, "our brethren;" both the elders and members of the church. 3. The action perform'd, viſiting. The words import a ſtrict view, a moſt diligent and ſollicitous ſcrutiny, leſt ſome errors in their abſence might be crept into the doctrine and converſation of theſe new planted churches. 4. The place where the viſitation is to be held: "In every city where they had preached the word of the Lord:" Where they had planted, they were obliged to water; and where they had begotten any to the Chriſtian faith, they thought it their duty to nurture and nouriſh them: And therefore, tho' there were presbyters no doubt "in every city," yet Paul and Barnabas challenged to themſelves a power of viſitation, where they had perſonally preach'd. The apoſtles, who firſt converted them, had a peculiar right to inſpect and govern them. Converted ſouls, and planted churches, muſt be further viſited, obſerved, and watered. 5. The end and deſign of the viſitation, "To ſee how they do," and what they do; to take an account of their faith and practice. From the whole, Obſerve, 1. A diſeaſe, which the churches of the apoſtles own planting were ſuppoſed to be liable and obnoxious to: The pureſt of churches, and beſt of men in this military and mortal ſtate, are apt to fall into diſtempers; witneſs this chapter: Where we find the converted Jews, nauſeating the bread of life, and making it their choice to pick and eat the rubbiſh of the partition-wall, which Chriſt had demoliſhed; I mean circumciſion, and the legal ceremonies; which tho' expired at the death of Chriſt, and by this time had an honourable burial; yet they attempt to pull out of their graves, and give a reſurrection to them. Such diſtempers will be in the pureſt churches, if we conſider the hereditary corruption which is in all by nature; the remains of it in thoſe who are renew'd by grace, and the endeavours of Satan to ſollicit theſe remains, and invite them forth into act and exerciſe. 2. The remedy reſolv'd upon for preventing and healing of this diſeaſe; namely, apoſtolical viſitation, and epiſcopal inſpection, as the word ſignifies. The conſtitution of the church is ſuch, that it cannot continue long in repair, without inſpection and government; For tho' the univerſal church is ſecure, being built upon a rock; yet particular churches are liable to dilapidations: And accordingly, it is the duty of the governors of the church, frequently to inſpect the authority of thoſe who preach, to examine their doctrines, to enquire into their lives, to give rules for preſerving order, and to cenſure thoſe who neglect thoſe rules, and diſturb that order. In fine, we ſee the church of Chriſt muſt be govern'd: In that government there muſt be a ſuperiority in ſome, and a ſubordination in others; ſuperiors muſt frequently viſit, and narrowly inſpect the doctrine, the lives and manners, both of the miniſters and members of the church, according to the practice and example of thoſe two great apoſtles, Paul and Barnabas. (B.)

In every city.] The plantation of the church was firſt begun in cities, becauſe there was the greateſt confluence, and expectation of ſucceſs Hence it came to paſs, that paganus, that is, one inhabiting in a village, became ſynonimous, or a term of the ſame ſignification with an infidel or unbeliever. (Templer)

See how they do.] This is exactly agreeable to, and a good warrant for, epiſcopal viſitations, when the biſhops themſelves go from town to town, in their reſpective diſtricts, to inquire how their clergy and people behave themſelves; that is, "How they do," how they live, how they diſcharge their ſeveral duties to each other. (Brett)

John, whoſe ſirname was Mark.] Not Mark the evangeliſt, but "ſiſter's ſon to Barnabas," Col. iv. 10. The ſame who is mention'd before, ch. xii. 12, 25. and xiii. 5, 13. This John Mark was brought from Jeruſalem by Paul and Barnabas, at their firſt return to Antioch; and taken with them, when they went out from thence to preach to the Gentiles: But he having left them at Pamphylia, before they had accompliſh'd their evangelical miniſtry, St. Paul refus'd to take him with them in this their apoſtolical viſitation; which tho' it was the occaſion of a contention between the two apoſtles, had however this good effect upon him, that it made him for the future more vigilant in the cauſe of the goſpel, and particularly of ſervice to St. Paul himſelf, 2 Tim. iv. 11. inſomuch that the apoſtle gives a ſpecial charge to the Coloſſians, to entertain him kindly, whenever he ſhould come to them.

The contention was ſo ſharp.] When matter of doctrine and deep diſpute could not divide the church, Satan laid a ſmaller ſtumbling-block in the way; and the two moſt holy ſervants of God, the chief umpires, and the very ambaſſadors for peace, daſh'd their feet againſt it: In a matter of great diſpute the church maintain'd its unity, and ſhew'd that it was built upon a rock; but in a petty diſſention the greateſt pillars of it were ſhaken, and ſhew'd how peace was built upon the ſands. Here's the drift of the text; Not to excuſe diſcord, becauſe it was incident to two ſuch eminent apoſtles; but to teach us, that theſe burning lights did a little loſe their luſtre, becauſe their diviſion increas'd to that ſtifneſs, that they were ſeparated the one from the other. Contention is the canker of evangelical fruit; which is "peace on earth, good will towards men." Yet the miſchief is the leſs, when mean ones contend: But woe to the church becauſe of ſcandal, when Paul and Barnabas are the actors in it. Yet again, if thoſe who are qualified with the greateſt graces, the beacons upon a hill, did vary in a calm and a mitigated manner, it were not ſo ſtrange, but it might be expected: But this was not ſo well; it was a variance join'd with paſſion and acerbity; a ſore that cannot be touch'd without much compaſſion. For all this, if the provocation had been ſuch wherein piety could not yield, it had been conſtancy, and not contention, to be inflexible: But this was a caſe of no ſuch weight, wherein charity might not have ſatisfied conſcience, and conſcience have ſubmitted to charity. Laſtly, after ſo many diſcords, if the cloſe of the muſick had been ſweet, it had not wanted harmony: But this determin'd in a final acrimony; from a wrinkle in the garment it came to a rent; it was a contention that grew to a ſeparation, and that's the partition-wall that retrencheth unity. Contention is the devil's wedge, to rive aſunder the croſs of Chriſt: It turns order into a heap, amity into jangling, unity into ſchiſm, and truth into hereſy. The cankerdneſs of two men coſt the Iſraelites forty years more of bondage, before Moſes return'd to deliver them, Exod. ii. 14. Men who are addicted to moderation will ſhun the company that reſounds with brawling and bitterneſs: Much more, we may preſume, that God will depart from that church, where the flames of notorious diſcords are broken out; Therefore, as "God is the author of peace," ſo let us be "lovers of concord." The Greek word here is paroxyſmos; which hath a curſed meaning. When a diſeaſe hath intermitted a while, and begins its violence again, that's call'd a paroxyſm of ſickneſs: And when a brawl is worſe and worſe, louder and louder, that's a paroxyſm of contention. Theſe two, who had been fellow-ſoldiers under Chriſt's banner, in ſo many travels, perils, and perſecutions, cannot bear with one another with patience; and they who were ready to die together, cannot live together: But yet, tho' "the contention was ſo ſharp," it had no taſte of the vinegar of reproach; nor did they pierce one another with opprobrious ſpeeches. That's fitter for Job's deform'd beaſt, Job xli. 19, &c. than for an apoſtle, or archangel, Jude 9. I dare not make a preciſe deciſion, which of theſe two had the fairer end of the quarrel: But our judgment may be clearly convinc'd againſt them both; that their difference fell upon ſuch an object, ſo mean, ſo inconſiderable, in reſpect of peace, that it did little deſerve a ſharp contention, but leaſt of all to extend unto this acrimony, that they ſhould "depart aſunder one from the other." However Satan got nothing by it: For, by taking ſeveral journeys, they communicated the goſpel twice as far as they could have done in one company; and that which was diviſion to themſelves, was multiplication to the goſpel of Chriſt. (Hacket)

Sailed unto Cyprus.] See the notes on ch. iv. 36. and xiii. 4.

Paul choſe Silas.] See the notes on ver. 32.

Syria and Cilicia.] Dr. Cave ſuppoſes, it was from hence, that St. Paul ſailed for Crete, where he preach'd and propagated Chriſtianity, and conſtituted Titus to be the firſt biſhop of that iſland. But others reckon it ſomewhat later; as may be ſeen in the introduction to the epiſtle to Titus.

CHAP. XVI.

Paul at Derbe amd Lyſtra. He circumciſeth Timothy: Publiſheth the apoſtolical decree: Paſſeth through Phrygia, Galatia, and near Myſia: Is called by the ſpirit into Macedonia: Converteth Lydia and her houſhold: Caſteth out a ſpirit of divination; for which he and Silas are whipp'd and impriſon'd. The priſon-doors miraculouſly opened: The jailor and his houſhold converted; and they diſcharged.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. THEN came he to Derbe and Lyſtra: And behold, a certain diſciple was there, named Timotheus, the ſon of a certain woman which was a Jeweſs, and believed; but his father was a Greek: Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lyſtra and Iconium. Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumciſed him, becauſe of the Jews which were in thoſe quarters: For they knew all that his father was a Greek. And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apoſtles and elders which were at Jeruſalem. And ſo were the churches eſtabliſhed in the faith, and increaſed in number daily.

Took, and circumciſed him.] St. Paul, intending to take Timothy along with him, as his companion in preaching the goſpel, that his miniſtry might be the more acceptable to the Jews, who knew him to be uncircumciſed, becauſe the ſon of an uncircumciſed father, he takes him and circumciſes him: But at the ſame time Titus, who was a Gentile both by father and mother, he would not circumciſe; neither ſuffering the yoke of circumciſion to be laid upon the Gentiles, which God had never impoſed, nor would he ſeem to countenance thoſe, who held circumciſion neceſſary to ſalvation. O what an admirable pattern has this great and humble apoſtle left to poſterity! He became all things to all men, and either uſed, or refuſed, indifferent things according as the uſe or diſuſe of them tended to the church's edification, and mens ſalvation. From whence learn, That in things not abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation, Chriſtians ought to act prudentially; and either do, or not do, ſome things of leſſer moment, according as it may promote, and beſt conduce to the church's peace and edification. (B.) Timothy's relations by his mother's ſide, being Jews, might have imagin'd, that St. Paul had an averſion againſt the ceremonies of the law: And he had a mind to ſhew them, that if the Gentiles did not take 'em upon themſelves, it was not becauſe they believed them to be evil, but becauſe they were no longer neceſſary. (Fleury) And now it is ſuppoſed, that St. Paul, knowing by the ſpirit, that Timothy was elected of God for the holy miniſtry, laid his hands upon him, together with the elders of the church, and grace was thus communicated to him. (W. and Fleury) See the notes on ch. xv. 32.

Delivered them the decrees for to keep.] Here note, 1. The meſſengers which deliver'd theſe decrees, Paul and Silas, with a ſpecial regard unto the church's unity and peace. Behold here an excellent pattern for Chriſtians in general, and the miniſters of the goſpel in particular; as to maintain truth, ſo to procure, promote, and preſerve the church's peace. "Truth and peace," which God has joined together, Zach. viii. 19. let none dare to put aſunder. 2. What it was that St. Paul here made the delivery of; the decrees made by the apoſtles and elders at Jeruſalem: Not the decrees made by the whole church, but by the miniſters of the church only: None ſo fit to determine church-differences, as church-officers. 3. To whom theſe decrees were deliver'd: Namely, to the churches as they paſs'd along through the ſeveral cities; ſo many cities, ſo many churches: The whole company of Chriſtians within a city, and the adjacent territory, were wont to be framed into a Chriſtian ſociety or church; and ſeveral congregations made but one church. To ſet up churches againſt churches, and to gather churches out of churches, has no precedent, no warrant, no countenance from any phraſe of ſcripture, or practice of the apoſtles times. 4. The end for which theſe decrees were deliver'd, namely, to bring all the churches to unity and uniformity; to unity in judgment, and uniformity in practice, that they might all be of one heart, and one way. Learn thence, That unity and uniformity among the churches of Chriſt, is a thing to be earneſtly deſir'd and endeavour'd; their unity is their ſtrength and beauty both. Note laſtly, The ſucceſs and fruit of the delivery of theſe decrees to the churches, ver. 5. "So were the churches eſtabliſh'd in the faith, and increaſed in number daily." Where obſerve, A double bleſſing accruing to the churches; the one of confirmation, "So were the churches eſtabliſhed:" The other of augmentation; They "increaſed in number daily." Learn, 1. That as diviſions do ſhake and unſettle, ſo unity and uniformity do eſtabliſh and confirm the church of Chriſt. 2. That 'tis a bleſſed thing to hear of the church's increaſing, provided it be by way of addition, not diviſion: To hear of churches multiplying, by the number of converts increaſing, is happy; But to multiply churches by breaking churches in pieces, is a ſad multiplication. (B.)

Ordained of the apoſtles and elders.] See the notes on ch. xv. 6, 23.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the holy Ghoſt to preach the word in Aſia, After they were come to Myſia, they aſſayed to go into Bithynia: But the Spirit ſuffered them not. And they, paſſing by Myſia, came down to Troas. And a viſion appeared to Paul in the night: There ſtood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, ſaying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. And after he had ſeen the viſion, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, aſſuredly gathering, that the Lord had called us for to preach the goſpel unto them. Therefore looſing from Troas, we came with a ſtraight courſe to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis; And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: And we were in that city abiding certain days. And on the ſabbath we went out of the city by a river-ſide, where prayer was wont to be made; and we ſat down and ſpake unto the women which reſorted thither. And a certain woman named Lydia, a ſeller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worſhipped God, heard us; whoſe heart the Lord opened, that ſhe attended unto the things which were ſpoken of Paul. And when ſhe was baptized, and her houſhold, ſhe beſought us, ſaying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my houſe, and abide there. And ſhe conſtrained us.

Forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt.] That is, By revelation, probably, like that in ver. 9. (H) Various conjectures have been made, why they "were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the word in Aſia" (meaning Aſia minor.) Some ſay, Becauſe that province belong'd to St. John: But, St. Paul, 'tis plain, preach'd there himſelf "by the ſpace of three years," ch. xx. 31. and ſeven years after, he leaves Timothy, to correct the diſorders which were then among them; in all which time we hear not one word of St. John's being there. Others ſay, Becauſe thoſe of Aſia minor were not diſpoſed to receive the goſpel: But the very next year they did receive it. The true reaſon ſeems to be, becauſe the Lord would haſten them to a new work, which they had not yet begun; viz. to preach to a Roman colony, ver. 12. and therefore forbad them to ſtop in Aſia, at that time. (W) His grace not being denied that people, but only retarded, as Proſper ſaith. (Aſſ.) But ſince we are told that they "were forbidden," but not acquainted with the reaſon why, we may learn from hence, that obedience becomes us better than inquiſitiveneſs and curioſity. (Beza)

A viſion appeared to Paul in the night.] Horama and Optaſia are two words, in the New Teſtament, ſignifying a viſion; being deriv'd from different verbs, but both ſignifying to ſee. Some diſtinguiſh them, and ſay, That Optaſia is a viſion cath' hupar, an appearance to one awake; Horama a viſion cath' onar, an appearance to one aſleep, called ſometimes "a dream," Job xxxiii. 15. like that to Joſeph, Matth. ii. 19. But this diſtinction will not ſtrictly hold; ſince our Saviour himſelf calls that viſion Horama, which his diſciples had at his transfiguration, Matth. xvii. 9. when doubtleſs they were waking. And therefore it does not follow, from the uſe of the ſame word here, that St. Paul was now aſleep, tho' the text ſays, it "appear'd to him in the night:" For it may as well intimate his watchfulneſs, that he was praying to God in the night, to direct him which way he ſhould apply himſelf in preaching the goſpel. (Owen and Leigh)

We endeavour'd to go into Macedonia.] 'Tis here obſerv'd, that this is the firſt place where St Luke writes in the firſt perſon: From whence 'tis reaſonably concluded, that he join'd himſelf to St. Paul at Troas; and thence forward continu'd one of his conſtant companions. (Cave, W. Fleury and Q.)

And a colony.] Philippi was a city of Macedonia, ſo called from Philip, king of Macedon, who repair'd it; from whence it loſt its former name of Dathos. It is here called "the chief city;" not as being the metropolis, for that was Theſſalonica: But becauſe it was prote, the firſt city which they touch'd at who came from Neapolis. It was celebrated, among the Romans, for its being a Roman colony; and for the defeat of Brutus and Caſſius: And, among the Chriſtians, for its converſion by St. Paul, and the ſingular ſupplies ſent to him from thence in his neceſſities, Phil iv. 15. (W.)

Where prayer was wont to be made.] To what is already noted on Luke vi. 12. we may properly add here, That the cuſtom of building ſuch is ſaid to come from the fact of Iſaac, Gen xxiv. 62, 63. where he went out into the field, to a well, to pray, ſaith the Chaldee paraphraſe; and therefore they built theſe proſeuchæ in fields, for the moſt part near fountains, or rivers, or brooks ſides; (and ſuch perhaps it was where they prayed here ch. xxi. 5. a little way "without the city, and upon a ſhore)" or on mountains, as that Luke vi. 12. both which the idolaters imitated. Now that this here was ſuch an one, will appear not only by that which is here ſaid of Paul, that he "ſate down, and ſpake to the women," making it a place not to pray, but to preach, but alſo by the expreſs words of Epiphanius, t. ii. l. iii. c. 80. Beſides, the Syriac is diſtinct and punctual in rendring it a houſe of prayer. All the difficulty will be, what is the meaning of enomizeto einai, which is here added. The Syriac reads, becauſe there ſeemed to be an houſe of prayer: And ſo the ancient Greek and Latin MS. reads edocei, which may be interpreted either that there was an oratory there, (as docein and videri are oft but expletives;) or elſe that in their paſſage to Philippi, as they came from Neapolis, there ſeem'd to them to be ſuch a place, or they ſaw it by the way. The king's MS. that reads enomizomen, we thought, agrees fully with this ſenſe; we thought being all one with it ſeemed to us. But if the ordinary reading be retained, then nomizeſthai, ſaith Budeus, ſignifies in fama aut exiſtimatione eſſe; and then 'twill be beſt rendred, where an houſe of prayer was fam'd, or reputed to be. There is alſo another notion of the word, for conſecrating; and ſo nomizomenoi thaloi tou hierou, are the conſecrated boughs of the temple, 2 Mac. xiv. 4. but that ſeems not ſo proper for this place. (H. Cave, and Godw.) But Dr. Whitby obſerves, That it ſhould rather be, Where a houſe of prayer, for the Jews and Proſelytes, was allow'd to be by the law, or was accuſtomed to be: Both which ſenſes the word nomizetai may well bear; as he proves, from Herodotus, Ariſtophanes, Phavorinus, and Stephanus: And this agrees with the interpretation of D. Heinſius; follow'd alſo by Fox, and Maſſey. Mr. Shuckford argues, from Gen. xxi. 33. That theſe proſeuchæ were as ancient as Abraham's time, and ſet round with trees. D. Heinſius ſays, where the numbers of people were great, they had ſynagogues; where ſmall only proſeuchæ: And Mr. Joſ. Mede tells us, The ſynagogue was a cover'd edifice, and within the cities, whereas the proſeucha was without the cities, encompaſs'd with a wall, but open above, like the courts before our houſes: Whoſe learned diatribæ will furniſh the more curious reader with an inſtructive diſcourſe on this ſubject.

Lydia, a ſeller of purple.] In this oratory St. Paul preaches "to the women which reſorted thither," they being both moſt numerous and moſt zealous; and God gives him the ſeal of his miniſtry in the converſion of Lydia. In which famous converſion, obſerve how particular the Holy Ghoſt is, in relating the ſeveral circumſtances belonging to it. She is deſcribed, 1. By her perſon and ſex; "a certain woman." 2. By her name; Lydia. 3. By her calling and imployment; "a ſeller of purple." 4. By her city; Thyatira. And, 5. By her pious diſpoſition; She "worſhipped God." (B.) And this, we may believe, is done in honour of her piety and ſingular hoſpitality; ſo that whereſoever the acts of the apoſtles ſhall be read, "in the whole world, there ſhall alſo this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her," Matth. xxvi. 13.

Whoſe heart the Lord opened.] To open the ear or the heart, is a phraſe uſed to ſignify the rendring any perſon willing, or inclined to any thing. So Pſal. xl. 6. "Mine ears haſt thou opened;" i. e. Thou haſt inclined me to hearken to thy commandments. For ſo it follows, "Then ſaid I, Lo I come to do thy will." This God is ſometimes ſaid to do by awakening men by his afflicting hand. So Job xxxvi. 10, and 15. And ſometimes he doth it by the preaching of the word. For, as they who are ſaid to be taught by the word, John vi. 45. or the example of God, 1 Theſſ. iv. 9. are ſaid to be "taught of God;" ſo they who have their hearts affected with it, and opened by it, may be ſaid properly enough to have their hearts opened by him. And here it deſerveth to be noted, 1. That the Lord is ſaid to open the heart of Lydia; not to believe, but proſechein, "to attend to the things ſpoken by St. Paul," viz. to weigh, and ſeriouſly to conſider of the greatneſs of the bleſſings promiſed to believers, remiſſion of ſins, and eternal life; and that attention of hers produced this faith in her. So the Lord repreſents himſelf as knocking at the door of mens hearts, Rev. iii. 20. i. e. by the preachers of his word, attended with the incitations of his holy ſpirit; but entring only when men open their hearts to receive him. And laſtly, Woltzogenius well notes, That if, in a place where no example of faith had been given, no name of Chriſt had been preach'd, ſome extraordinary aſſiſtance was vouchſafed, towards the converſion of this woman, this ſingle inſtance, in a caſe ſo extraordinary, muſt not be look'd upon as a thing abſolutely neceſſary in all caſes. In a word, Either ſhe only was worthy, i. e. prepared, diſpoſed, and fitted, to receive this influx: Or, if it were abſolutely neceſſary that ſhe might believe, and yet ſhe alone, tho' no more fitted and diſpoſed for it than the reſt, receiv'd it, the other auditors, for want of this extraordinary influence, muſt lie under a neceſſity of not believing, and ſo it could not be blame-worthy in them that they did not believe. (W.) See the notes on Matth. x. 11. and Luke xxiv. 45.

She conſtrained us.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 29.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. And it came to paſs, as we went to prayer, a certain damſel, poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination met us, which brought her maſters much gain by ſoothſaying: The ſame followed Paul, and us, and cried, ſaying, Theſe men are the ſervants of the moſt high God, which ſhew unto us the way of ſalvation. And this did ſhe many days. But Paul being grieved, turned and ſaid to the ſpirit, I command thee in the name of Jeſus Chriſt to come out of her. And he came out the ſame hour. And when her maſters ſaw that the hopes of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place, unto the rulers, And brought them to the Magiſtrates, ſaying, Theſe men being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city, And teach cuſtoms which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to obſerve, being Romans. And the multitude roſe up together againſt them: And the magiſtrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them. And when they had laid many ſtripes upon them, they caſt them into priſon, charging the jayler to keep them ſafely: Who having received ſuch a charge, thruſt them into the inner priſon, and made their feet faſt in the ſtocks.

As we went to prayer.] That is, to the oratory, or place of prayer. See the notes on ver. 13.

A ſpirit of divination.] Pneuma pythonos; a ſpirit of python. Some derive python of the ſame word which betokeneth a ſerpent; as Nachaſh, in the Hebrew, ſignifieth both a ſerpent and a magician: Becauſe ſuch do work by ſerpents, whom the inchanter uſeth to charm; which agreeth well to the firſt practice of the devil in paradiſe, ſpeaking out of a ſerpent. Others derive it of pynthanomai, to ask or conſult. And others again of pytho, to putrify; becauſe the evil ſpirit loveth uncleanneſs, ſpeaking from under the belly: Or rather, becauſe the oracle of Apollo at Delphos was moſt famous, where they receiv'd anſwers; who was call'd Pythius, of his killing a ſerpent, whence others, who gave the like oracles, might be ſo call'd. (Leigh) And thoſe who have ranged the devils into nine orders, place the lying ſpirits in the ſecond; whoſe prince (they ſay) is named Python. (Camfield) Apollo's pythoneſs was, by her obſcene parts, filled with wind; and ſo gave anſwers to thoſe who conſulted her. (Willet) Heſychius, Suidas, and Phavorinus agree, that Python was a ſpirit, which divined, or foretold things to come. In the temple of Apollo, who was called Pytho, the organ of this oracle was always a woman, who, ſitting on her brazen tripos, received her enthuſiaſm a ſecretis; their god, as Origen ſays, being delighted in nothing more, than in thoſe parts: And the woman, being thus fill'd with that ſpirit, and retaining in memory the phantaſms raiſed by the agitation of the dæmon, did foretel what would happen, to thoſe who enquired of her, as did the pythoneſs here. She alſo deliver'd her anſwers with a low voice, as out of her belly; and was hence ſtiled ventriloqua, and engaſtrimantis: And becauſe others who pretended to propheſy did ſo, that if their anſwers were not true, it might be imputed to mens not hearing well what they had uttered; hence theſe diviners are, by the Septuagint, not only ſtiled engaſtrimythoi, ſpeakers out of the belly, Lev. xix. 31. and xx. 6. Deut. xviii. 11. 1 Sam. xxviii. 3, 7, 8, 9. 1 Chron. x. 13. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. and Iſa. viii. 19. but alſo ſaid to ſpeak out of the ground, Iſa. xix. 3. (W.) Tertullian writes, that he ſaw and heard one of theſe women. But thoſe who are curious to know more of this matter, may conſult Mr. Rous's Archæologiæ Atticæ, de Oraculo Pythio.

Paul being grieved.] Tho' the pythoneſs confeſs'd, that the apoſtles were "Servants of the moſt high God;" yet St. Paul rebuked the ſpirit that was in her, and "commanded him to come out of her." (Andr.) He refuſed the devil's teſtimony concerning himſelf, even when he ſpake the truth: The teſtimony of truth from the father of lies is enough to render truth it ſelf ſuſpected. (B.) To praiſe the wicked, and to accept their praiſes, are two things ſometimes equally dangerous. By delivering this damſel from the power of the devil, St. Paul delivers himſelf from the temptation of praiſe. The ill treatment which no doubt he foreſaw he ſhould draw upon himſelf, by caſting out this "ſpirit of divination," did not hinder him from doing it: And yet Chriſtian magiſtrates ſuffer the trade of divination to be exerciſed with impunity, and as it were publickly in the midſt of cities, tho' with little or no trouble they might effectually ſuppreſs this impiety. What is now become of religion? (Queſn.)

They caught Paul and Silas.] It pleaſed God to ſpare Timothy, and to call only Paul and Silas to the trial, as being ſtronger, and more able to undergo it, than he was yet. (Beza)

Into the market-place.] Eis teen agoran. Agora, from ageiro, congrego, ſometimes ſignifies, in general, the place where people are gather'd together: And ſometimes, more particularly, the place where they are aſſembled in a judiciary way; which the Latins call Forum. In which latter ſenſe it is to be underſtood here, becauſe they were " brought to the magiſtrates; and therefore what is in the text called the market-place, is in the margin more properly called the court."

Theſe men, being Jews.] They mention their being Jews, by way of aggravation, becauſe that name was now become odious to the Romans. (Aſſ.)

Trouble our city.] The truth of the goſpel ever ſeemeth troubleſome to the wicked, in whom Satan reigneth, becauſe it overthroweth him and his kingdom. (Idem) And here their private avarice is cover'd with the ſpecious cloak of piety, and the publick peace. (Beza) For thoſe who trouble or diſturb the falſe peace of ſinners will always be treated as diſturbers of the publick repoſe. (Q.)

Being Romans.] That is, a colony, or plantation of inhabitants from Rome. See ver. 12. But tho' there was as yet no expreſs law of the ſenate, or the emperor, againſt the Chriſtians, there was an old law of the Romans, forbidding them either to worſhip new gods, or the gods of other nations, and requiring them to worſhip the gods of their country, from which Chriſtianity diſſwaded them; not ſuffering any of them to worſhip the gods of their fathers, but requiring them to turn from thoſe dumb idols to the living God, 1 Theſſ. i. 9. and hence St. Paul ſpeaks thus to thoſe of Lyſtra, " We preach unto you, that ye ſhould turn from theſe vanities unto the living God, who made heaven and earth," Acts xiv. 15. (W.)

Rent off their clothes.] That is, the clothes of Paul and Silas For ſo it was the cuſtom, not only among the Jews, but among the Roman magiſtrates, as theſe were, to command the lictors, to rend open the cloathes of the criminal, and to beat his body with rods, as Grotius here notes. And the ſame ſays Briſſonius, de formulis, l. v' p. 481. (H. and W.)

Many ſtripes.] See the notes on Luke xxiii. 16. and 2 Cor. xi 24.

Made their feet faſt in the ſtocks.] Eis to xylon. Here the word xylon ſignifies a ſort of wooden machine, which the Latins call numella; into which (as Nonius ſays) both the feet and neck were put. (Beza, Leigh and Aſſ.)

Ver 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and ſang praiſes unto God; and the priſoners heard them. And ſuddenly there was a great earthquake, ſo that the foundations of the priſon were ſhaken: And immediately all the doors were opened, and every ones bands were looſed. And the keeper of the priſon, awaking out of his ſleep, and ſeeing the priſon-doors open, he drew out his ſword and would have killed himſelf, ſuppoſing that the priſoners had been fled. But Paul cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Do thy ſelf no harm; for we are all here. Then he called for a light, and ſprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas; And brought them out, and ſaid, Sirs, what muſt I do to be ſaved? And they ſaid, Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and thy houſe. And they ſpake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his houſe. And he took them the ſame hour of the night, and waſhed their ſtripes; and was baptized, he, and all his houſe, ſtraightway. And when he had brought them into his houſe, he ſet meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his houſe.

Prayed, and ſang praiſes.] When St. Paul and Silas were cruelly beaten and impriſon'd for the teſtimony of Jeſus, the conſideration of the cauſe and maſter they ſuffer'd for, fill'd 'em with joy in a dungeon, and gave them ſongs in the night. Their bodies were cut with deep and cruel ſtripes; their ſouls were refreſh'd and raviſh'd with divine conſolations: And when their feet were faſten'd in the ſtocks, their hearts were enlarged with heavenly pleaſure, and their tongues with inſpir'd eloquence broke out into hymns of praiſe. So juſt is the pious remark of St. Chryſoſtome, To ſuffer for Chriſt is ſweeter than all conſolation. 'Tis aſtoniſhing, and above the powers of unaſſiſted nature, in ſuch deep and tormenting ſufferings, as the primitive Chriſtians ſuffer'd, to give all the undiſſembled expreſſions of a moſt exquiſite and triumphant joy: But as the behaviour and courage of the noble champions of the croſs was extraordinary; ſo were their motives and encouragements their tranſporting hopes and all-ſufficient aſſiſtances. Could the ſervants and diſciples think it hard to follow their moſt gracious Lord and maſter, who has ſovereign intereſt in heaven, and all the preferments of eternity at his diſpoſal? Who has promiſed, he will confer 'em on all Chriſtians, whoſe names are in the book of life, who are fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and domeſticks in heaven? That divine lover and ſaviour of ſouls has made faithful promiſes, and given unconteſted proofs, that he has both power and goodneſs to inſtate all Chriſtians, that live to him, and dare die for him, in all the inconceivable glories, and high eternal prerogatives, which belong to the members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones. They ſhall all receive the adoption of ſons; be no more regarded as ſervants, but as ſons of God, and heirs of heaven. (Blackw.) A good man can turn a priſon into a chapel, and make a den of thieves to be an houſe of prayer: Our feet cannot be bound ſo faſt to the earth, but that ſtill our hearts may mount up to heaven. (Cave) See the notes on ch. v. 41. and vi. 15.

A great earthquake.] See the notes on ch. iv. 31.

Every ones bands were looſed.] See the notes on ch. v. 19.

Would have killed himſelf.] Self-murder being common among the Greeks and Romans, allow'd by all their philoſophers, and practiſed by moſt of them, to avoid, or deliver themſelves from any miſery; this jaylor therefore would have done it, for fear of a ſeverer puniſhment, they who let priſoners eſcape being to ſuffer the puniſhment they had deſerv'd. (W.) Among the Jews it was a queſtion, whether a man might lawfully kill himſelf: But among Chriſtians it has been always a certain rule, that a man ſhould run the hazard of any death whatſoever, rather than deſtroy himſelf. (G.) But, Lord! How miſerable are the conſolations, which the carnal and unregenerate world have recourſe and fly unto, when trouble and diſtreſs takes hold upon them! They run to an halter to rid them of their trouble, having no God to go unto, and thereby plunge themſelves into endleſs troubles; yea, eternal torments! (B.)

And ſprang in.] Eiſepedeſe; He leap'd in, or came ſpeedily in among them, as one that leaped, to ſee if the priſoners were all there. So eiſpedao is interpreted, ſaltu irruo, from Demoſthenes. (Aſſ.) And thus the ſame word is to be underſtood, ch. xiv. 14. where Barnabas and Paul are ſaid to have " ran in among the people," when they were about to offer ſacrifice to them as Gods.

Fell down before Paul and Silas.] But why did they not reprove him, and take him up from their feet, as Peter did Cornelius, ch. x. 26. Becauſe they knew, this man did it not to adore them; but, for preſent fear of God's judgments to humble himſelf. And indeed, it was a Roman faſhion of begging pardon, to fall at his feet of whom they entreated it. Had there been any thing prejudicial to God's honour, Paul would not have forgotten his former zeal among the Lyſtrians. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. x. 25. and xiv. 14, &c.

What muſt I do to be ſaved.] Grotius ſaith here, that the jaylor had conceived ſome hope of a better life, from tradition, and the doctrine of the philoſophers: But I rather think, he ſpake thus to them, as knowing, or conceiving, from the words of the pythoneſs, ver. 17. that they were appointed " to ſhew the way of ſalvation." (W.) See the notes on ch. ii. 37. and ix. 6.

Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] There are two things requir'd to a true faith in Chriſt; i. That we believe all the articles of our Chriſtian faith; and particularly, concerning Chriſt, viz. 1. That he is " the Lord," Luke ii 11. God; the ſupreme being, and governor of the world, Jer. xxiii. 6. and John xx. 28. 2. That he is the Lord Jeſus, Matth. i. 21. the only true Jeſus, or Saviour, Acts iv. 12. 3. That he is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the Meſſiah promiſed in the Old Teſtament, Matth. xvi. 16. And, by conſequence, That he died, roſe again, went up to heaven, there ſitteth at the right hand of God, making interceſſion for us, and is able to ſave us, if we " come unto God by him," Hebr. vii. 25. And ii. That we have a ſure truſt and confidence in God's merciful promiſes in Chriſt, for all things neceſſary to make us happy, and that are good for us. (Bever.) This brief anſwer containeth the ſum of the Goſpel, offering us ſalvation, and all bleſſedneſs in Chriſt, apprehended by faith. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ii. 38. and Luke xix. 8.

Thou ſhalt be ſaved, and thy houſe.] Here is ſomething implied, that is not expreſs'd; " Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and thy houſe;" that is, They believing with thee: As if they had ſaid, Be not diſcouraged, but look upon Jeſus; there's mercy enough in ſtore, not only for thy ſelf, but for thy whole houſhold, if they can but believe; yea, abundant ſalvation for all who are humbled believers. But that the faith of one ſaveth not another, at leaſt in adult perſons, appears Ezek. xviii. 20. (Greenwood)

And waſhed their ſtripes.] From hence we may obſerve what a happy change Chriſtianity makes in the minds of men! How plain it ſmooths the rougheſt tempers, and inſtils the ſweeteſt principles of civility and good manners. (Cave and B.)

He was baptized, he and all his.] St. Chryſoſtome here notes, That this jaylor was that Stephanas, of whom St. Paul ſpeaks, 1 Cor. i. 16. But if ſo, he muſt have come from Corinth, or ſome other parts of Achaia, and have ſettled at Philippi, and afterwards have return'd thither again: For the Stephanas there mention'd tion'd by St. Paul was "the firſt-fruits of Achaia," and an eminent perſon at Corinth, 1 Cor. xvi. 15, &c. (W.) Obſerve here, 1. That it was the ordinary way of the apoſtles to baptize houſholds: Not that they were ſure, that they were all believers, or that the family-governors could make them ſo; but it was their duty to devote all their power to God, and to do their utmoſt to perſwade; and God uſually ſucceeded their endeavours. 2. That the church of God, for above 1700 years, never refuſed the baptizing of infants of believing parents, as being taken into covenant with themſelves. Having then, for ſo many ages, been in poſſeſſion of this privilege, we may more reaſonably require the Anabaptiſts to prove by expreſs ſcripture, that children were not baptized by the apoſtles, when they baptized whole families, (yea, whole nations, according to their commiſſion, Matth. xxviii. 19.) than they can require us to prove that they were. In this chapter 'tis clear, that "Lydia was baptized, and her houſhold," ver. 15. that is, ſays the Syriac, Lydia and her children: And here, the jailor "was baptized, he and all his," ver. 33. They, by reaſon of their own faith, having a right to baptiſm, their whole families, upon their undertaking to bring them up in the knowledge of Chriſt, were admitted to the ordinance with them. And, 3. How improbable it is, that this jailor eſpecially, and his houſhold, were baptized by dipping. We do not deny the lawfulneſs of baptizing by immerſion; but we cannot aſſert the abſolute and indiſpenſable neceſſity of it. St. Paul, who was newly waſh'd, and his ſores dreſs'd, occaſion'd by ſtripes, cannot be ſuppoſed either to go out himſelf, or to carry the jailor and all his family, in the dead of the night, to the river, or a pond, to baptize them: Neither is it in the leaſt probable, that St. Paul himſelf was baptized by dipping. Acts ix. 18, 19. "He aroſe, and was baptized; and when he had received meat, he was ſtrengthened." The context may convince us, that he was baptized in his lodgings, being ſick and weak, having faſted three days, and being in a very low condition, partly by his miraculous viſion, and partly by his extraordinary faſting; it was no ways probable that Ananias ſhould carry him out to a river in that condition, to plunge him in cold water. Dipping then, ſurely, cannot be ſo eſſential to baptiſm, as for want of it to pronounce the baptiſm of all the reformed churches throughout the world, to be null and void, as ſome amongſt us do. (B.)

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. And when it was day the magiſtrates ſent the ſergeants, ſaying, Let thoſe men go. And the keeper of the priſon told this, ſaying to Paul, The magiſtrates have ſent to let you go: Now therefore depart, and go in peace. But Paul ſaid unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have caſt us into priſon; and now do they thruſt us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themſelves, and fetch us out. And the ſergeants told theſe words unto the magiſtrates: And they feared, when they heard that they were Romans. And they came and beſought them, and brought them out, and deſired them to depart out of the city. And they went out of the priſon, and entred into the houſe of Lydia: And when they had ſeen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

Sent the ſergeants.] Tous rhabdouchous. The word rhabdos ſignifies, either, 1. An enſign of honour and authority; ſuch as the ſceptre of a king, the faſces of conſuls, or the virge of prætors and judges. 2. The rod or ſtick, with which others are ſmitten, Exod. xxi. 20. Or, 3. A ſtaff to walk with, and reſt upon. (Leigh) Theſe doubtleſs were of the ſecond ſort, and diſtinguiſh'd by this inferior badge of their office, as our conſtables, &c. are.

Now therefore depart.] As if he had ſaid, Go now, ſince ye refuſed to go when I offer'd you your liberty. St. Paul here teaches the keeper of the priſon to be faithful to his truſt, by not making uſe of the means of eſcaping which he had in his power, but waiting for the orders of the magiſtrates. (Q.)

Beaten us openly.] Demoſia, publickly; in the face of all the people; or, as the French expreſs it, devant tout le monde. (Trem.) Which publick manner of doing it was a great aggravation of the injury.

Being Romans.] Only Paul himſelf had this privilege. (G.) Not as being born at Rome, or of Roman parents: But becauſe the citizens of Tarſus, where he was born, had the privilege to be freemen of Rome; and as ſuch, by their Valerian law, they might not be bound, and by their Sempronian law, they might not be executed or beaten, without the conſent of the Romans. Thus Paul pleaded his privilege for the defence of the goſpel, leſt the word of God ſhould be deſpiſed with their perſons. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xxii. 25.

Let them come themſelves, and fetch us out.] The magiſtrates ſent officers privately to releaſe them; which St. Paul refuſed; telling them, That they were not only innocent perſons, but Romans: That they had been illegally condemn'd and beaten: That therefore their delivery ſhould be as publick as the injury, and an open vindication of their innocency. For to be ſcourg'd, or bound, without being firſt legally heard and tried, was not only againſt the Roman, but the laws of all nations: And the more publick any injury was, the greater was the aggravation, and the laws required a more ſolemn reparation. (Cave) Tho' we muſt not return injuries, yet we may lawfully make uſe of the helps afforded us by providence, to reſtrain the violence of the wicked, at leaſt, that they may not hurt others. (Beza)

They feared.] To fear the wrath of men, and not to fear to do acts of injuſtice, is an inſtance of infidelity, much leſs pardonable in Chriſtian magiſtrates, than in Heathen judges. There are perhaps a great number, who fear to diſpleaſe the ſovereign power; but look upon it as a matter of no moment to puniſh innocent perſons without due cognizance of the cauſe. (Q.)

The houſe of Lydia.] See the notes on ver. 14, 15.

CHAP. XVII.

Paul preaching in the ſynagogues at Theſſalonica, converteth many; but is riotouſly perſecuted from thence. He withdraws to Beræa, where alſo he gains many converts: But the unbelieving Jews, purſuing him thither, he retires to Athens; where he diſputes with the philoſophers, and converts ſeveral, among whom were Dionyſius the Areopagite, and Damaris.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. NOW when they had paſſed through Amphipolis, and Apollonia, they came to Theſſalonica, where was a ſynagogue of the Jews. And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three ſabbath-days reaſoned with them out of the ſcriptures, Opening and alledging, that Chriſt muſt needs have ſuffered, and riſen again from the dead: And that this Jeſus whom I preach unto you, is Chriſt. And ſome of them believed, and conſorted with Paul and Silas: And of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few. But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, and gathered a company, and ſet all the city on an uprore, and aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon, and ſought to bring them out to the people. And when they found them not, they drew Jaſon, and certain brethren, unto the rulers of the city, crying, Theſe that have turned the world upſide down are come hither alſo; Whom Jaſon hath received: And theſe all do contrary to the decrees of Cæſar; ſaying, That there is another king, one Jeſus. And they troubled the people, and the rulers of the city, when they heard theſe things. And when they had taken ſecurity of Jaſon, and of the other, they let them go.

They came to Theſſalonica.] The chief city of Macedonia; ſo called of Philip's victory over the Theſſalonians. (G. and Aſſ.)

Paul, as his manner was.] Here we may learn, That St. Paul was not reſtrain'd from preaching to the Jews, by his being an apoſtle of the Gentiles: For, as the Goſpel was the power of God, through faith, to the "ſalvation of the Jews firſt, and alſo of the Gentiles," Rom. i. 16. and ii. 9, 10 ſo Paul, in preaching of it, "teſtifies to the Jews, and alſo to the Gentiles, Repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," ch. xx. 21. And whereſoever he came, "his manner was," to go firſt into the ſynagogues of the Jews, to preach to them, ch. ix. 20. xiii. 5, 14, 42. xiv. 1. xvii. 2, 10. xviii. 4, 19. xix. 8. (W.) See the notes on ch. xiii. 46.

Reaſoned with them out of the ſcriptures.] This ſhews, whence all ſound knowledge of God and religion muſt be derived. In things humane, humane reaſons have place: But in matters of religion, only the word of God, and not the traditions of men, muſt determine what we are to reſt in. Faith can be grounded on nothing but infallible truth: And that can be found only in the word of God; in which there can be no falſhood, becauſe, the author of it, cannot lie. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John xxi. 25.

Chriſt muſt needs have ſuffered, and riſen again.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 26, 46

Of the devout Greeks.] Of theſe Sebomenoi Hellenes, or proſelytes, much has been noted already in ſeveral places: But it may not be unſeaſonable to treat of them at once here; becauſe the explication thereof will give ſome light, not to this paſſage only, but to the whole ſtory of the primitive converſion of the Gentiles to the faith, recorded in this book. We muſt know therefore, That of thoſe Gentiles, which embraced the worſhip of the God of Iſrael, commonly term'd proſelytes, there were two ſorts: One of ſuch as were circumciſed, and took upon them the obſervation of the whole law of Moſes. Theſe were accounted as Jews, (to wit, facti, non nati,) bound to the like obſervances with them, convers'd with, as freely as if they had been ſo born; neither might the one eat, drink, or keep company with a Gentile, more than the other, leſt they became unclean: They worſhipped in the ſame court of the temple, where the Iſraelites did; whither others might not come: They were partakers with them in all things, both divine and humane; In a word, they differed nothing from Jews, but only that they were of Gentile race. This kind the Jewiſh doctors call Geri tſedek, proſelyti juſtitiæ, or Geri berith, proſelyti fœderis; namely, becauſe they took upon them the ſign thereof, circumciſion. In the New Teſtament they are called ſimply, proſelytes, without addition: Of which order were Uriah the Hittite, Achior in the book of Judith, Herod the Idumæan, Onkelos the Chaldee paraphraſt; and many others, both before, and in our Saviour's time. But, beſides theſe, there was a ſecond kind of Gentiles, admitted likewiſe to the worſhip of the true God, the God of Iſrael, and the hope of the life to come; which were not circumciſed, nor conformed themſelves to the Moſaical rites and ordinances; but were only tyed to the obſervation of thoſe precepts, which the Hebrew doctors call the precepts of the ſons of Noah: And theſe were ſtill eſteemed Gentiles, and ſo called, becauſe of their uncircumciſion; in reſpect whereof, tho' no idolaters, they were, according to the law, unclean, and ſuch as no Jew might converſe with, ch. x. 28. and xi. 3. Wherefore they came not to worſhip into the ſacred courts of the temple, whither the Jews and circumciſed proſelytes came; but only into the outmoſt court, called atrium gentium & immundorum; which, in the ſecond temple, ſurrounded the ſecond or great court, whereinto the Iſraelites came, being divided there from by a low wall of ſtone, made battlement-wiſe, not above three cubits high, called, ſaith Joſephus, in the Hebrew dialect, Geiſos, in the Greek Thrincos, that is, Lorica; cloſe by which ſtood certain little pillars, whereon was written in Latin and Greek letters, a caution, that no alien ſhould enter into the holy court. And this, I make no queſtion, is that which St. Paul, Epheſ. ii. 14. alludeth to, when he ſaith, That "Chriſt had broken down the partition-wall;" namely, that Lorica, which ſeparated the court of the Gentiles from that of the circumciſion, and ſo, laying both courts into one, had made the Jews and Gentiles intercommoners; whereby thoſe that were ſometime far off, were now made nigh, and as near as the other, unto the throne of God. But in Solomon's temple, this court of the Gentiles ſeems not to have been, but in the ſecond temple only; the Gentiles formerly worſhipping without, at the door, and not coming within the ſteps of the temple at all. This ſecond kind of proſelytes, the Talmudiſts call proſelyti portæ, or proſelyti inquilini; becauſe they were under the ſame condition with thoſe Gentile ſtrangers which lived as inquilini (that is, ſojourners) in the land of Iſrael. For all Gentiles, dwelling within the gates of Iſrael, whether they were as ſervants, taken in war, or otherwiſe, were bound to renounce their falſe gods, and to worſhip the God of Iſrael; but not to be circumciſed, unleſs they would, nor farther bound to keep the law of Moſes, than was contain'd in thoſe precepts of the ſons of Noah. Theſe are thoſe mention'd (as often elſewhere in the law, ſo) in the fourth commandment, by the name of "the ſtranger within thy gates;" whereby it might ſeem probable, that the obſervation of the ſabbath-day, ſo far as concerneth one day in ſeven, was included in ſome one or other of thoſe precepts of the ſons of Noah; namely, in that, of worſhipping, for their God, the creator of heaven and earth, and no other; whereof this conſecration of a ſeventh day, after ſix days labour, was a badge or livery; according to Exod. xxxi. 16, 17. and Ezek. xx. 20. From the example of theſe inquilini, all other Gentiles, whereſoever living, admitted to the worſhip of the God of Iſrael upon the ſame terms, were called proſelyti portæ, or proſelyti inquilini; of which ſort there were many in all cities and places of the Gentiles, where the Jews had ſynagogues; and uſed to frequent the ſynagogues with them, tho' in a diſtinct place, to hear the law and the prophets read and expounded. But in the New Teſtament they are found call'd by another name, to wit, of ſebomenoi, or worſhippers, ſo often mention'd in the Acts of the Apoſtles. For firſt, Theſe are thoſe meant here: Where it is ſaid, that a great number of the worſhipping Greeks believed, and adhered to Paul and Silas; which the vulgar rightly tranſlateth, de colentibus gentilibus multitudo magna; taking the name of Greeks, here, as elſewhere in the New Teſtament, to be put for Gentiles in general. And this place will admit of no evaſion: For that they were Gentiles, the name of Hellenes betokeneth expreſly; being given them by way of diſtinction from the Jews, then and there preſent alſo. That they were worſhippers of the true God, the God of Iſrael, their coming into the ſynagogue, their name ſebomenoi, their capableneſs of St. Paul's diſcourſe, which was to prove out of the ſcriptures, that Meſſiah was to ſuffer death, and that Jeſus was he, argues ſufficiently, yea, abundantly: For who could have profited by ſuch a ſermon as this, but thoſe who already had knowledge of the true God, and believed the reward of the life to come? This place therefore, may ſerve as a key to all the reſt of the places in this book, where theſe ſebomenoi are mention'd, viz. To that, ver. 17. where it is ſaid, that St. Paul, in the ſynagogue at Athens, diſcourſed to the Jews and the worſhippers: To that in ch. xvi. 14. where Lydia, ſebomene ton Theon, a proſelyte-worſhipper, was converted unto the faith, and baptized, with all her houſhold. In the like manner, to chap. xviii. 4. when St. Paul is ſaid at Corinth to have "reaſon'd in the ſynagogue every ſabbath, and to have perſwaded the Jews and the Greeks:" For theſe Greeks were ſebomenoi: Elſe what did they in the ſynagogues ſo regularly every ſabbath-day? True, the name of ſebomenoi is here wanting: But it preſently follows, when the Jews oppoſed Paul, and blaſphemed, that "he ſhook his raiment, and ſaid, Your blood be on your own heads: From henceforth I will go to the Gentiles. And he departed thence, (ſaith the text,) and entred into the houſe of one Juſtus, (ſebomenon ton Theon, a Gentile-worſhipper,) whoſe houſe joined hard to the ſynagogue," ver. 6, 7. But above all, that narration ch. xiii. deſerves our conſideration and attention: There ver. 43. it is ſaid, that St. Paul having preached the goſpel in the Jews ſynagogue at Antioch of Piſidia, there followed him many of the Jews and worſhipping proſelytes; and ver. 42. That "when the Jews were gone out of the ſynagogue, the Gentiles, (that is, the ſebomenoi,) beſought the apoſtles, that the ſame things might be preach'd unto them the next ſabbath;" which being accordingly done, and many of the other Gentiles, who were not ſebomenoi, upon the fame of ſuch a new doctrine, unwontedly aſſembling with them, it is ſaid, that "when the Jews ſaw the multitude, they were filled with envy, and contradicted and blaſphemed." ver. 45. That "then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and ſaid; It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt be ſpoken unto you, but ſeeing ye put it from you, and judge your ſelves unworthy of eternal life; Lo, we turn to the Gentiles, as the Lord ſaith," &c. ver. 46, &c. That "when the Gentiles heard this they were glad, and glorified the word of God, and as many as were ordain'd to eternal life believed;" that is, the ſebomenoi, who were already in procinctu, and in the poſture to eternal life: The Jews blaſphemed; the reſt of the Gentiles were uncapable; only the ſebomenoi, who were already candidati vitæ æternæ, having been inſtructed in the worſhip of the true God, and hoping for the reward to come, they believed. Yet perhaps not all of them neither, (the words require not ſo much; for hoſoi is often put for hoi, and the ſenſe then but indefinite) but that none but ſuch: And it follows, that the Jews found out ſome ſebomonas, worſhipping women, ſuch as were of faſhion, who yet perhaps had not been at the apoſtle's ſermon, by whoſe means they ſtirred up the chief men in the city, and raiſed perſecution againſt Paul and Barnabas. Beſides, it will not be impertinent, to theſe quotations, for ſebomenoi, to note that the ſame perſons are otherwiſe, twice characteriz'd by the title of phoboumenoi ton Theon; As firſt of Cornelius, concerning whom there is no queſtion but he was a Gentile-worſhipper, ch. x. 2. Again in that where St. Paul, ſpeaking at firſt to that mixt multitude, aſſembled in the ſynagogue, conſiſting partly of Jews, and partly of the worſhipping proſelytes, he compellates them both diſtinctly in theſe words, "Men of Iſrael, and ye that fear God," ch. xiii. 16. By the former, meaning the Jews, by the latter the ſebomenoi, or Gentile-worſhippers. Of this kind of converts (as I have in part already intimated) were in our Saviour's, and his apoſtles time, very many in every nation, and city, where the Jews liv'd, and had their ſynagogues: Yea, far more in number, than of that other ſort of proſelytes which were circumciſed; becauſe it was the more eaſy condition, and not ſo prejudicial to their outward liberty, as the other; inaſmuch, as they might, notwithſtanding, ſtill live, and converſe with their friends, kindred, and countrymen, bear office, and enjoy honours among them, (as Naaman the Syrian did, who was of this kind) which the other might not do. Theſe impediments being out of the way, the hope of the reſurrection from the dead, and the reward of the life to come, were powerful inducements to draw many to the worſhip of that God, who only among the gods at that time, promiſed this reward to ſuch as worſhipp'd, and ſerv'd him, and no other, which was the bait wherewith the Jews allured them; and that to their own no ſmall emolument; this kind, as it were to recompence their want of circumciſion, ſeeming to have been very bountiful towards their nation, as may be gathered both from Cornelius, who is ſaid to have "given much alms to the people," (namely, of the Jews;) and the ſtory of that centurion, Luke vii. 4, 5. whom the Jews beſought our Saviour ſo inſtantly for, alledging, that "he loved their nation, and had built them a ſynagogue," and therefore deſerved that favour they ſued for, on his behalf. Now, out of this diſcourſe, beſides the clearing of the paſſages afore-mention'd, we may learn two things: 1. How ſo many of the Gentiles, by the preaching of the apoſtles, could ſo ſoon, and ſo readily, be converted to the faith of Chriſt: It was becauſe they had already embraced the principles which led thereunto. For we are to take notice, that the foundation of the church among the Gentiles, was laid of theſe ſebomenoi, who had already embraced the worſhip of the true God, had knowledge of his promiſes, believed, and hoped for the life to come. For was not St. Peter, to whom the inſtructions for this embaſſage were firſt given, ſent firſt to Cornelius, a centurion, a Gentile, the firſt of this order? Wherefore? but that this might be for a pattern for them, with what kind of men they were firſt to deal in this great work; namely, with ſuch as were idonei auditores evangelii; thoſe which were puri puti gentiles, being not ſo, as who knew nothing of the principles requiſite thereto. This will appear, if we conſider well the tenor of the apoſtles ſermons, to ſuch Gentiles as they converted; which we ſhall obſerve to preſuppoſe, that they already knew the true God, and the promiſe of eternal life, to ſuch as worſhipped him, and ſo had no more to learn, but the way and means now revealed by God, for attainment thereof, which was by the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. 2. We may learn what was the true ſtate of the queſtion, which the apoſtles met to decide at Jeruſalem. It was this, to reſolve that, whereas all ſuch as embraced the worſhip of the God of Iſrael, conform'd to one of theſe two kinds of proſelytes; to which of them the Gentiles, which had or ſhould receive the Goſpel of Chriſt, were to conform themſelves; whether to the proſelytes of the covenant, or to the ſebomenoi, the proſelytes of the gate? St. Peter demonſtrates it to be the will of God, that they ſhould conform to the latter, and not to the firſt; and that upon this ground, becauſe Cornelius, the firſt chriſtian'd Gentile, unto whom himſelf was ſent by divine commiſſion, was no circumciſed proſelyte, but a proſelyte of the gate, or a ſebomenos only; yet received he no commiſſion to circumciſe him: Yea, the Holy Ghoſt, as he was preaching, fell upon him, and his houſhold, being uncircumciſed, as it did upon thoſe of the circumciſion: Whereby it appeared, that God would have the reſt of the Gentiles, which embraced the faith, to be after the pattern of Cornelius; and to have no more impoſed upon them, than he had. And accordingly the council defines, That no other burden ſhould be laid upon them, but only to abſtain from pollution of idols, from blood, from things ſtrangled, and from fornication; ch. xv. and as ſome copies have it, To do as they would be done to; that is, they ſhould, as ſebomenoi, obſerve the præcepta filiorum Nohæ; which here by a ſchema endeias are briefly reckon'd up. (Mede) See what is already noted on the ſeveral texts here referr'd to.

Moved with envy.] Zeloſantos. See the notes on ch. v. 17.

Certain lewd fellows, of the baſer ſort.] Or wicked men, loitering in the market: For ſo the word agoraioi is here interpreted by Dr. Whitby and Mr. Burkitt, as well as by thoſe of the Aſſembly. But Mr. Howel notes, That the Greek word here can have no relation to the Engliſh verſion, which calls them "lewd fellows;" nor much to the vulgar Latin, which calls them De vulgo viros quoſdam malos; unleſs it be meant of the circumforaneous lawyers, and not thoſe of the forum. The word agoraios, without any periphraſis, plainly ſignifies, one belonging to a court of judicature: And by it poſſibly in this place might be meant ſome of thoſe who were uſed to ſummon the people to aſſemblies on extraordinary occaſions; as probably they thought this to be. Which latter ſenſe of this word is authorized by Beza, Hammond, and Grotius, and follow'd alſo by Maſſey. See the notes on ch. xvi. 35. and Mark vii. 4.

Aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon.] The ſame who is afterwards honourably mention'd by St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 21.

Theſe that have turned the world upſide down.] Hoi teen oicoumeneen anaſtatoſantes; They who diſturb the world; That is, ſo as to unſettle things, and bring them into confuſion: For this, they conceiv'd, the introduction of new gods tended to; as we learn from the words of the conſuls in Livy, and the Roman laws. See the notes on ch. xvi. 21. (W.)

Another king, one Jeſus.] See the notes on Luke xxiii. 2. John xviii. 36, 37. and xix. 12.

Taken ſecurity of Jaſon.] Grotius thinks, this ſecurity was taken of Jaſon, that Paul and Silas ſhould be forth coming, to anſwer to whatever crime ſhould be charg'd againſt them. But this cannot be; 1. Becauſe, if ſo, we cannot believe, that Paul and Silas would have gone off "by night unto Beræa," ver. 10. and left their ſecurity in danger to ſuffer on their account. 2. The ſcripture it ſelf aſſures us, that Paul and Silas were never in their power; for when the mob came to take 'em, "they found them not," ver. 6. And, 3. The particular charge againſt Jaſon is ſpecified, ver. 7. viz. That he "had received," and entertained, diſturbers of the publick peace, and ſuch as "did contrary to the decrees of Cæſar," &c. Which allegation of it ſelf was ſufficient to require ſecurity of Jaſon, to anſwer this charge againſt himſelf.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. And the brethren immediately ſent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: Who coming thither, went into the ſynagogue of the Jews. Theſe were more noble than thoſe in Theſſalonica, in that they received the word with all readineſs of mind, and ſearched the ſcriptures daily, whether thoſe things were ſo. Therefore many of them believed; alſo of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men not a few. But when the Jews of Theſſalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither alſo, and ſtirred up the people. And then immediately the brethren ſent away Paul, to go as it were to the ſea: But Silas and Timotheus abode there ſtill. And they that conducted Paul, brought him unto Athens: And receiving a commandment unto Silas aud Timotheus, for to come to him with all ſpeed, they departed.

Theſe were more noble.] Eugeneſteroi; more ingenuous. (H.) The Jews look'd upon themſelves not only as of free, but noble, birth, as being of the ſeed of Abraham, (as Philo ſays:) St. Luke therefore ſhews them, wherein their true nobility conſiſted; viz. in ſuch a diſpoſition of the ſoul, as inclined them to attend to the doctrine of the goſpel. (W.) Obſerve, 1. Their honourable character; "They were more noble than thoſe of Theſſalonica:" That is, of a more ingenuous, mild, and pliable temper of mind; not ſo poſſeſs'd with prejudice and obſtinacy againſt the goſpel; they did not meet it with rage, but thought it worth their ſearch and ſerious enquiry; for which they are ſtiled "more noble." Thence learn, That to be of a teachable temper, and tractable towards the goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, is the beſt ſort of gentility and nobleneſs. The Bereans were better bred, and better deſcended than the Theſſalonians; yet not by civil human dignity, but by ſpiritual and divine deſignation: God gave them this preparation of their heart, and made them to differ from their neighbours. 2. What it is theſe Bereans are ſo highly commended for: Namely, For "ſearching the ſcriptures." Where note, 1. That the ſcriptures then were in the vulgar tongue. 2. That as they were in their own tongue, ſo the laity had them in their own hands. 3. That the common people did read them, and heard them read, ſearched and examined them, and yet were ſo far from cenſure and blame, that they met with commendation for it from God himſelf. From the whole, note, That a diligent reading of, and daily ſearching into the holy ſcriptures, is a duty incumbent upon all thoſe, in whoſe hands the ſcriptures are, or may be found. Theſe Chriſtians at Berea ſearching the ſcriptures, were a noble pattern for all ſucceeding Chriſtians to imitate and follow. (B.) An honeſt mind, a deſire to know the truth, and a ſincere and humble ſtudy of the ſcriptures, diſpel abundance of clouds which darken and conceal the truth. The obſtacles of prepoſſeſſion, the prejudices of birth and of cuſtom, the deluſions and artifices of falſe teachers, &c. vaniſh and diſappear, when men are willing to hear and to examine. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xvi. 29. John v. 39. and xxi. 25.

Therefore many of them believed.] A great emphaſis ſeems to be laid upon the word therefore. "They ſearched the ſcriptures daily, whether thoſe things were ſo;" (that is, whether the doctrines which St. Paul taught them, were to be proved from the holy ſcriptures: And, becauſe they found that they "were ſo, Therefore many of them believed;" which they would not have done upon any other teſtimony. And for this they are commended by the Holy Ghoſt.

Of honourable women.] St. Luke takes notice, more than once, of the converſion of women of quality, as bringing more honour to our bleſſed Saviour's grace. Their ſex and quality are two obſtacles united in ladies. Their ſex; becauſe, being leſs ſtudious, and leſs exerciſed in theological diſputes, they are more diffident, and more afraid of being ſurprized or deceived: And their quality; becauſe they are more addicted to the world and its vanities, have greater engagements therein, and are in a ſtate of greater dependence than men. But every thing yields to grace. (Q.)

Stirred up the people.] Obſerve, How the inveterate malice of the unbelieving Jews at Theſſalonica purſues the apoſtles as far as Berea. "When the Jews at Theſſalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither alſo, and ſtirred up the people." As Chriſt ſends his miniſters, ſo the devil ſends his meſſengers, from place to place: And as the miniſters of Chriſt are never weary of his ſervice for the good of ſouls; ſo perſecutors are reſtleſs, they will compaſs ſea and land to harraſs and drive the faithful ambaſſadors of Chriſt from city to city, and if it were in their power, to baniſh them out of the world. (B.) Here the ſacred writer uſes the moſt ſignificant and appoſite word in language, to deſcribe the boiſterous rage and miſchievous conſequences of popular tumults. Saleuo is to ſtir the ſea to the bottom with a violent ſtorm, which caſteth up mire and dirt. The noiſe and outrage of a ſeditious people is often compared to the fury of a ſtorm, and the roaring and ruſhing of huge waters: And in the Old Teſtament, that great treaſury of all the ſublimity and magnificence of thought and language, it is expreſs'd to be the ſole privilege of the Almighty to reſtrain the rage of the waves, and the unrulineſs of the people; Pſa. lxv. 7. lxxxix. 9. and cvii. 29. (Blackw.) Obſtinacy, joined to ſelf-intereſt, is almoſt invincible in perſons actuated by a falſe zeal. They ſpare nothing, to bring that to an iſſue, which they have once undertaken. It very rarely happens, that men do as much to propagate the truth, as others to ſuppreſs it: The one always finds ſome pretence to colour over their falſe zeal; the other to juſtify their ſloth and cowardice; eſpecially when authority has intereſted it ſelf in the matter. (Q.)

To go as it were to the ſea.] The prudential care, which the believing brethren took of the holy apoſtle. His life being in danger at Theſſalonica, they ſend him to Berea; being purſued to Berea, they ſend him to Athens, and detain Silas and Timotheus: Not that St. Paul was more fearful than the other two, but more uſeful, and conſequently more hateful to the unbelieving Jews, and his life more ſought after. To preſerve which, his friends uſe an innocent policy; they make as if they ſent him away to ſea; but really he goes on foot to Athens. Hence learn, That human policy and prudence may lawfully be made uſe of, in ſubſerviency to divine providence. It was good policy and great providence in the apoſtle and his friends to look one way, and go another: to look towards the ſea, and to go to Athens by land. There is a wiſe and holy ſubtilty in foreſeeing the evil, and hiding our ſelves: A ſerpent's eye is a ſingular ornament in a dove's head. Piety without policy, is too ſimple to be ſafe; and policy without piety is too ſubtle to be good. The ſagacity of the ſerpent, and the innocency of the dove, both may and ought to go together. (B.)

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. Now, while Paul waited for them at Athens, his ſpirit was ſtirred in him, when he ſaw the city wholly given to idolatry. Therefore diſputed he in the ſynagogue with the Jews, and with the devout perſons, and in the market daily with them that met with him. Then certain philoſophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountred him: And ſome ſaid, What will this babler ſay? Other ſome, He ſeemeth to be a ſetter-forth of ſtrange Gods: Becauſe he preached unto them Jeſus, and the reſurrection. And they took him and brought him unto Areopagus, ſaying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou ſpeakeſt, is? For thou bringeſt certain ſtrange things to our ears: We would know therefore what theſe things mean. (For all the Athenians, and ſtrangers which were there, ſpent their time in nothing elſe, but either to tell, or to hear ſome new thing.) Then Paul ſtood in the mids of Mars-hill, and ſaid, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too ſuperſtitious. For as I paſſed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inſcription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worſhip, him declare I unto you. God that made the world, and all things therein, ſeeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands: Neither is worſhipped with mens hands, as though he needed any thing, ſeeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; And hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation: That they ſhould ſeek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain alſo of your own poets have ſaid, For we are alſo his offspring. For as much then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or ſilver, or ſtone graven by art and mans device. And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent: Becauſe he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, by that Man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given aſſurance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead. And when they heard of the reſurrection of the dead, ſome mocked: And others ſaid, We will hear thee again of this matter. So Paul departed from among them. Howbeit, certain men clave unto him, and believed: Among the which was Dionyſius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

Waited for them at Athens.] Obſerve here, 1. The place which the apoſtle comes to, Athens, a ſovereign city, a famous univerſity; the eye of Greece, as Greece was reputed the eye of the world: Yet notwithſtanding all their ſcholarſhip, they were ignorant of God in Chriſt; all their learning could not teach them to attain any ſaving knowledge, but both city and univerſity are wholly given to idolatry. Learn hence, That human learning alone can never teach any place or people the divine truths of Chriſt and his goſpel: 'Tis a good handmaid, but a bad miſtreſs; 'tis good in it ſelf, but when corrupted by a buſy devil, and a baſe heart, it degenerates into the worſt inſtrument in the world: For corruptio optimi eſt peſſima; the ſweeteſt wine makes the ſowreſt vinegar. (B.) And, 2. How the providence of God brought it to paſs, that Satan's malicious endeavours to ſuppreſs the goſpel, (namely, at Theſſalonica and Berea,) cauſed it ſtill more to ſpread abroad; as here it did, by its being preach'd at Athens. (Aſſ.)

His ſpirit was ſtirred within him.] Paroxyneto to pneuma. His mind was in a concuſſion by contrary paſſions. He was affected firſt with ſorrow and grief, that a city ſhould be ſo learned, and yet ſo blind: Next with indignation and anger, at the ſuperabounding idolatry of that knowing people; And laſtly, with fervent zeal, and an ardent deſire to undeceive them, and better inform them. In ſhort, their idolatry put him into a paroxyſm; as the word ſignifies. (B.) See the notes on ch. xv. 39.

City wholly given to idolatry.] Cateidolon, full of idols: i. e. images; for ſo many images could not be ſeen elſewhere: Pauſanias ſaying, that they did worſhip the gods more than others, and exceeded all others in their diligence to the gods; and Strabo ſaying, that they were hoſpitable to the gods; for they received many ſtrange gods, inſomuch that the comedians ridiculed them upon that account; and all the reſt, cited by Dr. Hammond, ſay the ſame thing: For in thoſe times of Heatheniſm, they never worſhipped a god without an image to repreſent him to them; and therefore, as St. Paul ſaith here, that they multiplied their idols, ſo, ver. 22. that they were more prone than others to worſhip dæmons. We may here alſo laugh at the abſurd folly of Lorinus's caution, Not to believe Stephanus, ſaying in his lexicon, that eidolon ſignifies an image, and not as he would have it, a ſhadow, ſpectrum or phantom: For would it not be ridiculous, to render St. Paul's words thus; I ſaw your city full of phantoms, ſhades, and appearances of nothing? (W.) See the notes on ver. 23.

In the ſynagogue.] See the notes on ver. 2.

The devout perſons.] Sebomenoi; proſelytes. See the notes on ver. 4.

Certain philoſophers.] The learned men among the Greeks were of old called ſophoi, wiſe men: But ſince, by the modeſty of Pythagoras, (who thought none deſerv'd the title of wiſe, but God alone,) a little degraded of that height, and only called philoſophoi, that is, lovers of wiſdom; yet nevertheleſs of venerable eſteem among the Athenians. Aretius calls 'em, their divines; Brentius, their patriarchs and prophets: Each word they ſpake was as canonical as text; and themſelves both maſters of it, and of the people. Of theſe there were divers ſects; two of which are here ſpecified, "the Epicureans and the Stoicks:" And theſe were two extremes in the rules both of their life and tenets; the Epicure in the defect, the Stoick in the exceſs. The former (ſo call'd from Epicurus, their founder) did not believe, that the world was made by God, but by a caſual conflux of atoms; nor did they own the providence of God, or think he had any care of mankind; They alſo held, that the gods were of human ſhape; and that there was no reſurrection, nor any puniſhment after death: The latter held the world to be a god; that matter was eternal, and god was corporeal, and all things ſubject to fate. The former placed happineſs in the pleaſures of ſenſe: The latter in the perfection of reaſon and moral virtue, &c. (Alley, Sydenham, Leigh, H. W. B. and Fleury.) Yet theſe two ſects, of all other the moſt extremely oppoſite in themſelves, came with their joint forces to encounter Paul, and diſcountenance Chriſtianity; as Herod and Pilate, and the Phariſees and Sadducees, conſpired together againſt Chriſt, Luke xxiii. 12. and Matth. xvi. 1. And thus, to moleſt and make havock of the people of God, "the tabernacles of Edom and the Iſhmaelites, of Moab and the Hagarenes, Gebal and Ammon and Amalek," &c. conſulted together with one conſent," and combined themſelves in confederacies and aſſociations, Pſa. lxxxiii. 5, &c. (Sanderſ.)

What will this babbler ſay?] Euſtathius gives us two ſenſes of this word ſpermologos, (which we call a babbler) which ſeem to have been the occaſion of their application of it to St. Paul; 1. That Paul was "diſputing with thoſe he met with in the market," ver. 17. for, ſaith he, the Atticks call'd them ſpermologoi, who were converſant in the markets and places of merchandice: And Oecumenius ſays, a little chattering bird, which gathered up the ſeeds ſcatter'd in the market-place, was call'd by this name; from whence deſpicable perſons, not worthy to be named, were call'd ſo; In which etymology Suidas, Phavorinus, the ſcholiaſt upon Ariſtophanes, and almoſt all grammarians, do agree. 2. Becauſe he preached a new ſyſtem of divinity, which they were not acquainted with, and which they thought proceeded from ſome vain opinions he had entertain'd: For the word ſpermologein, ſaith he, is uſed of thoſe, who, from ſome falſe opinions, boaſted unreaſonably of their learning. (Beza, Sydenh. H. and W.) But Ulpian, in Demoſth. de Corona, tells us of another application of this word, to thoſe profane perſons who robb'd the altars of what had been offer'd upon them: In alluſion to which interpretation, there is a ſingular beauty in this text; for, as St. Paul transferr'd to the one true God all the religious honours which the Heathens paid to their many falſe ones, and conſequently ſeem'd to them a robber of their altars, the philoſophers might therefore, in that ſenſe, properly think and call him ſpermologos. (Drake)

Jeſus, and the reſurrection.] Some of them look'd upon the apoſtle as a propagator or "ſetter forth of ſtrange gods, becauſe he preached Jeſus and Anaſtaſis," or the reſurrection; which they fancied to be two upſtart deities, lately come into the world. (H. Cave, Rouſe and Maſſey) But this, tho' confeſſedly the remark of St. Chryſoſtome and Oecumenius, does not pleaſe ſome other criticks; who contend, that the Athenians too well underſtood the notion of a reſurrection, to think Anaſtaſis could be meant of a goddeſs. (W. and Bentl.) Yet 'tis no way unreaſonable to believe they might think ſo, when we remember, out of Pauſanias, that aidos, pheme, and horme, (viz. modeſty, fame, and vehement deſire,) were reckon'd as deities; and as ſuch had altars erected to them by theſe very Athenians. (H.)

They brought him unto Areopagus.] This was their ſenate, or ſtanding court of judicature; by whoſe laws and orders any new gods were receiv'd among them: And therefore they brought Paul thither, to have him examin'd, what gods they were whom he thus preach'd. They had two judicatures in Athens: The one changed every year, and made up of 500 choſen men, of whom the republick conſiſted; The other perpetual, which judg'd of murders, and the like capital offences; and this was in Areopago: Of which and the cuſtoms thereof, ſee Budæus on the Pandects. Juvenal calls it Curiam Martis, the court of Mars; and Pauſanias tells us, that it was ſo call'd, becauſe when Mars had kill'd Neptune's ſon, Alirrhothios, he was the firſt that was there judg'd: But this, St. Auſtin ſays, Varro would not yield to. Pagos ſignifies a rock, or the riſe of a hill: And areios denotes the ſorts of cauſes there judg'd; as murder, &c. Suidas ſays, It is ſo call'd, becauſe it judgeth cauſes of murder; Ares (that is, Mars) being uſed for murderers. By this it appears, how fit it is to retain in tranſlations the compound Greek, rather than to divide it, as the Engliſh have done into Mars's hill; as if it had its denomination from that heathen god of war, which is not acknowledged, nor intimated in the word. Now the judges which ſat in this court, (and not the inhabitants that dwelt in that part of the city) were called Areopagites; men famed for their gravity, and uprightneſs in judging; not admitting rhetorical pleas, but ſimple narrations, chooſing the dark, that they might not be moved to compaſſion by the ſight of the malefactor, and giving their judgment without a word ſpeaking. And this judicature was by all look'd on with ſuch reverence, that an Areopagite ſignified proverbially an excellent perſon: And when the Romans had conquered Greece, and ſent their proconſuls of Aſia to rule there, they frequently committed difficult cauſes to the judgment of theſe Areopagites. So did Dolabella in Gellius, l. xii. c. 7. And beſides, to theſe belonged the affairs of religion: And accordingly Anaxagoras, for teaching, that the ſun, which they deemed a god, was a fire-ſtone, and Diogoras, as a derider of their gods, had been condemned to death by them; and ſo Protagoras, and Socrates alſo: And Plutarch ſaith of Euripides, l. 1. c. 7. De Plac. Phil. That having ſome doubts of the gods, he durſt not openly profeſs it; fearing the judicature of the Areopagites: Therefore is Paul here brought before them, as an aſſertor and preacher of ſuch a deity as they had not admitted among them: And one of theſe judges, Dionyſius ver. 34. therefore called the Areopagite, was converted by his diſcourſe there. (H.)

This new doctrine.] Thus godleſs men think of truth: Whereas truth is more ancient than any error. The goſpel was in the Old Teſtament, as the wheat is in the blade; in time, and by degrees ripening, and ſhewing it ſelf. Heatheniſh ſuperſtitions are but imitations of God's truth and holy worſhip; inventions of Satan, to beguile ignorant ſouls with ſhews of truth. (Aſſ.) The ſpirit of curioſity is moſt commonly an obſtacle to the truth; but God ſometimes makes uſe of it to introduce the truth into the heart. (Q.)

To tell or hear ſome new thing.] Obſerve here, The temper of the men of Athens deſcribed to us: They were great and greedy news-mongers; they ſpent their time in telling and hearing news of any ſort: All which was the effect of an itching curioſity; a diſeaſe which has deſcended from age to age, from place to place, from perſon to perſon, occaſioning a ſinful expence of time, which can never be recalled, the neglect of our neceſſary affairs, which can never be redeemed, ſpreading falſe ſtories of others, and provoking diſpleaſure againſt ourſelves. O how wiſe and happy were it, if we enquired after news not as Athenians, but as Chriſtians, that we might know the better how to manage our prayers and praiſes for the church and nation. (B.) What other buſineſs ſoever they had, yet they ſpent ſome time to tell or hear novelties: And it were a ſhame to us, if we ſhould not do more than they, in the neceſſary things of our duty. (Andr.)

In the midſt of Mars-hill.] Or rather, in the midſt of Areopagus. See the notes on ver. 19.

Ye are too ſuperſtitious.] That is, too much addicted to the worſhip of dæmons; for deiſidaimonia, ſaith Phavorinus, is the fear of dæmons: And that in this ſenſe St. Paul doth here uſe the word, is evident; he ſtiling them thus ſuperſtitious, becauſe he found their city full of images. (W.) But, the word is ſometimes uſed in a more favourable ſenſe: As it is rendred religioſiores by Beza; to which agrees this verſion of Du-Pin, Methinks ye are religious even to exceſs. And thus Grotius alſo underſtands it; who obſerves, That the apoſtle was willing to praiſe the Athenians, for that they were religious according to the beſt of their knowledge, that ſo, by this inſinuation, he might gain a more favourable audience, in teaching them better. But the curious may find the full import of the word ſtated at large by Dr. Hammond upon this place. However, 'tis well obſerved, That this great maſter of eloquence, takes great care, in this addreſs, not to uſe any harſh expreſſions, to ſhock his hearers, and prejudice them againſt his doctrine. Thus, 1. The very word deiſidaimonia contains a cenſure mixt with ſweetneſs, and carries ſomewhat of an excuſe along with the reproof: It acknowledges, that a zeal for religion is highly commendable, provided it be kept within its proper bounds; He therefore does not yet charge them with being wrong in their worſhip, (for that would have provok'd them to ſtop their ears againſt him,) but only ſays, they were too religious. 2. Tho' the Athenians were ſuperſtitious to the laſt degree, the apoſtle is ſo indulgent, (as Eraſmus obſerves) to make uſe of only a comparative expreſſion; calling them deiſidaimoneſterous, i. e. more ſuperſtitious than others. Yea, 3. The interpoſition of the particle hoos makes the reprehenſion ſtill more gentle: As if he had ſaid, Ye ſeem to me to be, as it were, more ſuperſtitious than ordinary. And the like may be obſerv'd in the next verſe. (Drake) And indeed the apoſtle, who was to ſpeak to ſuch a promiſcuous aſſembly, has, with moſt admirable prudence and art, ſo accommodated his diſcourſe, that every branch and member of it is directly oppoſed to a known error and prejudice of ſome party of his hearers. So that he prov'd he was no babbler, as they reproach'd him. (Bentley)

Beheld your devotions.] Sebaſmata, a word which comprehends temples, images, altars, monuments, and every thing elſe that relates to religious worſhip, is made choice of by the apoſtle; as being much ſofter both in ſound and ſenſe, than if he had uſed the offenſive word idola; notwithſtanding both the proneneſs of the Athenians to idolatry, and the propriety of the Greek tongue would well have born it. This is plain from ver. 16. where St. Luke calls Athens a city full of idols. But the part of an hiſtorian is one thing, and that of an apoſtle another: 'Tis one thing to inſtruct the reader by writing; and another to gain upon the hearers by ſpeaking: For a ſpeech will never anſwer its end, either to draw men from falſe opinions, or to poſſeſs them with true ones, unleſs it be mild and gentle, free from every thing that is harſh, bitter and ſhocking. (Drake)

To the unknown God.] Concerning, this altar at Athens, inſcribed "To the unknown God," there is a famous ſtory in Laertius, in Epimen. That, in time of peſtilence there, Epimenides, being accounted one moſt beloved of God, was conſulted by them; who appointed this luſtration for the city. Taking many ſheep, black and white, he brought them into Areopagus, and permitted them to go whither they would; appointing ſome to follow each, and wherever they lay, to kill and ſacrifice them to a fit God, or to a God to whom ſacrifices were due: And ſo the plague ceaſed; whence, ſaith he, it is that among the Athenians, in publick places, there are altars that have no names on them. So Heſychius ſays, ſtrange gods are worſhipped among the Athenians, which Appophanes reckons up in his Cretians. So in Philoſtratus, l. 6. c. 7. of Apollonius, mentioning Athens, ſaith he, There are built altars of unknown dæmons, or ſpirits, or gods. And ſo Lucian, in his Philopater, By the unknown God at Athens; And we having found and worſhipp'd the unknown God at Athens, will ſtretch out our hands to heaven, and give thanks to him. And ſo ſaith Pauſanias, That there were at Athens altars of unknown gods: And the ſame author mentions, among the Lydians or Perſians, ſome ſacrifices, that by invocation of an unknown God, and a form which he calls barbarous, becauſe not underſtood by the Grecians (The God of Abraham, &c.) brought fire down, and burnt wood upon the altar, Eliac. l. i. which is a deſcription of the pyraitheia mentioned by Strabo, l. xv. which may well be thought an imitation of that fact of Elias in Ahab's time; who by invoking the name of God brought down fire upon the altar. Of St. Paul's making uſe of this inſcription at Athens againſt the Heathens, ſee Photii epiſt. p. 114. (H.) Another occaſion of erecting this altar, is ſaid to be an appearance in the ſhape of god Pan to Philippides, whom the Athenians ſent ambaſſador to the Lacedemonians for aid againſt the Perſians; complaining, that he was neglected while their other gods were daily worſhipped, and promiſing them ſucceſs if they would worſhip him: Whereupon they, being ſucceſsful, did not only build altars to Pan; but, leſt they ſhould afterwards ſuffer, through the neglect of worſhipping any other deity, they built an altar alſo "To the unknown god." But, however fabulous this may ſeem to be, 'tis certain, from Aulus Gellius, and Livy, that in all great emergencies, the Heathens of old were wont to ſupplicate gods unknown and nameleſs: And ſome are of opinion, that the Athenians intended this altar to the god of the Jews, whom they had heard to have given ſuch wonderful deliverances to his own people. Nor is this conjecture unreaſonable, conſidering that the writings of Plato, Pythagoras, and many others, are a plain proof, that the holy ſcriptures had been read by their philoſophers; tho' not being able to comprehend his divine nature and attributes, they might call him ignotum, the unknown, as Lucan and Trebellius Pollio call him incertum, the uncertain god. Lactantius aſſures us, that in any grievous diſtreſs they were wont to fly to God for help, tho' when it was over they return'd to their own deities: And even the holy ſcriptures prove the ſame, in the caſe of Jonah, ch. i. 6. where he whom (ſpeaking to Jonah) they call "Thy God," was to the Heathen mariners "The unknown God." The whole inſcription upon this altar, of which the apoſtle quotes only a part, is ſet down by Oecumenius, and is (in Engliſh) this, To the gods of Aſia, and of Europe, and of Africa; To the ſtrange and unknown god! St. Jerome repreſents it to have been unknown gods, in the plural number; and fanſies that St. Paul cited it in the ſingular number, as not needing to ſpeak of more than one god. But ſurely as he is alone in that remark, ſo he indulges himſelf in the making it without any warrant, and is therefore too bold to correct the apoſtle here. For as many of the Heathen writers do make mention of altars erected to unknown gods, ſo ſome of them ſpeak of the like to an unknown god; as is prov'd already. And this notion the Athenians might probably borrow of the Hebrews, who had the name of God in great ſecrecy and veneration; this being one of the titles given him by the prophet, a hidden God, or "a God that hideth himſelf," Iſa. xlv. 15. and (as Juſtin Martyr ſays) one of the principal names given to God, by ſome of the Heathens, was pancryphos, one altogether hidden. (D. Heinſ. Cave, W. and Drake) See Dr. Sam. Drake's excellent ſermon (ad Clerum) on this text.

Him declare I unto you.] This ſhews, that the inſcription upon the altar muſt have been "To the unknown God;" and not to gods, as St. Jerome fancies: For if it had been in the plural number, St. Paul had expoſed himſelf to the ridicule of theſe acute diſputants, by arguing from thence in the ſingular number, and taking upon himſelf to inſtruct them, concerning "him whom they ignorantly worſhipped;" when they might have replied, that their altar was not erected to (him, that is, to) any one, but to ſeveral unknown gods; and therefore all he could ſay concerning that one (hen and touton) was not concluſive, and ſhort of convincing them: Whereas, taking occaſion from a well known and publick inſcription, againſt which they could not object, the apoſtle's argument to prove the one true God, was not only cloſe, but wiſely judg'd. For, (as 'tis well obſerv'd,) If he had ſpoken againſt the worſhip of the known gods of their country, he had inflamed their paſſions rather than informed their minds: That therefore, which he could not touch upon without offence, he prudently paſſes over in ſilence; and preſſes home that point, where he has the beſt proſpect of ſucceſs in their reformation. (Drake)

God that made the world.] As St. Paul adapts his whole diſcourſe to the ſentiments of his hearers; ſo here he addreſſes himſelf; Firſt, to prove a God and a providence, to the excluſion both of fate and fortune: And then, Secondly, From the very nature and notion of God, he infers the folly and abſurdity of their Pagan ſuperſtition. Obſerve next, the apoſtle's argument to prove the being of a God and a providence; 1. From the works of creation; "He made the world, and all things therein; he giveth life and breath, and all things". The whole univerſe is his work, and he planted the earth, and repleniſh'd it with inhabitants; the inviſible God is made viſible in his creatures; and the being of God demonſtrated from the formation of a world of creatures. From the formation of man in particular; "In him we live and move," &c. Here are three great benefits enjoy'd by human nature; life, motion, and being, all derived from God and demonſtrating the being of God. 1. Life: This is valuable above all bleſſings, becauſe it renders us capable of enjoying all bleſſings. 2. Motion; A great mercy, but little conſidered: How uncomfortable would life be without it? Were we ſtaked down to the earth, as trees; or did we move by a conſtant law of nature, as the ſun and moon do move, it had been a favour beyond our deſert; But to move as we do at pleaſure, with choice and eaſe, to help ourſelves, and to aſſiſt others, is at once a demonſtration of God's Being, and an evidence of his bounty. 3. Being: This is eſſential and neceſſary to none but God: To us it is an act of divine favour; and this Being is a mercy: Then being what we are, is a double mercy; that we do not creep and crawl upon the earth, as worms and toads, but are built high upon the earth, with wonderful wiſdom and care; and that a ſoul, which is an immortal and an eternal Being, inhabits within us; a being which ſhall continue when heaven and earth ſhall be conſumed. Obſerve next, The apoſtle, having proved the being of a God, next demonſtrates the certainty of a divine providence: "He hath determined the times that are fore-appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." That is, God has as it were chalked, and drawn a line, where the bounds and habitations, the dominions or poſſeſſions of men, ſhould be extended, and where they ſhall be confined. The common bleſſings of God are not diſpenſed without a ſpecial providence; and the ſpecial providence of God in upholding, diſpoſing, and governing of the world, doth as much prove the being of a God, as the general creation of it: Every hour's preſervation, is virtually a new creation, and both of them ſufficient demonſtrations of the divine Being and bounty. Obſerve laſtly, The duty which the apoſtle infers on man's part, from all this goodneſs and bounty demonſtrated on God's part. "That they ſhould ſeek the Lord, and find him, who is not far from every one of us." It is the duty of all men to follow after God: That God hath made man, ſhould draw man after God. Inaſmuch as "we are his offspring," ver. 29. our hearts ſhould ſpring and riſe up to him in love and thankfulneſs, as the rivers, becauſe they come from the ſea, go back thither; ſo we, being the offspring of God, and derived from him, ſhould be always returning to him: And if it be the duty of all men to follow after God, becauſe they have natural life, breath, and motion from him; how much more ſhould the new creature, who has a ſpiritual life breathed into him, and beſtowed upon him, follow hard after God; in the enjoyment of whom his preſent happineſs and future felicity doth conſiſt? To follow God in his way, and to propoſe God as our end, contains the ſum of all duty. (B.) This firſt doctrine, tho' admitted by many of his auditors, is expreſly againſt the Epicureans, who aſcribed the origin and frame of the world, not to the power of God, but to the fortuitous concourſe of atoms; and to the Peripateticks, who ſuppoſed all things to have been eternally as they now are, and never to have been made at all, either by the deity or without him. (Bentl.) But they might have learnt the truth of the creation, even from ſome of their own philoſophers; particularly Heraclitus, and Pythagoras. (D. Heinſ.)

Neither is worſhipped with men's hands.] This is oppoſed to the vulgar religion of Athens, which worſhipped God with temples and ſacrifices, as if he really needed habitation and ſuſtenance: And that the common Heathens had ſuch a mean apprehenſion, appears plainly, to name no more, from Ariſtophanes's Plutus, and the dialogues of Lucian. But the philoſophers were not touch'd in this point: All parties and ſects, even the Epicureans themſelves, did maintain the ſelf-ſufficiency of the God-head; and ſeldom, or never, ſacrificed at all, unleſs in condeſcenſion to the cuſtom of their country. (Bentl.) See Whitby alſo, more at large, to the ſame purpoſe.

Made of one blood all nations.] This doctrine, about the beginning of humane race, tho' agreeable enough to the Platoniſts and Stoicks, doth apparently thwart the Epicureans and Ariſtotelians; one of whom did produce their primitive men from meer accident or mechaniſm, the other denied that man had any beginning at all: Neither were the common people unconcern'd in this point. (Bentl.)

That they ſhould ſeek the Lord.] Here, Firſt, we learn, That God framed the world with this deſign, that men, by contemplation of it, might ſeek after the author of it, and ſeeking, find him; and therefore, muſt have made it ſo, as to contain ſufficient evidence that it was made by his power and wiſdom. Now to ſeek after God, in the ſcripture phraſe, is not only to enquire whether there be a God, but ſo to ſeek him out, that we may give him that worſhip which is due to him: As when the apoſtle ſaith, "He that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is; and that he is a rewarder of thoſe that diligently ſeek him," Heb. xi. 6. To find him, is to obtain his grace, and favour; or to find him good, and propitious to them: For, to what other end ſhould men ſo ſolicitouſly ſeek after him, but to obtain his grace and favour? Or why ſhould they deſire to find him, but that they may receive ſome benefit from him thus found? Is it not on this account, that all men come to him, and do him ſervice? And would any one do it, if he expected no advantage by it? And in this ſenſe God ſaith, " If from thence thou ſhalt ſeek the Lord thy God, thou ſhalt find him, if thou ſeek him with all thy heart," Deut. iv. 29. " If ye ſeek him, he will be found of you," 2 Chron. xv. 2. Note, 2. That ſinners cannot thus ſeek or hope to find God, unleſs they can expect to find him merciful in the pardon of thoſe ſins, which they do confeſs, and do forſake: And that this hath been a principle, embraced by all nations, appears from the propitiatory ſacrifices, which have ſo generally obtain'd among them, even from the beginning. And therefore all this muſt depend upon this foundation, or the knowledge of this one thing, That God is the maker of heaven and earth, and all that therein is; and ſo it evidently doth. For, 1. That which made all things, muſt be it ſelf unmade; and ſo muſt be eternal: It muſt have power over all things, and ſo be almighty. 2. That which made all things muſt have all power to direct, govern, order and diſpoſe of all things, as he pleaſes; and ſo his creatures muſt depend on him for protection, and the diſpoſal of all their affairs. 3. That being, which made all things in ſuch an excellent order and dependence on each other, in ſuch conſtant and unchangeable viciſſitudes, fitted with ſuch faculties, adapted to ſuch ends, and uſes, muſt have infinite wiſdom, and muſt deſign things for thoſe ends, for which he hath thus fitted them. 4. He who hath made things ſo, as that they conſtantly in their reſpective ſeaſons produce things good, and uſeful for the preſervation, and comfort of thoſe creatures he hath made, filling their mouths with food, and their hearts with gladneſs, muſt be good to all, even to the unthankful, and the wicked, and ſo his tender mercies muſt be over all his works; which is the argument here uſed, ver. 26. And, 5. He who vouchſafeth ſuch kindneſs to, and maketh ſuch proviſions for, thoſe bodies which we have common to us with the brutes, muſt have made ſome proviſions for that ſoul which is our better part, and which is more eſpecially derived from him: They therefore muſt be capable of receiving bleſſings, and favours from him; and if lapſed, and ſinful creatures, and made ſo as that they certainly will be ſubject to ſin, they muſt be capable of finding mercy with him, when they return from their iniquity. (W.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 17. and Dr. Bentley's ſermons at Boyle's Lecture.

Certain alſo of your own poets.] Obſerve here, 1. How our apoſtle quotes one of the Heathen poets in this his divine diſcourſe. This poet was Aratus: What he attributes to Jupiter, St. Paul applies to the true God; " We are his offspring." Where note, For the honour of human learning, and the lawfulneſs of making uſe of it in our ſermons, the Holy Ghoſt is pleaſed three ſeveral times in the New Teſtament to make mention of the Heathen poets; of Aratus here, Acts xvii. 28. of Menander, 1 Cor. xv. 33. of Epimenides, Tit. i. 12 Truth is God's wherever it is found; as a mine of gold is the king's, in whoſe ground ſoever it is diſcover'd. Obſerve, 2. The force of the apoſtle's argument; ſeeing we are God's offſpring; that is, ſeeing God is our creator, we cannot ſuppoſe him to be the workmanſhip of our hands, as an image of gold, ſilver or ſtone is; and conſequently, how irrational it is for man to adore an image made by his own hands, for and inſtead of God. (B.) This indeed was no argument to the Epicurean auditors, who particularly had a contempt of, and ſpite againſt the gods, becauſe on all occaſions, they introduced the gods, and taught the ſeparate exiſtence of humane ſouls: But it was of great weight to the common people, who held the poets in mighty veneration; and the other ſects of philoſophers likewiſe did frequently adorn and confirm their diſcourſes, by citations out of poets. (Bentl.) But whereas St. Paul here ſays, " certain of your own poets have ſaid," &c. tho' he quotes but one; It is not neceſſary to think it only a permutation of number, as if he had meant none but Aratus, (as the laſt cited author ſuppoſes:) For the apoſtle, who could have boaſted of as much reading as the moſt learned of them all, might have produced a long liſt of their Heathen poets, all agreeing in the ſame ſentence; as Homer, Heſiod, Orpheus, Callimachus, &c. but (as Sanctius conjectures,) he modeſtly declined the oſtentation of his own learning, to give the leſs offence to thoſe of his hearers who were ſo proud of theirs. (Sherman)

To think that the Godhead is like unto gold.] This concluſion is directly levell'd againſt the groſs idolatry of the vulgar, (for the philoſophers are not concern'd in it;) who believed the very ſtatues of " gold and ſilver," &c. to be God, and terminated their prayers in thoſe images; as might be ſhew'd from many paſſages of ſcripture, from the apologies of the primitive Chriſtians, and the Heathen writers themſelves. (Bentl.)

This ignorance God winked at.] Some argue from this place, in excuſe of ignorance, that it is no ſin, when it is, as they call it, invincible. But ignorance excuſable is only, 1. In children, before they come to years of reaſon and diſcretion. 2. In fools, who naturally want the uſe of reaſon. 3. In thoſe who, by ſickneſs or diſeaſe, are bereft of the uſe of reaſon. And, 4. Where the means cannot be had to take it away. But this is not ſimply and altogether invincible; for the law of nature may teach them. And there are two other ſorts of ignorance utterly inexcuſable: viz. 1. Affected ignorance; when men, who know they are ignorant, are unwilling to come out of it, but deviſe arguments to defend their ignorance. And, 2. A ſupine and careleſs ignorance: When men have the means of knowledge, but refuſe, or neglect to take the pains to learn; Of one of which the whole land is now, for the moſt part, guilty. (Andr.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 13, &c.

But now commandeth all.] God, who over-look'd, or " winked at the times of ignorance," tanun parangellei, hath now ſent his meſſage to " all men every where to repent." The particle tanun, " but now," ſeems not here to refer to the verb metanoein, " to repent;" as if God had not formerly requir'd men to repent of their ſins committed againſt the law of nature: But it refers rather to parangellei; and ſignifies, that whereas, before, he had not ordinarily ſent his meſſengers, or prophets, to the Heathen world, to call them to repentance, he had now ſent his apoſtles, with this meſſage, to all the ends of the earth; and that by them he had given a freſh aſſurance of his purpoſe to judge and condemn the impenitent, by the reſurrection of " that man," Chriſt, the ſon of God, whom he had appointed to be the judge of all men. (W.) See the notes on Matth. iv. 17.

Judge the world.] This verſe contains an argument to enforce the duty of repentance: Wherein we may obſerve, 1. The certainty of a judgment to come; " He (that is, God) will judge the world." 2. That the time of it is fix'd; "He hath appointed a day;" that it is unknown to us, that we may be upon our watch every hour. 3. The Judge; " That man whom he hath ordained." And this is an act of juſtice to our Saviour, that he, having humbled himſelf to take our nature, ſhould, as the reward of his humiliation, judge that world which he died to ſave: And an act of kindneſs towards us, that he ſhould be our judge, who took upon him our nature, and had ſo much love to us as to die for us. Had we leave to chuſe our own judge, what choice could we make better for our ſelves, than that man whom God hath ordained? 4. The aſſurance which God has given us of having Chriſt for our judge: Namely, his " raiſing him from the dead." But how doth that aſſure us of Chriſt being our judge? Anſwer, Our bleſſed Saviour, when he was in the world, often declared, that he was appointed by God to judge the quick and the dead; and appealed to his reſurrection as the great proof of what he ſaid. Now, when Almighty God did accordingly raiſe him, in ſuch a wonderful manner (as we know he did) what is it leſs than God's ſetting his ſeal to his commiſſion, and openly proclaiming him to be the judge of all the world? 5. The manner of this judgment, or the meaſures which this judge will proceed by at the great day; and that is, according to righteouſneſs; " he will judge the world in righteouſneſs;" not in rigour and ſeverity, taking all the advantages that power can give him: Nor yet arbitrarily and upon prerogative; but according to known laws: Nor yet partially, with reſpect of perſons; but every man's doom ſhall depend upon the holineſs and unholineſs of his heart and life. Farther, our judge will candidly interpret mens actions, and make the very beſt of things that the caſe will bear; principally looking at the ſincerity of mens intentions, and making all favourable allowances for their failings and infirmities, that can conſiſt with juſtice; and will diſtribute his rewards of happineſs and glory to good men in the other world, in proportion to the meaſures of their difficulties and ſufferings, which they meet with here in this world. Now, having this high and full aſſurance of a judgment to come, let us ſeriouſly believe it, daily expect it, and duly prepare for it: Let neither profit tempt us, nor pleaſure allure us, nor power embolden us, nor privacy encourage us, to do that thing, which we cannot anſwer at the great tribunal. When St. Paul preached of judgment, Felix, tho' a Pagan, trembled at the ſermon. Lord! what ſhall we ſay to thoſe, worſe than Pagan Infidels amongſt our ſelves, who ridicule a judgment to come, and cry before-hand, God judge me! yea, God damn me! Alas, unhappy men, he will judge you ſure enough, and damn you ſoon enough, if a ſerious repentance prevent it not. (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 24. and x. 42.

When they heard of the reſurrection.] Hitherto the apoſtle had never contradicted the opinions of all his hearers at once; ſo that, altho' at every part of his diſcourſe ſome of them might be uneaſy and nettled, yet a moderate ſilence and attention was ſtill obſerv'd, becauſe it was agreeable to the notions of the reſt: But, " when they heard of the reſurrection of the dead," the interruption and clamour became univerſal; ſo that here the apoſtle broke off his diſcourſe, and " departed from among them." (Bentl.) " Some mocked :" viz. The Epicureans ; who believ'd no reſurrection, nor any future judgment. " And others ſaid, we will hear thee again of this matter ;" viz. The Stoicks, who allow'd of ſomething of future recompences, tho' with great fluctuation. (W) The whole world almoſt is divided between theſe two ſorts of ſinners : The one mocking, and laughing at the truths of ſalvation ; the other deferring from day to day to make any uſe of them : Thus, while men deliberate, the opportunities of ſalvation ſlip out of their hands. (Q.)

Dionyſius, the Areopagite.] The ſame whom the apoſtle afterwards conſtituted the firſt biſhop of Athens. (Cave, Fleury, and Q.) But not he who ſuffer'd martyrdom in France. (G.)

Damaris.] Probably ſuppos'd to be his wife. (Cave, and Howel)

C H A P. XVIII.

Paul at Corinth, laboureth with his hands : He preacheth to the Jews ; and from them goeth to the Gentiles : He converteth Criſpus, and others ; and is encouraged by a viſion : He is accuſed before Gallio, the deputy ; but preſently diſmiſs'd. He paſſeth into Syria. Apollos, inſtructed at Epheſus, preacheth Chriſt with great ſucceſs.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AFTER theſe things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth ; And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priſcilla (becauſe that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome,) and came unto them. And becauſe he was of the ſame craft, he abode with them, and wrought (for by their occupation they were tent-makers :) And he reaſoned in the ſynagogue every ſabbath, and perſwaded the Jews, and the Greeks. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was preſſed in ſpirit, and teſtified to the Jews, that Jeſus was Chriſt. And when they oppoſed themſelves, and blaſphemed, he ſhook his raiment, and ſaid unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads ; I am clean : From henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

All Jews to depart from Rome.] Tho' Oroſius fixeth this edict to the ninth year of Claudius, yet did it not come forth till the twelfth : For the ſedition of the Jews, mentioned by Euſebius from Joſephus, happen'd in the eleventh year of Claudius, under Quadratus, preſident of Syria, and concerned not the Romans, the calamity falling only on the Jews : But, after it, followed another the ſame year, in which the thieves in Judea aſſaulted Stephen the ſervant of Cæſar, took away his baggage, and killed the Roman ſoldiers, as both Tacitus and Joſephus do inform us : And then Claudius, having heard from the preſident, the cauſes of this rebellion, made this edict ; of which Tacitus ſaith nothing, becauſe it came not from the decree of the ſenate, but was the edict of Claudius only ; and of which Suetonius ſaith, He expelled the Jews from Rome, they making continual tumults, by the impulſe or perſuaſion of Chriſt : Where, as he miſtakes in the name, ſo in the thing ; the Jews having had then no conteſts at Rome that we read of, with the Chriſtians, and the Chriſtians, to be ſure, cauſing no tumults there. The true cauſe of their baniſhment was therefore that which hath been hinted from Tacitus. (W.)

Tent-makers.] Tho' St. Paul in his youth had been fully inſtructed in all the liberal arts and ſciences, he had alſo been brought up to a particular trade : For it was a maxim among the Jews, That he who does not teach his ſon a trade, teaches him to be a thief ; and this was a conſiderable imployment in thoſe hot and warlike countries, where tents were of common uſe. (Cave) And, under this title of the Tent-maker, the ancients make it very probable, that St. Paul himſelf preached the goſpel in theſe weſtern parts, even ſo far as the Britiſh Iſles ; as may be ſeen in Maſon, and other eccleſiaſtical writers. See the notes alſo on Matth. xiii. 55.

He reaſoned in the ſynagogue.] Still the apoſtle kept to his commiſſion ; preaching the goſpel firſt to the Jews, and afterwards, upon their rejection of it, to the Gentiles. (B.) See the notes on ch. xvii 2.

Paul was preſſed in ſpirit.] That which, in the ordinary printed copies, is ſyneicheto to pneumati, is ſyneicheto to logo, in the two great manuſcripts ; viz. One in the king's library, ſent from Conſtantinople, and the other at Cambridge, ſent them by Beza : And which of theſe is the more probable reading is not eaſily defined. Synechomai ſignifies to be preſs'd, or held faſt, Matth. iv. 24. Luke iv. 38. Acts xxviii. 8. So Luke viii. 37. which as it really notes being in the power of another, ſo it may be applied to ſorrow, or any other paſſion ; and peculiarly to ſorrow, Thus Luke xxi. 25. ſynoche is uſed for diſtreſs, or anguiſh ; and 2 Cor. ii. 4. ſynoche cardias, " anguiſh of heart." And thus, according to the nature of the word, it may be proper enough for the place, with which ſoever it be join'd. If with pneumati, then 'tis either his own ſpirit, or the ſpirit of God : If his own, then it may ſignify him to have had ſome ſuch extraordinary ſorrow or grief upon him, to think of his obdurate impenitent countrymen, to whom he was then preaching with very little ſucceſs : And ſo of Apollos, we read, ver. 25. that he burned in ſpirit ; as when David ſaith, his " heart was hot within him, and at laſt he ſpake with his tongue." And if the ſpirit of God, then 'tis, that he was ſtirr'd up, carried or incited by God, by revelation. But 'tis moſt ordinary for the word holy to be prefix'd to the word ſpirit, when 'tis taken in this ſenſe, as ch. xvi. 6. And ſo this laſt is not ſo probably the meaning. So likewiſe, if it be to logo, in ſpeech, it will then ſignify no more, than that he ſpake very earneſtly : And that is the importance of diamartyreſthai following ; He teſtified, and earneſtly inſiſted on it, and prov'd, that Jeſus was indeed the Meſſias, which the Jews denied. That this may be the meaning, appears, not improbably, by another parallel expreſſion, ver. 28. For there, as Apollos was doing the ſame thing as Paul here, earneſtly labouring to convince the Jews, that Chriſt was the Meſſias, ſo the expreſſion peculiarly belongs to logos, ſpeech, not pneuma, ſpirit ; he did publickly, with intention, or earneſtneſs of ſpeech, convince the Jews, demonſtrating by the ſcriptures that Jeſus is the Chriſt : Where the force and power of his ſpeech, and arguments contained in it, was that which was meant by eutonos To what hath been ſaid may be added, that the ancient Greek and Latin MS, after Jeſoun in the end of the verſe, hath annexed theſe words, And having had much ſpeech and interpreted the ſcriptures ; which, as it makes it more fully parallel with that of ver. 28. ſo it inclines to the reading of logo, not pneumati ; ſpeech, not ſpirit. (H.) When this word is join'd with a paſſion that reſtrains from action, then it is to be rendred reſtrain ; as, to be reſtrain'd with fear, Job iii. 24. and Luke viii. 37. When the motive is both ways, then is the preſſure ſo too : As when St. Paul ſaith, I am preſſed, or " in a ſtrait, betwixt two ;" urged " to depart, and to be with Chriſt," but reſtrain'd from it, that I may do farther ſervice to his Church, Phil. i. 23. (W.)

They oppoſed themſelves, and blaſphemed.] That is, they oppoſed his doctrine, reviled his perſon, and blaſphemed Chriſt whom the apoſtle preach'd. (B.)

He ſhook his raiment, and ſaid.] The command of our Saviour was to " ſhake off the duſt of their feet," Matth. x. 14. and ſo Paul and Barnabas did, ch xiii. 51. But here Paul alſo ſhakes it off from his raiment, as a teſtimony, that he had now renounc'd any farther dealings with them of that place, as being a refractory people ; adding, that now their blood, or ruin, would lie " upon their own heads ;" that is, they only would be guilty of it. (W)

I am clean.] Catharos ego : Meaning, I am innocent, blameleſs, and free from any fault. (Aſſ.) I have given you fair warning. Ezek. xxxiii. 4. (G.)

Go unto the Gentiles.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 46.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. And he departed thence, and entred into a certain man's houſe, named Juſtus, one that worſhipped God, whoſe houſe joined hard to the ſynagogue. And Criſpus, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue, believed on the Lord with all his houſe : And many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed, and were baptized. Then ſpake the Lord to Paul in the night by a viſion, Be not afraid, but ſpeak, and hold not thy peace : For I am with thee, and no man ſhall ſet on thee, to hurt thee : For I have much people in this city. And he continued there a year and ſix months, teaching the word of God among them.

Juſtus, one that worſhipped God.] Who this perſon was, it does not diſtinctly appear. Some call him Titus ; and others call him Titus Juſtus ; as if the latter was his firname. However, 'tis certain from the text, that he was ſebomenos, a proſelyte. See the notes on ch. xvii. 4.

Criſpus, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue.] The ſame who is mention'd by St. Paul, 1 Cor. i. 14. Rulers, and great men, are like looking-glaſſes, in the places where they live, by which many dreſs themſelves. (B.)

With all his houſe.] That is, his children and family. (Trem.) See the notes on ch. xvi. 33.

He continued there.] Ecathiſe: That is, he ſate there; or made it his epiſcopal ſee.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And when Gallio was deputy of Achaia, the Jews made inſurrection with one accord againſt Paul, and brought him to the judgment-ſeat, Saying, This fellow perſwadeth men to worſhip God contrary to the law. And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio ſaid unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong, or wicked lewdneſs, O ye Jews, reaſon would that I ſhould bear with you: But if it be a queſtion of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of ſuch matters. And he drave them from the judgment-ſeat. Then all the Greeks took Soſthenes, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue, and beat him before the judgment-ſeat: And Gallio cared for none of thoſe things.

Gallio was the deputy of Achaia.] That is, the Roman proconſul, or governor of that province; viz. of Greece, here call'd by the name of the moſt conſiderable part of it. This Lucius Junius Gallio, at firſt named Novatus, and afterwards adopted by Junius Gallio, was elder brother to the famous philoſopher Seneca. (G. Aſſ. Cave and Fleury)

Contrary to the law.] That is, contrary to what was eſtabliſhed by the Jewiſh law, and permitted by the Roman powers. (Cave) This charge, however invidious and malicious in theſe Jews, was true, at leaſt with reſpect to the exerciſe of the meer ſpiritual powers of the church of Chriſt, independently of, and without regard to the laws of the ſtate. For thus, Chriſt having ſolemnly authorized and commanded his apoſtles, to preach to "all nations," Matth. xxviii. 19. and againſt the religions therein eſtabliſh'd, to convert and baptize the ſubjects of all governments, and to form them into churches, or ſpiritual ſocieties; They accordingly, by virtue of this miſſion, choſe Matthias an apoſtle, in an aſſembly of "about an hundred and twenty" perſons, ch. i. 15. In another, St. Peter converted "about three thouſand ſouls," with one ſermon, ch. ii 41. In another, he and St. John converted "about five thouſand" more, ch. iv. 4. And, tho' they were convened for it before their lawful rulers, and commanded to preach no more "in the name of Jeſus," ver. 18. they nevertheleſs, and the reſt of the apoſtles, continued preaching, and forming a church; adding daily new believers, "multitudes both of men and women," ch. v. 14. Yea, when they were "put in the common priſon," for ſo doing, ver. 18. "an angel of the Lord brought them forth; commanding them to go and preach "in the temple," ver. 19, &c. which they did "early in the morning," ver. 21. at the apparent hazard of their lives, ver. 33. openly declaring, that "we ought to obey God rather than men," ver. 29. In another aſſembly, they choſe the ſeven deacons, ch. vi. 2, &c. And when "they were ſcattered abroad," by a perſecution, ch. viii. 1, &c. they ceaſed not to preach and exerciſe the ſeveral duties of their miſſion, in other places, whereſoever they came: Converting the Jews and Gentiles, aſſembling together for religious worſhip, planting the Chriſtian church, dividing it into diſtricts or dioceſes, as they ſaw occaſion, making laws and canons for the government and welfare of it, and inflicting ſpiritual puniſhments upon offenders; and all this, by virtue of their proper ſpiritual power, not only without, but even expreſly againſt, the laws and conſent of the ſecular powers. Which is certainly a full and plain ſcripture-proof of the independency of the church upon the ſtate, with reſpect to its powers purely ſpiritual. See the notes on the ſeveral texts here quoted.

A queſtion of words and names.] That is, Of the word which Paul preaches to you; whether it accord with your law, or not; Or whether the name of the Meſſiah, or Chriſt, belong to that Jeſus whom Paul preacheth. (W.) Obſerve here, What low and mean thoughts Gallio had, and all perſons prejudiced againſt religion and the power of godlineſs have, of ſincere Chriſtianity; "If it be a queſtion of words and names," ſays Gallio: As if he had ſaid, Do not trouble me about the niceties of your Religion, decide ſuch queſtions amongſt yourſelves; for "I will be no judge in ſuch matters." The great men of the world little care to trouble their heads about the matters of religion: They look upon it only as a matter of notion and ſpeculation (whereas it is not a ſpeculative ſcience, but a practical art of holy living;) and accordingly, like Gallio, they care for none of theſe things. That although this Gallio had no kindneſs for Chriſtianity; yet God made uſe of him as an inſtrument at this time, to preſerve and ſkreen St. Paul from the rage of his enemies, inſomuch, that "he drove his accuſers from the judgment-ſeat:" Thus God performed his promiſe to Paul, ſuffering no man to hurt him; but cauſing Gallio the Governor to defend him, who his enemies were in hopes would have deſtroyed him. Lord, how happy and wiſe is it for thy ſervants, to commit the care of themſelves to thee in well doing! If we, with a purity of intention, concern ourſelves for thy glory, thou wilt certainly take care of our ſafety; or if any danger ſhould come, danger itſelf ſhall do us no harm. (B.)

Soſthenes, the chief ruler.] They beat the Jews, ſaith Grotius, to "drive them from the judgment ſeat." He adds, That in great cities there were more ſynagogues than one; every one of which had a chief ruler; as here Criſpus was the chief ruler of one ſynagogue, and Soſthenes of another; So likewiſe, ſaith he, was it in great churches; they having at Rome, Antioch, and other places, (excepting Alexandria, of which Epiphanius ſaith, it had but one) more biſhops than one at a time. But Epiphanius ſpeaks not of the primitive and apoſtolic times, but of the times of the Meletians; ſaying, that, tho' in other churches there were Meletian, as well as Catholic, biſhops at the ſame time, yet it was never ſo in Alexandria. See more of this in the notes on Phil. i. 1. (W.)

Gallio cared for none.] See the notes on ver. 15.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and ſailed thence into Syria, and with him Priſcilla and Aquila: Having ſhorn his head in Cenchrea: For he had a vow. And he came to Epheſus, and left them there: But he himſelf entred into the ſynagogue, and reaſoned with the Jews. When they deſired him to tarry longer time with them, he conſented not: But bade them farewel, ſaying, I muſt by all means keep this feaſt that cometh, in Jeruſalem: But I will return again unto you, If God will. And he ſailed from Epheſus. And when he had landed at Cæſarea, and gone up and ſaluted the church, he went down to Antioch. And after he had ſpent ſome time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, ſtrengthning all the diſciples.

Tarried there yet a good while.] 'Tis believ'd, that St. Paul wrote from hence his two epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, during his ſtay here ar Corinth, after Silas and Timotheus were come to him. (Cave) See the introduction to thoſe epiſtles.

Having ſhorn his head.] Theſe, and the following words, "he had a vow," are not to be referr'd to Paul, but to Aquila: For, with his name is conjoin'd ceiramenos &c. ſhaving his head, without ſo much as a comma between them, in ſome printed copies: And it is not improbable, that when it is ſaid, ver. 19. that Paul went "to Epheſus, and left them there," the word autou, there, ſhould not denote Epheſus, to which, but Cenchrea, from which he went; for why ſhould his leaving them at Epheſus be immediately ſubjoin'd to his coming thither? And eſpecially on this occaſion, to purify himſelf and to be ſhav'd, to which ſome ſtay, at leaſt ſeven days, was neceſſary. This vow was, without all queſtion, the vow of the Nazarites among the Jews, Numb. vi. 5. which was not always for life, but ſometimes for a determinate time; wherein they did "let the locks of the hair of their head grow," and not ſuffer the "razor to come upon them:" But when that time was paſt, then one part of the vow was to be ſhav'd, ver. 18. and to offer up the hair, (called "the hair of the head of his ſeparation,") to "put it in the fire, which is under the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings;" and accordingly here 'tis ſhaving "his head, for he had a vow." But becauſe this is here done at Cenchrea, and not at Jeruſalem, where the accompliſhment of the vow was to be perform'd, as before, "at the door of the tabernacle," Num. vi. 13 and as we find it was perform'd, Acts xxi. 26. Therefore 'tis moſt probable, that this ſhaving here was not on the accompliſhment of his vow, but upon ſome intervening legal pollution; in which caſe he was bound to offer for a cleanſing, and on the ſeventh day to ſhave his head, and ſo begin the days again, ver. 9, &c. This probably might be done in any city where a man happen'd to be ſo polluted: But that on the completion of the vow, when the days of his ſeparation were fulfill'd, was to be at Jeruſalem. The practice of this cuſtom among the Heathens, and the offering the hair, when 'twas cut, to Apollo, as the nouriſher of hair, may be ſeen at large in Euſtathius on Homer, Iliad 2. And accordingly, the hair ſo conſecrated is by Æſchylus called hair which had been nouriſhed ſome time. (H.) But to this account it is objected, That the ſhaving here could not be on any caſual defilement, becauſe he could not begin his vow anew, till he had offer'd his ſin-offering; and that was only to be done at the tabernacle and temple: Tho' others ſay, this law obliged thoſe only who thus vow'd in the land of Judæa, and not thoſe who were out of it. (W.) Upon the whole, I find Heinſius, Grotius, Cave, and Howel, aſſenting to the former opinion, that this text is certainly to be underſtood of Aquila: Tho' Beza, and the Aſſembly-men, diſſent to it, with the latter; and underſtand it of St. Paul himſelf. To me the former opinion ſeems more probable, 1. Becauſe ſuch a vow may, in its own nature, be as properly underſtood of Aquila, as of St. Paul: And Beza himſelf admits the phraſe to be ſo ambiguous, as to be applicable to either. 2. That, tho' St. Paul went up to Jeruſalem, and Aquila did not, yet, as Dr. Whitby owns, we read not of any offering that he made there, according to the law in ſuch caſes. 3. That if the ceremonial law was now obſerv'd, as they ſuppoſe, out of regard to the Jews, to avoid ſcandal only, and that, as Beza concludes, by St. Paul, who "became all things to all men;" Why might not that obſervance, by St. Paul's direction, in the perſon of Aquila, be as ſatisfactory to them, as if he had done it in his own perſon? Eſpecially, when we conſider how effectually his compliance anſwer'd the ſame end, in the caſe of his circumciſing Timothy, ch. xvi. 3. And, 4. That the text it ſelf does not leave it ſo uncertain, as Dr. Whitby fancies. For, not to repeat what Dr. Hammond has obſerv'd, of the grammatical conſtruction and connection of the words, What reaſon can be given for naming Priſcilla firſt, before her huſband Aquila, contrary to the uſual order? But only this, as Grotius has noted, That there was ſomething more to be ſaid of him; viz. that which is added, immediately upon naming him, his "having ſhorn his head in Cenchrea, for he had a vow." And as to St. Paul's going to Jeruſalem, 'tis expreſs'd plainly enough, ver. 21. not on account of any vow, but to "keep the feaſt," which was then at hand. See the notes on ch. xxi. 24, 26.

Keep this feaſt that cometh.] Viz. The paſſover. (Cave)

Gone up, and ſaluted the church.] Here the queſtion is, Whether St. Paul went up from the ſhip to the church of Cæſarea, or from Cæſarea to the church at Jeruſalem? And, in favour of the latter ſenſe, let it be obſerved, 1. That, in the language of the author of the Acts, to go from Cæſarea to Jeruſalem, is "to go up;" and to go from Jeruſalem to Cæſarea, is to "go down." So, "Feſtus went up from Cæſarea to Jeruſalem," ch. xxv. 1. And, ver. 5. he ſpeaks to the rulers at Jeruſalem to "go down with him" from thence to Cæſarea. And ver. 6. catabas, "going down to Cæſarea," he ſits on the tribunal, and they of Jeruſalem, catabainontes, "going down," accuſe Paul, ver. 7. And, ver. 9. he asks Paul, Whether anabas, "going up to Jeruſalem, he would there be judged." So Peter, anebe, "went up from Cæſarea to Jeruſalem," ch. xi. 2. See alſo ch. xxi. 12. So that to interpret theſe words of his going up from Cæſarea to Jeruſalem, is ſuitable to the phraſe of the evangeliſt. 2. St. Paul declares, he "muſt by all means keep the feaſt at Jeruſalem," ver. 21. and that he therefore could not tarry with them: And yet, if he went not now to Jeruſalem, he went not at all thither at this time; for, from this church, he goes down to Antioch in Syria, and ſo thro' Galatia and Phrygia, ver. 22, 23. and ſo comes back to Epheſus, ch. xix. 1. according to his promiſe, ver. 21. "I will return again to you." (H. and W.) Cæſarea was the haven, where they landed moſt commodiouſly in going from Epheſus to Jeruſalem; and being landed there, what needed more to be ſaid, but that "he went up"? For that will imply his going up to that place in his paſſage, and in order to which he there landed. Joppa was indeed one haven to Jeruſalem, but that indeed a dangerous one; and thereupon it was, that Herod was at ſo huge an expence to repair this old haven at Cæſarea, formerly called Strato's tower. See Joſephus l. i. de Bell. Jud. c. xvi. Herod, ſaith he, ſeeing one of the haven-towns decayed with age, and capable of his munificence, repaired it with white ſtone, &c For, betwixt Dora and Joppa, the whole ſhore was ſo ill provided with havens, that all that ſail'd from Phœnicia to Ægypt were much endangered: But the king overcame nature by his liberality and expences, and built a ſtately haven at this tower of Strato, and in it many ſafe harbours for ſhips to abide in; and tho' the nature of the place gave him many difficulties, yet he conquer'd them all, and made it moſt firm and ſumptuous, as it is at large deſcribed by Joſephus in that place: And this, ſaith he, to the honour of Cæſar, he call'd Cæſarea; with it retaining the addition of Stratonis, which before belonged to it, and by which it is diſtinguiſh'd from Cæſarea Philippi, which is not far from it. (H. and Greg.)

Strengthening all the diſciples.] That is, confirming and inſtructing the new converts. (Cave and Howel) See the notes on chap. xi. 23.

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And a certain Jew, named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the ſcriptures, came to Epheſus. This man was inſtructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the ſpirit, he ſpake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptiſm of John. And he began to ſpeak boldly in the ſynagogue. Whom when Aquila and Priſcilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. And when he was diſpoſed to paſs into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the diſciples to receive him: Who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace. For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publickly, ſhewing by the ſcriptures, that Jeſus was Chriſt.

An eloquent man.] Tho' "the kingdom of God is not in word but in power," 1 Cor. iv. 20. not in "excellency of ſpeech, or the enticing words of man's wiſdom, but in the demonſtration of the ſpirit," ch. ii. 1, 4. yet is eloquence uſeful, only to the ſetting forth of the truth of God, and edification of his church, as an Egyptian jewel is to adorn the tabernacle; and ſo it is here commended in Apollos, by the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe gift it is. Lactantius noted well, that the philoſophers, orators, and poets, were therefore very pernicious, in that they eaſily enſnare incautious minds, with ſweetneſs of ſpeech: And therefore his advice is, even in delivering the truth of God, to ſweeten the ſpeech, for the winning of them to Chriſt, who will neither hear nor read any thing except it be poliſh'd and eloquent; few men valuing the matter by the truth, but by the politure and trimming of it. (Aſſ.)

Mighty in the ſcriptures.] This is added, that none may think it to have been the vain and frothy eloquence of profane men, but a divine and powerful eloquence. (Idem.)

He ſpake aud taught.] Elalei cai edidaſcen. How theſe terms are to be diſtinguiſh'd from the authoritative manner of teaching and preaching, which is proper to thoſe only who have a commiſſion derived from Chriſt, may be partly ſeen in the notes on ch. viii. 4. 'Tis certain here, that Apollos was as yet only catechoumenos, a catechumen; not a baptized Chriſtian, and much leſs an ordained preacher. (Johnſ.) But here it is to be obſerv'd, That, taking the words teaching and preaching, in the largeſt ſenſe, as they ſignify any kind of teaching, or recommending, or preſſing Chriſtianity, even lay-men may and ought to do it; becauſe, in this ſenſe, it is a natural duty. For thus fathers are obliged to teach and inſtruct their children, maſters their ſervants, and ſchool-maſters their ſcholars: Thus one neighbour may and ought to inſtruct another, as there may be a fit occaſion for it: And thus even women, who are commanded to "keep ſilence in the churches," 1 Cor. xiv. 34. may, on proper occaſions, and at proper times, preach to or inſtruct, not only their children, ſcholars, or ſervants, but even their neighbours too, tho' men of underſtanding and learning; for thus not only Aquila, but Priſcilla his wife, preached to, or inſtructed, Apollos here, who was before "an eloquent man, and mighty in the ſcriptures," ver. 24. "expounding unto him the way of God more perfectly," ver. 26. But yet, it does not follow, that either women, or lay-men, may preach to them, in the ſtrict ſenſe of the word, as a biſhop or prieſt may, and ought to do. They can only teach or inſtruct, as laymen, in a natural capacity; ſuch as every man, woman, or child has, to diſcourſe of ſuch matters as they underſtand, and to acquaint their neighbours with what will be for their benefit: But when they have prevail'd with them, to believe what they have taught 'em, they can proceed no farther. Such a one, for inſtance, may let Infidels know the nature and deſign of Chriſtian religion, the promiſes and threatnings of the goſpel, who Chriſt is, and what his doctrine, and what men ought to believe and do to procure eternal ſalvation: He may teach them, that there is ſuch a ſociety as the church of Chriſt; and that they ought to be admitted into it by baptiſm; and then to receive impoſition of hands, for the obtaining larger gifts of the holy ſpirit; and after that, to receive the communion of the body and blood of Chriſt, that ſo they may be one with Chriſt, and Chriſt with them: But he can no more adminiſter any of theſe ordinances to them, than they may to one another. So that the moſt that lay-preaching can effect, with regard to Infidels, is to convince them of their errors, bring them to the knowledge of the truth, and work in them a diſpoſition to become members of the church: But the layman cannot invite them to come to him to be made members of it; but he muſt direct them to wait with patience, till Chriſtian prieſts may be procured for that purpoſe. (Brett)

Only the baptiſm of John.] See the notes on ch. xix. 1.

The brethren wrote.] The original has it, protrepſamenoi hoi adelphoi egrapſan; that is, the brethren (viz. at Epheſus) who encouraged him, wrote to the diſciples (at Corinth, in Achaia, whither he was diſpoſed to go;) exhorting them to receive him kindly. (Maſſ.) The ſame ſenſe of the word protrepſaſthai, uſed for putting forward, or encouraging, may be ſeen alſo, Wiſd. xiv. 18. (H.)

Through grace.] What charis here ſignifies may beſt be collected from ch. xi. 23. and xiii. 43. In many other places it ſignifies the goſpel of Chriſt: As when ’tis oppoſed to “the law,” Joh. i. 17. So the ſalvifick grace of God, Tit. ii. 11. But in thoſe, and many the like places, grace ſignifies the matter, or ſubject of the goſpel, not the preaching of it; for that is expreſs’d by the coming or appearing of that grace. But in that place of ch. xi. 23. where ’tis ſaid, that ſeeing the grace of Chriſt he rejoiced, (that is, ſeeing that the goſpel had been preached with ſo good ſucceſs among them) it ſignifies the preaching or promulgating of the goſpel, (juſt as goſpel doth Rom. i. 1. And ſo, ch. xiii. 43. when they exhort them “to continue in the grace of God;” that was the work of confirmation, following that of preaching the goſpel to them. And that notion of it ſeems to be the moſt adequate, and proper for this place: So that pepiſteucotes dia tes charitos ſhall ſignify thoſe who had been formerly converted to the faith by the preaching of the goſpel by St. Paul; according to that of “Paul planteth and Apollos watereth:” For that watering, being the inſtructing them farther who already had received the faith, the edifying, or ſuperſtructing on the foundation, is all one with poly ſynebalèto, he conferred much, or contributed his aſſiſtance (or, as perhaps it ſhould be read, ſynelabeto, aſſiſted) helped to improve them that before believed. As for that of applying dia tes charitos, by grace, to ſynebaleto, he conferred, that Apollos by grace, that is, his gift, and power in ſcripture, contributed much to the believers, there is no neceſſity of flying to that refuge, nor probability from the placing of thoſe words (which follow, and go not before, pepiſteucoſi) to favour that rendring. In the ſame ſenſe we find “the grace (that is, the goſpel) of Chriſt,” Gal. i. 6. to, or by, which Paul is ſaid to have called them, ſet oppoſite to “another goſpel,” a doctrine of ſome falſe teachers crept in among them. (H.) See the notes on the texts here referr’d to.

Mightily convinced the Jews.] This new convert is not ſo much a preacher in the Chriſtian church, as a diſputant in the Jewiſh ſynagogue. Had he even inſtructed Chriſtians in their aſſemblies, that which, before the diſcipline of the church was form’d, the apoſtles might have permitted, by way of diſpenſation, ought not to be drawn into precedent, by thoſe who are placed in the common and ordinary way. (Q.)

Shewing by the ſcriptures.] See the notes on John xxi. 25.

That Jeſus was Chriſt.] The Jews had no controverſy with Chriſtians concerning a Chriſt to come: The whole diſpute was, whether Jeſus, the ſon of Mary, was he. And this now Apollos proved, by ſcriptures accommodated to him; and thus Apollos watered what Paul had planted, 1 Cor. iii. 6. (Aſſ.)

CHAP. XIX.

St. Paul conferreth the Holy Ghoſt, by laying on of hands. The Jews blaſpheme his doctrine, which is confirm’d by miracles. Their exorciſts confounded. Demetrius, for lucre-ſake, raiſeth an uproar againſt Paul; which is appeaſed by the town-clerk.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. AND it came to paſs, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul, having paſſed through the upper coaſts, came to Epheſus: And finding certain diſciples, He ſaid unto them, Have ye received the holy Ghoſt ſince ye believed? And they ſaid unto him, We have not ſo much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghoſt. And he ſaid unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they ſaid, Unto John’s baptiſm. Then ſaid Paul, John verily baptized with the baptiſm of repentance, ſaying unto the people, that they ſhould believe on him which ſhould come after him; that is, on Chriſt Jeſus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghoſt came on them; and they ſpake with tongues, and propheſied. And all the men were about twelve.

Finding certain diſciples.] Obſerve here, 1. That theſe diſciples were converts to the chriſtian faith; i. e. That they believed, that Jeſus was the Chriſt, and that he was riſen from the dead, is evident, becauſe St. Paul not only calls them believers, but enquires, whether they “had received the Holy Ghoſt;” which none but they who thus believed, did, or could receive; the gift of propheſy, which is the Jewiſh import of the Holy Ghoſt, being not given, nor to be given “till Jeſus was glorified,” John vii. 39. When therefore they ſay, “We have not ſo much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghoſt,” their meaning is, we have not as yet heard that the gift of propheſy, which for the ſpace of about four hundred years had been reſtrained from the Jewiſh church, was yet reſtored: Now that which rendred them thus unacquainted with this effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt was this, that as Apollos had left Jeruſalem, and gone to Alexandria, before the miraculous effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt on the apoſtles at the day of Pentecoſt, ſo had they alſo done, and had been travelling into other parts of the world, where the goſpel had not been yet planted. Obſerve, 2. That theſe perſons, who were before baptized by St. John, are again “baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus,” as is evident from theſe words, “And when they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus”: For they are manifeſtly miſtaken, who ſay, theſe are the words, not of St. Luke, but of St. Paul, and make the ſenſe of the words run thus, “John baptized with the baptiſm of repentance, ſaying, that men ſhould believe in him that ſhould come after him, that is, in Chriſt Jeſus;” and they that heard John were, by his baptiſm, “baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus.” For, 1. That Paul laid his hands on theſe perſons is certain from ver. 6. and that he baptized them when he laid his hands on them, ſeems evident from the connexion of words; “They were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus; and when Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghoſt fell upon them;” whereas, according to the former ſenſe, Paul muſt have laid his hands upon all that were baptized by the Baptiſt, and they who were baptized by John muſt have received by St. Paul’s hands the Holy Ghoſt: For theſe words muſt ſignify at large, They that heard John and were baptized of him, and then the words following muſt import that Paul laid his hands on all that heard John, and they received the Holy Ghoſt; or they muſt refer to thoſe that heard Paul, and then they muſt firſt be baptized by him, and then receive the Holy Ghoſt by impoſition of his hands. 2. This is evident from the words of St. Peter, to all thoſe many thouſands that heard him, “Be ye baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt”: For ſince he ſpake to the men of Jeruſalem and Judea in general, Acts ii. 14. and all Jeruſalem and Judea were baptized of John, ſaith St. Matthew, ch. iii. 5, 6. all, or at leaſt many of, thoſe to whom he ſpake, muſt already have been baptized with the baptiſm of John; and yet he makes it neceſſary for them “to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus.” Whence two things are extremely evident, and conſequent from each other; viz. 1. That he exhorts them, who had been baptized with John’s baptiſm, to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus: 2. That therefore, they who were baptized with his baptiſm, were not baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus: And this is viſible, even in the words of St. Paul here, John ſaid to thoſe that came to his baptiſm, not that they did, but “that they ſhould believe in him that was coming after him; that is, in the Lord Jeſus:” Now, they were not to be baptized in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, till they did actually believe in him, which they who received John’s baptiſm, were ſo far from doing, that they were “muſing whether John himſelf were not the Chriſt,” Luke iii. 15. and aſking, “Why baptizeth thou, if thou art not the Chriſt?” John i. 25. And, 3. As our Saviour never ſaid openly, and expreſly to the Jews, that he was the Chriſt; ſo he charges his apoſtles to tell no man that he was ſo, till his reſurrection: But to what end ſhould he do this, if both the Baptiſt and his diſciples had before baptized all men into his faith, that he was the Chriſt, and ſo had publiſhed this faith to all Judea? Only here note, that this is no ground for rebaptizing any now; by reaſon of the great difference betwixt the baptiſm of John then, and that in the name of Jeſus after his reſurrection; of which, ſee the note on Matth. iii. 11. 4. Obſerve, That after the impoſition of the apoſtle’s hands, theſe men “ſpake with tongues and propheſied,” receiving the ſame gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, which the apoſtles and others had receiv’d, to fit them for the miniſtry; which was then generally perform’d by ſuch gifted men, commiſſionated for that work by the Holy Ghoſt thus falling on them: Whence we find theſe “prophets and teachers” miniſtring to the Lord in their aſſemblies, ch. xiii. 1. (where ſee the notes:) And this renders the opinion of biſhop Stillingfleet very probable, viz. That St. Paul deſign’d theſe twelve men for a nurſery of the churches in Aſia, or perſons to be ſent from Epheſus to preach among them. (W.)

The baptiſm of repentance.] See the notes on ch. i. 5. xi. 16. and Matth. iii. 11.

Paul laid his hands upon them.] This expreſſion of laying on of hands, in the plural number, has been uſed as an argument for Presbyterian ordinations: But this very text ſhews, that it was only Paul himſelf who here “laid his hands upon them:” And ſo the ſame phraſe is uſed, Matth. xix. 13, 15. for our Saviour’s laying his hands on little children; and ſure none will ſay, that any body join’d with him! (Barcl.) See the notes on ch. vi. 6.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. And he went into the ſynagogue, and ſpake boldly for the ſpace of three months, diſputing and perſwading the things concerning the kingdom of God. But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but ſpake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and ſeparated the diſciples; diſputing daily in the ſchool of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the ſpace of two years; ſo that all they which dwelt in Aſia, heard the word of the Lord Jeſus, both Jews, and Greeks. And God wrought ſpecial miracles by the hands of Paul: So that from his body were brought unto the ſick, handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diſeaſes departed from them, and the evil ſpirits went out of them. Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorciſts, took upon them to call over them which had evil ſpirits, the name of the Lord Jeſus; ſaying, We adjure you by Jeſus, whom Paul preacheth. And there were ſeven ſons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the prieſts, which did ſo. And the evil ſpirit anſwered and ſaid, Jeſus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye? And the man in whom the evil ſpirit was, leapt on them, and overcame them, and prevailed againſt them, ſo that they fled out of that houſe naked and wounded. And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks alſo dwelling at Epheſus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jeſus was magnified. And many that believed came, and ſhewed their deeds. Many alſo of them which uſed curious arts, brought their books together, and burned them before all men: And they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thouſand pieces of ſilver. So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.

Went into the ſynagogue.] See the notes on ch. xvii. 2.

Separated the diſciples.] This doth not warrant a ſeparation from a true church; or for any defects therein, leſs than fundamental. (Aſſ.) To ſeparate from unbelievers, when there is no hope of their recovery, is not to divide the church, but rather to preſerve its unity. (Beza) That you may know, when ſeparation is ſchiſmatical, and when not, you muſt underſtand, that there are three great bonds of communion, viz. faith, worſhip, and government: And whoſoever ſhall ſeparate from any church, whereof he is a member, in any of theſe, he or they, ſo doing, cannot be acquitted from the guilt of ſchiſm, unleſs the corruption, in ſome one or more of theſe, be ſo great, as to render the communion ſinful to him who knows it. (Altham) There may be an actual criminous ſeparation of churches, which formerly did join in one and the ſame communion, and yet the ſeparaters be innocent, and the perſons from whom the ſeparation is made be nocent, and guilty of ſchiſm; becauſe they gave juſt cauſe of ſeparation from them. It is not the ſeparation, but the cauſe, that makes the ſchiſm. (Bramhall)

Diſputing daily.] Inſtead of teaching only on Saturday, in the ſynagogue, he taught now every day. (Fleury)

In the ſchool of one Tyrannus.] This ſeemeth to have been ſome philoſopher, or publick profeſſor of rhetorick, converted by Paul. (Aſſ.)

Special miracles.] Note here, How it pleaſed God to confirm St. Paul's miniſtry at Epheſus, by his working miracles; and the miracles which he wrought were ſpecial, that is, very extraordinary, inſomuch that even "handkerchiefs or aprons," having but touched St. Paul's body, and being brought unto the diſeaſe, became a miraculous means both to cure diſeaſes, and caſt out devils. Thus, according to our Saviour's promiſe, his apoſtles did greater miracles than himſelf, John xiv. 12. not greater in regard of the manner, but in regard of the matter of them: Chriſt wrought his miracles in his own name, and by his own power; but the apoſtles wrought them in the name, and by the power of Chriſt. Yet it ought to be conſidered, that, altho' it pleaſed God, at the firſt plantation of the goſpel by the apoſtles, to confirm chriſtianity by many ſpecial miracles (as new-ſet plants are well watered, till they have taken faſt rooting) yet that church which wants miracles may be a true church: Becauſe, 1. There is no promiſe made in the ſcriptures to the church for her perpetual enjoying the gift of miracles. That promiſe, Mark xvi. 17. "Theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe," &c. was only a temporary promiſe. 2. We are forbidden to expect miracles, John iv. 48. and to truſt to miracles without ſcripture, and to regard ſuch miracles as are wrought to confirm any doctrine that is contrary to ſcripture, Deut. xiii. 3. Becauſe the miracles of the laſt times are declared to be the ſigns of antichriſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 9, 10. From all which it follows, that miracles are no infallible note of the true church, as the Papiſts would make it; who alſo produce St. Paul's handkerchiefs here, and St. Peter's ſhadow, ch. v. 15. as a warrant for their ſuperſtitious relicks: But the text aſſures us, it was God that wrought the ſpecial miracles; not St. Paul, or his handkerchiefs, but God by his hand. (B.)

Handkerchiefs or aprons.] See the notes on ch. v. 15.

Vagabond Jews, exorciſts.] Obſerve here, How ſome of the Jewiſh exorciſts, (like our jugglers) who made it their trade to wander up and down, to get a livelihood, by pretending to cure diſeaſes, and caſt out devils, ſeeing what great miracles Paul had wrought, in the name of Jeſus, attempted to caſt a devil out of a poſſeſſed man, by uſing the ſame name, tho' in Jeſus they believed not: But Satan was ſo far from obeying them, that he made the poſſeſs'd man fall violently upon them, and wounded them. Thence learn, 1. That Satan ſcorns all human attempts, as weak and impotent, and is conquered only by a divine power. "Jeſus I know, but who are ye?" 2. That the devil would gladly be God's ape. The Jewiſh jugglers would by all means imitate the apoſtles in caſting out devils: Accordingly they uſe the name of Jeſus as a charm; but, ſaying the ſame words with the apoſtle, ſignified nothing, without exerciſing the ſame faith and grace. Theſe exorciſts ſoon found, that words, without faith, would not work to caſt out devils, and that Chriſt would not give power to his name, when uſed as a charm. 3. That the devil, by God's permiſſion, has power over thoſe who profane the name of Chriſt: Satan here was too hard for theſe conjurers; He ruſhes upon them, and maſters them, tears their cloaths, wounds their bodies, and had not God reſtrain'd him, had unavoidably deſtroyed them. Satan's malice is infinite, but his power is limited and bounded. Lord, abate his power, ſince his malice cannot be abated! (B.) The Jews had ſeveral incantations in uſe and veneration; which they held in greater credit, becauſe of an opinion, common among them, that theſe had been invented by, and were deriv'd from, Solomon. (Cave, Stanh. and W.) See the notes on Matth. xii. 27.

Chief of the prieſts.] One of the chief of the families of the prieſts. (G. and Howel) See the notes on Matth. ii. 4.

Confeſſed, and ſhewed their deeds.] Obſerve here, How this execution of divine vengeance wrought wonderfully for the conviction and converſion both of Jews and Greeks; "Many believed, and came and confeſſed their ſinful deeds:" And as an evidence of their deteſtation of their former faults and follies, they make a bonefire of all their magical books; burning ſo many of them as the learned ſay, the price amounted to eight hundred pounds. Thus theſe conjurers evidenced themſelves to be real converts, by plucking out their right eye, and cutting off their right hand; That is, ſacrificing their boſom and beſt beloved luſt and corruption. Thence learn, That there is no better evidence of the truth of a perſon's converſion, than chearfully to part with a very profitable and pleaſing luſt. (B.) Of what nature thoſe perierga were, which we call "uſing curious arts, may be ſeen in Hammond and Whitby.

Fifty thouſand pieces of ſilver.] Tho' the price of theſe wicked books which were burnt, is by ſome interpreters eſtimated ſo low as eight hundred pounds: Yet if the arguria, or "pieces of ſilver," here be underſtood of the Greek drachme, it will amount to 1562*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* and if it be underſtood of the Hebrew ſhekel of ſilver (as Grotius and Dr. Hammond ſay it muſt,) it will amount to double that ſum. See the table of coins on Luke xv.

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41. After theſe things were ended, Paul purpoſed in the ſpirit, when he had paſſed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jeruſalem, ſaying, After I have been there, I muſt alſo ſee Rome. So he ſent into Macedonia two of them that miniſtred unto him, Timotheus and Eraſtus; but he himſelf ſtayed in Aſia, for a ſeaſon. And the ſame time there aroſe no ſmall ſtir about that way. For a certain man named Demetrius, a ſilver-ſmith, which made ſilver ſhrines for Diana, brought no ſmall gain unto the craftſmen. Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and ſaid, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth: Moreover, ye ſee and hear, that not alone at Epheſus, but almoſt throughout all Aſia, this Paul hath perſwaded, and turned away much people, ſaying, they be no gods which are made with hands: So that not only this our craft is in danger to be ſet at nought; but alſo that the temple of the great goddeſs Diana ſhould be deſſpiſed, and her magnificence ſhould be deſtroyed, whom all Aſia, and the world worſhippeth. And when they heard theſe ſayings, they were full of wrath and cried out, ſaying, Great is Diana of the Epheſians. And the whole city was filled with confuſion: And having caught Gaius and Ariſtarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they ruſhed with one accord into the theatre. And when Paul would have entred in unto the people, the diſciples ſuffered him not. And certain of the chief of Aſia, which were his friends, ſent unto him, deſiring him that he would not adventure himſelf into the theatre. Some therefore cried one thing, and ſome another: For the aſſembly was confuſed, and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together. And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander beckned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice, about the ſpace of two hours, cried out, Great is Diana of the Epheſians. And when the town-clerk had appeaſed the people, he ſaid, Ye men of Epheſus, what man is there, that knoweth not, how that the city of the Epheſians is a worſhipper of the great goddeſs Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter? Seeing then that theſe things cannot be ſpoken againſt, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing raſhly. For ye have brought hither theſe men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blaſphemers of your goddeſs. Wherefore, if Demetrius and the craftſmen which are with him, have a matter againſt any man, the law is open, and there are deputies; let them implead one another. But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters, it ſhall be determined in a lawful aſſembly. For we are in danger to be called in queſtion for this days uprore; there being no cauſe whereby we may give an account of this concourſe. And when he had thus ſpoken, he diſmiſſed the aſſembly.

Made ſilver ſhrines for Diana.] In the idolatry of the Heathens they uſed to carry the images of their gods in proceſſion from one city to another. This they did in a chariot conſecrated for that purpoſe. But, beſides this greater, there was a leſs frame wherein it was placed, by the Romans called Ferculum, not much unlike that which the Greeks call'd Naos, a little chapel, repreſenting the form of a temple, with an image in it; which being ſet upon the altar, or other ſolemn place, and the leaves of the door open'd, the image appear'd ſitting or ſtanding in ſtate, and ſo was repreſented to the ſpectators. (Beza, G. H. Aſſ. Greg. Cave, W. B. Howel, and Fleury) But, inſtead of "ſhrines for Diana," it ſhould more properly be render'd ſhrines, or temples of Diana; (Gregory and Maſſey) They being ſuch repreſentations of that idol and her temple, which Demetrius and his craftſmen made and ſold to the curious, or devout worſhippers there. See the notes on ch. vii. 43. and more at large in Dr. Hammond here.

Ruſhed, with one accord, into the theatre.] Probably, with deſign to have caſt "Gaius and Ariſtarchus" (whom they had ſeiz'd) to the wild beaſts; The theatre being the place, where they uſed to "fight with beaſts at Epheſus." And to this doubtleſs St. Paul alludes, in uſing that phraſe, 1 Cor. xv. 32. meaning what the people intended to have expoſed him to, if they had caught him, tho' he did not actually ſuffer it; and yet indeed the brutiſh rage, and the ſavage nature of thoſe people, did ſufficiently deſerve that character to be fix'd upon themſelves. (Cave and W.)

Certain of the chief of Aſia.] Aſiarchoi. Here Grotius and Dr. Hammond note, That among the Heathens there were games inſtituted, to appeaſe the good gods, or in honour of them. Of theſe the pontifices, or chief prieſts, were preſidents at Rome: In other provinces the prieſts or magiſtrates preſided, ſaith Salmaſius; and theſe were called from their provinces, Aſiarchæ, Syriarchæ, Bithyniarchæ, officers belonging to theſe games in thoſe provinces. Thus in the martyrdom of Polycarp, biſhop of Smyrna in Aſia, they ask ton Aſiarchen Philippon, Philip the ruler of the games there, to let out a lion upon Polycarp; which he declares he could not do, becauſe the games were ended: Whence it appears, that it belong'd to theſe Aſiarchæ here mentioned, to let looſe the wild beaſts upon malefactors; accordingly, they are here preſent, and being kind to St. Paul, ſend to him not to come thither. (G. H. and W.)

They drew Alexander out.] "The Jews putting him forward." Proballontes. Where note, That proballein hath a peculiar notion among the grammarians, proper to forenſical matters. It ſignifies to examine, to queſtion upon interrogatories, to call any man into the court to teſtify his knowledge concerning any thing in queſtion. So ſaith Phavorinus, and Domninus (cited by Jo. Malela l. xii.) Accordingly muſt the gloſs of Heſychius be mended; noting this uſe of the word for interrogating a witneſs, calling a man to teſtify; eccalein to appeal to for the truth of what is controverted. And ſo the meaning of this whole paſſage is, that Alexander, a Chriſtian of Epheſus, but a Jew by birth, was in this tumult about St. Paul ſeized upon by the ſerjeants, and brought forth: And the Jews, that were malicious to St. Paul, thinking that Alexander might be brought to lay ſome blame upon him, queſtion'd and examin'd him; and then he was preſently deſirous to have made his apology to the people, that is, to avert the danger from himſelf, by laying it upon others. And altho', by reaſon of the cry that follows, ver. 34. he is not permitted to do it to the people; yet by what St. Paul after ſaith of him, it appears that he forſook the Chriſtian profeſſion, 1 Tim. i. 20. and renounced, or blaſphemed, that is, forſook Chriſt, and did St. Paul very great injury, 2 Tim. iv. 14. (H.)

Cried out.] Crazonton, the word here uſed, is a participle of the verb crazo, to yell, or cry out: Which being properly ſpoken of crows, who in great flocks cry all together, is from thence accommodated to the confuſed cry of a diſturbed and clamorous multitude. (Aſſ. and Leigh)

The town-clerk.] Grammateus here is variouſly interpreted; The chancellor (Budæus;) The recorder (Cave;) The ſcribe (Vulg.) The townclerk, according to our tranſlation: But none of theſe verſions gives us a juſt notion of the office here meant. Grammateus is the name of an office in the ſacri agones; the regiſter or actuary, who regiſtred the victor's names in a book or table: And the office where thoſe records were put was grammateion, ſaith Petrus Faber, Agoniſt. l. iii. c. 23, and 27. Of the ordinary grammateis, ſaith Phavorinus, They had no authority, but only to write, and read what they had written: So ſaith the Scholiaſt on Thucydides. But in theſe ſacred games, where every thing was ſacred alſo, (the Alytarcha bearing the perſon of Jupiter, the Amphithales of Mercury) the grammateus here, ſaith Domninus, (cited by Johannes Antiochenus,) was honoured and adored as Apollo; wearing a white robe, and a crown of pure gold: And being, ſaith he, choſen by the ſenate and people, he was the better qualified to do what is here affirmed of him, to "appeaſe the people." For that this ſhould be applicable to Alexander the Jew, ver. 34. and that it was he, of whom it was here ſaid, pheſin, "He ſaid, Ye men of Epheſus," &c. is a ſtrange overſight of the learned cardinal Baronius, cauſed by not adverting to the Greek, where it is viſibly the grammateus who had appeaſed the tumult, and who ſaid, "Ye men of Epheſus," &c. (H. Greg. and W.)

A worſhipper of the great goddeſs.] Polin neocoron ouſan. That the Epheſians, when they were beſieged by Crœſus, devoted or conſecrated their city to Diana, tying with a rope the temple and the wall of the city together, is affirmed by Herodotus, l. ii. From hence it is, that that city had a peculiar relation to Diana ever after. But there being other cities that worſhipped that goddeſs alſo, that is not, alone, ſufficient to appropriate that title to Epheſus, to be her neocoros, or ſacriſt. That this was the title of a ſacred office, appears by Plato de Legib. They muſt conſtitute prieſts of both ſexes, to be in this office of ſacriſt to their gods. The word ſignifies, ſaith Phavorinus, He that takes care of the temple: He that adorns it, ſaith Heſychius: And He that makes clean, ſaith Suidas; from corein, to ſweep, or callopizein, to beautify, ſaith the ſcholiaſt on Ariſtophanes, p. 61. This office at other times belonged to other cities, and accordingly in ancient inſcriptions we find comedians being the third time in that office; and particularly of Diana, The Magneſians having that office, in Maximinus's time. And this in reſpect of the holy games; which in honour of the gods, peculiarly of Diana, were in Greece, ſometimes in one city, ſometimes in another, according to the gods which were celebrated by them. So that now, thoſe feſtivities being celebrated to Diana, and this year, and at this time, kept at Epheſus, (which is alſo the reaſon of the concourſe of the people at this time,) Epheſus had now the honour to take care of Diana's ſervice; and ſo to be her neocoros, her ſacriſt, or æditua, her church-warden, as the Syriac renders the word in this place: And that is the meaning of the neocoros ouſa, being at this time, this year, Diana's ſacriſt. (H.) But Dr. Whitby, not being content with this criticiſm, I ſhall refer the curious reader to the learned Mr. J. Gregory's Scripture-Notes; where he will find diſtinct and critical diſcourſes upon the ſilver ſhrines, mention'd in the foregoing verſe, as well as upon the grammateus, and the neocoros, in this It ſeems plain at leaſt, that the meaning of this ſpeech was, That Epheſus was ſo eſtabliſh'd in their religious worſhip of Diana, their ſuppoſed tutelary goddeſs, that there was no ſuch cauſe of fear, as Demetrius ſuggeſted, that they ſhould be perſwaded to forſake their religion for any other. (Aſſ.)

The image which fell down from Jupiter.] Meaning, the image of Diana there worſhipp'd; which having been made long beyond the memory of man, the prieſts perſwaded the ſuperſtitious idolaters, that it "fell down from Jupiter." (G.) But, as Suidas tells us, in voc. Diopetes, care had been taken firſt, to kill, or baniſh, the artiſts who made it, that the cheat might not be diſcover'd. (Cave) Concerning the maker and materials of this image, ſee Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. xvi. c. 40.

Theſe things cannot be ſpoken againſt.] Suidas ſaith, Anantirrheton, the word here uſed, is that which admitteth of no contradiction; a certain, and doubtleſs thing. So pronounceth this orator, concerning their vain ſuperſtition, grounded on lying fables, impious preſcription, and raſh conſent of multitudes: Whereas it is neither in time, multitude, nor power of men, to make falſhood truth. (Aſſ.) This oration was full of craft and policy, of fraud and fallacy: He tells the multitude, that St. Paul and his friends are againſt images only that were "made with hands;" whereas, theirs was not ſuch, but one that fell down from Jupiter. It was his duty, by office, to appeaſe the rabble's rage, with reaſon and authority; he ought not to have done it fallaciouſly. But, we muſt conſider, he was a Pagan; and his deſign was only to ſtill the people: Accordingly, he encourages the credulous multitude, to believe what the crafty prieſts had inſinuated into them, that the image which they worſhipped was not made with hands, but fell immediately down from Heaven; hoping thereby to gain more veneration to their idols, and get more pounds into their own purſes. Thus God made uſe of the worldly, and (ſomewhat) wicked, eloquence of this heathen, to preſerve St, Paul. Obſerve how God opens the mouth of this man, to vindicate the apoſtle's innocency, and his companions alſo. "Theſe men (ſaith he) are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blaſphemers of your goddeſs." It's very likely, that the apoſtle and the chriſtians in Epheſus had in wiſdom aſſerted chriſtianity, without ſaying much againſt Diana; which would have but enraged the multitude: Much leſs did they offer any violence either to her temple or her image. Here note, That altho' the apoſtles were great enemies to theſe mens idolatry, yet did they offer no outward violence to their idol-temples, either to demoliſh them, or deface any image in them: They well knew, that ſuch a work of publick reformation was not their buſineſs, but the magiſtrates; therefore they endeavoured, by preaching, to caſt idols out of the people's hearts, but not by violence to throw them out of the temple.

Have a matter againſt.] Logon echouſi. That which in the Hebrew ſignifies logos, "a word," or ſpeech, ſignifies alſo an accuſation; and is accordingly rendred crima, Exod. xviii. 22. and antilogia, an indictment, ver. 16. Thus here, the one is taken for the other; logos, ſpeech, for a matter of accuſation. (H.)

In danger to be called in queſtion.] Being under the Roman ſtate, the city was in danger to be fined, or otherwiſe puniſh'd, for that cauſeleſs uproar. The Roman law was, That all factious and ſeditious perſons under their government, ſhould loſe their liberties and Roman freedom. (Aſſ.)

CHAP. XX.

Paul goeth to Macedonia, and returneth by way of Troas: He celebrateth the Lord's ſupper, and preacheth there: Reſtoreth Eutychus to life. In his way to Jeruſalem, he holdeth a ſynod at Miletus, and giveth a charge to the elders.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND after the uprore was ceaſed, Paul called unto him the diſciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia. And when he had gone over thoſe parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece, And there abode three months: And when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to ſail into Syria, he purpoſed to return through Macedonia. And there accompanied him into Aſia, Sopater of Berea; and of the Theſſalonians, Ariſtarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Aſia, Tychicus and Trophimus. Theſe going before, tarried for us at Troas. And we ſailed away from Philippi, after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days, where we abode ſeven days.

Given them much exhortation.] Confirming them in the faith and truth of the goſpel. (Aſſ.)

The Jews laid wait for him.] When they could not prevail againſt him by open violence, they aſſail him by treachery, and ſecret plotting againſt him. (Idem.)

Tarried for us.] By this it appears, that St. Luke, the author himſelf, was one of thoſe who accompanied the apoſtle, tho' he modeſtly declines to name himſelf among the reſt.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. And upon the firſt day of the week, when the diſciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow, and continued his ſpeech until midnight. And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together. And there ſat in a window a certain young man, named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep ſleep: And as Paul was long preaching, he ſunk down with ſleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead. And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him, ſaid, Trouble not yourſelves; for his life is in him. When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, ſo he departed. And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

The firſt day of the week.] Theſe words ſeem fairly to evince, that it was the cuſtom of the firſt chriſtians, and of the apoſtles, to keep the Lord's-day holy, or as a day appointed for religious worſhip: For, 1. That mia toon ſabbatoon, "the firſt day of the week" was the Lord's day, is fully proved, on Cor. xvi. 1. Obſerve, 2. That on this day the diſciples were not ſummoned extraordinarily to come together; that St. Paul did not metacalein, call them together, as he did the aſſembly of the elders of the church, ver. 17. But the diſciples were themſelves ſynegmenoi, met in their ſynaxis, or aſſembly; the text informs us, that St. Paul tarried with them ſeven days, and in none of them have we any mention of an aſſembly to this purpoſe, but on the firſt day of the week. 3. Obſerve, That they then met "together to break bread;" which phraſe doth ſignify the ſacred action performed in celebration of the holy ſacrament, which 'twas the cuſtom of the primitive chriſtians to receive in all their church-aſſemblies on the Lord's-day: This the apoſtle intimates when he complains of his Corinthians, 1. Cor. xi. 17, 18. That they "came together for the worſe; becauſe when they came together in the church, there were diviſions among them," ſo that they did not eat together of the table of the Lord. Now thus to come together in one place, ſaith he, "is not to eat the Lord's ſupper;" i. e. it is not ſo to do it as that ſacred action ought to be performed: This therefore when they came together in the church they did; and therefore, what is "coming together," ver. 17. "coming to the church," ver. 18. "coming to one place," ver. 20. is "coming together to eat," ver. 33 Accordingly, it was the cuſtom of the church, from the apoſtle's times, thus to communicate upon the Lord's day: For Pliny, in his epiſtle to the emperor Trajan, tells him, that he found nothing to alledge againſt the Chriſtians, but their obſtinacy in their ſuperſtition; and that it was their cuſtom to meet together on a ſet-day before it was light, and to bind themſelves by the ſacrament to do no evil. Now this epiſtle was writ only ſix years after the death of the evangeliſt St. John: And Juſtin Martyr, who wrote but forty years after his death, thus ſpeaks, On Sunday all the Chriſtians in the city or country meet together, becauſe that is the day of our Lord's reſurrection; and then we have read unto us the writings of the prophets and apoſtles: This done, the preſident makes an oration to the aſſembly, to exhort them to imitate and do the things they heard; then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the ſacrament, and they that are willing and able, give alms, &c. (W.) How and by whom this "firſt day of the week," the Lord's-day, or Sunday, came to be miſcall'd the ſabbath, and to what purpoſes that Jewiſh appellation was applied to it, by thoſe who pretended to a pure reformation, in oppoſition to all church-authority and diſcipline, is fully and fairly repreſented by Dr. Pocklington, in his ſermon on this text, intituled Sunday no Sabbath, 1635.

Came together to break bread.] That is, to receive the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper. See the notes on ch. ii. 42, 46.

Continued his ſpeech until midnight.] That this is no rule for the like long ſermons, in ordinary caſes, appears from St. Luke's making an apology for it, as a caſe extraordinary; becauſe St. Paul was "to depart on the morrow." (Pockl.) And St. Chryſoſtome notes upon this text, That the evangeliſt recordeth thoſe who watched " until midnight," to this end, that thoſe may be aſhamed who ſleep (in the church) at mid-day. (Andr.)

In the upper chamber.] See the notes on ch. i. 13.

Sat in a window.] The windows being open, becauſe of the heat. (Fleury)

Sunk down with ſleep.] The devil here, intending to give great diſturbance to the church, by this accident, gave the apoſtle a ſignal opportunity of demonſtrating the truth of the goſpel which he preach'd. (Beza) The caſe of Eutychus here was not like thoſe of our common ſermon-ſleepers, who, in the day-time, and during a ſhort ſervice, ſettle and compoſe themſelves to ſleep, and do what they can to invite it. But, what if, with Eutychus, any of them fall down dead, here is no St. Paul to raiſe them up! Or, what if this wretched contempt of God's word ſhould provoke God to ſay, " Sleep on," till hell-flames awake you! (B.) The kingdom of heaven, ſaith Leo, is not the lot of ſleepers; nor is the bleſſedneſs of eternity promiſed to thoſe who are benumm'd with idleneſs and ſloth. (Andr.)

His life is in him.] As if he had ſaid, Even now, whilſt I am ſpeaking, his life is reſtored to him. (G.)

Had broken bread and eaten.] Tho' here be mention only of " breaking bread," yet that the cup was alſo conſecrated and diſtributed, is evident from the doctrine of the church of Rome. For they agree with the Proteſtants in this, that the prieſts always ought to conſecrate the Euchariſt in both kinds; and ſay, that, if one ſpecies be conſecrated without the other, it would be ſacrilege: And yet, if this place prove any thing for communion in one kind, it proves as much for conſecration in one kind, and for the ſumption of one kind only, by the prieſt who conſecrates; tho' they hold it neceſſary for him to receive both. And this they were aware of at the council of Trent. (W.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16. And we went before to ſhip, and ſailed unto Aſſos, there intending to take in Paul; for ſo had he appointed, minding himſelf to go afoot. And when he met with us at Aſſos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene. And we ſailed thence, and came the next day over againſt Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus: For Paul had determined to ſail by Epheſus, becauſe he would not ſpend the time in Aſia; for he haſted, if it were poſſible for him, to be at Jeruſalem the day of Pentecoſt.

Sailed unto Aſſos.] Whereas Strabo, and ſome others, reckon this Aſſos a city of Æolis, whilſt others again more commonly reckon it in Myſia, the ſeeming difference is eaſily reconciled, according to Pomponius Mela and Pliny; who tell us, that from the time that Myſia began to be inhabited by the Æolians, the ſame was call'd Æolis. (H.)

Himſelf to go a foot.] Here obſerve, How indefatigable was the induſtry of our apoſtle: How cloſe he trode in his maſter's ſteps, who " went about doing good." He compaſſed ſea and land; preach'd, and wrought miracles, wherever he came: In every place, like a wiſe maſter-builder, he either laid a foundation, or rais'd the ſuperſtructure: He was " inſtant in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon;" and ſpared not his pains, either night or day, that he might do good to the ſouls of men. (Cave)

Came to Mitylene.] The geographical deſcription of all theſe places here named, may be ſeen in the maps, and table, at the end of Dr. Whitby's Commentary.

Determined to ſail by Epheſus.] Parapleuſai: That is, to paſs, it, without touching there; becauſe he haſted to be at Jeruſalem.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. And from Miletus he ſent to Epheſus, and called the elders of the church. And when they were come to him, he ſaid unto them, Ye know, from the firſt day that I came into Aſia, after what manner I have been with you at all ſeaſons, Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations which befel me by the lying in wait of the Jews: And how I kept nothing back that was profitable unto you, but have ſhewed you, and have taught you publickly, and from houſe to houſe. Teſtifying both to the Jews, and alſo to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And now behold, I go bound in the ſpirit unto Jeruſalem, not knowing the things that ſhall befal me there: Save that the holy Ghoſt witneſſeth in every city, ſaying, That bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of theſe things move me, neither count I my life dear unto my ſelf, ſo that I might finiſh my courſe with joy, and the miniſtry which I have received of the Lord Jeſus, to teſtify the goſpel of the grace of God. And now behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, ſhall ſee my face no more. Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not ſhunned to declare unto you all the counſel of God. Take heed therefore unto your ſelves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own blood. For I know this, that after my departing, ſhall grievous wolves enter in among you, not ſparing the flock. Alſo of your own ſelves ſhall men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away diſciples after them. Therefore watch, and remember, that by the ſpace of three years I ceaſed not to warn every one night and day with tears. And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are ſanctified. I have coveted no mans ſilver, or gold, or apparel. Yea, you yourſelves know, that theſe hands have miniſtred unto my neceſſities, and to them that were with me. I have ſhewed you all things, how that ſo labouring ye ought to ſupport the weak; and to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give than to receive. And when he had thus ſpoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all. And they all wept ſore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kiſſed him; Sorrowing moſt of all for the words which he ſpake, that they ſhould ſee his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ſhip.

From Miletus he ſent to Epheſus.] This Miletus was a ſea-port town of Aſia-minor, and a city of Jonia, on the Ægean Sea, thirty miles from Epheſus; next to which it was the moſt conſiderable city in theſe parts. (Comb. W. and Fleury) Beza computes it at near fifty German miles diſtance.

Called the elders of the church.] St. Paul ſent to Epheſus, the chief metropolis of Aſia-minor; and by that means gave notice to the biſhops of Aſia, to come to him at Miletus. See the notes on ch. xi 30. (H.) To this 'tis objected, that Chryſoſtome, Jerome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, knew nothing of S. Paul's ſending to any other biſhops beſides thoſe of Epheſus; for otherwiſe they could not have argued, as they do from this place, that theſe perſons could not be biſhops properly ſo called, becauſe there could be only one biſhop of one city: That St. Paul was in ſo great haſte, that he would not ſo much as go to Epheſus, nor ſend any whither but to that city only: And that the ſame perſons, who are call'd biſhops, ver. 28. are here call'd presbyters; from whence it is inferr'd, that the ſame perſons were, in the firſt ages of the church, ſtiled biſhops, or presbyters indifferently. (W) But, towards clearing this point, it ſufficeth to note, 1. That in thoſe churches, where any of the apoſtles themſelves commonly reſided, they kept the government in their own hands; and ſo long there was no occaſion for any more than two orders under the apoſtles in thoſe places, viz. presbyters and deacons. 2. That in thoſe cities where few were converted, there was no occaſion for presbyters at firſt; and it ſeems reaſonable to think, there were no more fix'd there, than a biſhop and his deacons. But it is clear, even in the apoſtles days, that the biſhops, conſtituted by them, were to charge the paſtors not to preach any ſtrange doctrine, 1 Tim. i. 3. to ſee laborious preachers well rewarded, ch. v. 17. to cenſure offending elders, or presbyters, ver. 1. to examine and approve of deacons, ch. iii. 8. and to admit both theſe, by impoſition of hands, ch. v. 22. which place the fathers generally explain of ordination. And as Timothy had this ſuperiority at Epheſus, ſo Titus had the like in Crete, Tit. i. 5. and iii. 10. From all which it appears, there was an order of biſhops, above the presbyters, Who muſt have juriſdiction over them, or elſe they could not reprove and cenſure them, as Epiphanius notes; and that they alſo had then the only power of ordaining both the presbyters and deacons, and of confirming baptized converts: And 'tis plain, they had two orders under their inſpection and rule, both the preaching presbyters and miniſtring deacons, in regular churches, eſpecially a little before the end of the apoſtle's time. (Comb.) Therefore it ſeems reaſonable to believe, That the ſynod here aſſembled by St. Paul, at this his apoſtolical viſitation, conſiſted of the biſhops and paſtors of the church, who reſided in Epheſus, and the neighbouring cities; (that is, both of the biſhops and presbyters, as Irenæus interprets it,) moſt of whom had been both converted and ordain'd by this apoſtle himſelf; that he might take his final leave of them, and give them his laſt charge. (Idem and Cave) See the notes on ch. xv. 6.

Temptations which befel me.] That is, trials, troubles, and afflictions.

Teſtifying both.] As he had before declared the manner, ſo here he declares alſo the matter of his preaching; viz. "Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:" Which two graces comprehend the ſum of a Chriſtian's duty. Miniſters muſt join theſe two together in their preaching; and our hearers muſt not ſeparate them in their practice: They who repent without believing, or believe without repenting, do indeed do neither. (B.)

I go bound in the ſpirit.] What this phraſe "bound in ſpirit" ſignifies, may perhaps be judged by the like phraſe "poor in ſpirit," Mat. v. 3. That ſignifies him, who, tho' he be not actually poor, yet is prepared to bear poverty contentedly: And ſo Paul, reſolving to venture the hazard of impriſonment here, by going up to Jeruſalem, whither if he go he knows, and the ſpirit of God tells him, it will befall him, may be ſaid to be "bound in ſpirit." But it may alſo be interpreted only of his preſaging and foreſeeing his bonds, which being revealed by the ſpirit of God to others of him, and probably immediately to him alſo, he may be ſaid to be "bound in the ſpirit," in that reſpect. Nay, 'tis poſſible, it may ſignify no more than reſolved, and ſo "bound in ſpirit," or full purpoſe of mind, as ch. xix. 21. "He purpoſed in ſpirit:" But this more unmoveable than that. (H)

Bonds and afflictions abide me.] That is, wait, or are prepar'd, for me. And thus the Latin word manet is uſed, (in the ſame ſenſe as the Greek menouſi is here,) by Virgil, Georg. i.

Si te digna manet divini gloria ruris.

Upon which his commentator Servius obſerves, that manet ſignifies the ſame as expectat.

None of theſe things move me.] The words may be rendred, I make no account of theſe things; or bring them not into the reckoning. He eſteem'd them as nothing: So far from ſhaking him, that they did not ſo much as move him. (Burn.) As if he had ſaid, I am fully reſolved (by the grace of God enabling,) that nothing ſhall divert me from my duty, neither deterring fear, nor deluding favour of men ſhall ever affect me; but I will go out, and go on, in the ſtrength of Chriſt, running my race with patience, and finiſhing my courſe with joy. Hence learn, 1. That the apprehenſion of ſufferings muſt not ſhake the reſolution of a Chriſtian; much leſs daunt the courage of a miniſter. True miniſterial courage delights in the air of the danger where duty dwells; and will neither be beaten off from doing an incumbent duty, nor be beaten on to a compliance with any known ſin. 2. That the miniſters of Chriſt ſhould endeavour, not only to finiſh their miniſtry and courſe of Chriſtianity with faithfulneſs, but with joy: And that they may do ſo, let them ſee, that they give up themſelves wholly to the ſervice of Chriſt, without reſtriction or reſerve, and live daily by faith on the mediation of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Here was ſuch a maſculine ſpirit in our apoſtle, as bid defiance to death and danger; and the argument that excited him was, "that he might finiſh his courſe with joy." (B.) A ſervant of God conſiders only his duty, without regarding the danger; but the greateſt part of the world conſider only the danger, without any regard to their duty. (Q.) See the notes on John xvii 4.

Shall ſee my face no more.] This he ſays, to faſten his ſpeech in their memories. And we know what deep impreſſion the laſt words of dying or departing friends are apt to make in our memories. (Aſſ.)

Pure from the blood of all men.] See the notes on ch. xviii. 6.

I have not ſhunned to declare.] Here obſerve, He doth not ſay, he had declared the whole counſel of God; for who but God himſelf can do that? But he "had not ſhunned to declare" the whole counſel of God; that is, he had not concealed from them any truth neceſſary to ſalvation: And this freed him from the blood of ſouls; if any periſh, it was not long of him, but their blood was upon themſelves. "I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men:" It is happy when the miniſters of God can appeal to the conſciences of their people, and ſummon them in as witneſſes, to bear record for them at the bar of Chriſt. (B.) But what then, on the contrary, have not thoſe to fear, who through ignorance, ſloth, fear, too great a regard to men, or otherwiſe, ſuppreſs Chriſtian truths, and leave ſouls in ignorance; either as to their whole duty, or as to ſome conſiderable part of it? What anxiety, what remorſe, will ſeize thoſe at the laſt hour, who ſhall have purchaſed their own eaſe, at the expence of the truth, of the ſalvation of ſouls, of the liberty and eaſe of the ſervants of God, and of the good of the whole church? (Q. See the notes on John xv. 15.

Take heed therefore unto your ſelves.] Here obſerve, A two-fold duty, and a three-fold motive, to enforce that duty. The firſt Duty is to "take heed to themſelves:" The ſecond is, to take heed to "all the flock." The firſt part of a miniſter's duty is to take heed to himſelf. He that neglects his own ſoul, will never take a faithful care of the ſouls of others. We muſt firſt look to ourſelves, that our judgments be ſound, our hearts holy, and our lives exemplary. We muſt take heed to ourſelves, that we be fit for the employment which we undertake: This is not a burden for a child's ſhoulder; he that is himſelf a babe in knowledge, is altogether unfit to teach men the myſteries of ſalvation. Take we heed that our example doth not contradict our doctrine; that our practice doth not give our profeſſion the lye: That we do as well as teach; not preach angelical ſermons, and lead diabolical lives: But ſecuring that grace to ourſelves which we offer unto others; and ſhunning that ſin ourſelves which we condemn in others: And this, becauſe we have a depraved nature, and vicious inclinations in us, as well as others; becauſe we have a heaven to win, and a ſoul to ſave, as well as others; yea, when others have only their own ſouls to account for, we have not only our own, but others too: In a word, becauſe our ſins do more diſhonour God, more diſcredit religion, more gratify the devil, more harden ſinners, and have more of wilfulneſs, more perfidiouſneſs, and more hypocriſy in them, than other mens: And we ſhall certainly be adjudged by God to a double damnation for them Well therefore might the apoſtle ſay to the Epheſian elders, "take heed unto your ſelves:" Next he adds, "and to all the flock:" That is, with a conſtant care and laborious diligence, acquaint them with their duty, inform them of their danger, ſhew them where their happineſs lies, and the way and means for attaining it: And in order to this, "all the flock" muſt be known, that it may be heeded; and we muſt labour to be acquainted with the ſtate of all our people as fully as we can: We muſt, as the apoſtle before us did, viſit our people from "houſe to houſe," that we may know their perſons, their inclinations, and the manner of their converſation; what ſins they are moſt in danger of, what temptations moſt liable to, and what duties they neglect, either for the matter or manner of them, and give them the beſt encouragement, directions, and aſſiſtance we are able. This is the ſum of the apoſtle's exhortation to the elders of Epheſus; "Take heed unto yourſelves, and unto all the flock" The motives to enforce the duty follow; and they are, 1. Drawn from their office, they are overſeers of the flock: That is, officers appointed by ſolemn ordination to teach, to govern, the churches committed to their care, and under their charge. 2. From the authority and excellency of him that called them to their office, "the Holy Ghoſt." We read of ſome that were nominated by the ſpecial and immediate inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt, as Acts i. 24. and xiii. 2. Others were ordained by the apoſtles; who were guided by the Holy Ghoſt then: And whoſoever is ſet apart to that office now, according to the rule of God's word, may truly be ſaid to be made an overſeer by the Holy Ghoſt; Almighty God concurring to own and bleſs his own inſtitution. 2. From the dear purchaſe which Chriſt paid for, and the tender regard he bears to, this his flock; "Feed the church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his blood." Where obſerve, the divinity of Chriſt aſſerted, he is expreſly call'd God, in oppoſition to the Arians, and their unhappy ſpawn the Socinians, who will allow him to be only man: But then his blood could never have purchaſed the church, which it is here ſaid to do; being God and man in one perſon; Man, that he might have blood to ſhed; and God, that his blood might be of infinite value, and ineſtimable preciouſneſs when ſhed. Obſerve alſo, the force of the apoſtle's argument; If the church be thus dear to Chriſt, the chief-ſhepherd, ſhe ought to be very dear to all under-ſhepherds: If Chriſt judged her ſalvation worth his blood, well may his miniſters judge it worth their ſweat. 4. From the danger which the church is in by ſeducers and falſe teachers, ver. 29. "Grievous wolves will enter, not ſparing the flock;" and even from among "your ſelves ſhall ariſe" Hereticks, who will vent their unſound doctrines to debauch men, firſt in their principles, and then in their practices: Therefore "take heed to all the flock." Now from the whole, Note, 1. The church is Chriſt's flock, conſiſting of ſheep and lambs: Chriſt himſelf is the great and good ſhepherd; his miniſters under-ſhepherds and overſeers; bloody perſecutors, heretical ſeducers, and falſe teachers, are wolves which worry and divide the flock. 2. That every flock ſhould have his own paſtor, and every paſtor his own flock. 3. That the flock ſhould be no greater ordinarily, than the overſeers are capable of taking heed of. 4. That every overſeer of Chriſt's flock ought to take great heed, both to himſelf and to the whole flock, in all the parts of his paſtoral work, particularly, publick preaching, and private inſpection. (B.)

The Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers.] What etheto, put, or ſet, or appointed, importeth here, is ſomewhat uncertain. It may ſignify their ordination to the epiſcopal office, attributed to the Holy Ghoſt, as to the original; by whoſe deſcent upon the apoſtles they were authorized to communicate this authority, to give commiſſions to others, who were to ſucceed them in the dignity and office of governing of churches. But it may alſo ſignify the act of deſignation, election, nomination, to this dignity; which at that time was done by the ſpecial revelation of God, and ſo might properly be attributed to "the Holy Ghoſt." So of Matthias, it appears that he was deſigned by lot, and choſen by God, to ſucceed Judas in his office, ch. i. 24. So ch. xiii. 2. "The Holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate me Saul and Barnabas for the work," &c. So Timothy, the biſhop of Epheſus, is ſaid to be advanced to it "by prophecy," by particular revelation; of which St. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that as the prieſts anciently were made by prophecy, ſo Timothy was, by the ſuffrage of God, choſen to his office. So ſaith Clemens Romanus, That the apoſtles conſtituted biſhops, trying, or approving, them by the ſpirit; and Clemens Alexandrinus of St. John, and the biſhops of Aſia here, That he did conſtitute biſhops of thoſe that were ſignified by the ſpirit. And ſo this is the moſt probable notation of it in this place. (H.) The miniſters of the goſpel, we ſee, receive their ordination from man's hand, and are appointed over their ſeveral flocks by man's election: And yet it is moſt true withal, That "God hath ſet them in the church," 1 Cor. xii. 28. Chriſt hath given them, Eph. iv. 11. and "over all the flock the Holy Ghoſt hath made them overſeers:" With whom our Saviour having promiſed to "be alway, even unto the end of the world," Matth. xxviii. 20. as he was at the beginning with thoſe firſt maſter-builders, who were "apoſtles, not of men, neither by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt and God the father," Gal. i. 1. that which he ſpeaketh of the firſt, appertaineth no leſs unto the laſt, "He that heareth you heareth me, and he that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth him that ſent me," Luke x. 16. and John xiii. 20. (Uſher) See the notes on ver. 17. and ch. xviii. 13. and the other texts here quoted.

Grievous wolves enter in.] The Atheiſts and falſe Chriſtians, Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, are often compared to wolves and foxes, for their craft and cruelty, their mortal hatred to the ſheep, and their lying in wait to deſtroy them. The prophet likens them to "evening wolves," Hab. i. 8. which come ſecretly in the dark, and are very hungry; zealous and paſſionately deſirous to pervert harmleſs and unwary ſouls; like the Phariſees of old: And, leſt their malice ſhould be perceiv'd, theſe ravenous wolves diſguiſe themſelves "in ſheep's cloathing;" that is, they pretend to great innocence and ſimplicity, and ſeem to pity the miſtakes, and deſire the ſalvation, of ſuch as they would inſinuate into; under which veil they are taken for friends, tho' ſtill they remain the worſt of foes. (Comb.) See the notes on Matth. vii. 15. and x. 16. and John x. 12, &c

Of your own ſelves.] Such as "Hymeneus and Alexander, who made ſhipwrack of the faith," 1 Tim. i. 20. "Hymeneus and Philetus," who taught "that the reſurrection is paſt already," 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. For thoſe epiſtles to Timothy being written chiefly for the Epheſians, 'tis reaſonable to think he ſpeaks of men dwelling there, who diſpers'd theſe doctrines among them. (W.)

Warn every one, night and day.] An action or thing is ſaid to be done "night and day," when it is perform'd, as often as fit occaſions and opportunities offer for the doing thereof. This phraſe bears the ſame ſenſe in divers other places of the New Teſtament. Hence Anna, Luke ii 37. and "the twelve tribes," Acts xxvi. 7. are ſaid "to ſerve God night and day:" Hence "the widow indeed" is ſaid to continue in ſupplications and prayers night and day," 1 Tim. v. 5. And in the ſame ſenſe it is uſed, 1 Theſſ. ii. 9. and iii. 10. 2 Theſſ. iii. 8. and 2 Tim. i. 3. (Fox) See the notes on ch. ii. 37.

Theſe hands have miniſtred.] Here the apoſtle vindicates himſelf from the ſordid ſin of covetouſneſs, affirming, that he "had coveted no man's ſilver or gold;" but by the labour of his hands, had maintained himſelf, and them that were with him. Where note, that it is not ſimply unlawful, for a miniſter of the goſpel to labour with his hands, for his own and his family's ſupport, when the poverty of the members of church is ſuch, that they cannot maintain him without it. Obſerve farther, he directs theſe elders to labour as he did, if the caſe required it with them, as it did with him, that they might, by labouring as he, be in a capacity to ſupport the weak, and relieve the poor. Yet note, He doth not propoſe this his practice, as a precept or precedent, or rule to all miniſters: For tho' St. Paul laboured with his hands, in a caſe of neceſſity, and becauſe falſe teachers were watching all advantages againſt him; yet he often declares a right and privilege which he had to be maintain'd by the church, without labouring with his hands for his own livelihood and ſubſiſtence; Nay, aſſerts it to be the ordination and appointment of God himſelf, that "they which preach the goſpel, ſhould live of the goſpel." (B.)

Remember the words of the Lord.] The apoſtles ſeems plainly here to mention theſe words, not as an inference of his own, drawn from our Saviour's ſeveral diſcourſes in commendation of giving, recorded in ſcripture, but as the very expreſs words of our Lord himſelf. For that he did not come to the knowledge of theſe words by the ordinary way of the relation of others, who had convers'd with our Saviour, and heard theſe words from his mouth, is highly probable; becauſe we find, there is not the leaſt mention made of theſe words by any of the four Evangeliſts: And yet, it is hardly to be ſuppoſed, either that they ſhould all have thus entirely omitted them, eſpecially conſidering the remarkableneſs of the words themſelves, if they had known and remembred any thing of them, or that they ſhould all have been ignorant and forgetful of them, if they had been remember'd by any other of our Saviour's diſciples; for theſe, no doubt, frequently communicated to each other, all that they remembred of our Lord's more remarkable ſayings, and conſequently ſuch muſt have been well known and remember'd among them. But there is great reaſon to believe, that St. Paul came to the knowledge of theſe words of our Saviour, by an extraordinary way, viz. by an immediate revelation of them, as of ſeveral other things, from Heaven to him. (Dawes) From him, who gave him the inſtructions of this office, and communicated his goſpel to him; which he declares, he "did not receive from men, but was taught it by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt," Gal. i. 12. But, notwithſtanding the firſt conveyers of this remarkable ſentence are uncertain, the author is unqueſtionable; the apoſtle plainly affirming, that it was ſpoken by our bleſſed Saviour. (Collier) And we may obſerve, that theſe, and the like words, are ſo far from giving any patronage to unwritten traditions, that they are a demonſtration againſt them; it being certain, that we had never known any ſuch thing, had not St. Luke recorded it. (W.)

More bleſſed to give than to receive.] Theſe words are to be expounded according to the meaſures and limitations of other proverbial and ſententious ſayings in ſcripture; not as if they would hold in that full latitude, which grammar and the ſound of the words will allow. The meaning only is, that the nature of things and perſons, of cauſes and events, are uſually ſuch, that, generally ſpeaking, "it is more bleſſed (or happy,) to give, than to receive;" generally ſpeaking, I ſay, upon a due balance of circumſtances, and a ſuppoſal of right qualifications: For otherwiſe, if he that gives, does it out of a principle of intereſt or vain-glory, to gain a reputation, or ſtrengthen a faction; if he does it to encroach upon the liberties of the obliged, to upbraid him with his neceſſities, to betray him into any ſinful compliance, and make him obnoxious to his humour; where the caſe ſtands thus, a grateful and benevolent receiver is much a greater man than ſuch a pretended benefactor. But if we ſuppoſe the giver and receiver, purely conſider'd as ſuch, to be both free from ill principle and moral indiſpoſition, the circumſtances of the giver are more deſirable than thoſe of the receiver; 1. Becauſe giving includes more perfection in it, and is a more ſecure and honourable condition. 2. Becauſe generally ſpeaking, 'tis a clearer evidence of a noble and virtuous diſpoſition. 3. Becauſe charity is a nobler virtue than gratitude, and will be more conſider'd in the other world. And, 4. Becauſe there is more pleaſure in giving than receiving. But, in order to the directing us in the exerciſe of our charity, 1. It ought not to be done out of a principle of oſtentation. 2. It ought not to be accompanied with any ſigns of pride, or a diſaffection to the party relieved. 3. We ſhould take care to place our charity upon deſerving objects. From the whole we may infer, 1. That thoſe who are in a condition of ſupplying the neceſſities of others, are bound to do it; otherwiſe they are guilty of a breach of truſt. 2. That thoſe who are rich, are obliged to moderation in the management of their fortune; that ſo they may contribute more liberally to thoſe that need. And, 3. That thoſe who are receivers ought not to murmur againſt the providence of God, and to be diſcontented with their condition. (Collier, and B.)

He kneeled down, and prayed.] Tho' the heart and inward affection in prayer, be the chief thing which God looketh on, yet is he God of the body, which he redeem'd as well as the ſoul, 1 Cor. vi. 20. Therefore, ſuch reverend geſture, as kneeling, lifting up the hands, &c. have theſe excellent uſes; 1. Hereby we exerciſe body and ſoul in God's ſervice. 2. They ſtir up our own devotion, and others where they are preſent. And, 3. Thus we teſtify the performance of our duty to God before men: As lifting up the hands is a ſign of confidence to be heard, ſo is the bending our knees, of humility; which two are the wings of faithful prayer. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. vii. 60.

CHAP. XXI.

Paul not to be diſſuaded from going to Jeruſalem. Philip's daughters propheteſſes. Agabus foretelleth Paul's ſufferings. Paul at Jeruſalem, declareth to the biſhop and clergy there the happy ſucceſs of his miſſion among the Gentiles. By their advice, he purifies himſelf in the temple. The Jews raiſe a tumult, and attempt to kill him: But Lyſias reſcues him out of their hands, and giveth him leave to ſpeak for himſelf.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. AND it came to paſs, that after we were gotten from them, and had lanched, we came with a ſtraight courſe unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara. And finding a ſhip ſailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and ſet forth. Now when we had diſcovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and ſailed unto Syria, and landed at Tyre: For there the ſhip was to unlade her burden. And finding diſciples, we tarried there ſeven days: Who ſaid to Paul through the ſpirit, that he ſhould not go up to Jeruſalem. And when we had accompliſhed thoſe days, we departed and went our way, and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: And we kneeled down on the ſhore, and prayed. And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ſhip; and they returned home again. And when we had finiſhed our courſe from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and ſaluted the brethren, and abode with them one day. And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Ceſarea; and we entred into the houſe of Philip the evangeliſt (which was one of the ſeven,) and abode with him. And the ſame man had four daughters, virgins, which did propheſy. And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet named Agabus. And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Holy Ghoſt, So ſhall the Jews at Jeruſalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and ſhall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles. And when they heard theſe things, both we and they of that place, beſought him not to go up to Jeruſalem. Then Paul anſwered, What mean ye to weep, and to break mine heart? For I am ready not to be bound only, but alſo to die at Jeruſalem for the name of the Lord Jeſus. And when he would not be perſwaded, we ceaſed, ſaying, The will of the Lord be done. And after thoſe days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jeruſalem. There went with us alſo certain of the diſciples of Ceſarea, and brought with them one Mnaſon of Cyprus, an old diſciple, with whom we ſhould lodge. And when we were come to Jeruſalem, the brethren received us gladly.

After we were gotten from them.] Apoſpaſthentas; That is, torn from, and pull'd, as it were, limb from limb, from each other; intimating the mutual endearments, which were between them while together, and that inexpreſſible ſorrow which was found among them at their parting. (G. Aſſ. H. Leigh, B. and Q.)

Came with a ſtraight courſe.] Euthydromeſantes properly ſignifies both running ſtraight and ſwiftly. (Leigh) So we may underſtand it here, of their making full ſail, ſtraight before a fair wind.

Unto Coos, &c.] See Dr. Whitby's maps and geographical tables.

Through the ſpirit.] It was happy for the apoſtle, and his great advantage, that the will of God was ſo plainly revealed to him, touching this his journey to Jeruſalem: For no ſooner did he prepare himſelf to obey the call of God, and undertake the journey, but he is preſently aſſaulted, by many ſtrong temptations, to decline it. The firſt rub he met with in his way, was from the diſciples at Tyre; "who ſpoke by the ſpirit, that he ſhould not go up to Jeruſalem." But did not the ſpirit of God then contradict it ſelf, in bidding the Apoſtle go, and then ſpeaking to him by thoſe diſciples not to go? Not at all: St. Paul, by extraordinary revelation, was commanded to go up to Jeruſalem; theſe diſciples by a ſpirit of prophecy only foretold the difficulties and dangers that would attend him in his journey; and ſo thro' kindneſs and human affection, they diſſuaded him from undertaking it. We muſt diſtinguiſh, between the prediction of trouble, and the counſel of ſafety: The prediction of trouble; ſo they ſaid thro' the ſpirit, that it would be dangerous for Paul to go to Jeruſalem: The counſel of ſafety proceeded from their private love and affection to him; whereby they diſſuaded him from going to Jeruſalem. Learn from hence, 1. That divine precept not providence is to rule our way to duty. 2. That no diſcouragements or hindrances whatſoever will juſtify our neglect of a commanded duty: Whatever difficulties or diſcouragements lay in the way of the apoſtle's duty, he overcame them all, with an heroick and truly Chriſtian reſolution, ſaying, "I am ready not only to be bound, but alſo to die at Jeruſalem for the name of Jeſus." (B.) If this had been ſaid abſolutely, by an afflatus of the Holy Ghoſt, St. Paul could not have acted contrary without ſin; in oppoſing what the Holy Ghoſt required, and doing what he did forbid. Seeing then Paul perſiſts in his reſolution, after what both they here, and the prophet Agabus had ſaid, ver. 11. theſe words muſt admit of the limitation, that, if he would not be there bound, and evilly intreated, he ſhould not go up thither: And this was only what the ſpirit had before told him; for, ſaith he, "I go bound in the ſpirit to Jeruſalem," chap. xx. 22. Or, they ſaid to him, the ſpirit revealing to them what he was to ſuffer there, they would not have him go up; as alſo did the diſciples of Ceſarea, and they that came up with him from Troas on the ſame account. (W.) The ſpirit foretold, how he ſhould be treated by the Jews, if he went up thither; leaving him to his own liberty, to go, or not to go: Whereupon thoſe with him diſſwaded him from going: But, ſuch was the zeal of the apoſtle, to propagate the goſpel of Chriſt, that even the certain proſpect of ſufferings did not deter him. (Fox)

Kneeled down on the ſhore, and prayed.] See the notes on ch. xx. 36.

Came unto Ceſarea.] See the notes on ch. xviii. 22.

The houſe of Philip the evangeliſt.] This Philip, who was driven out of his houſe by Paul, when a perſecutor, gladly receiv'd him into his houſe, being now Paul a convert; and this without any upbraiding, yea, without the leaſt mention of what he had formerly been or done. Former miſcarriages and injuries ſhould be forgiven and forgotten upon true repentance; and we ſhould receive them into our embraces, whom Chriſt has taken into his boſom. (B.) See the notes on ch. viii. 5, and 29.

The ſame man had four daughters.] Hence Oecumenius obſerves, That one who uſeth matrimony may be a deacon. (W.) Yea, a prieſt, or a biſhop: For 'tis evident, that St. Peter had a wife, Matth. viii. 14. and that St. Paul aſſerts his right to marry, if he had pleas'd, 1 Cor. ix. 5. St. Ignatius affirms, he had a wife, as well as St. Peter and others of the apoſtles: And St. Ambroſe affirms, that all the apoſtles had wives, except St. John and St. Paul. Philip, the deacon and evangeliſt, had a wife and children: So had Aquila, ch. xviii. 26. The rules given by St. Paul to Timothy are a demonſtration, that he allow'd biſhops, as well as deacons, to be married men; nor is there any thing in all the ſcripture that forbids them this liberty. And if we proceed to antiquity, we ſhall find the ſame among the moſt eminent fathers of the primitive church, as Baronius himſelf is forced to own. (Comb.) But this whole queſtion is fully and fairly ſtated, in Maſon's Vind. of the church of Engl. B. ii. c. 8.

Which did propheſy.] That is, By the inſtinct of the ſpirit, they foretold things to come; but did not ſpeak in the church as teachers. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ii. 17, 18. and more hereafter on 1 Cor. xi. 5.

A certain prophet named Agabus.] Tho' Agabus was a prophet, yet, by what appeareth of him in ſcripture, he was always a prophet of evil things and bad tidings. He foretold the famine before, ch. xi. 28. and Paul's bonds now. Such meſſengers of God, as give warnings of judgments to come, ſhould and ought to be accepted, as well as they who bring us hopes of mercy and deliverance. That meſſage may be true, which yet is diſpleaſing. Agabus uſeth a ſign, after the manner of the old prophets, who often propheſied by ſymbols and ſignificant expreſſions, that they might the better imprint their predictions on the hearts of men. Thus Iſaiah went "naked and barefoot," to ſhew what the people of Iſrael ſhould meet with under the king of Aſſyria, Iſa. xx. 2. And Ezekiel was to pack up his ſtuff and remove, to ſignify the people's removal into captivity, Ezek. xii. 3. It pleaſed God to teach his people by viſible ſigns, as well as by word of mouth; that what was receiv'd by both ſenſes, ſeeing and hearing, might make the deeper impreſſion upon their minds. In like manner here, Agabus uſes a ſign. He takes St. Paul's girdle, and binds his own hands and feet with it; ſignifying, that, after that manner, the Jews at Jeruſalem would bind the apoſtle, and deliver him to the Gentiles; firſt to the Roman governor of Judea, and afterwards to Nero the Roman emperor. From whence we may remark, The great goodneſs and condeſcenſion of God, in giving the apoſtle ſo many warnings of his bonds, that he might be thoroughly prepared for a ſuffering condition. (B)

So ſhall the Jews.] Not ſo as to the girdle; for he was "bound with chains," ver. 33. Nor ſo as to the binding of his feet; for St. Paul ſeems only to have the chains faſtned to his hands: But ſo, as to be as truly, and as much bound as Agabus was; and tho' not perſonally by the Jews, yet by the Romans at their inſtigation, and on their account. (W.)

Ready, not to be bound only.] See the notes on ch. xx. 22, &c.

The will of the Lord be done.] It is the duty and deſire, and ought to be the care and endeavour, of all the children of God: to be willing to ſubmit themſelves and theirs to the diſpenſation of God's providence, in whatever befals either them or theirs. For this we have Chriſt's example, Matth. xxvi. 39. "Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt:" The example of David, 2 Sam. xv. 26. "Here am I, let him do what ſeemeth good in his ſight:" The example of Eli, 1 Sam. iii. 18. "It is the Lord, let him do whatſoever he pleaſeth." Such is his juſtice and righteouſneſs, that he can do his children no wrong; and ſuch is his tender mercy and loving kindneſs, that he will do them no harm. The abſolute ſovereignty of God over us, and the ſight of God in all his providential diſpenſations towards us, influences at once our judgments, our wills and our affections, our expreſſions and actions, that we neither dare to think, ſpeak, or act any thing in contradiction to, or oppoſition againſt the wiſdom and will of God: That which is oft againſt our will, is not always againſt our intereſt; but if we belong to God, all afflictions upon us, are federal diſpenſations and covenant bleſſings to us, and either are good, or ſhall work for good: Therefore it is both our duty and intereſt, to ſubmit to the wiſdom of providence, and ſay with theſe diſciples, "The will of the Lord be done." (B.)

An old diſciple.] Grotius and Dr. Hammond think this Mnaſon was converted by Paul and Barnabas, when they were at Cyprus: But, tho' we find they were at Cyprus, ch. xiii. 4. there is not a word of him, or any other convert that they made there. The words "an old diſciple," rather induce us to conceive, he was one of the diſciples, or followers of Chriſt. (W.) And ſo he was; and one of the ſeventy too, as we are told by St. Chryſoſtome. (Fleury)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. And the day following, Paul we ntin with us unto James; and all the elders were preſent. And when he had ſaluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his miniſtry. And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and ſaid unto him, Thou ſeeſt, brother, how many thouſands of Jews there are which believe, and they are all zealous of the law. And they are informed of thee, that thou teacheſt all the Jews which are among the Gentiles, to forſake Moſes, ſaying, that they ought not to circumciſe their children, neither to walk after the cuſtoms. What is it therefore? The multitude muſt needs come together: For they will hear that thou art come. Do therefore this that we ſay to thee; we have four men which have a vow on them; Them take, and purify thy ſelf with them, and be at charges with them, that they may ſhave their heads: And all may know that thoſe things whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing, but that thou thy ſelf alſo walkeſt orderly, and keepeſt the law. As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded, that they obſerve no ſuch thing, ſave only that they keep themſelves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from ſtrangled, and from fornication. Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himſelf with them, entred into the temple, to ſignify the accompliſhment of the days of purification, until that an offering ſhould be offered for every one of them.

Went in with us unto James.] See the notes on chap. xv. 13.

All the elders were preſent.] This aſſembly of all the clergy of Jeruſalem, at the houſe of St. James, their biſhop, is, as it were, an epiſcopal or dioceſan ſynod. A biſhop had then no notion of doing all of his own head, and of not conſulting with his fellow-labourers, concerning every thing relating to the edification of the church, and the ſalvation of ſouls. (Q.) See the notes on ch. xv. 6.

How many thouſands.] Poſai myriades; How many myriads. A myriad is properly ten thouſand; but myriads, in the plural, is commonly uſed, as a certain number for an uncertain, to ſignify an innumerable multitude. (Leigh). See the notes on ch. xv. 4.

All zealous of the law.] It ſeems the Jews, tho' they had received the goſpel, yet thought that the ceremonial law muſt ſtill be obſerved: Therefore, in condeſcenſion to their weakneſs, and to prevent their taking offence, they adviſe the apoſtle, not as a thing neceſſary in it ſelf, but as an expediency in reference to the weak, to conform himſelf to ſome of the Jewiſh ceremonies and purifications; for tho' they were not then needful, yet were they not unlawful; they might then be uſed, when the uſe of them would any ways conduce to the gaining and bringing over the Jews to a love of Chriſtianity. The ſynagogue was not haſtily to be caſt out of the church, like the Heatheniſh ſuperſtitions; but to die by degrees, and be decently interr'd. Here note, That the law of Moſes, as to its moral part, Chriſt continued as his: The ceremonial part, as to the uſe of types and ceremonies, ſignifying him that was to come, was abrogated at Chriſt's coming; and the political part ceaſed when the Jewiſh polity was diſſolved: But the abrogation of the whole was not fully made known at the firſt, but by degrees, and the exerciſe of it long tolerated to the Jews. (B.)

Be at charges with them.] That is, make proviſion alſo of ſacrifices for them, that they may have wherewith to make their offerings, according to the law, Numb. vi. 14. (G. and H.)

As touching the Gentiles.] See the notes on ch. xv. 29.

Purifying himſelf with them.] Here it is to be noted, that every biſhop and his clergy, with the people under their care, made a diſtinct church: And the canons, made by the biſhop and his presbyters who compoſed the dioceſan ſynod, were of authority within that dioceſe, ſo as to bind all the members of it, who either liv'd or ſojourned within that juriſdiction; inſomuch, that if an apoſtle or biſhop of another dioceſe, came among them, he was obliged to conform to the canons of that church, during his abode there. An inſtance of which we have here in St. Paul, the apoſtle of the Gentiles, receiving directions from St. James, the biſhop of Jeruſalem, and his ſynod of presbyters, concerning his behaviour whilſt he continued among them: Who, tho' he thought himſelf bound to obſerve the Jeruſalem canons while he ſojourned there, yet did not think it fit ſo to do when he was in another dioceſe, for he would not ſuffer this very canon, which he conformed to at Jeruſalem, to be obſerv'd at Antioch; and blamed even St. Peter himſelf, Gal. ii. 11 &c. for obſerving thoſe canons in that place. (Brett) See the notes on ch. xviii. 18.

To ſignify the accompliſhment.] "The accompliſhment of the days" was to be ſignified to the prieſts, becauſe on the day when the vow of the Nazarites was finiſh'd, "an offering was to be offered for every one of them." (Beza)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. And when the ſeven days were almoſt ended, the Jews which were of Aſia, when they ſaw him in the temple, ſtirred up all the people, and laid hands on him, Crying out, Men of Iſrael, help: This is the man that teacheth all men every where againſt the people, and the law, and this place: And farther, brought Greeks alſo into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place. (For they had ſeen before with him in the city, Trophimus an Epheſian, whom they ſuppoſed that Paul had brought into the temple) And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: And they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: And forthwith the doors were ſhut. And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jeruſalem was in an uprore. Who immediately took ſoldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them: And when they ſaw the chief captain and the ſoldiers, they left beating of Paul. Then the chief captain came near and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done. And ſome cried one thing, ſome another, among the multitude: And when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the caſtle. And when he came upon the ſtairs, ſo it was that he was borne of the ſoldiers, for the violence of the people. For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him. And as Paul was to be led into the caſtle, he ſaid unto the chief captain, May I ſpeak unto thee? Who ſaid, Canſt thou ſpeak Greek? Art not thou that Egyptian which before theſe days madeſt an uproar, and leddeſt out into the wilderneſs four thouſand men that were murderers? But Paul ſaid, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarſus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: And I beſeech thee ſuffer me to ſpeak unto the people. And when he had given him licence, Paul ſtood on the ſtairs, and beckned with the hand unto the people: And when there was made a great ſilence, he ſpake unto them, in the Hebrew tongue, ſaying,

Crying out.] See the notes on ch. xix. 28.

Againſt the people and the law.] See the notes on ch. vi. 14.

Polluted this holy place.] Meaning, that he had brought the uncircumciſed beyond the court of the Gentiles; which it was death to do. (Aſſ. and W.)

The doors were ſhut.] Leſt they ſhould defile the temple with blood. They thought it great impiety, to ſtain the pavements of the temple, but none to defile their ſouls, with the guilt of blood. But God provided a timely reſcue. (Aſſ.)

The chief captain.] See the notes on Luke xxii. 52. and John xviii. 12.

Bound with two chains.] Under a guard of two ſoldiers, and chain'd to each of them. (Howel) See the notes on ch. xii. 6.

Carried into the caſtle.] That is, into the fort Antonia, where the Roman garriſon lay at Jeruſalem. It joined to the temple, and the aſcent of it was up ſeveral ſteps; having been built by the Aſmonæan princes, who call'd it Baris, but its name was changed, in honour of Mark Anthony, by Herod who repair'd it. Within it there was the magnificence of a palace, with the conveniencies of a city; without, there were fortifications, and four towers to ſtrengthen it; and by its height it commanded the temple, as the temple commanded the city. (Fleury)

Borne of the ſoldiers.] To ſecure him from the preſent rage and violence of the people. (Aſſ. H. Cave and B.)

Art not thou that Egyptian.] Under the time of Felix's procuratorſhip of Judæa there were, ſaith Joſephus, many which deceived the people; particularly one that came out of Ægypt to Jeruſalem, ſaying that he was a prophet, and perſwading the people that they ſhould follow him to mount Olivet, and there they ſhould ſee the walls of the city fall at his command, ſo that they, might enter the city. Theſe, ſaith he, (Ant. l. 20. c. 6.) Felix ſet upon, kill'd 400, and took 200, and put the Egyptian to flight. Which ſtory, being compared with this in the Acts, gives Africanus occaſion to ſay, that under Felix's government there was an Egyptian falſe-prophet with many with him, who ſetting on great deſigns, was diſcomfited by Felix's army. See Euſeb. Chron. lib. 1. pag 67. But Euſebius, Hiſt. l. ii. ch. 21. is more punctual. Then the Jews received a greater miſchief by an Egyptian falſe prophet: For he being a magician, and taking upon him to be a prophet, came into the region or countrey of Judæa, and gathered a company of deceivable people to him, to the number of thirty thouſand. Theſe, ſaith he, he brought out of the mount of Olives, meaning thence to force his paſſage into the city, and to ſeize upon the Roman guards, and ſo get the command of the people, and then keep it by the ſtrength that took it: But this was prevented by Felix. As for the Sicarioi, or ſhort-ſwordmen, that were with this Egyptian, they were a ſort of men, of which Joſephus ſpeaks very much, (who on one ſide, as the Zelots on the other, ſhed much blood, and wrought much miſchief in Judæa) Ant. l. xx. ch. 6. They came, ſaith he, under pretence of religion, up to Jeruſalem, with ſicæ or daggers under their coats: And, being once invited by Felix, ſecretly to ſtrike into the train of Jonathan the high prieſt, and ſo to kill him, for which they were not puniſhed, they after that ſolemnly came up at every feaſt, and either for revenge, or being hired, killed many even in the temple it ſelf, ſaith Joſephus; and ſo polluted it in that manner, that made it neceſſary for God to ſend the Roman armies thither, to purifie it by way of luſtration: And theſe (ſaith he, ch. 7.) within a little while, grew into a very vaſt number; uſing ſwords like the Perſian acinaces, ſuch as the Romans call ſicæ, &c. That which St. Chryſoſtome ſaith of them is ſomewhat ſtrange, That the Eſſenes were alſo the Sicarii, becauſe they were Zelots: Where he confounds theſe three, Eſſenes, Sicarii, and Zelots; whereas the Sicarii are certainly far diſtant from either of the other two. This the learned Annotator on Chryſoſtome juſtly ſuſpects to be a miſtake in him, p. 693. but the original of it he obſerves not, That is very happily ſhewed, by Mr. Fuller, in his Miſcellanies. to have been by turning hoi carioi into ſicarioi, the former noting the Karæans or Scripturians (as they are diſtinguiſhed from, and oppoſed to the Traditionals,) thoſe that adhered ſtrictly to the letter of the law, and ſo were zealous for the law; and ſuch the Eſſenes were, it ſeems, affirmed to be, by ſome from whom Chryſoſtome took this. The like error alſo is committed by Suidas, in this name, ſaying, The Phariſees are called Sicarii as being Zelots: He had ſure read hoi carioi, and took it for ſicarioi; which is the more ſtrange, becauſe he had immediately before rightly interpreted ſicarioi, That they were a ſort of thieves, which in Claudius's time killed all they met, with hook'd ſwords, which the Romans call ſicæ; which, ſaith he, the Egyptian led out into the wilderneſs, and Felix puniſhed. As for the number of men that were ſeduced by this deceiver, writers, it ſeems, do not agree upon them; neither is it neceſſary they ſhould, thoſe kinds of accounts of multitudes being of neceſſity uncertain: Only 'tis a little ſtrange, that Euſebius, in Chron. out of Africanus, ſhould call them three thouſand, and in his hiſtory thirty thouſand; but perhaps the miſtake of numeral letters may cauſe that variation: And then the three thouſand there, will be more agreeable with the chief officers account here; who makes them but four thouſand. (H.) It ſeems to be a miſtake, in Grotius and others, to ſay, the Egyptian mention'd by Joſephus was later than theſe times: For it is apparent from Joſephus, both in his Antiq. l. xx. c. 6. and his hiſtory of the Jewiſh wars, that this Egyptian did this in the firſt or ſecond year of Nero; whereas Paul came not to Jeruſalem till the fourth of Nero. (W.)

CHAP. XXII.

Paul maketh his defence; declaring at large his converſion, and his call to the Apoſtleſhip. At the mention of his miſſion to the Gentiles, the Jews grow outragious. And when the chief captain order'd him to be examin'd by ſcourging, Paul pleadeth the Roman privilege, and ſo eſcapeth.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. MEN, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence, which I make now unto you. (And when they heard that he ſpake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more ſilence: And he ſaith) I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarſus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city, at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous towards God, as ye all are this day. And I perſecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into priſons both men and women. As alſo the High-prieſt doth bear me witneſs, and all the eſtate of the Elders: From whom alſo I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damaſcus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jeruſalem, for to be puniſhed. And it came to paſs, that as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damaſcus about noon, ſuddenly there ſhone from Heaven a great light round about me: And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice ſaying unto me, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? And I anſwered, Who art thou, Lord? And he ſaid unto me, I am Jeſus of Nazareth, whom thou perſecuteſt. And they that were with me, ſaw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that ſpake to me. And I ſaid, What ſhall I do, Lord? And the Lord ſaid unto me, Ariſe, and go into Damaſcus, and there it ſhall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do. And when I could not ſee for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damaſcus. And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, Came unto me, and ſtood, and ſaid unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy ſight: And the ſame hour I looked up upon him. And he ſaid, The God of our fathers hath choſen thee, that thou ſhouldſt know his will, and ſee that Juſt one, and ſhouldſt hear the voice of his mouth: For thou ſhalt be his witneſs unto all men, of what thou haſt ſeen and heard. And now why tarrieſt thou? Ariſe and be baptized, and waſh away thy ſins, calling on the name of the Lord. And it came to paſs, that when I was come again to Jeruſalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; And ſaw him, ſaying unto me, Make haſte, and get thee quickly out of Jeruſalem: For they will not receive thy teſtimony concerning me. And I ſaid, Lord, they know that I impriſoned, and beat in every ſynagogue, them that believed on thee. And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was ſhed, I alſo was ſtanding by, and conſenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that ſlew him. And he ſaid unto me, Depart: For I will ſend thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

Men, brethren, and fathers.] Here begins the Apoſtle's apology, or defenſative plea, which he makes for himſelf before the people at Jeruſalem, who, in the foregoing chapter, had ſo injuriouſly treated him: In which apologetical narration, we have theſe particulars obſervable: 1. With what lenity and mildneſs he beſpeaks his cruel and peſtilent perſecutors, the people of the Jews; he accoſts them with titles of reſpect and honour: "Men, brethren, and fathers;" not with opprobrious invectives: He doth not render evil for evil, or railing for reviling; he had not ſo learned Chriſt, he knew how to ſuffer reproach for the goſpel; but to perſecute his perſecutors with hard names and characters of reproach, was a piece of zeal which St. Paul and the holy ſufferers of thoſe times, were little acquainted with. 2. How the apoſtle inſinuates himſelf into his auditors, that ſo he might gain their attention to what was ſpoken; "Men, brethren, and fathers, hear ye, (I pray) my defence which I make unto you." There is a lawful and pious inſinuation for gaining the attention of our auditors, which the miniſters of Chriſt may and ought to make uſe of, as the workman that would drive his nail, dips it in oil. We gain our auditors attention by our courteous and loving compellations; "Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken." 3. The apology or plea it ſelf; in which he ſets before them, 1. His extraction, "I am a Jew born in Tarſus:" 2. His education; "brought up at the feet of Gamaliel:" 3. His profeſſion; he "was zealous towards God:" That is, He was one of that ſect among the Jews which were called zealots, and was very ſtrict and exact in the obſervation of the law, a bitter enemy to Chriſtianity, and a bloody perſecutor of all that owned themſelves the diſciples of Jeſus; as the high prieſt very well knows, ſays he, "from whom I received a commiſſion, That if I found any of this way, whether men or women, I ſhould bring them bound unto Jeruſalem." Here note, That Damaſcus was five or ſix days journey from Jeruſalem; yet Paul, when a perſecutor, ſticks not at it; but ſpurs on through fire and water to glut his malice and revenge on the poor members of Jeſus Chriſt. Learn thence, That perſecutors will ſpare neither purſe nor pains, they will ſtick and ſtop at nothing, tho' never ſo toilſome and hazardous, ſo they may but ſatisfy their revenge upon the poor diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt; "I perſecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into priſon, both men and women." (B.) See the notes on ch. vii. 2.

He ſpake in the Hebrew tongue.] What the reaſon was of Paul's ſpeaking Hebrew at this time, and the Jews giving him audience thereupon, may here briefly be noted. Two ſorts of Jews there were at this time, ſome called by St. Chryſoſtome profound Hebrews; ſuch as uſed no other language but the Hebrew, admitted not the Greek Bible into their aſſemblies, but only the Hebrew, and the Jeruſalem targum, or paraphraſe: Others that ſpake Greek, and uſed the Greek tranſlation of the Bible, and theſe were called Helleniſts Now, theſe ſeveral uſes bred ſome unkindneſs betwixt theſe two ſorts; as may in part be diſcerned, even after their receiving Chriſtianity, ch. vi. 1. And of this latter ſort Paul ſure was one, and accordingly in his writings makes uſe conſtantly of the Greek tranſlation of the Old Teſtament, and in that reſpect, among others, was much diſliked by the other ſort. Thoſe of them that were converted had great prejudices to him, ch. xxi. 21. and that is ſaid to be the reaſon why he concealed his name in the epiſtle written to the Hebrews: But for thoſe of them that were not converted, they would not endure to hear him, or hear of him; which is the account St. Chryſoſtome gives of his diſcourſing and preaching to the Helleniſts only, ch. ix. 28. becauſe the other would not endure or admit him. Hereupon, to avert this great diſpleaſure conceived by them, he here ſpeaks to them in the Hebrew language; and they were in ſome degree pacified thereby, ſo far as to give him audience. (H.)

A Jew born in Tarſus.] The Metropolis of Cilicia; where they applied themſelves ſo much, ſaith Strabo, to the ſtudy of philoſophy and all the liberal ſciences, as that they excell'd the men of Athens, and Alexandria, and other places dedicated to the ſtudy of thoſe ſciences. (W.) It was neceſſary, that the apoſtle of the Gentiles ſhould be a Jew, "taught according to the perfect manner of the law," and zealous for the exact obſervance of it; to the end that ſalvation might come to them from the Jews, and that his doctrine, concerning the unprofitableneſs of the legal ceremonies, might not be attributed, either to prepoſſeſſion, or ignorance, or indifference. (Q.)

At the feet of Gamaliel.] This Gamaliel was ſo far from being well-affected to Chriſtianity, that ſome of the Jewiſh writings ſay, he added to their daily prayers that which they uſed in their ſynagogues againſt the progreſs of Chriſtianity, called the prayer againſt Hereticks. See Lightf. Horæ. Hebr. in Matth. vi. 9. (W.) See alſo the notes on ch. v. 34. and John i. 38.

I perſecuted this way.] St. Paul makes his paſt ſins inſtrumental to the glory of God, and to the ſalvation of his brethren: And the ſame ought every ſinner to endeavour to do, after his example. (Q.) See the notes on ch. viii. 3. and ix. 1 &c.

Doth bear me witneſs.] Martyrei here, being not of the preſent tenſe, but the ſecond future, ſhould be rendred will witneſs; that is, if he be asked. (W.)

To be puniſhed.] See the notes on ch. ix. 2.

A great light.] See the notes on ch. ix. 3.

Heard a voice.] Jeſus Chriſt makes uſe of every thing to change the heart of Saul: His light which blinds in order to enlighten him; his hand, which ſtrikes him to the ground, in order to lift him up; and his voice which upbraids him, that it may draw him to himſelf. Happy is that perſon, who, like St. Paul, rejects not that light, refuſes not that hand, and turns not a deaf ear to that voice. ! (Q.) See the notes on ch. ix. 4.

Jeſus of Nazareth.] That contemned, tho' not contemptible name, "Jeſus of Nazareth," is own'd by Chriſt from heaven. He ſays not, I am Jeſus the ſon of God, the heir of the world, and lord of all, but "I am Jeſus of Nazareth;" glorying in that reproach which his enemies caſt upon him, and owning his name from heaven, to teach his members not to be aſhamed of it, when reproach'd by it here on earth. Calling on the name of the Lord.] Here Grotius would have us read autou, his name, and refers this, not to Chriſt, but to God the father, mentioned ver. 14. Whereas even Woltzogenius here ſaith, we are to underſtand Jeſus Chriſt; of whom mention is made both in the antecedent, and ſubſequent words. And this is evident from the interpretation of Ananias; who, to prevent ſuch a miſtake, ſaith, "The Lord, even Jeſus, who was ſeen of thee, hath ſent me to thee," ch. ix 17. and having told us that Chriſtians were perſons who "called upon the name of Chriſt," ver. 14. we have reaſon to conceive, that he adviſeth Paul thus to profeſs, and ſhew he was a Chriſtian: And hence the inference of Chryſoſtome from this place is this, That by theſe words he ſhews, that Chriſt was God, becauſe it is not lawful to invoke any beſides God. (W.)

Was in a trance.] See the notes on ch. x. 10.

And ſaw him.] See the notes on ch. ix. 17.

Lord, they know.] As if he had ſaid, Lord, my former zeal againſt thoſe that believed in thee, is ſo well known to them all, by ſo many remarkable inſtances ſhewed among them, that ſure they muſt be convinced, that it is upon ſome certain, and irreſiſtible grounds of perſuaſion, that I am now become a preacher of that faith I formerly deſtroyed, and perſecuted with ſo great zeal; and ſo I am apt to think, they ſhould more diligently attend to the narrative I give of my wonderful change, and to the reaſons I now offer to confirm the truth of the Chriſtian faith. (W.)

Thy martyr.] Martyr, is one who bears witneſs to the truth, by ſuffering for it. The requiſites of true martyrdom are, 1. That there muſt be ſuffering; in name, by reproach, 1 Cor. iv. 12, 13. in eſtate, Phil. iii. 8. in health, 1 Cor. iv. 11. 2 Cor. xi. 24, 27. in liberty, Heb. xi. 36. in life, Heb. xi. 37, 38. and Acts vii. 59. 2. That it muſt be for righteouſneſs ſake, for the confeſſion, and in the defence, of the truth, 1 Pet. iii. 14, 17. and iv. 14, 15, 16. He who ſuffers for hereſy or error is the devil's martyr, and not God's, 1 Pet. ii. 20. 'Tis the cauſe which makes the martyr, as St. Ambroſe ſays. And, 3. That the end and intention muſt be right too: Not for humour and faction, not out of vain-glory and ambition, but out of true love to God and his truth; otherwiſe, a man may ſuffer much, and yet be no martyr, 1 Cor. xiii. 3. (Bever.)

Conſenting unto his death.] See the notes on ch. viii. 1.

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lift up their voices, and ſaid, Away with ſuch a fellow from the earth: For it is not fit that he ſhould live. And as they cried out, and caſt off their clothes, and threw duſt into the air, The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the caſtle, and bade that he ſhould be examined by ſcourging; that he might know wherefore they cried ſo againſt him. And as they bound him with thongs, Paul ſaid unto the centurion that ſtood by, Is it lawful for you to ſcourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned? When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, ſaying, Take heed what thou doſt; for this man is a Roman. Then the chief captain came, and ſaid unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He ſaid, Yea. And the chief captain anſwered, With a great ſum obtained I this freedom. And Paul ſaid, But I was free-born. Then ſtraightway they departed from him, which ſhould have examined him: And the chief captain alſo was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and becauſe he had bound him. On the morrow, becauſe he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accuſed of the Jews, he looſed him from his bands, and commanded the chief prieſts and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and ſet him before them.

They gave him audience unto this word.] Obſerve here, 1. With what patience the Jews hear the apoſtle's diſcourſe, until he made mention of the Gentiles, and that he was appointed to preach to them; upon which they break forth into fury and paſſion, and expreſs their fury by throwing duſt into the air, and caſting off their clothes, as if they would preſently ſtone him, whom they look'd upon as the worſt of villains, and unworthy to live. Where we may remark at once, both what a vile opinion the Jews had of the Gentiles, whom they called and accounted dogs; and what an high eſteem they had of themſelves, and proud conceit of their own deſervings; as if the favours of Heaven belonged to none but themſelves, who yet trampled upon them, when they were tendered to them. 2. What a vile eſteem theſe wicked Jews had of the holy innocent apoſtle, who deſired above all things, to preach the glad-tidings of the goſpel to them, and long'd moſt affectionately for the converſion and ſalvation of them: They account him the greateſt villain upon earth, and unworthy to live upon it. But the good man had learnt, (and let all the faithful miniſters of Chriſt learn it after him) to take pleaſure in reproaches, and perſecutions, in neceſſities and diſtreſſes, for Chriſt's ſake; "Away with ſuch a fellow from the earth, it is not meet that he ſhould live." 3. The pious prudence and innocent policy, which the apoſtle uſes for his own preſervation: When they were about to bind him to a poſt, in order to the ſcourging of him, the apoſtle declares himſelf a free-denizen of Rome, by being born in one of the cities which the Roman emperor had made free; accordingly St. Paul pleads for himſelf the privilege of a Roman citizen, who neither ought to be bound or beaten. Tho' we may not render evil for evil, yet may we right our ſelves by all lawful means. Chriſt allows as much of the ſerpent as of the dove in his ſervants; provided the ſubtilty of the one doth not deſtroy the ſimplicity of the other: The head of the ſerpent and the heart of the dove do beſt together; for as policy without piety is too ſubtil to be good, ſo piety without policy is too ſimple to be ſafe. 4. How the chief captain, fearing he had done more than he could anſwer, becauſe it was death to any one in authority to violate the Roman privileges; therefore, more out of fear than love, or more out of love to himſelf than the apoſtle, he looſes St. Paul's bonds. Thence note, That when at any time the perſecutors of the Saints do deſiſt from their bloody purpoſes, it is not out of love to them, but love to themſelves. Obſerve, laſtly, The Saints deliverances from affliction and perſecution whilſt on this ſide of Heaven, are not total or final, but momentary and partial. The apoſtle was delivered from his chains, not from his confinement; tho' unbound, he was not ſet at liberty: Next day we find him before the great council or ſanhedrim, and freſh bonds and afflictions abide him. Little reſt is to be expected by the members, and leſs reſt by the faithful miniſters, of Jeſus Chriſt in this world: Bleſſed be God for the relieving hopes of an everlaſting reſt; where the fury of the perſecutor, and the injuries of the oppreſſor, ſhall ceaſe for ever; where no ſin ſhall affect us, no ſorrow afflict us, no danger affright us; but we ſhall be perfectly like unto God, as well in purity as immortality. In the mean time, may we, miniſters of God, who are ſet for the defence of the goſpel, bear the burthen and heat of the day with patience and courage, reſolution and conſtancy: May we gird up the loins of our minds, not accounting either our labours or our lives dear unto us, ſo we may finiſh our courſe with joy, and fulfil the miniſtry which we have received of the Lord, glorying in our reproaches for well-doing; yea, tho' we be accounted the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things: For when the chief ſhepherd ſhall appear, we ſhall receive a crown of glory, which fadeth not away. (B.)

Should be examined by ſcourging.] Anetazein is to examine by way of torment; to find out, or cauſe men to confeſs a crime: So, in Heſychius and Phavorinus, etazeſthai is krineſthai cai baſanizeſthai, to be puniſhed, and tormented, and exetaſis is baſaniſmos, torment. So Gen. xii. 17. Eſth. ii. 23. Wiſd. ii. 19. and vi. 6. and Ecclus. xxiii. 9. This examination was uſed by the Romans, and other nations, to force them who were thus ſcourged, to confeſs what they had done; why, and who were conſcious to the fact: As Tacitus ſaith of Herennius Gallus; that he received ſtripes, that they might know, at what price, and with what confederates he betrayed the Roman army. They who were thus ſcourged, had their arms extended, and their bodies tied to a pillar, as Lipſius ſhews: And thus here they ſeem, proteinein, to ſtretch out St. Paul's body to the whip and ſcourge. This puniſhment of ſcourging, not with rods, but with whips and thongs, as here, was not uſed to a Roman, but to ſtrangers only; on which account Cicero, in his oration pro Rabirio, ſpeaks againſt Labienus, that the Porcian law permits not a citizen to be whipt with rods, but he hath done it with ſcourges: And upon this account St. Paul here ſaith, "Is it lawful for you to ſcourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?" ver. 25. (H. and W.) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 22.

The centurion that ſtood by.] From this, and many other places, as well in the holy ſcriptures, as in profane Hiſtorians both Greek and Roman, it plainly appears, that the adminiſtration of the penal part of the law, whether impriſonment, or baniſhment, or death, or whatever corporal penalty, belong'd to military men, and to the great or general officers at the head of them. (Parker) Such was Lyſias, "the chief captain" here: He was no civil magiſtrate, nor did he take upon him the office of one; but he was the chief commander of the gariſon, which was left at Jeruſalem, to keep the factious multitude quiet. (Milb.) And therefore St. Paul's behaviour towards the civil magiſtrate, and his doctrine with reſpect to the ſame, cannot fairly be concluded from any thing in this caſe. But, ſee more of that in the notes on ch. xxv. 10.

A Roman, and uncondemned.] That Paul was free of Rome, by being born in a city that had the Roman privileges, is ſufficiently known: So the Philippians call themſelves Romans, ch. xvi 21. And that Tarſus, the metropolis of Cilicia, was ſuch, is intimated by Diodorus Siculus, l. xlvii. where, ſpeaking of the emperors Julius and Auguſtus, he ſaith, thoſe of Tarſus were ſo kind to Julius, and after, for his ſake, to Auguſtus Cæſar, that from his own name he call'd it Juliopolis. That it was unlawful for any ſuch perſon to be bound, or ſcourged, is apparent by Cicero, Orat. v. in Verr. It is a foul fault for any Prætor, &c. to bind a citizen of Rome, a piacular offence to ſcourge him, a kind of parricide to kill him; what then ſhall I call the crucifying of ſuch an one? And for that that follows, of his being ſcourged before condemnation, (as, being by way of examination, or anetaſmos ver. 24. as it is here ſuppoſed to be,) 'tis that which Cajacius hath obſerved out of Salvian, to be diſtinctly againſt law: And all that is here ſaid in this verſe, is ſet down by St. Paul, as diſtinctly according to the Roman form, as if the whole verſe were taken and tranſlated out of their law. Yet was not this ſo far true, that a Roman citizen might not be puniſhed: But, as Rewardus obſerves, the cuſtom was, that, before he were ſo puniſhed, he ſhould be adjudg'd to loſe his privilege, and be uncitizen'd, and pronounced an enemy of the common-wealth; and then he might be ſcourged or put to death; This being the form of disfranchizing him, Lictor, bind his hands, or cover his face; hang him, ſcourge him, either within or without the ſuburbs, as Livy teſtifies, l. i. (H.) See the notes on ch. xvi. 37.

C H A P. XXIII.

Paul pleading his cauſe, Ananias gives orders to ſmite him; for which the apoſtle rebukes him. His proſecutors diſagree among themſelves. God encourageth him. The Jews conſpiring to kill him treacherouſly, the chief captain ſendeth him, with a guard, to Ceſarea.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND Paul, earneſtly beholding the council, ſaid, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conſcience before God, until this day. And the High-prieſt Ananias commanded them that ſtood by him, to ſmite him on the mouth. Then ſaid Paul unto him, God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited wall: For ſitteſt thou to judge me after the law, and commandeſt me to be ſmitten contrary to the law? And they that ſtood by, ſaid, Revileſt thou God's High-prieſt? Then ſaid Paul, I wiſt not, brethren, that he was the High-prieſt: For it is written thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the ruler of thy people.

In all good conſcience.] Obſerve here, the Apoſtle's ſober and ingenuous profeſſion and proteſtation, "I have lived in all good conſcience unto this day:" That is, during his continuance in the Jewiſh religion, and ſince his converſion to the Chriſtian religion, he had walked uprightly, and according to his knowledge, and the light of his conſcience. But had Paul a good conſcience, when he perſecuted the Chriſtians? Anſ. He went according to his conſcience, when he perſecuted: He verily thought he did God ſervice in ſo doing; and it was not any ſelfiſh end or ſiniſter deſign he propounded to himſelf, but zeal for his religion provok'd him to perſecution, Phil. iii. 6. "Concerning zeal perſecuting the church," it is certainly a man's duty to follow his conſcience: But then, it is as much his duty to inform his conſcience, as it is to follow it; "I have lived in all good conſcience until this day." Here note, The apoſtle ſets forth the goodneſs of his conſcience theſe four ways. 1. From the goodneſs of his converſation, "I have lived:" A good converſation is the beſt evidence of a good conſcience. God doth not meaſure men's ſincerity by the tides of their affections; but by the conſtant bent of their reſolutions, and the general courſe and tenor of their converſations. Every man's conſcience is as his life is. 2. From the generality of his care and obedience; "I have lived in all good conſcience," if it be not a conſcience all good, it is no good conſcience at all. Herod had ſome good conſcience, "he did many things;" but the Apoſtle went farther; he lived not in ſome, but "in all good conſcience." 3. The Apoſtle ſets forth the goodneſs of his conſcience from the integrity of it towards God; "I have lived in all good conſcience before God:" Many a man's conſcience paſſeth for a good conſcience before men, and perhaps before himſelf, which yet is not good before God, the judge of conſcience. 4. From his continuance and conſtancy, "until this day:" "I have lived in all good conſcience before God until this day:" It is not ſufficient to begin a good life, and to have a good conſcience; but we muſt keep it too, and that all our days, even to our laſt day. Happy man! That can truly ſay at his dying day, "I have lived in all good conſcience until this day." (B.) Behold here the great ſecurity of a good man, and what inviſible ſupports innocency affords under greateſt danger: With how generous a confidence does virtue and honeſty guard his breaſt! As indeed nothing elſe can lay a firm baſis and foundation for ſatisfaction and tranquility, when any miſery or calamity does overtake us. Religion and a good conſcience beget peace, and a heaven in a man's boſom, beyond the power of the little accidents of this world to ruffle and diſcompoſe: Whence Seneca compares the mind of a wiſe and good man to the ſtate of the upper region, which is always ſerene and calm. (Cave) The conſcience, when 'tis well inform'd, is the rule of human actions; when it is in error, it is only a blind guide. Paul had follow'd this guide in the time of his ignorance, and was extremely ſorry for it; ſo far was he from imagining, that his erroneous conſcience could rectify his inordinate will, or excuſe his wicked actions. (Q.) See the notes on ch. xxiv. 16.

The High-prieſt Ananias] See the notes on Luke iii. 2.

Smite him on the mouth.] Here note, What is the reward and portion of a good conſcience from the world; to be ſmitten; either on the mouth or with the mouth, with the fiſt or with the tongue. There is nothing ſo enrages men of wicked conſciences, as the profeſſion and practice of a good conſcience doth: But better ten blows for a good conſcience, than one from it. (B.) Ananias his paſſion here cauſes St. Paul to receive a new mark of reſemblance with Jeſus Chriſt. (Q.) See the notes on John xviii. 22.

God ſhall ſmite thee.] Typtein ſe mellei; will ſmite thee. (H.) The original words ſhew, that this was not an imprecation, but a prediction or denunciation of his future puniſhment. (Beza, G. W. and B.) Denoting, That as there is always equity, ſo ſometimes a retaliation, in the execution of divine juſtice, or a recompencing like for like God ſometimes returns ſmiting for ſmiting, ſo that the ſinner is forced to cry out, (with Adoni-bezek,) "As I have done, ſo God hath requited me," Judg. i. 7. God puniſhes ſometimes in the ſame kind, ſometimes in the ſame manner, ſometimes in the ſame place; ſo that ſinners are forced to cry out, "Righteous art thou, O Lord, and juſt are thy judgments." (B.) And this very Ananias did, not long after, meet with exemplary puniſhment, tho' in what particular manner it is not certainly agreed: St. Chryſoſtome ſays, he was ſlain; Dr. Lightfoot ſays, he periſh'd in the ſiege of Jeruſalem; and Joſephus ſays, he was depoſed, and ſent priſoner to Rome. (W.)

Thou whited wall.] Meaning, an Hypocrite. (G. H. and Aſſ.) He elegantly compares him to a "whited wall:" Becauſe, as that had a fair outſide, but nothing but dirt, ſticks, or ſtones within; ſo had he an outward appearance of a righteous judge, ſitting as one that would paſs judgment according to law, and yet commanding him to be puniſhed for ſpeaking the truth, and ſo condemning the innocent, againſt the law of nature, as well as that of Moſes, which ſaith, "Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment" Lev. xix 15. (W.) See the notes on Matth. xxiii. 27.

I wiſt not.] The verſions manifeſtly make St. Paul lie, when here, in the preſence of the Jewiſh council, ſpeaking of "the High-prieſt Ananias, they make him ſay, "I wiſt not, brethren, that he was the High-prieſt." For it is almoſt impoſſible, but that St. Paul muſt have known the greateſt part of the members of the Sanhedrim; and eſpecially the High-prieſt, who made a particular figure in that aſſembly, and whoſe garments alone were enough to diſtinguiſh him from others. 'Tis true, for ſome years before, St. Paul had not been at Jeruſalem, and Ananias was exalted to that dignity in his abſence: And beſides, there was then ſuch a confuſion in the Jewiſh government, that ſometimes three different High-prieſts were choſen in one year. But, ſince he had before liv'd at Jeruſalem many years, and in a capacity himſelf, of becoming a member of the Sanhedrim, having been "brought up at the feet of Gamaliel," preſident of that council, and already an officer of it, ſince he had a commiſſion to perſecute the Chriſtians at Damaſcus; it is not to be preſumed that he had ſo loſt the idea of thoſe perſons who made up the Sanhedrim, that he could not diſtinguiſh them when he return'd to that city. It is likewiſe obſerv'd in the following verſe, that he "perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Phariſees:" But, how could he have diſtinguiſh'd thoſe perſons unleſs he had had a particular knowledge of them? And how could he have taken "the High-prieſt to witneſs," ch. xxii. 5 that he had perſecuted the Chriſtians unto death, if he had not known him? But, ſuppoſe he did not know Ananias to be the High-prieſt, or preſident of the council, he could not be ignorant, at leaſt, that he was one of the ſenators or princes of the people; ſo that he had ſtill equally violated the law, which ſtrictly prohibited any perſon to "ſpeak evil of the ruler of his people." Beſides, it can be no very advantageous opinion of the apoſtle, that he pronounc'd thoſe words againſt Ananias, "God ſhall (or will) ſmite thee" &c. without knowing him; and to think, that he was ſo tranſported with anger, that he did not know who he was, or what was the character of him, againſt whom he denounc'd this prediction Is it not much more natural to acknowledge, that he ſpake wiſely, and by the authority and direction of the Holy Ghoſt, than to imagine, that he retracted and excuſed his pretended raſhneſs by his want of knowledge? However, if this Ananias was the High-prieſt of that name, whom the Talmud affirms to have been kill'd with the ſon of Gamaliel, and R. Iſhmael, at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the Apoſtle's prediction wanted neither apology nor retractation. Some interpreters alledge, that the Apoſtle's declaration of his ignorance, in reſpect to the character of Ananias, was not a formal retractation, but an irony. But we cannot imagine, that the Apoſtle's gravity, and the circumſtance in which he was, could permit him to ridicule his judge, at the very time when he acknowledged that God had commanded to reſpect them. Theſe conſiderations have obliged ſeveral learned expoſitors to have recourſe to another ſignification of the term of the original, which ſeems much better to expreſs his deſigns. They obſerve, that this term does often ſignify to acknowledge: So that St. Paul is ſo far from excuſing what he ſaid, that he declares, he does not acknowledge Ananias for the High-prieſt; not only becauſe that office had ceaſed at the death of Jeſus Chriſt, who afterwards was to be the only High-prieſt, as he declares, Hebr. ix. but alſo becauſe, in effect, Ananias was not the High-prieſt, having only uſurp'd that office, which of right belonged to another, and made himſelf maſter of it by bribery: Beſides St. Paul might have learnt, from Gamaliel himſelf, that a judge, who had bought his office, was not a right judge; and that there was no reſpect due to him, but that he was to be look'd on as an aſs, as the Talmud obſerves. St. Paul therefore had reaſon to ſay, "I did not acknowledge that he was the High-prieſt." (Eſſay, and Howel)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Phariſees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Phariſee, the ſon of a Phariſee: Of the hope and reſurrection of the dead I am called in queſtion. And when he had ſo ſaid, there aroſe a diſſenſion between the Phariſees and the Sadducees: And the multitude was divided, for the Sadducees ſay that there is no reſurrection, neither angel nor ſpirit; but the Phariſees confeſs both. And there aroſe a great cry: And the ſcribes that were of the Phariſees part aroſe, and ſtrove, ſaying, We find no evil in this man: But if a ſpirit or an angel hath ſpoken to him, let us not fight againſt God. And when there aroſe a great diſſenſion, the chief captain, fearing leſt Paul ſhould have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the ſoldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the caſtle And the night following, the Lord ſtood by him, and ſaid, Be of good cheer, Paul: For as thou haſt teſtified of me in Jeruſalem, ſo muſt thou bear witneſs alſo at Rome.

When Paul perceived.] Obſerve here, The innocent policy which the Apoſtle uſes for his own preſervation: He, perceiving that the council before whom he ſtood were not all of a piece, but patch'd up of Phariſees and Sadducees, publickly profeſſes himſelf a Phariſee by education, and of that perſwaſion now in point of the reſurrection. Thus at once he caſt in a bone of contention, between the Sadducees which denied the reſurrection, and the Phariſees which owned it; and obliged the Phariſees (at leaſt as to that opinion) to take his part; and ſo by pious prudence he turned their oppoſition againſt him, upon one another, that by ſetting them at variance he might the better eſcape. Learn hence, That an innocent and prudent policy may warrantably be made uſe of by the members and miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, without any blemiſh to their holy profeſſion, in order to our preſervation from the hands of perſecutors; a ſerpentine ſubtilty may be made uſe of, together with a dove-like innocency. Thus did St. Paul here; "When he perceived that one part were Sadducees, and the other Phariſees, he cried out," &c. (B.) To take advantage of the ſentiments and diſpoſitions of an audience, without deceiving it, and to raiſe diſſenſion between the enemies of the truth, without violating it, is an innocent artifice; which the Apoſtle knew very well how to put in practice. (Q.)

The hope and reſurrection] That is, the hope of the reſurrection. (W. and Lukin) See the notes on ch. i. 14.

Sadducees ſay, there is no reſurrection.] See the notes on Matth. xxii. 23. Mark xii. 18. and Luke xx. 27.

Neither angel nor ſpirit.] That the Sadducees did not believe, 1. The reſurrection of the body, not only all the ancient Chriſtians do aſſert, but the ſcriptures plainly teſtify; as in the note foregoing. 2. They ſaid, That, after the giving of the law at leaſt, there was no angel; and that when they are ſaid to appear ſo often in the law of Moſes, they were framed for that purpoſe, and after ceaſed to have any being; for otherwiſe it is hard to conceive, how they could believe the law of Moſes, and yet deny that angels ever did exiſt. And, 3. When they are ſaid to deny any ſpirits, this is not to be ſo underſtood, as if they denied God to be a ſpirit, or that there was any ſpirit of man within him; but, as Joſephus teſtifies, they denied the permanency of the ſoul after death; and ſo they denied any ſpirits ſeparated from bodies which could appear, or reveal any thing to them: The Phariſees held the contrary, as is apparent from theſe words, ver. 9. "If an angel or ſpirit hath ſpoken to him." Of ſuch apparitions, believed by the Apoſtles, we have mention, Mat. xiv. 26. and Luke xxiv. 37. and the Jews believed, that Samuel thus appeared to Saul, and Elias frequently to them; the Sadducees denying all ſuch apparitions. (W.)

If a ſpirit or an angel.] Of the four ſeveral ways of revelations which were among the Jews, theſe are confeſſedly two, The holy ſpirit, and the daughter of voice; or a voice from heaven, brought by an angel, by which any thing was made known to them: The other two were Urim and Thummim, under the firſt temple, the twelve ſtones in the pectoral of the high-prieſt; the irradiation of which foretold many things to the Jews. This is by Joſephus call'd logion, The oracle; which, he ſaith, ceaſed to ſhine 200 years before he wrote: Of which ſee Suidas in the word Ephod, and the note on Rom. iii. 2. And the laſt was propheſy; which, under the ſecond temple, after the death of Haggai, Zachary and Malachi, was taken away. This was of two ſorts, either in time of ſleep, by way of dream, or when they were waking, by caſting them into a trance or extaſy; where, by way of viſion, they ſaw ſome body, ſaying this or that to them, or elſe ſeeing no ſhape, only heard a voice: Both which ſorts of propheſy we have mention'd together, Joel ii. 28. "dreaming of dreams, and ſeeing of viſions;" as that other of the Holy Ghoſt in the phraſe "pour out my ſpirit." Many examples of the viſion or trance we have here in this book, of Ananias, ch. ix. 10. and of Saul, ver. 12. of Cornelius, ch. x. 3. and of Peter, ver. 10. And of the dream alſo, called a viſion by night which was ſeen by Paul, ch. xvi. 9. and again, ch. xxvii. 23. where an angel appeared to him in a dream, and the Lord here, ver. 11. as to Joſeph, Mary's husband, Mat. i. 20. As for that of the Holy Ghoſt, which belongs to this place, it is thus defined by the Jews, that a man being awake, and in his full ſenſes, ſpeaks and acts like another man, but the ſpirit of God, or ſpiritus excelſus, excites him, and ſuggeſts unto him words which he ſhall ſay; as in that of Chriſt to the apoſtles, Mat. xiii. 11. "'Tis not ye that ſpeak, but the Holy Ghoſt;" which is the interpretation of the dabitur in illa hora, "it ſhall be given in that hour," which went before. Three of theſe four ways of revelation the Jews reſolved to be aboliſhed at this time; that of the Urim and Thummim, with the firſt temple; that of Propheſy, with Malachi; and that of the Holy Ghoſt, in the ſecond year of Darius; as it is in Joma ch. vii. And therefore ſaith St. John, ch. vii. 39. "As yet there was not the Holy Ghoſt;" only they did, according to the propheſy of Joel, expect that it ſhould return to them again "in thoſe days:" And ſo here we have mention of it, "If the ſpirit hath ſpoken to him." And ſo of the daughter of the voice alſo, in the word Angel, (as indeed it was, when he heard a voice from Heaven, delivered out of thunder, "Saul, Saul," &c.) Tho' 'tis poſſible that this laſt, of the Angel, may belong to that of the appearance of an Angel in a dream or viſion to him. (H.)

The Lord ſtood by him.] By an angel, ſaith Grotius; but without all ground: For an angel is never ſtiled ho kyrios, "The Lord," in the New Teſtament, but only "The angel of the Lord;" as Matth. i. 20. and elſewhere. (W.)

So muſt thou bear witneſs alſo at Rome.] Here is an inſtance of a divine appointment, without any neceſſity laid upon the will of Paul: For his "appeal unto Cæſar" was only made as an expedient, to preſerve him from the rage of the Jews, ch. xxv. 11, 24. and xxviii. 19. and ſo was only a matter of prudence, not of neceſſity. (Idem.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themſelves under a curſe, ſaying, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul. And they were more than forty which had made this conſpiracy. And they came to the chief prieſts and elders, and ſaid, We have bound our ſelves under a great curſe, that we will eat nothing until we have ſlain Paul. Now therefore ye with the council, ſignify to the chief captain, that he bring him down unto you to morrow, as though ye would enquire ſomething more perfectly concerning him: And we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him. And when Paul's ſiſter's ſon heard of their lying in wait, he went and entred into the caſtle, and told Paul. Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and ſaid, Bring this young man unto the chief captain; for he hath a certain thing to tell him. So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and ſaid, Paul the priſoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath ſomething to ſay unto thee. Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aſide privately, and asked him, What is that thou haſt to tell me? And he ſaid, The Jews have agreed to deſire thee, that thou wouldſt bring down Paul to morrow into the council; as though they would enquire ſomewhat of him more perfectly. But do not thou yield unto them; for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themſelves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: And now are they ready, looking for a promiſe from thee. So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man, that thou haſt ſhewed theſe things to me. And he called unto him two centurions, ſaying, Make ready two hundred ſoldiers to go to Ceſarea, and horſemen threeſcore and ten, and ſpearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night. And provide them beaſts, that they may ſet Paul on, and bring him ſafe unto Felix the governor. And he wrote a letter after this manner: Claudius Lyſias, unto the moſt excellent governor Felix, ſendeth greeting. This man was taken of the Jews, and ſhould have been killed of them: Then came

I with an army, and reſcued him, having underſtood that he was a Roman. And when I would have known the cauſe wherefore they accuſed him, I brought him forth into their council: Whom I perceived to be accuſed of queſtions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge, worthy of death or of bonds. And when it was told me, how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I ſent ſtraightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accuſers alſo, to ſay before thee what they had againſt him. Farewel. Then the ſoldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris. On the morrow they left the horſemen to go with him, and returned to the caſtle: Who, when they came to Ceſarea, and delivered the epiſtle to the governor, preſented Paul alſo before him. And when the governor had read the letter, he aſked of what province he was: And when he underſtood that he was of Cilicia, I will hear thee, ſaid he, when thine accuſers are alſo come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment-hall.

Bound themſelves under a curſe.] It was a thing too common among the Zealots of the Jews, to cut off, without any judicial proceſs, thoſe whom they look'd upon as tranſgreſſors of their laws, and enemies to the Jews. Joſephus informs us, that they committed infinite ſlaughters, thinking the vileſt things were good when done by them: And Philo ſpeaks of ſome among them, who ſwore to wound and kill others, and did ſo without delay. And that the chief prieſts and Sanhedrim approved of ſuch murthers, done out of ſuch pernicious deſigns, we learn from their confident addreſſes to them, ver. 14, 15. and their conſent to the fact, ver. 20. plainly proving, by their lying and murtherous diſpoſitions, that they were children of the devil, John viii. 44. See ch. xxv. 2, 3. (W.) Obſerve, 1. That the devil's deſigns never miſcarry for want of fit inſtruments; he has a party ever ready to oppoſe the goſpel in every place: And as they were unanimous, as well as numerous; they combined together in one curſed bond. Here was unity; but not a unity in the truth, but a conſpiracy againſt it: Here was agreement and friendſhip; but it was like that of Herod and Pilate againſt Chriſt, and not for him: And they were reſolute and outragious; "they bound themſelves under a curſe;" under a bloody vow, to purſue their purpoſe of murdering the Apoſtle. It has been the old policy of the enemies of the church, to oblige and bind themſelves by oaths and execrations, by leagues and aſſociations, to carry on their wicked and bloody deſigns againſt the church. 2. The quality of the perſons which were engag'd in this bloody purpoſe: They were the Sadducees, who denied the immortality of the ſoul, and a life after death. And they apply themſelves to the High-prieſt, and Sanhedrim, or great council; not doubting of his and their readineſs to join with them. O, what a low ebb was the Jewiſh religion now at! What an High-prieſt and prieſthood was there, that muſt head a conſpiracy of murdering Sadducees! How great was the degeneracy of the Jewiſh church, when their chief prieſts were thus ready to comply with, and contribute their beſt aſſiſtance to, ſuch a cruel crew of cut-throats, and bloody aſſaſſines: But they had almoſt filled up the meaſure of their ſins, and their final deſtruction was near approaching. Laſtly, what craft and cruelty, what fraud and force are here found combin'd together in the church's enemies. The council muſt court the captain, that he bring down his priſoner, "as tho' they would enquire ſomething more perfectly concerning him." Thus was the plot againſt the Apoſtle's life laid craftily as well as cruelly: Under a pretence of having the priſoner re-examined, they contrived to have him brought down from the caſtle; and in his way to the council, they combined together for his deſtruction. Lord, abate the power of the church's enemies, ſince their malice cannot be abated! (B.)

Which had made this conſpiracy.] Synomoſia; a confederacy, or agreement by oath. (H.) Out of zeal for their religion! (W.) A ſtrange religion this, which they deſign to ſupport by murder and impiety! (Q.) Among the ſeveral conditions requir'd in a vow, or oath, As the party himſelf muſt be at his own liberty, free from the authority of any ſuperior; ſo the matter of it muſt be, not only poſſible to be perform'd by him, and worthy of God's acceptance, but alſo lawful in it ſelf. For an unlawful thing is not to be vow'd. Such was that of Micah's mother, of a ſum of money "to make a graven image, and a molten image," Judg. xvii. 3. Abſalom's vow at Hebron, to colour his treaſon againſt his father, 2 Sam. xv. 7. And this of the Jews to "kill Paul." We muſt not vow that which is diſpleaſing to God; for if God will not have it paid, he would not have it vow'd: Therefore St. Iſidore adviſes ſuch votaries, In the caſe of evil promiſes to break their word, in wicked vows to change their purpoſe: St. Jerom ſays, He is a fool who makes a vow, without due diſcretion and judgment, and he is wicked if he performs it; and adviſes thoſe who have raſhly made a vow, not to perform it; that is, if the thing be ſinful: And St. Auguſtine ſays, It is a ſinful promiſe, which is not to be perform'd without wickedneſs. (Andr.) See alſo the excellent writings of Sanderſon and Wake, &c. on the ſame ſubject.

The chief prieſts and elders.] The uſurpation of the prieſthood, and the abuſe of ſacred things, led the Jews into all ſorts of wickedneſs. It is a terrible judgment on any church, when its paſtors ſerve only to confirm their ſheep in impiety, and to palliate, and, as it were, authorize their crimes; and when, on the other ſide, the ſheep only render their paſtors partakers and accomplices in their ſins. (Q.)

Signify to the chief captain.] That is, ſignify to him the cauſe or end of your requeſt: For they had no power to command him. (Aſſ.)

Paul called one of the centurions.] That is, as the Syriac interpreteth it, ſhaddar, ſending he called. He ſent, to entreat that he might ſpeak with him; and that he would do ſo much as "bring the young man unto the chief captain:" And ſo he ſaith, ver. 18. He "prayed me to bring," &c. (Idem.) Hence it appears, that even after a promiſe of our ſafety, (as in ver. 11.) we ought not to neglect any honeſt means of our preſervation, tho' it be to be accompliſh'd by our addreſſes to men alien from the faith. (W.)

Paul, the priſoner.] Ho deſmios; That is, Paul who is bound; for they uſed to put priſoners in bonds. (Aſſ.)

Took him by the hand.] In both theſe commanders we have an example of courteſy: In the one readily bringing the young man to be heard; in the other as readily giving him audience and diſpatch; in both, of God's good providence inclining their hearts to the preſervation of the Apoſtle. (Idem) Such a ſoveraignty and dominion has God over the hearts of men, that he can inſtantly incline them as he pleaſeth, and make very enemies become benefactors at his pleaſure. (B.) See the notes on ver. 35.

Do not thou yield unto them.] Me peiſthes autois; be not perſwaded by them: That is, I beſeech thee, let them not, by any pretences or perſwaſions, prevail with thee. (Aſſ.)

See thou tell no man.] Obſerve here, 1. How wonderfully God over-ruled the heart of the chief captain, in that he took care both of St. Paul, and the young man alſo. He bids "the young man depart;" for, had it been known that he had diſcovered the conſpiracy, they had conſpired againſt his life: And, had not the chief captain conveyed away the Apoſtle, his enemies, who had been diſappointed in this, would have made further attempts againſt his life. Thus wonderfully doth the good providence of God work for his ſervants preſervation. 2. What a ſtrong guard does God raiſe, and ſet round the Apoſtle, for his defence and ſafety; even a guard of Heathen ſoldiers, to ſecure him from the Jewiſh rage; "Two hundred ſoldiers, three ſcore and ten horſemen, and ſpearmen two hundred." What a royal life-guard was here, raiſed for the Apoſtle's ſafe conduct to Ceſarea! None of theſe ſoldiers intended him any good; but God made uſe of them as effectually, as if they had had the greateſt good-will for him. God can make bad perſons ſhew kindneſs to his good ſervants, and do his will by them, who know nothing of his mind and will. When God has work to do, he will find inſtruments to do it by: And tho' we ſee them not, yet are they never the farther off. (Idem, and B.)

Spearmen.] Dexiolabous; Thoſe who threw darts or javelins. (Eraſm. and Trem. according to the Syriac.) Archers. (Fleury) What dexialaboi ſignifies, may be beſt learnt from Phavorinus, who interprets it paraphylaces, warders or guards; and ſo H. Stephanus, Satellites, Stipatores, to the ſame ſenſe: So called, ſaith Meurſius, becauſe they apprehended, or laid hands on, malefactors, (which yet would rather be the import of dexiaboloi, from ballein dexias, laying hands; and ſo indeed the king's MS. reads it here,) and putting them in cuſtody, kept them, and brought them out to execution; adding, that theſe are the ſame in the camp that the lictors or ſerjeants are in the city. From all which it appears to be moſt fitly rendred a guard, to which in the military way priſoners are committed. (H.)

The moſt excellent.] See the notes on ch. xxvi. 25.

Should have been killed.] Mellonta anaireiſthai; when he was at the point of danger to be kill'd.

With an army.] Strateuma; a party, or band of ſoldiers. See the notes on Luke xxiii. 11.

Would have known the cauſe.] Aitia; the crime, or accuſation; as Matth. xxvii. 37. and Mark xv. 26. (D. Heinſ.) Before a man was convicted, all that they objected againſt him was but aitia, which Demoſthenes termed Pſilos logos, a bare report; but after proof, it was called elenchos; and after judgment paſt, adicema. (Leigh.)

Nothing laid to his charge.] That is, nothing puniſhable by the Roman laws: For as yet they had ſet forth no decrees againſt the Chriſtians. (H.) See the notes on ch. xxvi. 31.

I will hear thee.] The Roman governor, Felix, tho' an Heathen, yet ſhew'd the Apoſtle far more favour than his own countrymen the Jews. For, obſerve, 1 His affability, in receiving him courteouſly, and promiſing him a fair hearing. 2. His juſtice; who would not judge him, till he had his accuſers face to face; "I will hear thee, when thine accuſers are alſo come:" For if it be enough to accuſe, who can be innocent? And if it be ſufficient to deny, who will be found guilty? Magiſtrates muſt know a cauſe, before they give ſentence or judgment about it; otherwiſe, tho' they pronounce a right ſentence, it is not in judgment, but by accident. Magiſtrates muſt be ſtars, as well as miniſters; they muſt do nothing blindfold, or blindly. 3. His great favour towards the Apoſtle, in committing him a priſoner, not to the common goal, but to Herod's palace: A fair priſon (if a place of confinement may be ſo call'd:) The Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, tho' of his own country, and of his own religion, yet were not ſo kind to him, as Felix, the Heathen governor, was. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on ch. xxv. 16.

CHAP. XXIV.

Paul, before Felix, is proſecuted by Tertullus, the advocate for the Jews. He anſwereth for himſelf. His preaching makes Felix tremble. But nevertheleſs, going out of his office, he leaves Paul in bonds.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AND after five days Ananias the High-prieſt deſcended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor againſt Paul. And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuſe him, ſaying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietneſs, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence, We accept it always, and in all places, moſt noble Felix, with all thankfulneſs. Notwithſtanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee, that thou wouldſt hear us of thy clemency a few words. For we have found this man a peſtilent fellow, and a mover of ſedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes: Who alſo hath gone about to profane the temple: Whom we took, and would have judged according to our law. But the chief captain Lyſias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands, commanding his accuſers to come unto thee: By examining of whom thy ſelf mayſt take knowledge of all theſe things, whereof we accuſe him. And the Jews alſo aſſented, ſaying, that theſe things were ſo.

With a certain orator.] Rhetor; an advocate or lawyer.

By thee we enjoy great quietneſs.] In this, and in the following verſes, the orator is guilty of ſordid flattery and falſhood: For, 1. Tho' it be true, that Felix did ſome kindneſs to the Jewiſh nation, in delivering them from the thieves and the magicians which infeſted them, as Joſephus doth acknowledge; yet that he otherwiſe was guilty of great injuſtice towards the Jews, and was on that account accuſed before Nero, by the chief of the Jews dwelling at Ceſarea, and had been puniſhed for his wickedneſs, had not his brother Pallas, who was then high in favour with Nero, ſuccour'd him, the ſame Joſephus teſtifies. 2. That St. Paul mov'd the Jews to ſedition againſt the government, or that he went about to prophane the temple, was utterly falſe: And ſo was it alſo, that they took him to judge him according to their law; for they took him by violence, and drew him out of the temple, and went about to kill him without any judicial proceſs, ch. xxi. 30, 31. (W.) Thus the mercenary Tertullus made baſe flattery his rhetorick, and bold lying his logick; beginning with the one, and concluding with the other. (Carpenter)

By thy providence.] Pronoia, which we tranſlate providence, is by the philoſophers divided into memory, knowledge, and care; memory of the paſt, knowledge of the preſent, and care of the future. (Leigh)

Moſt noble Felix.] See the notes on ch. xxvi. 25.

A peſtilent fellow.] Loimon; a plague, or peſtilence: As the Latins put ſcelus, in the abſtract, pro ſcelerato; wickedneſs, for a wicked fellow. (Aſſ.) Here note, 1. What an heavy load of reproaches, and falſe accuſations, our innocent Apoſtle labour'd under; he is accounted, and called, a walking peſtilence! Thus the holy and faithful ſervants of God are eſteemed, by the world, the plague and bane of the place and nation where they live: Altho' it is really for their ſakes, that God ſtaves off plagues and judgments from falling upon the world; "We have found this man a peſtilent fellow." It is not the greateſt holineſs towards God, nor righteouſneſs towards men, that can ſufficiently ſhield and defend a Saint from cenſure and ſlander, from calumny and falſe accuſation. 2. Beſides the general charge, that the Apoſtle was the very peſt and plague of mankind, we have a three-fold accuſation brought againſt him, That he was a mover of ſedition, a profaner of the temple, and a ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes. Lord, how ſhould thy faithful miniſters and ambaſſadors prepare themſelves for, and comfort themſelves under, the moſt helliſh reproaches, when we find the Apoſtle, (whom St. Chryſoſtome honours with this character, that the earth never bare a better man, ſince it bare our Redeemer,) thus miſcalled and accounted a peſt, a plague, the filth of the world, and off-ſcouring of all things! O why ſhould ſuch worthleſs worms as we, murmur, when we meet with much leſs reproaches! Lord, help us, in imitation of thy example, for the joy that is ſet before us, to deſpiſe the ſhame, as well as to endure the croſs. The beſt men that ever the world had, have fallen under the laſhes of envenomed tongues. What foul aſperſions hath malice caſt upon innocency it ſelf! Our bleſſed Saviour, in the cleareſt act of innocency, his caſting out of devils, ſuffered the moſt horrible imputation, even of "caſting out devils through Beelzebub the prince of devils," Matth. ix. 34. Now the ſervant muſt not be above his maſter: If Chriſt thus ſuffered, needs muſt Chriſtianity, needs muſt Chriſtians, needs muſt miniſters and ambaſſadors. (B.) See the notes on ver. 11, &c.

The ſect of the Nazarenes.] So at firſt they called the Chriſtians, by way of contempt, from the city Nazareth in Galilee, where Chriſt (as they ſuppos'd) was born; as Julian, for the ſame reaſon, contemptuouſly call'd Chriſt himſelf a Galilean. (Beza) See the notes on Matth. ii. 23. But afterwards certain Hereticks ſprang up; and as the Samaritans join'd the Jewiſh ceremonies with Heathen rites, ſo did theſe join together Chriſt and Moſes, the law and the goſpel, baptiſm and circumciſion; of the beginning of which we read, ch. xv. 2. (Godw.)

To profane the temple.] See the notes on ver. 18.

According to eur law.] See the notes on ver. 2.

With great violence] Here they falſely call by the name of violence, the timely ſuccour which Lyſias ſent to put a ſtop to their violence. (G.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Then Paul, after that the governor had beckned unto him to ſpeak, anſwered, Foraſmuch as I know that thou haſt been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully anſwer for my ſelf: Becauſe that thou mayſt underſtand, that there are yet but twelve days ſince I went up to Jeruſalem for to worſhip. And they neither found me in the temple diſputing with any man, neither raiſing up the people, neither in the ſynagogues, nor in the city: Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuſe me. But this I confeſs unto thee, that after the way which they call hereſy, ſo worſhip I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets: And have hope towards God, which they themſelves alſo allow, that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead, both of the juſt and unjuſt. And herein do I exerciſe my ſelf, to have always a conſcience void of offence toward God, and toward men. Now after many years, I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings. Whereupon certain Jews from Aſia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude nor with tumult. Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought againſt me. Or elſe let theſe ſame here ſay, if they have found any evil-doing in me, while I ſtood before the council, except it be for this one voice, that I cried, ſtanding among them, Touching the reſurrection of the dead I am called in queſtion by you this day.

I do the more chearfully anſwer.] Our Apoſtle, being accuſed of three notorious crimes, namely, ſedition, hereſy, and profanation of the temple, anſwers diſtinctly to every one of them. Where obſerve, 1. How undaunted innocency is, in a good perſon, and in a good cauſe: St. Paul was ſo far from being daunted, by the greatneſs neſs of his enemies, or by the vehemency of their accuſation, that he tells the governor, he did with all chearfulneſs undertake his defence. 2. How the Apoſtle anſwers diſtinctly to the particulars of his accuſation. And firſt, As to the crime of ſedition, charg'd upon his perſon: Secondly, As to the crime of hereſy, charg'd upon his religion. As to the former, the crime of ſedition, this is a very infamous charge: What ſchiſm is in matters eccleſiaſtical, that is ſedition in matters temporal and civil: As the one violates the peace of the church, ſo doth the other the peace of the commonwealth. Sedition is committed three ways; by the head, by the tongue, and by the hand: A ſeditious head plots and contrives miſchief; a ſeditious tongue vents it, and a ſeditious hand executes it. None of theſe ways was the Apoſtle guilty of ſedition: He never employed his head to contrive, nor his tongue to utter, nor his hand to practiſe any thing that tended that way; yet he is charged with it, "We have found this fellow a mover of ſedition." Learn thence, It is no new ſtratagem to repreſent the faithful ſervants of God, as enemies to ſtates and kingdoms, as diſturbers of the peace, as troublers of Iſrael, as trumpets of rebellion, as movers of ſedition; on purpoſe to bring them into hatred with Princes, that they may fall under the ſword of the Magiſtrate as malefactors, and be looked upon as perſons unworthy to live. But how does St. Paul free himſelf from the charge and imputation of ſedition? Thus, 1. By demonſtrating the improbability of it; how unlikely it was, that he who came up to the temple to worſhip God, and to bring alms to the poor, and was in Jeruſalem but a very few days, and did not ſo much as diſpute either in the temple, or in the ſynagogues, ſhould yet ſtir up the people to ſedition. 2. He puts his adverſaries upon proof of this article, ver. 13 "Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuſe me." From the Apoſtle's practice in clearing his own innocency, we learn, that is a piece of juſtice, which every man owes to himſelf, to vindicate and clear his reputation from all guilt falſely imputed to him, and eſpecially from ſedition. (B.)

Yet but twelve days.] Seven of which were ſpent in the ceremonies of purifying himſelf, according to the Jewiſh law, ch. xxi. 26, 27. and the other five he had been kept a priſoner.

This I confeſs unto thee.] Here the Apoſtle anſwers the ſecond part of the charge brought againſt him: Namely, the charge of hereſy, and being the ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes. Where note, That tho' he would not, out of his great modeſty, take upon himſelf to be one of the heads or chiefs among them, a ringleader, as they ſtiled him; yet as to the owning of that way, notwithſtanding all the imputations they had caſt upon it, he doth it with the greateſt freedom and courage in the preſence of his judge and accuſers; "This I confeſs, that after the way which they call hereſy, ſo worſhip I," &c. Here obſerve, 1. The falſe imputation which Chriſtianity ſuffer'd under, in its firſt appearance, "The way which they call hereſy." It is no new thing to nickname the worſhippers of the true God, to call them Hereticks, and their way of worſhip hereſy. 2. The way taken by St. Paul to remove this falſe imputation; namely, by an appeal to ſcripture and antiquity; "So worſhip I the God of my fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and the prophets." Where note, How he appeals to ſcripture, as the ground and rule of his faith, "the law and the prophets;" and then he appeals to the beſt and pureſt antiquity for the object; "ſo worſhip I the God of my fathers." 3. The freedom and courage of the Apoſtle in owning his religion, notwithſtanding theſe falſe imputations, even in the preſence of his greateſt enemies, and when they were in hopes to deſtroy him for it; "This I confeſs unto thee." (B.) He abhorr'd that mean and baſe-ſpirited principle, which makes it lawful for men to deny their religion when it brings them into danger: He ſtudied no ſecret arts of compliance with his adverſaries to ſecure himſelf: He did not decline appearing, to the hazard of his life, in ſo juſt a cauſe: He valued his religion beyond his own ſafety; and regarded not all the calumnies and reproaches of his enemies, ſo long as he made this his conſtant "exerciſe, to keep a conſcience void of offence toward God and toward men." And this, he ſaith, afforded him more inward comfort and ſatisfaction, than all the crafts and policy in the world could give him, 2 Cor. i 12. There is nothing inſpires men with ſo much courage, as integrity and uprightneſs of mind doth: And ſuch perſons, who have the comfort of that, have not only better hopes as to another world, but often eſcape better as to this than others do; for even their enemies cannot but eſteem them: Whereas the fawning, ſneaking and flattering hypocrite, that will do, or be, any thing for his own advantage, is deſpiſed by thoſe he courts, hated by good men, and at laſt tormented by his own conſcience, for being falſe to God and religion. (Stillingf.) The inward frame of the heart is diſcovered by outward devotion: And he who does not confeſs his religion when he is put to it, either has none at all, or does not much care for it. God ſays not, I have reſerv'd ſeven thouſand who have not believ'd in Baal, but whoſe "knees have not bowed unto Baal," 1 Kings xix. 18. which ſhews, that he expects a publick owning of him, as well as a ſecret believing in him: The devil himſelf did not tempt Chriſt to believe in him, but to "fall down and worſhip him," Matth. iv. 9. And the three children choſe to be burned, rather than give adoration to Nebuchadnezzar's golden image, Dan. iii. 18. I know, Naaman's example, ("when I bow down my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon," 2 Kings v. 18.) is much objected againſt what I have ſaid. But, for anſwer to this, conſider, 1. That Naaman was then but a novice in religion, and had not yet learn'd to deny himſelf for God. 2. Naaman ſpeaks not of any religious worſhip to be perform'd to the idol Rimmon; but of a civil office to be done to his prince. 3. Becauſe Naaman knew, that this action could not but be ſcandalous to others, and polluted with the circumſtance of time and place, he confeſs'd it was a ſin, and deſired God's mercy. 4. We do not find that Naaman ever did it, but only feeling, or fearing his own infirmity, he deſires the prophet's prayers, either that he might not fall, or if he did that God would forgive him; to which the prophet aſſents only in ſuch a form of ſpeech, as is an uſual valediction; "Go in peace," or God's peace be with you. (Sheridan) But 5. If we tranſlate the words of Naaman with reſpect to the time paſt, inſtead of the future, as ſeveral learned men acknowledge the original words will well bear, and read them (according to Luther's German Bible, printed at Weimars, with notes,) thus, In this thing the Lord pardon thy ſervant, that when my maſter went into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and he leaned on my hand, I bowed my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon; the Lord pardon thy ſervant in this thing, viz. that I bowed my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon; the difficulty will be remov'd, the objection anſwer'd, and all reconciled to a conſiſtency with the attributes of God, and with that purity and ſimplicity which is requir'd in God's ſervice: For thus the penitent only begs God's pardon for his former ſin, and not a diſpenſation for repeating it; the former of which the prophet might well give him an aſſurance of, but not of the latter: Neither indeed can any other conſtruction be ſo conſiſtent with the convert's own declaration, in the foregoing verſe; that from thenceforth he would never worſhip any other God but the Lord God of Iſrael. (Eſſay)

The way which they call hereſy.] Obſerve here, 1. That it is no new thing, for religion, and the very beſt of its profeſſors, to be traduced: For Chriſt himſelf was ſcoffed at as a "carpenter's ſon," Matth. xiii. 55. Chriſtianity call'd hereſy, and Chriſtians Galileans! This proceeds from the innate malice and ignorance that every man has in him ſince the fall; which makes the worſt interpretation of the beſt things; So that if David dance zealouſly before the ark, he ſhall not want a Michael to laugh at him, 2 Sam. vi. 14, &c. If Hezekiah deſtroy idolatry, ſome Rabſhakeh will not ſtick to ſay, "Is not this the God whoſe altars Hezekiah hath taken away?" 2 Kings xviii. 22. If Mary pour a little oil on the feet of our Saviour, ſome Judas will be ready to ſay, "What needs this waſte?" Matt. xxvi. 8. Conſtantine, for his bounty to the church, ſhall be call'd Pupillus, one that needs a guardian: And Theodoſius, for his piety, call'd Imbellis, a coward! But, 2. If we be morally certain, that what we profeſs is true, and according to God's word, it matters not, that the Papiſts call us Hereticks, and Separatiſts call us Papiſts! Truth will juſtify it ſelf. St. Paul, we ſee here, was not offended, that they call his religion Hereſy. (Sherid.) See the notes on ch. xxii. 8.

All things which are written.] God, who requires man to worſhip him, has preſcribed a rule for his direction: And, leſt this rule might be forgotten or corrupted in tract of time, by a bare oral tradition of it from age to age, he committed it to writing; for tho' the word ſpoken be more efficacious, yet the word written is more durable. Therefore it was, that Moſes was commanded to write the moral law in two tables; and that the ſpirit in the Revelations ſays, "Write," Rev. xiv. 13. and here St. Paul makes the rule of his faith "all that is written in the law and the prophets." (Idem) He puts his cauſe upon the iſſue of theſe very writings which the Jews held moſt ſacred, and by which they thought themſelves obliged: And would the preſent age do the like, would they ſubmit their tenets to the impartial teſt of the holy ſcriptures, diviſions would then ceaſe, peace and unity flouriſh, and we ſhould ſoon be all of one mind, united in one body, and become one flock under one ſheperd Jeſus Chriſt. See the notes on John xxi. 25.

Which they themſelves alſo allow.] That is, the Phariſees, who believed a reſurrection. And this he prudently interpoſeth, that by this means he might gain their favourable opinion, and again divide them and the Sadducees who denied it. See the notes on ch. xxiii. 6.

Both of the juſt, and of the unjuſt.] This ſeems neceſſarily to be added; becauſe the doctrine of the Phariſees, according to Joſephus, reſtrained the reſurrection to the juſt, condemning the unjuſt to perpetual torments without any reſurrection. (W.) See the notes on John v. 28, 29.

And herein.] The criticks ſay, that here, and 2 Cor. v. 2. en touto ſignifies in the mean time; but I think, without any neceſſity: For, in both places, it may either ſignify epi touto, for this cauſe; or elſe it may have relation to the words foregoing. Thus here it moſt probably hath relation to the hope, "that there ſhall be a reſurrection," &c. "And herein (ſays he, that is in this hope,) do I exerciſe my ſelf" &c. (Tillotſ. and W.) The hope of the reſurrection of the dead is a moſt powerful argument, to perſwade men to believe, embrace, and practiſe the Chriſtian religion. For when a man ſeriouſly conſiders, that he is not only to give an account here of what he has done, and that this life does not ſet a period to his ſufferings or rejoicings, but that he ſhall riſe again, and undergo a new and impartial tryal, and be for ever determin'd to live in eternal bliſs or miſery, this conſideration, as it will make every rational (not to mention, pious) man to live holily; ſo it will be a great allay to his temporal ſufferings to conſider, that he ſhall have joy in the morning of the reſurrection, for the heavineſs he endured in the night of his life: And this was the ground of St. Paul's free and publick confeſſion of his faith here. (Sherid.)

I exerciſe my ſelf.] The word aſco here uſed, does properly ſignify to prepare ones ſelf for an engagement, by abſtinence, and the uſe of all proper means to that end. (Leigh) It is a word of a very intenſe ſignification; and denotes, that St. Paul applied himſelf to this buſineſs with all his care and might, and that he made it his earneſt ſtudy and endeavour: And ſo muſt we. We muſt take great care to underſtand our duty, and to be rightly inform'd concerning good and evil, that we may not miſtake the nature of things, and call good evil, and evil good: We muſt apply our minds in good earneſt to be thoroughly inſtructed in all parts of our duty, that ſo we may not be at a loſs what to do, when we are called to the practice of it: And when we know our duty, we muſt be true and honeſt to ourſelves, and very careful and conſcientious in the diſcharge and performance of it. (Tillotſ.) For, as on one ſide, it is not fancying or opining, often hearing, no, nor talking, of conſcience, but exerciſe and doing; for a Chriſtian's life is aſceſis, a conſtant exerciſe, and that is at once his duty and profeſſion here: So, on the other ſide, it is not perfect poſſeſſion of this ſtate; for there is no ſuch thing as perfection in this life, but labouring towards it. (Alleſt.)

A conſcience void of offence.] Obſerve here, 1. What is the principle and guide of a good man's actions, and that is conſcience: The word and law of God is the rule of our actions, but conſcience is the immediate guide and director of them. 2. The extent of a good man's pious practice, "to keep a conſcience void of offence toward God and man:" To exerciſe a faithful care in performing the duties of both tables, is both an argument of our ſincerity, and an ornament to our profeſſion. 3. The apoſtle's conſtancy and perſeverance in this courſe, "to have always a conſcience void of offence." We muſt not make conſcience of our duty by fits and ſtarts; but in the whole courſe and tenour of our lives and actions. Religion ſhould be a conſtant frame and temper of mind. (B.) And verily, he who hath not a good conſcience always, never hath one. For that is not a thing to be taken up and laid down at pleaſure, loſt to day and regained to morrow, now bad and then good again. No! Conſcience, when once offended, is not ſo eaſily appeaſed: At leaſt, it cannot be ſaid to be "void of offence," ſo long as any one thing troubles it; inſomuch, that tho' a man ſhould keep his conſcience clear all his life long, except one day, yet, if he doth any thing upon that day which is offenſive, he may feel it all his life after, and he will find it, tho' not impoſſible, yet very difficult, to bring his conſcience into order again. (Bever.) See Tillotſon, Beveridge, and Alleſtree's ſermons on this text, and what is alſo noted on ch. xxiii. 1.

Found any evil-doing.] Hence it appears, that the Apoſtle did not think he had done any evil, in ſaying to Ananias, "God ſhall ſmite thee," &c. (W.) See the notes on ch. xxiii. 3.

Touching the reſurrection.] Which none but the Sadducees will lay to my charge as evil: And thoſe are engaged to it, in maintenance of their own tenets, wherein the Phariſees are equally concern'd with me. (H.) See the notes on ch. xxiii. 6.

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. And when Felix heard theſe things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and ſaid, When Lyſias the chief captain ſhall come down, I will know the uttermoſt of your matter. And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he ſhould forbid none of his acquaintance to miniſter, or come unto him. And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Druſilla, which was a Jeweſs, he ſent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Chriſt. And as he reaſoned of righteouſneſs, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and anſwered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient ſeaſon, I will call for thee. He hoped alſo that money ſhould have been given him of Paul, that he might looſe him: Wherefore he ſent for him the oftner, and communed with him. But after two years Porcius Feſtus came into Felix room: And Felix, willing to ſhew the Jews a pleaſure, left Paul bound.

Having more perfect knowledge.] When Felix diſcern'd how things ſtood, he deferr'd paſſing any ſentence, ſaying, Concerning Chriſtian religion, whether it be derogatory to the law of the Jews, I will determine when I have adviſed with learned men who know your pretenſions; and concerning the tumult, ſaid to be raiſed by Paul, when Lyſias comes, whoſe teſtimony will decide it. (H. and B.) But this conſtruction, agreeable to that of Beza, Grotius, Du-pin, and others, ſeems to Dr. Whitby evidently not to be admitted: Tho' he gives no other reaſon for his diſſent to it, but only, that Felix reſided at Ceſarea, where Cornelius the centurion and his friends were converted, where Philip the evangeliſt dwelt, and where there were many diſciples: As if it muſt evidently follow from thence, that Felix, the Roman governor and a Heathen, (who can hardly be ſuppos'd to have had any correſpondence with any of thoſe,) muſt have already "had a more perfect knowledge of the way" of Chriſtianity, than what he receiv'd of it by this hearing! To me it ſeems more evident, that he had yet made but little proficiency in that knowledge, ſince he was ſo much ſhock'd at the Apoſtle's preaching to him ſome of the firſt principles of the faith in Chriſt: And the rather ſtill, becauſe it immediately follows, that "he deferred them;" Anebaleto, Ampliavit: Which word was a common term of art among the Romans; when the Judge, not being convinc'd either to abſolve or condemn the party, but requiring longer time to examine into the matter, the word amplius (or amplius cognoſcendum, that is, we muſt know more of this matter,) was ſolemnly pronounced; which form was therefore call'd Ampliatio.

His wife Druſilla.] She was daughter to Herod Agrippa, and ſiſter to the Agrippa then living; who had married her to Azis, king of Emeſa, who for her ſake conſented to be circumciſed: But Felix, falling in love with her for her extraordinary beauty, found means, by the aſſiſtance of one Simon the magician, a Jew of Cyprus, to ſeduce her from Azis, and to keep her as his own wife. (Beza, G. H. Cave and Fleury) But whereas Tacitus makes her the neice (or rather grand-daughter) of Anthony and Cleopatra, Dr. Cave ſuppoſes this to be a miſtake for his former wife, of the ſame name, who was the daughter of Juba, king of Mauritania. See the notes on ch. xii. 1.

As he reaſoned.] Probably, 1. Propoſing to a very Heathen's conſideration, the equity and reaſonableneſs, that there ſhould be a "judgment to come," to recompence the unjuſt and incontinent perſon: For the words, which we tranſlate "righteouſneſs and temperance," do here properly ſignify juſtice and chaſtity. And 2. Charging home to each ſinner's heart, the extreme unreaſonableneſs, that, for ſuch poor advantages as either of thoſe ſins bring in to any man, he ſhould think fit to venture that diſmal payment in another world. (H.) Here the wiſdom of the preacher appears by the ſuitableneſs of the ſubject: And happy were it, if all great offenders had ſuch wiſe admoniſhers near them; but too often they meet with flattering paraſites, inſtead of faithful preachers. (B.)

Felix trembled.] Behold here the priſoner at his liberty, and his judge in bonds! Felix trembled at the guilt of ſin, and the apprehenſion of the wrath of God due unto it: But his trembling did not ariſe from the holy dread and reverence of the majeſty of God, ſpeaking to him in and by his word. The word of God can make the proudeſt and ſtouteſt ſinner in the world to quake and tremble. (Idem) Therefore, 'tis no wonder, that "Felix trembled:" And that Druſilla did not ſo too, is an argument of her Jewiſh confidence, that ſhe might eſcape in the "judgment to come," by being a daughter of Abraham. (W.) See Dr. Hammond's ſermon on this text.

When I have a convenient ſeaſon.] But we never read of any ſuch opportunity taken afterwards by him. So dangerous is it to ſtop our ears at the preſent call and command of God! If to day we will not, to morrow, God may ſay, we ſhall not, hear his voice! (B.)

That money ſhould have been given him.] He expected this the rather probably, becauſe he had heard, that St. Paul had lately brought up great ſums of money to Jeruſalem, to be beſtowed in alms. (Cave and Fleu.)

After two years.] Baronius is here miſtaken, who conceives that theſe two years are the two firſt years of Nero's reign; whereas indeed he continued procurator, as Biſhop Pearſon ſaith, till the ſixth year of Nero. The two years plainly relate to St. Paul's being taken by the Jews in the temple, and put into the caſtle by the chief captain Lyſias; which was, ſaith the ſame Biſhop, in the fourth year of Nero. (W.) And the ſame remark had been made long before, by Dr. Hammond; who well obſerves, that Felix having been placed in this prefecture by Claudius, there is no reaſon ſon to think St. Luke ſhould define the time of his pretorſhip from Nero's reign who remov'd him, rather than from that of Claudius who put him in.

Willing to ſhew the Jews a pleaſure.] Tho' he had nothing to charge Paul with, yet to gratify the Jews he "left Paul bound;" minding the pleaſing of men, more than the diſpleaſing of God. An Hypocrite can become all things to all men, that he may gain by all: But behold the hand of God upon Felix! He that had ſo unjuſtly kept Paul bound for two years, and cruelly left him bound at laſt, to pleaſe and gratify the Jews, is ſent a priſoner in bonds to Rome, to anſwer before Nero for his miſdemeanors in the managing of his government. A juſt reward for him who regarded the pleaſing of men more than the diſpleaſure of God. (B.) See the notes on ch. xii. 3.

CHAP. XXV.

Paul accuſed before Feſtus, anſwereth for himſelf, and appealeth to Cæſar. Feſtus relateth his caſe to king Agrippa; who is curious to hear Paul.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. NOW when Feſtus was come into the province, after three days he aſcended from Ceſarea to Jeruſalem. Then the High-prieſt, and the chief of the Jews, informed him againſt Paul, and beſought him, And deſired favour againſt him, that he would ſend for him to Jeruſalem; laying wait in the way to kill him. But Feſtus anſwered, that Paul ſhould be kept at Ceſarea, and that he himſelf would depart ſhortly thither: Let them therefore, ſaid he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuſe this man, if there be any wickedneſs in him. And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Ceſarea; and the next day ſitting in the judgment-ſeat, commanded Paul to be brought. And when he was come, the Jews, which came down from Jeruſalem, ſtood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints againſt Paul, which they could not prove; While he anſwered for himſelf, Neither againſt the law of the Jews, neither againſt the temple, nor yet againſt Ceſar, have I offended any thing at all. But Feſtus, willing to do the Jews a pleaſure, anſwered Paul, and ſaid, Wilt thou go up to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe things before me? Then ſaid Paul, I ſtand at Ceſar's judgment-ſeat, where I ought to be judged: To the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knoweſt. For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuſe not to die: But if there be none of theſe things whereof theſe accuſe me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Ceſar. Then Feſtus, when he had conferred with the council, anſwered, Haſt thou appealed unto Ceſar? Unto Ceſar ſhalt thou go.

Come into the province.] Epibas te eparckia; entred upon the government. (H.)

Aſcended from Ceſarea.] See the notes on ch. xviii. 22.

Laying wait in the way.] We need not wonder, that the High-Prieſt, and chief of the Jews, ſhould be thus bloody-minded againſt Paul, when about this time they were arming one againſt the other. For at the latter end of the procuratorſhip of Felix, Joſephus informs us, that there was a ſedition betwixt the High-Prieſts, and the prieſts, and chief men of Jeruſalem; and that every one of them gathered a band of the moſt bold, and ſeditious men, and became a leader of them; and that they reviled, and threw ſtones at one another; and that the High-Prieſts were ſo impudent, as to ſend their ſervants to take away the tith-corn of the prieſts, ſo that ſome of them periſhed for hunger. (W.)

Should be kept.] Tereiſthai; was kept. (H.)

If there be any wickedneſs in him.] That is, any thing, for which he ought to be puniſhed by the Roman laws. (W.)

More than ten days.] The Syriac reads it, eight or ten days, And ſome Greek copies have it, ou pleious e deca, not more than ten. (Aſſ.)

Neither againſt the law.] By this it appears, that they had now reviv'd their calumnious charge againſt him, which they had accuſed him of before Felix; and "which they could not prove" now, any more than they did, either then againſt him, or formerly againſt St. Stephen. See the notes on ch. vi. 13. and xxiv 5.

Nor yet againſt Ceſar,] This ſeems naturally conſequent upon the other. For had the Apoſtle been "a mover of ſedition" againſt the law, or "ring-leader of a ſect," in oppoſition to the true worſhip of God, as his enemies unjuſtly alledged againſt him, he could not thus fairly have acquitted himſelf of "offending againſt Ceſar;" ſince ſedition and rebellion in the ſtate is the natural product of ſchiſm and ſeparation from the church: But, taking his innocence in the former reſpects to be evident to all impartial obſervers, there being no tolerable proof offer'd to the contrary, from thence he juſtly concludes, that "neither againſt Ceſar had he offended in any thing at all." (Milb.)

Willing to do the Jews a pleaſure.] See the notes on ch. xxiv. 27.

Where I ought to be judged.] I am a Roman, and therefore "I ought to be judged," not by the Jewiſh Sanhedrim or laws, but by the Roman. (H. W. and B.) Here St. Paul declares, that he "ſtands at Ceſar's judgment-ſeat, where he ought to be judged;" that is, according to the temporal law: But had they gone about to judge him there ſpiritually, in order to proceed to eccleſiaſtical cenſures againſt him, there is no queſtion, but he would have told them, that this was no part of temporal power; that the keys of God's church were not committed to them; nor was he bound in conſcience to acknowledge them proper judges in this affair. Neither does a prince, by becoming Chriſtian, acquire any ſuch eccleſiaſtical power. For the authority of all ſupreme governments is, and muſt be, the ſame, be their religion what it will: So that a Chriſtian magiſtrate has no more power over eccleſiaſtical perſons, or in eccleſiaſtical cauſes, than an Infidel; difference in religion making no difference in the authoriry. The Grand Segnior has the ſame legal authority over the Greek church, within his own dominions, that the French king has over the Gallican. (Brett)

As thou very well knoweſt.] Viz. From Felix, and others. (G.) And as thou alſo thy ſelf doſt perceive, that they are not able to prove, that I have any way treſpaſſed againſt the Jews, or their law, (H. and W.)

I refuſe not to die.] As if he had ſaid, If I am an offender, if I have really contracted any ſuch guilt as the Jews pretended with ſo much zeal and eagerneſs to proſecute in me; if I have committed any thing worthy of death, (and ſins againſt juſt laws, pure religion, and lawfully-acquired ſoveraignty, are truly ſo!) if I have done any ſuch thing, "I refuſe not to die:" Death is juſtly due to all ſuch abominable criminals; and tho' perhaps human juſtice may overſee ſome of the fouleſt actions, yet divine vengeance is guided by an all-ſeeing eye, and ſooner or later will give them their juſt reward. So far was he from accuſing, and much farther from glorying in, ſuch wicked actions. (Milb.)

No man may deliver me unto them.] i, e, No man can, or may, juſtly do it. So the word dunati is often uſed, to ſignifie that only which may be lawfully done; as in ch. x. 47. Exod. viii. 26. Deut. xii. 17. and Mark ii. 19. (W.) On which laſt text See Dr. Whitby's explication of this word at large.

I appeal unto Ceſar.] Hence it appears, 1. That St. Paul own'd even Nero for his prince, and ſupreme governor upon earth: And, 2. That, in caſes of neceſſity, Chriſtians may have recourſe even to Heathen judicatures; eſpecially, when they have to do with perſons who are aliens from the faith. (W.) But, tho' Nero was an Heathen, he was nevertheleſs their then lawful and undoubted ſovereign. His character is well known; and few appear blacker or greater tyrants in hiſtory than he. But, amongſt all thoſe who endeavour'd to get rid of this arbitrary and Heathen tyrant, as not anſwering the ends of government, we hear of no Chriſtian. The Apoſtle's appealing to him may ſerve to explain his own meaning, Rom. xiii. 1. where he commands "every ſoul to be ſubject to the higher powers:" Which he does, not becauſe they are good or bad men, juſt or unjuſt in the diſcharge of their duties, but as being "ordained of God." And indeed, St. Paul's behaviour toward the civil Magiſtrate, in this caſe, is far enough from confuting his own doctrine, (as ſome have endeavoured to perſwade us;) or from proving that good Chriſtians may reſiſt the higher powers, without incurring the penalty of damnation! (Milb.) For, if a man ſhall think, that he hath hard meaſure from the inferior Magiſtrate, he may, without breach of obedience, appeal unto the ſuperior; and, if the ſuperior right him not, he may ſeek relief from the ſupreme, as St. Paul here did: But, if it ſo fall out, that he who is our higheſt judge upon earth, will be ſo far from doing juſtice, that he himſelf ſhall do us open wrong, reaſon it ſelf tells us, that there may not be a proceſs ad infinitum; and therefore, if our humble ſupplications cannot prevail with him to change his mind, there is nothing left, but that we "commit our ſelves and our cauſe to God that judgeth righteouſneſs," 1 Pet. ii. 23. (Uſher) See what is already noted on ch. xxiii. 11. and hereafter (God willing) on Rom. xiii. 1.

Conferred with the council.] That is, with thoſe of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim which were there. (H.) But, tho' this is agreeable to the judgment of St. Chryſoſtome, others will have it meant of his own Roman council which aſſiſted him; becauſe (they ſay) the Jewiſh council never would have adviſed him to admit of St. Paul's appeal. (W.) However, 'tis certain, whether the council were Romans or Jews, or whatever this advice might be, Feſtus durſt not deny his demand; it being a privilege ſo often, ſo plainly, ſettled and confirm'd by the Roman laws: For all proconſuls and governors of provinces were ſtrictly forbidden to put any badge of ſervility upon a citizen of Rome, who had made his appeal; or any ways to hinder him from going thither, to obtain juſtice at the hands of the emperor; who had as much regard to the liberty of his ſubjects, (ſays the law it ſelf,) as they could have of their good will and obedience to him (Cave)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. And after certain days, king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Ceſarea to ſalute Feſtus. And when they had been there many days, Feſtus declared Paul's cauſe unto the king, ſaying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix: About whom, when I was at Jeruſalem, the chief prieſts and the elders of the Jews informed me, deſiring to have judgment againſt him: To whom I anſwered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accuſed, have the accuſers face to face, and have licence to anſwer for himſelf concerning the crime laid againſt him. Therefore when they were come hither, without any delay, on the morrow I ſat on the judgment-ſeat, and I commanded the man to be brought forth. Againſt whom, when the accuſers ſtood up, they brought none accuſation of ſuch things as I ſuppoſed: But had certain queſtions againſt him of their own ſuperſtition, and of one Jeſus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive. And becauſe I doubted of ſuch manner of queſtions, I asked him, whether he would go to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe matters. But when Paul had appealed to be reſerved unto the hearing of Auguſtus, I commanded him to be kept till I might ſend him to Ceſar. Then Agrippa ſaid unto Feſtus, I would alſo hear the man my ſelf. To morrow, ſaid he, thou ſhalt hear him.

King Agrippa and Bernice.] They were the children of Herod Agrippa, before-mentioned, in ch. xii. He ſucceeded his father in the tetrarchate of Galilee. She had been married to Herod, king of Chalcis, her uncle; and remained ſome time a widow, and was ſuſpected of a criminal correſpondence with this her brother: But, in order to juſtify herſelf, ſhe married again to Polemon, king of Cilicia; who, for the ſake of her riches, was perſwaded to be circumciſed, that he might have her: But they did not live long together; and when ſhe left her husband, ſhe alſo forſook her religion. (Aſſ. and Fleury) See the notes on ch. xii. 1.

Deſiring to have judgment againſt him.] That I would have condemn him. (Trem.) Likely enough, they deſired to have him condemn'd, without hearing the cauſe, as they had done againſt Chriſt; and that might be the reaſon of Feſtus's reply, concerning the Roman cuſtom. (Aſſ.)

It is not the manner of the Romans.] Thus Philo (the Jew) ſaith of them, that they yielded themſelves to be common judges; hearing equally the accuſers and defendants, and condemning no man unheard; prejudging no man, but judging without favour or enmity, according to the nature of the cauſe: And Appian, in Grotius, ſaith the ſame. This alſo was the law of the Jews, to which Nicodemus appealed in the caſe of Chriſt. (H. and W.) Obſerve here, how the very light of nature in the Heathens condemns it, as an act of manifeſt and notorious injuſtice, to paſs ſentence upon a perſon unheard, and unallow'd to make his defence. This baſeneſs was below the Roman gallantry, even while Pagans. (B.) Would to God, that this rule, ſo equitable in itſelf, ſo often repeated ſince the time of Feſtus, and yet ſo often violated, were ingraven on braſs and marble in the palaces of princes! How many unjuſt and precipitate judgments will this maxim of the Romans condemn! A Heathen follows law and cuſtom exactly: And yet a Chriſtian will not follow the rules of truth, juſtice, and charity. (Q.) See the notes on John vii. 51.

Without any delay.] Here Feſtus commendeth his own juſtice; for long-delay'd juſtice often proves more heavy than ſpeedy injuſtice. (Aſſ.) This alſo, I fear, will riſe in judgment againſt ſome who have the adminiſtration in Chriſtian countreys.

Certain queſtions.] Profane perſons are wont to take occaſion from the controverſies among the profeſſors, to condemn their doctrine as falſe: But truth is great, and will prevail nevertheleſs at laſt. (Beza.) See the notes on ch. xviii. 15.

Of their own ſuperſtition.] Peri tes idias deiſiddaimonias; concerning his own religion, or his particular way of ſerving and worſhipping God, as peculiar to him from the reſt of the Jews: And as it follows, (to explain what is meant by the word,) peri tinos Jeſou tethnecotos, "of one Jeſus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive" again; putting him under the vulgar notion of a Dæmon, or dead Hero, and ſo meaning the worſhip of him by deiſidaimonia. Thus, in the Greek and Latin Lexicon, at the end of Cyril, it is rendred indifferently by theſe two, ſuperſtition and religion: And ſo in Athenæus, Budæus, Cicero, and an ancient gloſſary: And the word, being compounded of Daimon, and deido, to fear, is rendred, by Heſychius, phobotheia, fearing of God, or religion; by others the fear of gods and Dæmons: But this fear ſometimes in an ill ſenſe; as in the notes on ch. xvii. 2. (H)

I doubted of ſuch manner of queſtions.] Or, having ſome doubt, whether I ſhould examine this matter. (Idem) Or, whether I ought to judge of it. (W.)

Unto the hearing.] Diagnoſis; the judgment. (Trem. Aſſ. Queſn. and Fox.) Or, as properly perhaps, the cognizance (as we call it) of the emperor, to whom he had appealed: And ſo it is by Beza interpreted cognitio.

Of Auguſtus] Meaning the Roman emperor; the ſame as by Ceſar, in the end of the verſe. For, tho' Nero was then the perſon, yet after Julius Ceſar and Auguſtus, their two firſt emperors, it became common to call their ſucceſſors by the title of Ceſar, in honour of the one, and Auguſtus, in honour of the other.

I would alſo hear the man my ſelf.] So "Herod was deſirous to ſee Chriſt," Luke xxiii. 8. and to hear John Baptiſt, Mark vi. 20. Not to be converted; but to ſatisfy his own curioſity. Agrippa, being born and bred among the Jews, had doubtleſs heard of Chriſtian religion, and perhaps of Paul alſo: Therefore he might happily deſire to ſee and hear him. Thus we may perceive the providence of God, 1. That, by all theſe injuries, accuſations, and laying of wait, as Chryſoſtome noteth, Paul became Lamproteros, more eminent; becauſe, but for ſuch his ſufferings, none of thoſe princes would have vouchſafed him audience with ſo much ſilence and patience. (Aſſ.) And, 2. By this means was fulfill'd what the Lord had foretold of him to Ananias, ch. ix. 15. (Beza) If men deſired that, in order to ſalvation, which they deſire only out of curioſity, they would perhaps find their happineſs in thoſe things, wherein they now find nothing but their condemnation. (Q.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entred into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Feſtus commandment Paul was brought forth. And Feſtus ſaid, King Agrippa, and all men which are here preſent with us, ye ſee this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jeruſalem, and alſo here, crying, that he ought not to live any longer. But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himſelf hath appealed to Auguſtus, I have determined to ſend him. Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my Lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and ſpecially before thee, O king Agrippa, that after examination had, I might have ſomewhat to write: For it ſeemeth to me unreaſonable, to ſend a priſoner, and not withal to ſignify the crimes laid againſt him.

With great pomp.] Phantaſia. Obſerve here, how contemptuouſly the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaks of all pomp, retinue, and ſtate, which Agrippa and Bernice appeared in, at the time and place of hearing. He calls it fancy: For ſo the original word ſignifies; intimating, that all the pomp, gayity, and glory of the world is nothing but fancy, a dream, and a ſhadow, having no real exiſtence, but a being in imagination only. (B.) But, more critically, what it here ſignifies, will be judg'd by the uſe of the ſame word in other authors. Laertius, ſpeaking of Bion, ſaith, he was ſumptuous, and accordingly went from city to city; and ſometimes, (phantaſian epitechnomenos) uſing arts to have a great train, he perſwaded mariners to put on ſcholars attire and follow him. So Athenæus, ſpeaking of Athenion returning in great pomp to Athens, ſays, no Roman ever outbrav'd Attica (en touſate phantaſia) with ſo great a train: So alſo 'tis uſed in Planudes, and Chryſoſtome. In this notion tion of the word a very learned critic, Mr. Bois, is willing to underſtand phantaſiocopon en oicetais, Ecclus iv. 30. which we tranſlate "frantick among thy ſervants." And ſo, I ſuppoſe it may be rendred, one that thinks himſelf a brave fellow among his ſervants, being attended with a great train of them; or one that pleaſeth himſelf with the magnificence of his train. And this ſenſe agrees well with the context there, in the ſon of Sirach, "Be not as a lion in thy houſe;" the pride of the lion, and his ſtately gate, being as obſervable as his terribleneſs; to which our Engliſh tranſlation refers, according to the Proverb,

Submiſſion mollifies the lion's wrath.

(Heinſ H. and W.) This pomp and ſtate are not very proper to diſpoſe perſons to hear an Apoſtle. That humility, which the word of God requires, can hardly lodge in a heart altogether taken up with the trophies of vanity. There is very great difference betwixt the diſtinction which belongs to dignity, and is not condemn'd by the goſpel, and an exceſſive magnificence, which pride inſpires, and which God cannot endure. (Q.)

Nothing worthy of death.] See the notes on ch. xxiii. 29.

No certain thing to write.] It was the cuſtom of the Roman governors to write the emperors an account of the cauſes, or crimes of the priſoners whom they ſent to them. (Fleury)

Unto my Lord.] That is, to Cæſar, whoſe deputy I am. This high title of Lord, Auguſtus, Tiberius, and ſome others, would not have to be given to them, as being what they have thought too great, and ſomething newer than the Roman empire: But as Adoni was a civil title among the Hebrews, and Kyrios among the Greeks, ſo Dominus came to be among the Latins. (Aſſ.)

After examination had.] Anacriſis here is a certain previous inquiſition, not in the way of judgment, but in order to inform the judge of the true ſtate of the caſe. (G.)

CHAP. XXVI.

Paul, before Agrippa, giveth an account of his life, his converſion, and call to the apoſtleſhip. Feſtus reputeth him mad; to which he anſwereth modeſtly. Agrippa almoſt perſwaded to become a Chriſtian. The whole audience pronounce Paul innocent.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. THEN Agrippa ſaid unto Paul, Thou art permitted to ſpeak for thy ſelf. Then Paul ſtretched forth the hand, and anſwered for himſelf, I think my ſelf happy, king Agrippa, becauſe I ſhall anſwer for my ſelf this day before thee, touching all the things whereof I am accuſed of the Jews: Eſpecially, becauſe I know thee to be expert in all cuſtoms and queſtions which are among the Jews: Wherefore I beſeech thee to hear me patiently. My manner of life from my youth, which was at the firſt among mine own nation at Jeruſalem, know all the Jews, which knew me from the beginning (if they would teſtify) that after the moſt ſtraiteſt ſect of our religion I lived a Phariſee. And now I ſtand, and am judged for the hope of the promiſe made of God unto our fathers: Unto which promiſe our twelve tribes, inſtantly ſerving God day and night, hope to come: For which hopes ſake, king Agrippa, I am accuſed of the Jews. Why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God ſhould raiſe the dead? I verily thought with my ſelf, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus of Nazareth. Which thing I alſo did in Jeruſalem: And many of the ſaints did I ſhut up in priſon, having received authority from the chief prieſts; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice againſt them. And I puniſhed them oft in every ſynagogue, and compelled them to blaſpheme; and being exceedingly mad againſt them, I perſecuted them even unto ſtrange cities. Whereupon, as I went to Damaſcus, with authority and commiſſion from the chief prieſts; at mid-day, O king, I ſaw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightneſs of the ſun, ſhining round about me, and them which journeyed with me. And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice ſpeaking unto me, and ſaying, in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks. And I ſaid, Who art thou, Lord? And he ſaid, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt. But riſe, and ſtand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpoſe, to make thee a miniſter and a witneſs both of theſe things which thou haſt ſeen, and of thoſe things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I ſend thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveneſs of ſins, and inheritance among them which are ſanctified by faith that is in me. Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not diſobedient unto the heavenly viſion: But ſhewed firſt unto them of Damaſcus, and at Jeruſalem, and throughout all the coaſts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they ſhould repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. For theſe cauſes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me. Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day; witneſſing both to ſmall and great, ſaying none other things than thoſe which the prophets and Moſes did ſay ſhould come; That Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, and that he ſhould be the firſt that ſhould riſe from the dead, and ſhould ſhew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

Judged for the hope of the promiſe.] St. Paul tells Agrippa, that for believing, expecting, and preaching the doctrine of the reſurrection, he was queſtioned of the Jews: This he calls "the hope of the promiſe made by God unto the fathers." Others underſtand it of the promiſe of the Meſſias; which was made unto the fathers, and was generally depended upon by the moſt pious, among the twelve tribes ſcattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth; and in the faith and expectation whereof they fervently ſerved God night and day. Learn thence, 1. That the pious and godly among the Jews lived in hopes of the Meſſias's appearing; of a glorious reſurrection by him, and of an eternal life and ſalvation with him. 2. That their hope of this promiſed mercy did cauſe them to "ſerve God inſtantly day and night." Hope is the great exciter of induſtry and endeavour: Expectation puts us upon action; hope of attaining is the motive to every undertaking: The Chriſtian's hope or thing hoped for, is great and excellent in his eſteem; namely, eternal life; and where the eſteem is high, the endeavour will be ſtrong: That Chriſtian who has a well-grounded belief and hope of a life to come, will ſerve God with an unwearied diligence and induſtry; if by any means he may attain the fruition and enjoyment of it; "Unto which promiſe our twelve tribes, inſtantly ſerving God day and night, hope to come." (B.) Why St. Paul here ſpeaks, as if he were queſtioned touching the article of the reſurrection of the dead in general, ſee the notes on ch. xxiii. 6, and why he ſpeaks of the twelve tribes, ſee the notes on James i. 1. But whereas he ſtiles the reſurrection, "the promiſe made to their fathers," and ſaith, "the twelve tribes ſerved God" in expectation of it, this needs a little explication; becauſe many deny that any ſuch promiſe was made to the fathers, or can be found in the Old Teſtament. I therefore aſſert, 1. That it is evident, from the hiſtory of the Maccabees, and other writings, both ſacred and prophane, that the Jews then, and the Phariſees afterward, did believe the reſurrection of the body. Thus the ſecond ſon ſaith, 2 Maccab. vii. 9. "The king of the world ſhall raiſe us up, who have died for his laws unto everlaſting life." The third and fourth expreſs their hope to be raiſed up by God to life again, ver. 11. 14. And the mother of them bids them not doubt, but "the creator of the world would give them breath and life again." That the Phariſees believed this doctrine, we learn not only from Joſephus, but from their ſatisfaction that Chriſt "had put the Sadducees to ſilence" in that matter, Matth. xxii 34. and from their ſtickling for St. Paul himſelf, upon this declaration, that he was "called in queſtion for the hope of the reſurrection," Acts xxiii. 9. That they conceived this hope was built upon the covenant of God made with them, and the promiſe of God made to them, is alſo evident from their words: For the laſt of thoſe ſeven Martyrs before mentioned is introduced, ſaying, "Our brethren, thren are dead under God's covenant of everlaſting life;" ver. 36. Joſephus introduceth the mother of theſe ſeven children, comforting her dying ſons with thoſe words of Moſes, "I kill, and I make alive," Deut. xxxii. 39. and "It was your life and length of days," ver. 47. and that of Solomon, Prov. iii. 18. Wiſdom is a tree of life to them that lay hold on her;" and that of Ezekiel, ch. xxxvii. 3. "Shall theſe dry bones live?" 3. They had juſt reaſon, both from the law and prophets, for this hope: 1. From the law; for thence our Saviour proves the reſurrection of the body, Matth. xxii. 31, 32. (See the note there.) And that our Saviour did not argue for the felicity of the ſouls of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob only, is evident from this, that he argues for ſomething future which ſhould happen to them when they ſhall ariſe; whereas in truth, and in the opinion of the Jews themſelves, the ſouls of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob were with God already. So Joſephus ſaith, That they who die for God, ſhall live with God, as do Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs. 2. From the prophets; the words of Daniel being theſe, "Many of them that ſleep in the duſt ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to everlaſting confuſion," ch. xii. 2. Where note, 1. That tho' men in miſery and affliction are ſometimes ſaid to ſit, or "dwell in the duſt," Iſa. xxvi. 19. yet "they that ſleep in the duſt," doth always ſignifie, they that die; as Job vii. 21. xx. 11. and xxi. 26. and hath no other ſenſe in ſcripture. And, 2, That tho' men that ſit in the duſt may be raiſed out of that afflicted, into a very comfortable and pleaſant ſtate, yet ſeeing they muſt ſhortly die, they can in no propriety of ſpeech be ſaid to ariſe to life eternal. 3. From the law and the prophets: For ſaith St. Paul here, ch. xxiv. 14, 15. "I worſhip the God of our fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and the prophets; having hope that there ſhall be a reſurrection both of the juſt and the unjuſt," and here, ver. 22, 23. "I ſay nothing but what is contained in the law and the prophets, that Chriſt ſhall be the firſt of thoſe that riſe from the dead;" plainly inſinuating, that the reſurrection of others after Chriſt was contained in the law and the prophets: Hence the Apoſtle tells us, that the champions of the Jewiſh church all died in faith, in expectation of a better reſurrection, Heb. xi. 35. And, laſtly, That this hope was rightly built upon the covenant of God, that he would "be their God," Gen. xvii. 7. is evident: 1. For that to be the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, is to be that God who will raiſe them from the dead, we learn from our Saviour's argument, Matth. xxii. 32. And, 2. That he was therefore called their God, becauſe, "he had prepared for them an heavenly city," from Heb. xi. 16. and his promiſe made to the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, according to thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Gal. iii. 29. "If ye are Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe." And, 3. From the promiſe of "entring into his reſt," Heb. iv. 3, 9. And, 4. From the promiſe of a Meſſiah; it being one of their fundamental articles, that their Meſſiah ſhall raiſe the dead, and bring them into Paradiſe. See Maimonides, Expl. 10. Tract. Sanhedrim, p. 136. and Dr. Pocock's notes, p. 109, 110. And laſtly, this ſeems evident from the nature of the thing: For God being the father of our ſpirits, which are immortal, and muſt live for ever, it is abſurd to think his promiſes to the obedient ſhould relate only to this preſent life, and yet he ſhould engage them to be faithful to the death, and ſuffer here the worſt of evils for his ſake; ſince "if they had hope only in this life, they muſt of all men be moſt miſerable," 1 Cor. xv. 19. (W.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 26, 46.

Our twelve Tribes.] See the notes on James i. 1.

Why ſhould it be thought.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, The great point in controverſy between me and you, is this, Whether the dead in general ſhall ariſe; and whether Chriſt in particular be riſen from the dead: Now why ſhould either ſeem incredible to you? Is it too hard for God, who made the world, and upholds the world, and gives life to all living? Is it too hard or difficult for him to "raiſe the dead?" If not; why ſhould it be thought incredible or impoſſible? Learn hence, that the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, both of the juſt and unjuſt, is neither incredible nor impoſſible; neither againſt right reaſon or true faith. (B.) He who gave life and being to that which before was not, cannot he reſtore life to the dead? Thoſe who are in being, and fallen, cannot he raiſe again? He is beſt able to repair us who made us: And indeed, we may behold a continual reſurrection in the ſeveral creatures; from the death-like winter unto the life of ſpring, the ſeveral ſeeds, buried under the winter clods, ariſe up in their kinds, much more glorious. See 1 Cor. xv. 37, &c. (Aſſ.)

I verily thought.] Here he preſuppoſeth an objection, as if ſome might ſay, Were you brought up a Phariſee? You never learnt of them to believe, that Jeſus was the Meſſias. True indeed (ſays he,) I was an adverſary to Chriſtians, as much as any of them; and thought my ſelf bound in conſcience to endeavour their ſuppreſſion: Neither did any man perſwade me to the contrary; but God revealed to me from Heaven the truth of Chriſt, and diverted my courſe. And for this reaſon, he here repeateth the hiſtory of his wonderful converſion. (Aſſ.) His affections were not ſet againſt them through any perſonal provocations, but merely out of zeal to the law; and ſurely his zeal had been good, had it not been blind: Nor did his will run croſs to his judgment, but was led by it; for he "verily thought with himſelf, that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus;" and verily his will had been good, had it not been miſled. But the error was in his underſtanding: His judgment being not actually convinced of the truth of the Chriſtian religion. He was yet fully perſwaded, that Jeſus was an impoſtor, and Chriſtianity a peſtilent ſect, raiſed by ſatan to the diſgrace and prejudice of Moſes and the law. If theſe things had been ſo, as he apprehended them, his affections and will, in ſeeking to root out ſuch a ſect, had been not only blameleſs but commendable. It was his erreneous judgment that poiſon'd all, and made that, which otherwiſe had been Zeal, to become perſecution: But however, the firſt diſcernable obliquity therein being in the underſtanding, that perſecution of his was therefore a ſin of ignorance; ſo call'd, and under that name condemn'd by himſelf, 1 Tim. i. 13. (Sanderſ.) Yet certainly, ſuch a crime can never be reckon'd a ſmall one, nor the ſorrow and ſhame for it very little, when he could not conceal it, before ſo publick a perſon as king Agrippa: Tho' to own it in ſo frank and open a manner, beſpake both an ingenuous and penitent diſpoſition. Certainly it is but juſt, that for publick crimes and injuries publick confeſſions and ſatisfactions ſhould be made. No wonder then, that we find the Apoſtle joining his duty and his plea together, and acknowledging a real fault, while he is clearing himſelf of a pretended one. (Brailsford)

Authority from the chief prieſts.] See the notes on ch. viii. 3. and ix. 1. &c.

In every ſynagogue.] Cata paſai tas ſynagogas; through all the conſiſtories. (H.)

Compelled them to blaſpheme.] Here note, that Paul, being a blaſphemer himſelf, compelled the profeſſors of the goſpel to blaſpheme. This he probably did two ways; Firſt, By his example; they imitated him, in blaſpheming, or ſpeaking evil of the ways of Chriſt: Or, ſecondly, By his cruelty; vexing them ſo in the profeſſion of Chriſt, that ſome who were unſettled, probably fell away, and blaſphemed the name of Chriſt, which they had profeſſed. There is a compelling power and conſtraining force in example; eſpecially in the example of perſons in power and authority. Men ſin with a kind of authority. Paul's blaſphemous example compell'd others to blaſpheme. (Aſſ. and B.) Enancaſon; As if he had ſaid, I drove them to the neceſſity ſo to do. Which, tho' confeſſedly an heinous ſin in him, could not however excuſe them; becauſe we ought not, either by terrors or perſwaſions, to be prevail'd upon to blaſpheme Chriſt, or deny his religion.

Being exceeding mad againſt them.] Among the many ſtrong and beautiful paſſages of the New Teſtament, this, periſſos emmainemenos autois, is juſtly reckon'd; than which 'tis impoſſible, that the outrageous zeal and fierceneſs of the perſecutor, or the pious indignation and ſorrow of the penitent afterward, could have been expreſs'd with a more forcible and comprehenſive brevity. (Blackw.)

I went to Damaſcus.] See the notes on ch. ix. 3.

All fallen to the earth.] See the notes on ch. ix. 4.

Delivering thee.] Exairoumenos; making a ſpecial choice of thee out of all. (H.)

To open their eyes.] Here note, 1 The honour which God is pleaſed to put upon the miniſtry of the word, his own ordinance: The Apoſtle, who was only the inſtrument, is ſaid "to open the eyes of the blind, and turn ſinners from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God;" all which is properly and principally the work of the ſpirit of Chriſt: Yet he was pleaſed to put this honour upon his inſtruments the miniſters, by whom he worketh all this; and for which reaſon they are all called co-workers, or workers together with Chriſt. 2. The Apoſtle's miſſion, "I ſend thee." Great is the dignity of goſpel-miniſters: They are God's meſſengers; their commiſſion is ſealed by the whole Trinity, and intimates both their dignity and duty: To intimate their holineſs, they are called men of God; for their vigilancy, watchmen; for their courage, they are call'd ſoldiers; for their painfulneſs, harveſt-labourers; for their care of the flock, ſhepherds; for their wiſdom, overſeers; for their induſtry, husbandmen; for their patience, fiſhermen; for their tenderneſs, nurſes; for their affectionateneſs, fathers and mothers; for their faithfulneſs, ſtewards. A very high and honourable calling; the ſon of God deſpiſed it not. 3. St. Paul's commiſſion, in the ſeveral branches of it. 1. "To open their eyes;" that is, to enlighten their underſtandings, that they may know God, and their duty to him; In order to which there is required, 1. Ability in the preachers; How can they open the eyes of others that are blind and ignorant themſelves? Ought not they, that undertake to be guides and leaders, very well to know the way themſelves? 2. Perſpicuity in the ſermon; What hope can there be of opening mens underſtandings, when the matter delivered is cloſed up from them? 'Twas St. Paul's aim, to ſpeak words eaſy to be underſtood; and it ſhould be ours: It is the ſame thing to preach in an unknown tongue, as in an unknown ſtyle, above the reach of our hearers: Painted glaſs is more coſtly; but the plainer glaſs is the clearer and more uſeful: But we muſt take care, that tho' we come in plainneſs, yet not in rudeneſs of ſpeech. The ſecond part of St. Paul's commiſſion was, "to turn men from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God;" in order to which he was turned from theſe himſelf. He has little reaſon to expect, that God will honour his miniſtry for the converſion of others from ſin and Satan, who is under the dominion of both himſelf. The miniſter's life is the people's looking-glaſs, by which they uſually dreſs themſelves. 4. The happy fruit of St. Paul's miſſion and commiſſion both, "that they may receive forgiveneſs of ſin, and inheritance among them that are ſanctify'd." Whereſoever true repentance is wrought by the miniſtry of the word, there is forgiveneſs attain'd, and a title to the inheritance of Heaven attain'd with it. Note laſtly, A three-fold metaphorical deſcription of the ſinful ſtate of nature before converſion; and the like of a ſtate of grace after converſion. The ſtate of nature is a ſtate of blindneſs, a ſtate of darkneſs, a ſtate of ſlavery: The ſtate of grace after converſion is ſet forth by ſight, light, and liberty. All this is Chriſt's work originally; but his miniſters work inſtrumentally: "I have ſent thee to open their eyes, to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." (B.) See the notes on Luke i. 79. and iv. 18. and John ix. 5.

I was not diſobedient.] For, ſaith Grotius, tho' this viſion gave him ſufficient conviction of the truth, it left it in his power to obey or diſobey it. (W.) See Dr. Whitby's appendix to 2 Cor. vi.

Witneſſing both to ſmall and great.] That is, to all ſorts of hearers, noble and obſcure, without exception of perſons. (Aſſ.) The learned Grotius ſays, micro cai megalo here is a Hebraiſm: But the ſame form of ſpeech in Thucidides ſhews it to be Greek. (Blackw.)

The prophets and Moſes.] Whoſe authority, in general, the Jews themſelves durſt not deny. (Aſſ.) The ſufferings of Chriſt were taught by Moſes, in all the commands given about ſacrifices: And not by Moſes only, but by the other prophets alſo; particularly the prophet Iſaiah, chap. liii. the evangelical prophet, and prophetical evangeliſt; who wrote as clearly of Chriſt's coming, as if he had been then come. From whence the Apoſtle argues, how black the wickedneſs of the Jews was, who went about to kill him, for preaching the ſame doctrine which Moſes and the prophets had taught before him. (B.) See the notes on Luke xxv. 26, 46.

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. And as he thus ſpake for himſelf, Feſtus ſaid with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beſide thy ſelf; much learning doth make thee mad. But he ſaid, I am not mad, moſt noble Feſtus; but ſpeak forth the words of truth and ſoberneſs. For the king knoweth of theſe things, before whom alſo I ſpeak freely: For I am perſwaded that none of theſe things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. King Agrippa, believeſt thou the prophets? I know that thou believeſt. Then Agrippa ſaid unto Paul, Almoſt thou perſwadeſt me to be a Chriſtian. And Paul ſaid, I would to God that not only thou, but alſo all that hear me this day, were both almoſt, and altogether ſuch as I am, except theſe bonds. And when he had thus ſpoken, the king roſe up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that ſat with them. And when they were gone aſide, they talked between themſelves, ſaying, This man doth nothing worthy of death, or of bonds. Then ſaid Agrippa unto Feſtus, This man might have been ſet at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Ceſar.

Thou art beſide thy ſelf.] Maine. See the notes on John x. 20.

Moſt noble Feſtus.] Cratiſte, "Moſt excellent," Luke i. 3. and Acts xxiii. 26. "Moſt noble," ch. xxiv. 3. Baronius witneſſeth, That even Heathen princes were ſometimes, by moſt pious biſhops, call'd not only pious and holy, but alſo moſt holy; as being clothed with authority. In which ſenſe Dionyſius Alexandrinus called Valerianus and Galienus moſt holy Emperors: And Nero, an Heathen emperor, and a moſt wicked one too, is, by St. Paul, in reſpect of his kingly office, called "The miniſter of God for good." (Maſon) There is an honour which belongs to men, with reſpect to their external degree and place, where none is due to them with reſpect to their internal qualifications: He who is very honourable as to his place may not deſerve any honour as to his worth; yet ought he to be honoured, ſo far as his place requireth. (B.)

Almoſt thou perſwadeſt me.] En oligo; Almoſt, (or within a little.) So 'tis alſo uſed by Plato, and interpreted by the ſcholiaſt on Ariſtophanes. And that they are miſtaken, who interpret theſe words, Wouldſt thou in ſo little time perſwade me? &c. is evident from the Apoſtle's reply, "I would to God, that not only thou, but alſo all that hear me this day, were (cai en oligo, cai en pollo,) both almoſt, and altogether," &c. (W.) It is none of the leaſt things which belong unto the faculty of eloquence, reſpectfully to take notice of the auditors underſtanding in the matter treated of. Our St. Paul, I think, one of the beſt rhetoricians that ever ſpoke, was not ſeldom in this inſinuation; as to Felix, ch. xxiv. 10. And here, to Agrippa, "The king knoweth of theſe things, before whom I ſpeak freely: For I am perſwaded, that none of theſe things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. King Agrippa, Believeſt thou the prophets? I know that thou believeſt." As if he would perſwade him into a perſwaſion concerning the prophets. And the power of this manner of ſpeaking, the king himſelf expreſſed, in theſe words, "Almoſt thou perſwadeſt me to be a Chriſtian." (Sherman)

Except theſe bonds.] Here note, The extraordinary charity and Chriſtian compaſſion of St. Paul: He wiſhed them his graces, not his chains; he did not wiſh them his bonds and impriſonment, but he wiſhed them the ſame liberty and enlargement by Jeſus Chriſt, which he enjoyed: He would keep his ſorrows and outward troubles to himſelf; but wiſhes they were acquainted with his inward conſolations and comforts. A good man wiſhes others as he wiſhes himſelf; and if at any time he wiſhes that which is penally evil to the worſt of his enemies, he doth it with an eye to their ſpiritual and eternal good: A good man dares not wiſh ill to thoſe that have actually done ill to him; but wiſhes, prays, and endeavours the beſt good for them. (B.)

Nothing worthy of death.] The truth of this ſpeech of king Agrippa and his company, that "Paul had done nothing worthy of death or bonds," depends on the conſideration of the time wherein it was ſpoken. For the Roman magiſtrates, judging by the Roman laws; that which was not againſt any law of the emperors, was not cognoſcible, or puniſhable, eſpecially by death or impriſonment, deprivation of life or liberty, by them. Thus when Paul is accuſed by the Jews, and brought before the proconſul of Achaia, Gallio, ch. xviii. he tells them plainly, that he "will not be a judge of ſuch matters;" which the Roman law, then in Claudius's reign, had ſaid nothing of. For tho' ch. xviii. 2. an edict had been, by Claudius, toward the end of his reign, ſet out againſt the Jews, to baniſh them out of Italy, &c. and by that, the Chriſtian-Jews, as Jews, not as Chriſtians, fell under that interdict, and ſo did Priſcilla and Aquila there, (and John the Apoſtle, baniſhed into Patmos, in Claudius's reign, ſaith Epiphanius;) yet, as to the difference betwixt Jews and Chriſtians, there referr'd to by Gallio, (in proportion to the accuſation brought againſt him by the Jews, peri logou, of a word, as whether Jeſus were the Meſſias, or no; peri onomaton, of names, as whether the name Chriſtian, or diſciple, &c. were unlawful, as thoſe diſcriminated them from incredulous Jews; peri nomou tou cath' humas, concerning the law in force among the Jews, about converſing with the uncircumciſed, &c.) there was then no law ſet out by the emperors at Rome; and therefore no rule for the proconſul to go by, in taking cognizance of them. And thus it continued till Nero's rage againſt the Chriſtians began: For that he firſt dedicated perſecution, is Tertullian's expreſſion; and that Nero was the firſt that made any capital law againſt them. Now this appearance of Paul before Agrippa was before this rage of his brake out; and accordingly Paul had made his appeal to Ceſar's tribunal, knowing that this difference betwixt him and the Jews was a thing of that nature, that no law of the Romans could take hold of; all his danger being from the tumultuary proceedings of the Jews, enraging and importuning the magiſtrates againſt him; and the beſt way of ſecuring himſelf, being a trial by the Roman laws, to which prudently he appeals, ch. xxv. 11. making it his plea, that he had "done nothing againſt Ceſar," ver. 8. and as a Roman, claiming the privilege of being judged by the imperial laws, and not to be delivered up to the Jews, ver. 11. Which plea of his could have ſtood him in no ſtead, if Chriſtianity had been under any imperial interdict; and by being accepted for him, demonſtrates that at that time it was not. (H.)

If he had not appealed.] The appeal being once made, the judge had then no power either to abſolve or condemn; the cauſe being entirely reſerv'd to the cognizance of that ſuperior to whom the appeal was made. (Cave)

CHAP. XXVII.

Paul, ſhipped for Rome, foretelleth the danger of the voyage; but is not believed. A tempeſt ariſing, the ſhip is loſt; but the company all caſt ſafe on the iſle of Malta.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. AND when it was determined that we ſhould ſail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain others priſoners, unto one named Julius, a centurion of Auguſtus band. And entring into a ſhip of Adramyttium, we lanched, meaning to ſail by the coaſts of Aſia, one Ariſtarchus, a Macedonian, of Theſſalonica, being with us. And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteouſly entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refreſh himſelf. And when we had lanched from thence, we ſailed under Cyprus, becauſe the winds were contrary. And when we had ſailed over the ſea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia. And there the centurion found a ſhip of Alexandria ſailing into Italy; and he put us therein. And when we had ſailed ſlowly many days, and ſcarce were come over againſt Cnidus, the wind not ſuffering us, we ſailed under Crete, over againſt Salmone: And, hardly paſſing it, came unto a place which is called, The fair havens, nigh whereunto was the city of Laſea. Now when much time was ſpent, and when ſailing was now dangerous, becauſe the Faſt was now already paſt, Paul admoniſhed them, and ſaid unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ſhip, but alſo of our lives. Nevertheleſs, the centurion believed the maſter and the owner of the ſhip, more than thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul. And becauſe the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part adviſed to depart thence alſo, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the ſouth-weſt, and north-weſt. And when the ſouth-wind blew ſoftly, ſuppoſing that they had obtained their purpoſe, looſing thence, they ſailed cloſe by Crete.

A ſhip of Adramyttium.] The Adramyttium here mention'd is, by St. Jerome and others, ſaid to be a city of Egypt, built by Alexander the great, as a monument of his triumphs, at the Canobick mouth of the river Nile; by Livy, and Phavorinus, ſaid to be the ſame with Thebes: But it was rather Adramyttium in Myſia, mention'd by Strabo, Pliny, and Mela. For in this ſhip St. Paul and his company ſail'd from Ceſarea to Myra in Lycia, the direct way to Adramyttium in Myſia; whither ſhe being bound, and not to Italy, they there quit her, and, "finding a ſhip of Alexandria ſailing into Italy," went on board her. (W.)

Ariſtarchus.] He was a convert of Macedonia, who accompanied Paul in his travels to Jeruſalem, ch. xix. 29. and xx. 4. was a coadjutor with him in the work of the goſpel, Philem. 24. went with him to Rome, and was there in bonds with him, Coloſ. iv. 10 and is therefore here taken notice of as a [illegible]panion of St. Paul's. (Idem)

Courteouſly entreated Paul.] See the [illegible] on ch. xxviii. 30, 31.

Sailed under Cyprus.] See the deſcription of this, and the other places here mention'd in this voyage, in the maps and table at the end of Dr. Whitby's commentary.

Becauſe the faſt was now already paſt.] There is no queſtion but "the faſt," which is here ſaid to be newly paſs'd, was the great anniverſary faſt, the day of expiation; the deſcription of which we have, Iſa. lviii. under the name of "a ſabbath," v. 13. which may ſeem to have occaſion'd that error in the Heathen writers, which thought that the Jews had faſted on the ſeventh day or ſabbath. So Suetonius ſaith, A Jew doth not faſt on his ſabbath ſo willingly; and Juſtin ſaith, The ſeventh day, being by their cuſtom called their ſabbath, was appointed a faſt for ever: Which error aroſe by not obſerving the difference betwixt the weekly and the anniverſary ſabbath. Now the preciſe time of this ſabbatic faſt is, Lev. xvi. 29. on the tenth day of the ſeventh month called Tizri, which falls on the ſame time almoſt with our September; the firſt day of Tizri on the ſeventh of that, and ſo the tenth of Tizri on the ſixteenth of September, that is, thirteen days before our Michaelmas; or, as Scaliger ſets it, on the twentieth of that month. This being thus obſerved, the reaſon of the Apoſtle's obſervation, "that ſailing was now become dangerous, becauſe the faſt was paſſed," will be eaſily cleared; it being all one, as if he had ſaid, becauſe it was paſt the twentieth of September. It being obſerved, by all ſailors, that for ſome weeks before and after Michaelmas, there are on the ſea ſudden and frequent ſtorms, which we now call Michaelmas-flowes, which muſt needs make ſailing dangerous; and ſo the experiment prov'd it. (H. and W.) The ſolemnity and ceremonies proper to this great day of expiation, (on which day alone the High-prieſt entred into the holy of holies, to make an attonement for himſelf and the people,) may be ſeen in Godwyn's antiquities of the Jews, l. iii. c. 8.

The centurion believed the maſter.] Not knowing Paul to be inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt, but conceiving him to be no ſeaman, he believed the maſter of the ſhip in his own faculty; and as the haven alſo "was not commodious to winter in," this man had at leaſt ſome appearance of reaſon for this his belief: But what reaſon have thoſe, who, in danger of their ſouls ſhipwrack, will believe them moſt, who have the leaſt ſkill and experience, in preaching the word for ſaving of ſouls? (Aſſ.)

The maſter and the owner of the ſhip.] To cybernete, cai to nauclero. The governor of the ſhip, who was alſo the owner of it, was therefore the more concerned to conſider the danger. (H.) Cybernetes is he who is maſter or commander of any ſhip; Naucleros, or navicularius, he who is the commander of his own ſhip. (G.)

And lieth toward.] Bleponta. Our tranſlation, which here renders it "lieth," is low, and takes away the proſopopeia and vigour of the original; and is no more plain or intelligible, than the literal rendring of it, A haven which looketh toward &c. The nobleſt claſſicks have the ſame form; particularly Thucidides, Xenophon, and Ceſar. (Blackw.) In the ſame ſenſe we ſay, ſuch a place hath a proſpect toward ſuch and ſuch other places.

Sailed cloſe by Crete.] Aſſon parelegonto ten Creten. The vulgar hath made aſſon here the proper name of a place; and indeed there was ſuch a place, near Troas, and Mitylene, mentioned, ch. xx. 13, 14. but that was too wide a diſtance from Crete, to be here mentioned. There were four other places of that name mentioned by Semidius here, but none of them were near Crete: Stephanus, as is cited by Lorinus, ſaith, Aſſos is a little city of Crete; but then Pliny informs us, that it was not a ſea-port, but ſituated, in Mediterraneo, in the Mediterranean, l. iv. c. xii. p. 213. Others therefore think this is an adverb, uſed by Homer, Heſiod, and Herodotus, to ſignify quickly, or near to the place; as Phavorinus and other Grammarians ſay it doth: And ſo the whole ſhould be rendred thus, Looſing from the incommodious harbour, mentioned ver. 12. with a favourable wind, propius præterlegebant Cretam, they ſailed by Crete, near to it. (W.) Thus Heſychius renders it pleſion, nigh. But firſt, It is among the poets only, that it is ſo uſed: And 2. Being here joined with parelegonto, which is the paſſing juſt under; there ſeems to be very little uſe of the word, or propriety, that here it ſhould be put. Perhaps there may here be place for a conjecture, reading thaſſon, preſently, inſtead of aſſon, and then joining that, not with parelegonto, but arantes, precedent, preſently looſing thence. Thus in Syneſius, we find, Ep. iv. arantes euthus, looſing immediately, which is all one with, thaſſon, tochion, tachuteron, ſaith Heſychius. And this I now ſee to have been the conjecture of the very learned and judicious critick, Mr. John Bois of Ely. (H.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. But not long after, there aroſe againſt it a tempeſtuous wind, called Euroclydon. And when the ſhip was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive. And running under a certain iſland, which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat: Which when they had taken up, they uſed helps, undergirding the ſhip; and fearing leſt they ſhould fall into the quick-ſands, ſtruck ſail, and ſo were driven. And we being exceedingly toſſed with a tempeſt, the next day they lightned the ſhip; and the third day we caſt out with our own hands the tackling of the ſhip. And when neither ſun nor ſtars in many days appeared, and no ſmall tempeſt lay on us, all hope that we ſhould be ſaved was then taken away. But after long abſtinence, Paul ſtood forth in the midſt of them, and ſaid, Sirs, ye ſhould have hearkned unto me, and not have looſed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loſs. And now I exhort you to be of good cheer; for there ſhall be no loſs of any man's life among you, but of the ſhip. For there ſtood by me this night the Angel of God, whoſe I am, and whom I ſerve, ſaying, Fear not, Paul; thou muſt be brought before Ceſar: And lo, God hath given thee all them that ſail with thee. Wherefore, ſirs, be of good cheer: For I believe God, that it ſhall be even as it was told me. Howbeit we muſt be caſt upon a certain iſland. But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the ſhipmen deemed that they drew near to ſome country: And ſounded, and found it twenty fathoms: And when they had gone a little further, they ſounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms. Then fearing leſt they ſhould have fallen upon rocks, they caſt four anchors out of the ſtern, and wiſhed for the day. And as the ſhipmen were about to flee out of the ſhip, when they had let down the boat into the ſea, under colour as though they would have caſt anchors out of the foreſhip, Paul ſaid to the centurion, and to the ſoldiers, Except theſe abide in the ſhip, ye cannot be ſaved. Then the ſoldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

A tempeſtuous wind, called Euroclydon.] Ventus Typhonicus, ſaith Pliny, is a whirlwind: And the name of it here mention'd, is thought by Grotius, Bochart, and Dr. Hammond, to be Euroacylon, as it is rendred by the vulgar; that is, the north-eaſt wind; that being oppoſite to "the ſouth-weſt wind," mention'd ver. 13. (W.) Thus it is alſo interpreted by Eraſmus, Tremellius, and others.

The ſhip was caught.] Synarpaſthentos; Being carried by force along with it. (H.)

Could not bear up into the wind.] Ploio me dunameno antophthalmein to anemo; When the ſhip could no longer look the ſtorm in the face. Can any equal judge, who does not condemn the chief authors of Greece, be offended at this beautiful bold expreſſion? Oecumenius, a native Greek, and commentator on the ſacred writers, ſeems not to reliſh it; but formally and coolly tells us, the word is properly applied to a man only. But it is a vigorous compound word, uſed by Polibius, and in this place is ſurprizingly bold and agreeable, and the paſſage is raiſed and ſtrengthen'd by two lively Proſopopeias. 'Tis the obſervation of the great critic Demetrius Phalereus, that ſomething of the poetic phraſe and ſpirit gives nobleneſs and magnificence to a diſcourſe. Indeed, there always wants both ſpirit and pleaſantneſs in a proſe-author, who is altogether inſenſible of the charms and graces of poetry. But, when, and how far, to throw in the heighthenings and embelliſhments of poetry is not to be learnt by tumbling over ſcholiaſts and writers of Lexicons, nor raiſing duſt in libraries; but requires a delicate ear, a quick apprehenſion, and great ſtrength and ſoundneſs of judgment. (Blackw.) See more inſtances of this uſe of the word in Budæus and Bois. (W.) And the Metaphor is the more elegant, becauſe there is in the prow of a ſhip a place which is called opthalmos, the eye. (Aſſ. and Leigh)

Undergirding the ſhip.] The difficulties and dangers which the Apoſtle met with in his winter voyage, are here deſcribed and declared; and the propereſt leſſons of inſtruction, which can (I think) be gathered from them, will be by way of alluſion. Thus, 1. The ſhip in which he ſailed, is an emblem of the church, in her militant ſtate here on earth. She is afflicted, toſſed with tempeſts, and in danger of being ſhipwrack'd every moment; many tempeſtuous Euroclydons ariſe ſuddenly, and threaten her fatally; but her wiſe pilot ſits at the helm, ſteers her with a fixed eye and ſteady hand between rocks and ſhelves, undergirding her by his everlaſting arms of power and love which are underneath her; and when in our apprehenſions ſhe is brought to a hopeleſs and helpleſs ſtate, without the light of the ſun or ſtars to comfort her; then doth the Lord enlighten her darkneſs, and at midnight there ſhall be light. Again. 2. This voyage, neglected in the ſummer, and undertaken in the winter ſeaſon, to the peril of the paſſengers, and loſs of the ſhip, lively repreſents unto us, both the folly and danger of perſons, who ſuffer the ſpring of youth, and the ſummer of ripe-age to ſlip and ſlide away from them; and when the winter of old-age comes upon them, then they think of launching forth towards the fair haven of eternal happineſs, and not before. Set we forth never ſo ſoon, the winds will be contrary, the weather tempeſtuous, the rocks many, the difficulties great: And yet, Lord! How is our precious time ſpent and ſpilt? When age comes upon us, we complain we want time, whereas we fooliſhly waſte it; How are miſerable ſouls that ſet out late for Heaven, (when they can ſerve ſin no longer) benighted, bewildred, ſhipwrack'd eternally, and irrecoverably loſt: Behold, "now only is the accepted time, now is the day of ſalvation." (B.) To what perils do perſons expoſe themſelves, either to raiſe a fortune, or to gain a livelihood, or in obedience to the commands of men? How few are there, who would expoſe themſelves to the ſame for the ſake of God? They commit themſelves to the mercy of the waves; they truſt their lives to a plank and to a pilot! And yet it is often with great difficulty, that they can truſt themſelves to the providence of God; whoſe knowledge, goodneſs, and power are infinite, and the viſible effects of which they have ſo many times experienced. (Q.)

They lightened the ſhip.] Men readily reſolve to loſe all, that they may ſave a life which muſt ſhortly end: But, to ſave their ſouls, and to avoid an eternal death, of what are they willing to deprive themſelves? Let us be aſhamed to think, that the love of this miſerable and tranſitory life ſhould have influence over us, while we are inſenſible to the promiſes of a moſt bleſſed and eternal life! What can we pretend to have done to deſerve it? (Idem)

Caſt out with our own hands the tackling.] The Greek word ſceue ſignifieth ſtore, munition, and neceſſary furniture and proviſions for ſhips; as Jonah i. 5. (Aſſ.)

All hope that we ſhould be ſaved.] Obſerve here, 1. The hopeleſs, helpleſs, comfortleſs ſtate, which St. Paul, and thoſe in the ſhip with him, were now reduced to; "neither ſun nor ſtars appeared," and the weather proved very tempeſtuous: And when they utterly deſpair of life, then God gives Paul, and he the reſt, a comfortable aſſurance, that nothing ſhould be loſt, but the veſſel only. O how doth God delight to deliver thoſe that are forſaken of their hopes? What a preſent help is he to the helpleſs? Our extremities are ſeaſons of his ſuccour. 2. The great and ſpecial favour which God indulg'd the holy Apoſtle; even to ſend an Angel to him to comfort him; The Angel of God, whoſe I am, and whom I ſerve, ſaid, Fear not." O what an encouragement is it to us, to enter upon, and be faithful in, the ſervice of God, when he cauſes his holy Angels on all occaſions to ſerve us! When viſible dangers are before us, God has inviſible ſervants round about us, both to ſuccour and ſecure us. Lord, help me in ſincerity to ſay, Thine I am, and thee I ſerve: Let me be found faithful in all the inſtances of my duty to thee; and then ſhall I find, (as the Apoſtle here,) that ſafety evermore accompanies duty. 3. How God was pleaſed, for St. Paul's ſake, to ſave all that were with him in the ſhip: Sinners are ſpared and ſaved for the Saints ſake; whom yet they hate and ſeek to deſtroy. The wicked are oft-times delivered from temporal deſtruction for the ſake of the godly who live among them, and intercede with God for them: There were two hundred threeſcore and ſixteen perſons, all Heathens, except three or four, ſaved for St. Paul's ſake, who no doubt begg'd their lives of God. Lord, what fools and madmen are the wicked, who ſeek the deſtruction of thoſe, for whoſe ſake it is that they are not themſelves deſtroyed! The breaches which wicked men make by ſinning, they make up by praying. 4. How ſteady and ſtedfaſt the Apoſtle was in the faith and belief of God's promiſe and providence for his own and companies preſervation. "I believe God, that it ſhall be even as it was told me." We honour God exceedingly, when we depend upon his promiſe, rely upon his power, and believe his word, tho' what he ſays be very improbable, and unlikely to come to paſs. (B.) That is, in the courſe of nature, or in reſpect of the ſecond cauſes. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xiii. 23.

After long abſtinence.] Not for want of food, but becauſe the ſo much toſſing and peril at ſea had pall'd their appetites, and given them a diſtaſt to it. (G.) See the notes on ver. 33.

To have gain'd this harm and loſs.] Great induſtry is uſed here, to carry off theſe words from their native ſenſe, to make hubris ſignifie a tempeſt, and cerdainein, to eſcape, whereas there needeth no ſuch artifice: For it was indeed hubris, an infamy to them, to be ſuch unskilful mariners, as to put to ſea, when the ſeaſon of the year rendred their voyage ſo dangerous and having been forced, for their own ſafety, to "lighten the ſhip," and to caſt out ſome of her lading, and tackling, to preſerve themſelves, they might well be ſaid, cerdainein ten zemian tauten; jacturam hanc lucri in loco ponere, or to count this loſs their gain. The particle me, which here ſeems neceſſary to be repeated, ſhews that cerdainein here cannot ſignifie to eſcape; ſeeing the ſenſe would then run thus, Ye ſhould not have eſcaped this loſs: Tho', ſince cerdainein ſeems to bear this ſenſe in thoſe words of Ariſtotle, We call him fortunate, who eſcapes that puniſhment or damage he reaſonably might have ſuffer'd. In this ſenſe the words runs thus, Ye ſhould not have looſed from Crete, but ſtayed there, that ye might have eſcaped this infamy and loſs. (W.)

In Adria.] In the Adriatic ſea; which divideth Italy from Dalmatia, and reacheth up to Venice. (Aſſ.) But this is rather the Adriatic-gulph, which ends with the Illyrican ſea. The Adriatic ſea, ſaith Heiychius, is the ſame with the Jonian: And therefore, to the queſtion, How St. Paul's ſhip, which was near to Malta, and ſo either in the Lybian or the Sicilian ſea, could be in the Adriatic? 'Tis well anſwer'd, that not only the Jonian, but even the Sicilian ſea, and part of that which waſheth upon Crete, was call'd the Adriatic. Thus Ptolomy ſaith, Sicily was bounded on the eaſt, and Crete compaſſed on the weſt, by the Adriatic ſea: And Strabo ſaith, The Jonian-gulph is a part of that which in his time was call'd the Adriatic ſea. (W.)

They caſt out four anchors.] Hope is our anchor: For our life is as a ſea, and our faith the ſhip. Now, when a man, ſailing in the ſea of this life, feels the ſhip toſſed with the waves of a conſcience terrified with the juſtice of God, and is in the Apoſtle's caſe, when tackling and maſts were ſpent, then, fearing to be caſt upon the rock of deſpair, he caſts out this anchor: And by ſome of the fathers, it is call'd our interim; that which ſtayeth us, in the mean time, till God performs that which he hath promiſed to us. (W.)

Except theſe abide in the ſhip, ye cannot be ſaved.] Tho' I told you, that no one perſon in the ſhip ſhould periſh, yet this was upon condition, ye would believe and truſt God for your preſervation, and the mariners ſtay, and do their parts with all diligence, and not uſe this trick, ſome to eſcape and leave the reſt in the danger; if this be done, aſſure yourſelves, ye will be drown'd. (H.) This ſhews, as Grotius well notes, That what was ſaid ver. 21. was to be underſtood with this limitation, ſi me audiatis, If ye will hearken to my counſel; and alſo with this proviſo, that ye will do that which is in your power, and God hath given you skill and ability to do: For, in all promiſes, in which God is ſaid to give this or that, this muſt be underſtood; becauſe he hath already given, that which he hath given us faculties, or abilities, and wiſdom to obtain; ſo that we cannot want or fall ſhort of it, unleſs we wilfully neglect to uſe the faculties which God hath given us for that end. They therefore, having with them mariners, skilled in conducting of the ſhip, and power ſufficient to retain them in it, St. Paul informs them, that God's promiſe of their ſafety was to be effective by their means. (W.) What aſſurance ſoever we have of the will of God, yet we muſt not neglect human means. The life of all the perſons in this ſhip was given to St Paul: Yet he does not, for all that, expect a viſible miracle, but depends upon the bleſſing which God will give to the care and endeavours of men. (Q.) The end and the means are always joyn'd together, in the purpoſe and decree of God. The ſame God that ordained the end, ordained the means in order to that end: Therefore, as to truſt to means, is to neglect God; ſo to neglect the means, is to tempt God. As here, That God who declared that they ſhould not periſh with the ſhip, decreed, that the skilful ſeamen ſhould abide in the ſhip. Almighty God likes not to be ty'd to means himſelf; but it is his pleaſure to tie us: Sometimes, to ſhew his ſovereignty, he is pleaſed to work without means: Sometimes, to ſhew his omnipotency, he works againſt means; the fire ſhall not burn, the water ſhall not drown, the iron ſhall ſwim, the ſun ſhall ſtand ſtill, nay, go down ſeveral degrees backward. The firſt cauſe can ſuſpend the power and operation of ſecond cauſes when he pleaſes: But, as the care of the end belongs to God, ſo the care of the means belongs to us; and muſt be uſed, when they may, and where they can be uſed. Accordingly here, the mariners, in order to their own and others preſervation, ſtay in the ſhip, undergird her, caſt out their anchors, hoiſt up the main ſail, looſe the rudder-bands, and do every thing, in order to their preſervation, which was needful. The purpoſe of God to prolong our lives muſt not leſſen our care for the preſervation of our lives: When God has ordain'd and appointed means, we cannot expect to find ſafety in the neglect or contempt of thoſe means. (B.) But, after all, we muſt take great care, that the means we uſe for our preſervation be not unlawful in themſelves, but ſuch as by God's law we are warranted to uſe to that end.

Ver. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44.
And while the day was coming on, Paul beſought them all to take meat, ſaying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried, and continued faſting, having taken nothing. Wherefore I pray you to take ſome meat; for this is for your health: For there ſhall not an hair fall from the head of any of you. And when he had thus ſpoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in preſence of them all, and when he had broken it, he began to eat. Then were they all of good cheer, and they alſo took ſome meat. And we were in all in the ſhip, two hundred threeſcore and ſixteen ſouls. And when they had eaten enough, they lightned the ſhip, and caſt out the wheat into the ſea. And when it was day, they knew not the land: But they diſcovered a certain creek with a ſhore, into the which they were minded, if it were poſſible, to thruſt in the ſhip. And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themſelves unto the ſea, and looſed the rudder-bands, and hoiſed up the main-ſail to the wind, and made toward ſhore. And falling into a place where two ſeas met, they ran the ſhip aground; and the forepart ſtuck faſt, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves. And the ſoldiers counſel was to kill the priſoners, leſt any of them ſhould ſwim out, and eſcape. But the centurion, willing to ſave Paul, kept them from their purpoſe, and commanded, that they which could ſwim, ſhould caſt themſelves firſt into the ſea, and get to land: And the reſt, ſome on boards, and ſome on broken pieces of the ſhip: And ſo it came to paſs that they eſcaped all ſafe to land.

While the day was coming on.] That is, Till the day appeared, when they might imploy themſelves otherwiſe. (W.)

Paul beſought them all.] Obſerve here, What honour God put upon the Apoſtle: Altho' he was a poor priſoner in chains, yet God made him the only counſellor and comforter unto all that were in the ſhip. (B.)

Continued faſting.] It being impoſſible for them, without a miracle, to "continue faſting fourteen days" without eating any thing, ſome render the words thus, Ye have continued expecting the fourteenth day as a critical day; which they were to find ſafety in, or were not like to out-live: But, as we read nothing of ſuch a critical day; ſo the (polle aſitia,) long faſting, mentioned ver. 21. and continued till this day, proves the contrary. The meaning therefore ſeems to be this, that they had no ſet times of eating; but what they ate was ſeldom, little, and without order, or aſſembling together for that end. Thus Zetzes ſaith, that Heſiod ſpeaks thus, They ate no meat, becauſe they ate not at meal-times. (W.) Men who uſe much abſtinence are ſaid not to eat and drink. Thus John the Baptiſt is ſaid to come "neither eating nor drinking:" Not that he did not eat at all, but that he did not live as other men do, but practis'd much faſting and abſtinence. (Fox)

This is for your health.] Soterias, for your ſafety. Refreſhing yourſelves will the better enable you to bear the difficulties which ye are to expect. (H.) See the notes on Luke xiii. 23.

Took bread and gave thanks.] Euchariſteſe; He beg'd God's bleſſing upon what they eat, and praiſed him for it. Thanks ſhould be return'd when benefits are received, even from the hand of man; and much more from the hand of God. What then ſhall we think of thoſe who ſit down to a full table, as a beaſt to his forage, without taking any notice of the bountiful hand that feeds them? (B. and Q.)

Caſt out the wheat.] Here obſerve, 1. How willing men in diſtreſs are to part with all things for the preſervation of life: Theſe ſea-faring men are here found three times "lightning their ſhip" of her lading and burthen: Firſt, the merchandize was caſt overboard. ver. 18. Next, all the ſhip's furniture was heaved over. ver. 19. And now, ver. 38. goes over the very wheat, which they had provided for their daily bread; future proviſion is caſt away to ſave the life at preſent: Life is the moſt precious treaſure, the moſt excellent thing in nature; a man will part with all the comforts and ſupports of life, rather than with life it ſelf. 2. What a wonderful work of God was here upon the hearts of theſe poor Pagans; thus to venture their lives by parting with their food which they had to live upon, barely upon St. Paul's word, that they ſhould want wheat no more in the ſhip! Such an influence has God upon the hearts and minds of men, when he pleaſes to make uſe of it. (B.)

Knew not the land.] They could keep no good reckoning, by reaſon of the violent ſtorm, dark weather, variable ſetts of tydes, and poſſibly many ſhifts of winds; and ſo, diſcovering the land, knew not where they were. (Aſſ.) But afterwards they found it to be Malta, ch. xxviii. 1.

Had taken up the anchors.] Perielontes, Cutting the cables, to which the anchors were faſtened; and ſo leaving them in the bottom of the ſea: For in ſuch a ſtorm they could not weigh anchor. Thus the Syriac renders it vappeſaku, and they cut off the anchors: And ſo, ver. 20. "all hope that we ſhould be ſaved," ethpeſek, was cut off; which there in the Greek is periereito, and tranſlated "was taken away." (Aſſ.)

Hoiſed up the main ſail.] Which before, by reaſon of the violence of the ſtorm, they had been forced to ſtrike, ver. 17. And by this it appears, that it was not among the tackling before caſt out of the ſhip, ver. 19.

Broken with the violence of the waves.] Obſerve here, How God's delivering power is moſt glorìouſly manifeſt in the moſt deplorable extremities of his people. Now, when the ſhip was "fallen into a place where two ſeas met," when ſhe "ran a ground," and "was broken with the violence of the waves;" this extremity was God's opportunity, and this ſtrait was the ſeaſon of his ſuccour. (B.)

Caſt themſelves firſt into the ſea.] That ſo, they might not only be the more helpful to get the reſt aſhore, but alſo avoid the danger of one drowning another, if the multitude had all leap'd over-board together. (Aſſ.)

Eſcaped all ſafe to land.] Obſerve here, How God perform'd his promiſe to the Apoſtle to a tittle Tho' they "were in all in the ſhip two hundred threeſcore and ſixteen ſouls," ver. 37. they were all ſaved, not a man drown'd; no, not any one of thoſe bloody and ungrateful ſoldiers whoſe "counſel was to kill the priſoners," ver. 42. (B.) This may teach men, in the midſt of dangers, to caſt themſelves upon the providence of God. (Aſſ.) But yet, here is not one word mentioned of gratitude and acknowledgment either to God, or to St. Paul. (Q.)

CHAP. XXVIII.

Paul, and his companions, after their ſhipwrack, kindly entertain'd at Malta. A viper faſtening on his hand, without hurting him, occaſions various cenſures. He healeth divers diſeaſes there: Departs towards Rome: Reports his caſe to the Jews; and continues preaching there two years, unmoleſted.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND when they were eſcaped, then they knew that the Iſland was called Melita. And the barbarous people ſhewed us no little kindneſs: For they kindled a fire, and received us every one, becauſe of the preſent rain, and becauſe of the cold. And when Paul had gathered a bundle of ſticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and faſtened on his hand. And when the barbarians ſaw the venomous beaſt hang on his hand, they ſaid among themſelves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom though he hath eſcaped the ſea, yet vengeance ſuffereth not to live. And he ſhook off the beaſt into the fire, and felt no harm. Howbeit, they looked when he ſhould have ſwollen, or fallen down dead ſuddenly: But after they had looked a great while, and ſaw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and ſaid that he was a God.

When they were eſcaped.] Diaſothentes: Having "eſcaped all ſafe to land;" as in the laſt verſe of the foregoing chapter.

The Iſland was called Melita.] It is now called Malta, famous for the knights of Rhodes; and hath yet a place call'd The Arrival, or Haven of St. Paul. That it was this African Malta, and not the other Illyrican Melite, or Melatine, is prov'd by Bochart Phaleg. part ii. l. i. c. 26. (W.)

The barbarous people.] Dr. Lightfoot thinks, theſe Barbarians were Africans, brought thither by the Carthaginians, when they had poſſeſſion of that iſland. Bochart, from Diodorus Siculus, ſaith, They were a colony of the Phenicians, who ſailing upon their merchandize to the weſtern ocean, made this iſland their refuge, for the convenience of its havens; but the Phenicians abounding in Africa, the difference betwixt theſe two opinions is not great. As for the word barbarous, Strabo informs us, that it was the name given to all that ſpake groſs and rough language; and that afterwards the Greeks uſed it, as a common name by which they diſtinguiſh'd all other nations from themſelves. However, theſe barbarous people were taught humanity by the light of nature: They had their notions of divine juſtice, or Nemeſis, from tradition: They therefore did believe, there was a providence, which did protect and reward the good, and puniſh the evil-doers. (Idem) As the Greeks did at firſt, ſo the Romans afterwards, called all Barbarians but themſelves.

A viper out of the heat.] Echidna. Concerning the nature of this venemous ſerpent, See Pliny's Nat. Hiſt. l. x. c. 62. and Bochart's Hieroz. part ii. l. iii. c. 2. Here note alſo, 1. How it pleaſed God, by a new miracle, to confirm the Apoſtle's authority, and thereby to prepare the hearts of thoſe barbarous people for the receiving of the goſpel. God will honour his goſpel, and the faithful diſpenſers of it, where-ever they go, by preparing the hearts of the people to receive it. 2. That great and manifold dangers and diſtreſſes may, and oft-times do, befall gracious perſons. No ſooner is one affliction paſſed over and gone from them, but preſently another comes on with a freſh aſſault. Thus here, St. Paul had no ſooner eſcaped the ſhipwrack, and gets to ſhore, but a viper faſtens upon his hand; "Many are the afflictions of the righteous." (B.) Yet, 3. That tho' many dangers and diſtreſſes are apt to follow one another, to afflict the righteous, yet God turns them all to their good in the event. (Beza)

No doubt this man is a murderer.] Hence obſerve, The unreaſonableneſs and danger of judging others, and particularly ſuch perſons as are not at all, or very little, known to us, on account of any calamity, or any other appearance whatſoever. For, 1. Tho' there is no doubt, but, where the crime is notorious, God ſometimes orders the puniſhment to be ſuch, as to be eaſily diſtinguiſh'd to be his own particular act, that he may make ill people examples to the world; in which caſes 'tis not only lawful, but neceſſary, to judge, that we may know how to beware: Yet this is to be done, when the crime is plain to the world; not when 'tis uncertain whether there be any crime at all; as it was here in St. Paul's caſe, who was a perfect ſtranger to theſe people. For, ſuppoſing that a private man had authority to judge another, how could this judgment be right, if the perſon be unknown to him? All he has to be guided by, are appearances only. But our bleſſed Lord commands us, "not to judge according to the appearance, but to judge righteous judgment," John vii. 24. And of all ſorts of appearances, none are more uncertain than thoſe which riſe from calamities and misfortunes; and therefore, 'tis moſt unreaſonable to judge ill of others, by the afflictions which they are expoſed to. The rather alſo, For that they who judge ill of ſome on this ground, will not allow, that we ſhould judge well of others, only on account of their proſperity: That calamities befal both the good and bad; and therefore can be no certain diſtinction of one man from another: That this way of judging implies a neceſſity of bad men ſuffering, according to their demerits in this life; which is the more unreaſonable, becauſe we believe a judgment to come: That the good and bad are ſo mingled in this life, that it is impoſſible the bad alone ſhould ſuffer: And likewiſe, that God has often particular deſigns in the ſufferings of good men. 2. The raſhneſs of cenſoriouſneſs will not ſuffer men to examine preſent circumſtances, or to expect a little what may follow. Had thoſe Jews, who reviled our Saviour upon the croſs, conſider'd but a little the miracles which attended upon his death, they might, as well as the centurion, have confeſs'd, "Truly, this was the Son of God!" How much more, if they had conſidered the power of his reſurrection, and the glory of his aſcenſion! As providence works by ſecond cauſes, there muſt often be a long train of events, before that which is decreed is brought to paſs: So is it in the deſigns of wiſe and good men; and theſe may require ſome time, and depend upon a long courſe of action before they are accompliſhed. But would it be reaſonable, in theſe caſes, to lay hold of any one ſingle event, any one particular action, and, becauſe it ſeems at firſt to be odd or irregular, cenſure God and man immediately? 3. Cenſorious people are the moſt backward of any in the world to find and acknowledge themſelves to be in the wrong. It was not till "after they had looked a great while, and ſaw no harm come to" the Apoſtle, that theſe ſlanderers of him here "changed their minds." 4. Tho' a man ſhould be willing, yet it is one of the moſt difficult things in the world, next to impoſſible, to make reſtitution of a good name, when he has once robb'd his neighbour of it. "A good name is like precious ointment," in this reſpect as well as others, that, when once thrown down, it can ſcarce ever be gathered up again; but never in its firſt purity. And, 5. This is a meer uſurpation of, and crowding into the judgment-ſeat of God, and a partiality, which will be ſeverely puniſh'd hereafter. (Adams) Tho' adverſity is a puniſhment of ſins; yet becauſe God, in deſpenſing afflictions upon men, has not always a reſpect unto their ſins, thoſe do judge raſhly, who make an eſtimate of good or bad men from their proſperity or adverſity here. (Beza) See Dr. Adams's ſermon on this text; and the notes here on Luke xiii. 2, 3.

Vengeance ſuffereth not to live.] That there is a dice, or vengeance, which will not let murtherers go unpuniſhed in this world, hath been the obſervation of all ſorts of men. In the Gemara, tract. Sanhedrim, there is the like ſtory of Simeon ſon of Schutach, who found a man-ſlayer, but had no witneſs to teſtify it legally; and therefore prayed thus, He that knoweth the thoughts of men puniſh thee as a murtherer: And preſently, ſaith he, a ſerpent bit him and ſlew him; in like manner, as Oreſtes, that had killed his mother, died with the bite of a viper, in a place of Arcadia called Oreſtion, ſaith Stephanus Byzant, in the word Oreſtai. In that place of the Gemara there is alſo mention of a tradition of Hezechias, that after the deſtruction of the ſanctuary and the Sanhedrim, there yet ſtill continued among the Jews four kinds of capital puniſhment, inſtead of the four eſtabliſhed by the law of

Moſes. For he that deſerved to be ſtoned, either fell from an houſe, or was torn with wild beaſts: He that deſerved to be burnt, either fell into the fire, or was ſtruck with a ſerpent; which was therefore called fiery by Moſes, becauſe they that were bitten with it felt ſuch a flame in their veins: They that were to be killed with the ſword, fell either into the hand of the king, or of thieves: They that deſerved ſuffocation or hanging, either were drowned, or died of a melancholy or ſuffocation; ſuch as is affirmed of Judas; See the notes on ch. i. 18. Two of theſe are here mentioned by the Barbarians; drowning, and the bite of the ſerpent or viper; as a revenge due to a murtherer in their conceit; And when they ſaw he eſcaped, they looked on it as a ſtupendious thing. (H. and Heinſ.)

He ſhook off the beaſt.] Therion; meaning the viper. For tho' this ſerpent is properly to be reckon'd in the claſs of Reptils, or creeping things, the phyſicians call all ſuch creatures, which leave their venome in a wound which they bite or ſting, Theria; and eſpecially the viper.. (Aſſ.)

And felt no harm.] Whenever it pleaſes the creator, the beaſts reſume their original ſubmiſſion to mankind, which was loſt through ſin. (Q.) But why did not St. Paul, who ſhook off the viper from his hand, ſhake off the chain from his arm, and ſet himſelf at liberty? I anſwer, St. Paul was not the author, but a miniſter or inſtrument, in this miracle. It was not St. Paul himſelf, but God by him, who wrought this miracle, ch. xix. 11. When the deliverance of the Apoſtle from his bonds made moſt for the glory of God, he was deliver'd: But now when his bonds would more advance the goſpel, God kept him ſtill in bonds. (Aſſ. and B.) St. Paul, ſupported by a lively faith and a good conſcience, without being ſurprized at the ſudden danger, or concerned at the ſudden alteration of the people, calmly "ſhook off the beaſt into the fire," and ſhew'd, by his being ſo composed, that he "felt no harm." 'Tis moſt probable, that this holy Apoſtle took little notice of what thoſe people ſaid of him, or of their behaviour towards him; that he was not mov'd with their cenſure, but "ſhook it off," as he did the viper; and that he regarded as little afterwards their ſecond ſudden change, in their extravagant applauſe: For his thoughts were taken up with greater objects, and his ſoul more nobly imploy'd; either rais'd up to Heaven, by a lively faith and dependance upon his God; or elſe contriving which way to diſcharge beſt the great truſt that was repoſed in him, in the converſion of the Gentiles. (Adams) See the notes on Mark xvi. 18.

Looked when he ſhould have ſwollen.] Pimpraſthai; Have ſwollen to that degree as to have burſt. (H) The Greek word pimpramai ſignifies either to be inflamed, or to ſwell. Beza, and the Vulgar interpret it here to ſwell: Eraſmus and the Ethiopic, to be inflamed. (Leigh) And of the latter opinion was alſo D. Heinſius.

They changed their minds.] Note here, How mutable is the mind of man, and how unconſtant are men in their eſteem and opinions of men! The Apoſtle had no ſooner ſhook off the viper into the fire, but the Barbarians change their opinions into another extreme: Him whom they accounted a murderer before, they called a God now; "They changed their minds, and ſaid that he was a God:" They were light and laviſh in their applauding, as before they were raſh and ſevere in cenſuring. Thus, upon changes of providence, many change their opinions of men, ſometimes for the better, but commonly for the worſe. (B.) Who is there, that conſiders attentively the proceeding of theſe people, the injuſtice of their cenſure, and the folly of their applauſe, but would immediately reſolve to avoid judging others? Such eſpecially as are not at all, or very little known to him; and that too on account of any misfortune that ſhall befal them? Who is there that conſiders alſo the other part of this paſſage, the behaviour of the Apoſtle, but would reſolve, after his great example, to put his truſt in God alone in all events; to deſpiſe equally the cenſure and the applauſe of the inconſtant world; and in the ſecurity and tranquility of a good conſcience, proceed on ſteadily and faithfully in his duty? (Adams)

Said that he was a God.] Probably meaning Hercules Alexicacos, who was worſhipped in that iſland, and was one of the gods of the Phenicians. (D. Heinſ. G. and W.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 11.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. In the ſame quarters were poſſeſſions of the chief man of the iſland, whoſe name was Publius, who received us, and lodged us three days courteouſly. And it came to paſs that the father of Publius lay ſick of a fever, and of a bloody flux: To whom Paul entred in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him. So when this was done, others alſo which had diſeaſes in the iſland, came, and were healed: Who alſo honoured us with many honours, and when we departed, they laded us with ſuch things as were neceſſary. And after three months we departed in a ſhip of Alexandria, which had wintered in the iſle, whoſe ſign was Caſtor and Pollux: And landing at Syracuſe, we tarried there three days. And from thence we ſet a compaſs, and came to Rhegium: And after one day the ſouth wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli: Where we found brethren, and were deſired to tarry with them ſeven days: And ſo we went toward Rome. And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii-forum, and the three Taverns: Whom when Paul ſaw, he thanked God, and took courage. And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the priſoners to the captain of the guard: But Paul was ſuffered to dwell by himſelf, with a ſoldier that kept him.

The chief man of the iſland.] This man, "whoſe name was Publius," was a man of great eſtate and authority, and, as we may gueſs, from an inſcription found there, and ſet down by Grotius, wherein the Protos (as he is here ſtiled) is reckon'd among the Roman officers, probably governor of the iſland. Nay, by Baronius, he is ſaid to have been now converted by St. Paul, and conſtituted biſhop of that iſland; and that he was the ſame who ſucceeded St. Dionyſius the Areopagite in the ſee of Athens, and was afterwards crown'd with martyrdom. (Cave)

Lodged us three days courteouſly.] Obſerve here, How God goes on ſtill, to honour the perſon and miniſtry of St. Paul, in the eyes and hearts of this barbarous people, by enabling him further to work miracles in this iſland: Firſt, on Publius, the governor's, father; and then others that were diſeaſed in the iſland. Here note, 1. How great the civility of the governor of the iſland was towards St. Paul; entertaining him and all the company with him, even more than two hundred perſons at his own charge. And, 2. How well the governor was rewarded for his hoſpitable charity: His father lying ſick of a fever and bloody-flux, is miraculouſly recovered by God. As there is no duty more certainly rewarded in another world than that of charity; ſo is it frequently rewarded in this world: Publius was well paid by his father's recovery, for what he did for St. Paul and his company. 3. The means which the Apoſtle uſed for recovering this ſick perſon; prayer and impoſition of hands, ver. 8. "Paul prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him." Now, hereby the Apoſtle ſhewed, that he could do nothing of himſelf; accordingly he applies by prayer to that God who killeth and maketh alive, and the Lord heard him: St. Paul had honoured God, and now God honours him. How grieved was the holy Apoſtle when God's honour was ſacrilegiouſly given to him? I doubt not, but it grieved the good man more, when they called him a God, than when they accounted him a murderer. Here therefore he returns the honour to God, by prayer; aſcribing all to him: And God honours him by making him the inſtrument of the miraculous cure. 4. How the infinitely wiſe God made all things work together for his own Glory: That the Apoſtle ſhould ſuffer ſhipwrack; that he ſhould be caſt upon an iſland; that he ſhould be caſt upon a barbarous iſland, where the name of God was not known; that a viper ſhould faſten upon him and not hurt him; that the governor of the iſland's father, and other inhabitants of the iſland, ſhould at this time be ſick, and miraculouſly cured by St. Paul: All theſe tended towards the promoting of God's glory, by opening an effectual door for the converſion of many ſouls; for during the three months that the Apoſtle ſtayed there, he planted a chriſtian church in the iſland, which became famous for its ſtedfaſtneſs in the truth. 5. The proof and evidence which the iſlanders gave of the truth of their converſion by the Apoſtle's miniſtry among them; Namely, that thoſe new converts loaded St. Paul's ſhip with neceſſaries for their voyage, when he went away from them: This was a real fruit of their effectual faith; as alſo their honouring him with many honours. The beſt evidence of ſincere faith is an holy fruitfulneſs in good works; in works of piety towards God, and works of charity towards man; "They honoured us with many honours, and when we departed they loaded us with ſuch things as were neceſſary."

Laid his hands on him.] See the notes on ch. vi. 6.

Honoured us with many honours.] Timais etimeſan. Praiſe, glory, and honour, are uſually taken for one; but they differ. Praiſe is in words: Epainos, of epos, a word, and ainos praiſe, when we make, in the courſe of our ſpeech, honourable mention of others for their virtues. Doxa, glory, is in opinion, as the word alſo ſignifieth; which is, when men have a reverend opinion of any, or when men are accounted virtuous. Time, honour, comprehends both the other, and is a teſtification of the good opinion which we have of other mens worth and excellency, by outward ſigns; as commendation, reſpectful ſalutations, uncovering the head, bowing the knee, erecting ſtatues &c. Such a kind of honour, as there is in reverence, 1. Reverence to magiſtrates, Rom. xiii. 7. 2. Obedience to parents, Eph. vi. 2. 3. Honeſt care and regard of our inferiors, 1 Pet. iii. 7. 4. Comelineſs, beauty, and dignity, 1 Cor. xii. 24. 5. An earneſt care to preſerve from ſinful uncleanneſs, 1 Theſſ. iv. 4 6. Some publick function or calling, either in church or ſtate, given to ſuch men, as, for their virtue, deſerve to be honoured, Hebr. iii. 3. And 7. Honourable maintenance, 1 Tim. v. 17, 18. (Leigh)

Whoſe ſign was Caſtor and Pollux.] Paraſemon is the protome, ſome image, or picture of ſome creature, in the fore-part of the ſhip, from whence the ſhip was named. So ſaith Agatharchides, when 'tis ſaid, that a bull carried away Europa, the meaning is, that a ſhip call'd the Bull, as having that paraſemon upon it, carried her: And ſo the eagle that carried Ganymede, was a ſhip with an eagle upon it, and ſo call'd the Eagle, ſaith Epiphanius. So Bellerophon's riding on Pegaſus, was his ſailing in a ſhip that had a flying horſe for its ſign and name. So Virgil, Æn. 10.

——Ærata princeps ſecat æquora Tigri.

The prince, with brazen Tyger, cuts the ſeas.

Where the ſign of the ſhip, being ſet upon the roſtrum, or beak of it, which was made of braſs, was a tyger; and ſo the ſhip was call'd. So Diodorus Siculus, l. iv. of Phryxus, that is ſaid to ſwim upon a ram through the Euxine ſea, ſaith, That he ſailed in a ſhip, which had the picture of a ram on the fore-part of it. So Palæphatus, of Pelops, that was ſaid to have winged horſes, It was to be underſtood, ſaith he, in the ſame manner as of Pegaſus, that he had a ſhip, and there were painted on it winged horſes: And, of Pegaſus he had before ſaid, 'Twas the name of a ſhip; as now every ſhip hath a name. So that the mention of the paraſemon, or ſign, is here alſo the intimation of the name of the ſhip, "Caſtor and Pollux," or Dioſcuri. (H) The picture of theſe two ſuppoſed ſons of Jupiter, was painted on the fore part of the ſhip; they being, in conjunction, thought propitious to mariners, and look'd upon, when thus appearing, as a ſign of a tempeſt ceaſing: And yet, in a ſhip having ſuch an idolatrous image, St. Paul refuſes not to ſail; nor doth St. Luke refuſe to uſe that name; theſe being uſed only as the name of the ſhip in which they ſailed. (W.)

We found brethren.] It is not to be wonder'd, that there ſhould be Chriſtians here, and in other parts of Italy, ſince Strabo informs us, that this Puteoli was a very great mart-town, where there were havens made by art, for the goodneſs of the river. Much leſs is it to be wonder'd, that there ſhould be many then at Rome, tho' perhaps no Apoſtle had been there to preach to them. For ſince Chriſtianity had now continued twenty eight years, from the aſcenſion of our Saviour, and "the ſound of it had gone through all the world," Rom. x. 18. it is reaſonable to expect, that, as it converted Cornelius and his kinſmen to the faith, ſo it ſhould prevail on many other Romans, in all places; and that Rome being the place to which, ob majorem principatum, there was a general conflux from all places of the world, as both Heathen and Chriſtian writers have obſerved, it ſhould be ſtock'd with Chriſtian brethren from all parts. (W.) Beſides, they might be converted by ſuch as were preſent at Jeruſalem, at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, ch. ii. 10. where it is expreſly ſaid, that there were "ſtrangers of Rome" then preſent, when thoſe mighty miracles were wrought there. (B.)

Tarry with them ſeven days] Here, as in many other places, we have ſingular proofs of the humanity of the Heathen Romans toward their priſoners, tho' charg'd with divers offences againſt the powers then in being, both in reſpect to church and ſtate: Whereas ſome, who would be thought good Chriſtians, come far ſhort in the practice even of morality; and particularly in this point of treating thoſe whom they look upon as criminal or diſaffected. See the notes on ver. 7, and 30.

Appii-forum, and the three Taverns,] Mention of theſe two places we have in Cicero ad Atticum, l. ii. Epiſt. 10. and 13. The latter of which was three and thirty miles from Rome, the former fifty one, ſaith Antoninus in his Itinerary. Tres Tabernæ is a proper name of a town or city, and ſo not to be rendred, with Iſidore, inns and victualing houſes, as he will alſo have Appii-forum to be a place which had an image of Appius; but (as all other names) is in reaſon to continue the ſame, without tranſlation, or conſiderable alteration of ſound, in all languages. This the example of Areopagus, Act. xvii. 19. and Appii forum in this very verſe demonſtrates: And ſo here, St. Luke's Greek Treis Tabernai, which is the retaining, not tranſlating, nor interpreting the Latin. And this the rather, if we conſider what the antient ſignification of Tabernæ was. This Scaliger tells us, on occaſion of thoſe verſes of Auſonius,

Prætereo arentem ſitientibus undique terris
Damniſſum, riguaſque perenni fonte tabernas.

Tabernæ, ſaith he, was the name of the frontier towns, which were built againſt the inrodes and inſolencies of the Barbarians. That there were ſuch every where, erected by Diocleſian, in the borders of the Romans, we are aſſured by Zoſimus, Hiſt. l. ii. p. 65. The Roman empire being on every ſide of the borders divided and fortified with cities and garriſons and caſtles, and all the military forces dwelling there about, there was no acceſs for the Barbarians. And ſo no doubt it was in theſe former times. And in all reaſon, as this was the notion of the Tabernæ Montanæ prope Weiſſenbrugum, and Tabernæ Rhenenſes, which Scaliger mentions; ſo alſo of the Tres Tabernæ here; which, ſaith he, Auſonius himſelf ſeems to ſignifie, when he ſaith that the Sauromatæ had their habitations aſſign'd them there, agreeable to what we recited out of Zoſimus. That this place was an epiſcopal ſee, and ſo an eminent city, in Conſtantine's time, appears by Optatus l. i. where, amongſt the nineteen biſhops delegated by Conſtantine, to decide the controverſy betwixt Donatus and Cæcilianus, is reckon'd, Felix a Tribus tabernis, Felix biſhop of that city called Tres Tabernæ. (H.) Behold here, how God bears witneſs to, and puts honour upon his ſuffering ſervant. He paſſes to Rome, more like a conqueror, than a priſoner. He is upon the road, by many eminent perſons, as conquerors uſed to be, to congratulate their great victories; even Chriſtians, here called Brethren, ver. 15. who were not aſham'd of Paul's chain, but left their houſes, and came forth to meet him, ſome one day's journey, others two, to congratulate his coming, and pay their reſpect unto him. (B.)

Paul was ſuffered to dwell by himſelf.] See the notes on ver. 14. and 30.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. And it came to paſs, that after three days, Paul called the chief of the Jews together. And when they were come together, he ſaid unto them, Men and brethren, tho' I have committed nothing againſt the people, or cuſtoms of our fathers, yet was I delivered priſoner from Jeruſalem into the hands of the Romans: Who when they had examined me, would have let me go, becauſe there was no cauſe of death in me. But when the Jews ſpake againſt it, I was conſtrained to appeal unto Ceſar; not that I had ought to accuſe my nation of. For this cauſe therefore have I called for you, to ſee you, and to ſpeak with you: Becauſe that for the hope of Iſrael I am bound with this chain. And they ſaid unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came, ſhewed or ſpake any harm of thee: But we deſire to hear of thee what thou thinkeſt; for as concerning this ſect, we know that every where it is ſpoken againſt. And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and teſtified the kingdom of God, perſwading them concerning Jeſus, both out of the law of Moſes, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening. And ſome believed the things which were ſpoken, and ſome believed not. And when they agreed not among themſelves, they departed, after that Paul had ſpoken one word, Well ſpake the Holy Ghoſt, by Eſaias the prophet, unto our fathers, Saying, Go unto this people, and ſay, Hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand; and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and not perceive: For the heart of this people is waxed groſs, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they cloſed; leſt they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their heart, and ſhould be converted, and I ſhould heal them. Be it known therefore unto you, that the ſalvation of God is ſent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. And when he had ſaid theſe words, the Jews departed, and had great reaſoning among themſelves. And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired houſe, and received all that came in unto him, Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching thoſe things which concern the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Paul called the chief of the Jews.] St. Paul is no ſooner come to Rome, with deſire, and deſign, no doubt, to preach the goſpel there to his countrymen the Jews in the firſt place, but he ſends for the Jews to come to him, ſtates his caſe to them, lays the matter of fact before them, and endeavours to remove all prejudice from their minds, which they might have taken up againſt him, and ſo have miſs'd of the benefit of the miniſtry. From whence learn, That it is the great duty of the miniſters of the goſpel, prudently to prevent, if poſſible, or preſently to remove all prejudices which may be taken up by their people againſt their perſons; knowing that if they have a prejudice againſt their perſons, they will never reliſh their doctrine, nor be benefited by their miniſtry. Thus did the great Apoſtle here endeavour to ſet himſelf right with his auditors the Jews, before he began to preach to them. (B.) See the notes on ch. ix. 16. xxi. 33. xxii. 24. xxiv. 10. xxv. 8, 11, xxvi 6, 29, 31.

Ought to accuſe my nation of.] That is, I appealed to Ceſar, only to defend my own innocency; not with any deſign to accuſe, or exaſperate Ceſar againſt my own countrymen the Jews. (Aſſ.)

For the hope of Iſrael.] That is, either for his faith in Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, who was "the hope of Iſrael;" or for the hope of the reſurrection of the dead, which the Jews expected from the Meſſiah. (W.) See the notes on ch. xxiii. 6, 7. and Luke xxiv. 47.

Bound with this chain.] Having a chain on his right hand, by which he was bound to the ſoldier that kept him; the chain being alſo on the ſoldiers left hand; and ſo long, that they might go conveniently together. Thus Athenion tells the men of Athens, That Mithridates had made Quintus Oppius (deſmion,) a priſoner, or one "bound with a chain," as St. Paul often ſpeaks; and had bound Manlius Aquilius (aluſei macra,) with a long chain, to one Baſtarne; who being on horſeback, dragg'd him along on foot, bound to him with a chain five cubits long. Sometimes, for greater ſecurity, they were bound to two ſoldiers, by "two chains;" one faſtned to their right, the other to their left hand; as St. Peter was, ch. xii. 6, 7. and St. Paul, ch. xxi. 33. (H. and W.) See the notes on the texts here referr'd to, and on ch. xxvi. 29.

This ſect.] See the notes on ch. xxiv. 5, 14.

He expounded and teſtified.] Exetitheto diamartyromenos; He expounded, teſtifying, that "the kingdom of God," which they expected, Luke ii. 25, 38. and xix. 11. was already come; and perſwading them of the truth of the things which he aſſerted, concerning the birth, life, miracles, death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of the Lord Jeſus: And all this "both out of the law of Moſes, and out of the Prophets;" as Chriſt himſelf had done to his diſciples, after his reſurrection, Luke xxiv. 27. (W.) See the notes there

Hearing ye ſhall hear.] Or rather will hear &c. (H. and W.) The prophecy of Iſaiah, here referr'd to, ſtands thus, in our tranſlation, ch. vi. 9, 10. "Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but underſtand not; and ſee ye indeed, but perceive not: Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and ſhut their eyes; leſt they ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their heart, and convert, and be healed." In order to the right underſtanding of which text, and ſome others of the like ſort, it may be here very proper to take notice, that interpreters and commentators have remark'd two rules, which tranſlators of the holy Scriptures ſhould be careful to obſerve. viz. 1. That a perſon is ſometimes, in Scripture, ſaid to do a thing, when the meaning is, that he only declares, that the thing will be done, or that it is done already, by thoſe who are capable of doing it. Thus God ſays to Jeremiah, ch. i. 10. "I have this day ſet thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to deſtroy," &c. But it is evident, that it was not the work of a prophet, to root out, or pull down, or deſtroy; but only to declare and foretel what was to come to paſs. So likewiſe, the actions here mention'd, not being in the prophet's power, 'tis certain, that this order only ſignified, Declare to this people, that their heart is fat, that their ears are ſtopt, and their eyes ſhut. Hence, where the prieſt is commanded to make him clean, whoſe fleſh the leproſy had covered all over, ſo as to be all turned white, our tranſlators have very well rendred it, that "he ſhall pronounce him clean." And ſo alſo in other places. And, 2. That a thing is often ſaid, to be done by a perſon, who only permits, or at moſt grants, that it ſhall be done; as may be ſeen, in Exod. iv. 21. vii. 13. viii. 19. ix. 7, 35. and xiv. 8. Iſa. lxiii. 17. and many other places of Scripture. Both which rules may be comprehended in this one, That when a Scripture ſeems to expreſs any thing contrary to right reaſon, we are to conclude, it muſt admit of another meaning: And by theſe we may eaſily rectify moſt of the faults which are to be found in all verſions; eſpecially thoſe which aſcribe to God ſuch actions as are unworthy of him, and incompatible with his holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs, and the reſt of his divine attributes. The tranſlators make Moſes ſay, Deut. xxix. 4. That God "had not given the Iſraelites an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear;" from which, Libertines take occaſion to diſculpate themſelves, and lay all their ſins at God's door. Yet he who but opens the book may find, that God here highly upbraids that people for their unbelief, their ſtupidity and obſtinacy in their ſins; notwithſtanding all the admonitions he had given them; all the promiſes he had made of bleſſing them, if they hearken'd to his counſel; the terrible threatnings of giving them over to their enemies, and to utter miſery and ruin; and, in fine, notwithſtanding all the miracles he had wrought in their favour, ſince the beginning of their Egyptian bondage, to engage 'em to obſerve his laws. How then is it poſſible to imagine, that God, after all this, for juſtifying his dealing towards them, and to convince them of their wickedneſs, ſhould ſay, that he had not given them a heart to perceive his deſigns, nor eyes, nor ears to conſider them? We muſt therefore reform all the verſions in that place, and ſay with Moſes, Hath not God given you a heart? &c. There is ſcarce any perſon can without aſtoniſhment read what the tranſlations make Jeſus Chriſt, and his Apoſtles ſay, with alluſion to the ſame prophecy of Iſaiah, Matth. xiii. 14. Mark iv. 12. Luke viii. 10. John xii. 40. and Rom. xi. 8. as well as in this place. For, 1. It gives them a meaning which is quite oppoſite to the nature and deſign of a parable; which is a plain and ſimple way of ſpeaking, proportion'd to the underſtanding of perſons of the meaneſt capacity; an example or compariſon, borrow'd from what the moſt ignorant do underſtand, to explain ſomething that might have ſome difficulty in it. Now it looks very odd, that our Saviour ſhould ſpeak to the multitude in parables, that is, in a plain and familiar way, that they might not perceive or underſtand him! The true way not to be underſtood by them, was to ſpeak in myſteries: But the text tells us, that for this very reaſon he did not ſpeak to them in myſteries, as he did to the diſciples, but by parables. 2. This tranſlation is contrary to the deſign of Chriſt's coming into the world, and continuing ſo long in it; which was, in a great meaſure, to reform mankind, and to make them wiſer and better, Acts x. 38. 1 Tim. ii. 4 Tit. ii. 12. and 2 Pet. iii. 9. And as he deſign'd the good of mankind in general, ſo, in a moſt particular manner, he deſign'd the good of the Jewiſh nation, of the loſt ſheep of Iſrael, whom theſe words of Iſaiah do ſpecially concern. Among them he liv'd, to them he preach'd, before them he wrought many mighty works, at the ſight of their approaching ruin he wept; for them he pray'd, after they had rejected all his calls and invitations, and even when they were putting him to death, and treating him with all the indignities and injuries that their malice could invent, or their power inflict; and to them he firſt ſent his Apoſtles, who did not turn to the Gentiles till the Jews had proved altogether obſtinate and incurable. Now, how is it poſſible to imagine, that he could have a deſign to blind and harden them for whom he had done and ſuffer'd ſo much? Indeed, if this had been true, they might with good reaſon expoſtulate with God, as our tranſlations make their forefathers to do, Iſa. lxiii. 17. "O Lord, why haſt thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardned our heart from thy fear?" At ſuch divinity I ſhake and tremble! Some philoſophers indeed have taken pleaſure to expreſs themſelves obſcurely: But, far be it from us to attribute any ſuch deſign to the Saviour of the world; who was no reſpecter of perſons; who calculated his doctrines to all capacities, becauſe he would have all to be ſaved, and became a propitiation for the ſins of the whole world. In ſhort, this hardning does not infer a neceſſity of doing evil; as appears from what St. Paul plainly declares, concerning the idolatrous Heathens, and the ſtiff-necked Jews. Of the Heathens he ſays, Rom. i. 24, &c. that "God gave them up to uncleanneſs, through the luſts of their own hearts, and unto vile affections, and to a reprobate mind:" And yet 'tis certain, that he ſent unto them the offer of the Goſpel, and open'd unto them the door of grace; at which likewiſe a great many of them did ſoon enter. And of the Jews, he ſays, (as our Saviour himſelf had alſo ſaid,) that "God had blinded their eyes, and hardned their heart," John xii. 40. and "given them the ſpirit of ſlumber; eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear," Rom. xi. 8. and yet 'tis evident, that he uſed all endeavours to convert and ſave them, and ſeveral of them were actually converted. And it is very remarkable, that tho' it be ſaid, John xii. 39. "they could not believe;" yet it follows there, ver. 42. "Nevertheleſs, among the chief rulers alſo many believed on him:" From whence it is evident, that the impoſſibility, ſpoken of ver. 39. was not abſolute; and that their hardning did not infer a neceſſity of ſinning. (Eſſay) See the notes on the ſeveral texts here quoted.

The ſalvation of God.] Here obſerve, The epithet or title given the goſpel; "the ſalvation of God:" 1. It is ſtyled Salvation; becauſe it makes a tender, and univerſal offer of life and ſalvation unto loſt ſinners. 2. It is called "the ſalvation of God;" becauſe it is a ſalvation of his providing and contriving, of his revealing and diſcovering; it is his by way of patefaction and diſcovery; his by way of tender and offer; his by way of power and efficacy; "The ſalvation of God is ſent unto the Gentiles." (B.) See the notes on ch xiii. 46.

In his own hired houſe.] They who were ſent priſoners out of the provinces, were uſually ſent to the Præfectus Prætorii, or general of the camp. It was therefore a favour, that St. Paul was thus permitted to dwell "in his own hired houſe:" And this kindneſs perhaps was ſhewn him, either through the teſtimony the centurion had given of him, as a good and virtuous man; or by reaſon of the letter ſent by Feſtus to Ceſar concerning him, that he was guilty of no crimes committed againſt the Roman laws. (W.) Where alſo let us note the ſtill more ſpecial favour indulged St. Paul, now a priſoner at Rome, with ſo much freedom, and without any moleſtation, to preach the goſpel in his own hired houſe for two years together. Where obſerve, 1. Who preaches; St. Paul, a priſoner; whereas ſuch ſcarcely ever have liberty to hear, more rarely to preach. 2. Where he preached; even in proud, powerful, and imperious Rome, and in his own hired houſe there. 3. To whom he preached; to "all that came unto him." He ſet open the doors of his houſe to all comers; excluding none from the gracious offers of ſalvation by a Redeemer, upon the condition of faith and obedience. 4. How long he continued his miniſtry at Rome; for "two whole years," at that time: He would neither be allured by flatteries, nor hectored by threatnings, to lay down his miniſtry, or deſiſt from his preaching. 5. After what manner he preached; "with all confidence," boldneſs, openneſs, and freedom; with ſuch an undaunted courage, as neither love of life, nor fear of death, could overcome. 6. The ſubject-matter of his preaching; "The kingdom of God and things concerning the Lord Jeſus Chriſt:" Not vain janglings or envious railings; but Jeſus Chriſt, and the way of ſalvation by him. Laſtly, With what freedom he did all this; "No man forbidding him:" Neither Emperor, nor ſenate, nor magiſtrate, nor ſoldier, nor prieſt, nor people, tho' in an Heathen city, devoted to idolatry, in the leaſt hindring or forbidding him. (B.) Thus far St. Luke leads us, in his book of The Acts. That after two years he was releaſed from his impriſonment, is evident from undoubted authorities; and that it was after his going a ſecond time to Rome, that he was crown'd with martyrdom there; as is already mention'd in the Introduction to The Acts. Where he ſpent the intermediate years of his liberty, is not agreed among the eccleſiaſtical writers. We ſhall therefore rather chuſe to take leave of him here, than enter upon ſuch a queſtion, wherein 'tis impoſſible to come at any certain determination; and proceed, in the courſe of this undertaking, directly to his, and the other following, epiſtles in their order.

The END of the ACTS.

ANNOTATIONS
UPON
The EPISTLE of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE, TO THE ROMANS.

BEFORE we enter upon this to the Romans in particular, it may be of ſome ſervice to the reader, to ſay ſomewhat briefly, of all St. Paul's Epiſtles in general.

I don't mean to enlarge upon the divine authority of theſe and the other Apoſtolical Epiſtles: But ſhall content my ſelf with aſſerting, That they are prov'd to be genuine, by more authentic arguments, than can be produced for any other book, writing, charter, law, or ſtatute whatſoever; which the reader may find largely and learnedly maintain'd in Dr. Whitby's general preface to them.

As to the occaſions of writing them, it muſt be obſerv'd, That, as they were written, either to whole churches, or to certain particular perſons, for the uſe of the churches; ſo they were not deſign'd for the firſt planting Chriſtianity any where, but ſuppoſe it already planted, among thoſe to whom the reſpective Epiſtles were ſent: And conſequently, we are not to expect, that they ſhould contain all the neceſſary doctrines and fundamental principles of the Chriſtian religion; but only ſuch as were neceſſary for the confuting and rooting out thoſe tares of Hereſy, and other falſe notions, which had been ſince ſcatter'd among them; to confirm them in the true faith, to guard them againſt the invaſions of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, to reprove the erroneous doctrines and vicious practices which had crept in, and to ſupply all their ſpiritual wants, as occaſion requir'd. The beſt way therefore to interpret the moſt difficult paſſages in theſe Epiſtles, is to learn and conſider, by the hiſtories of thoſe times, what ſtate thoſe particular churches were in; what oppoſitions they then met with; what dangers they were moſt expoſed to, and what ſort of inſtructions they ſtood the moſt in need of.

But whereas certain perſons, who profeſs their belief of the Sacred Text, do nevertheleſs take the liberty to criticize upon the ſtyle of theſe inſpired writings, in ſuch a manner as tends to the diſparagement of them, among conceited wits and ſhallow Rhetoricians, or at leaſt to the diminution of that high eſteem which is due to them on account of their divine author; and eſpecially with the ſtyle of St. Paul, which they preſume to cenſure, as looſe, unpolite, rugged, improper, full of ſoleciſms, and what elſe they are pleas'd to charge it with; We ſhall have occaſion hereafter, and eſpecially on 1 Cor. i. 10. ii. 1. 2 Cor. xi. 6. and 2 Pet. iii. 16. more particularly to ſhew the vanity and falſe grounds of this bold imputation. In the mean time, ſuch affected criticks may be pleas'd to remember a ſhort ſentence of an author, whom ſome of 'em are wont to read with leſs prejudice, (I mean Mr. Lock;) That if any one has thought St. Paul a looſe writer, it was only becauſe he was a looſe reader! And the like may be juſtly ſaid of all the reſt.

As to the order of time, in which St. Paul wrote his ſeveral Epiſtles, the Holy Scriptures themſelves have not given us any clear intimation; nor are the Eccleſiaſtical writers exactly agreed about it. The ordinary account, as given us by the learned Hammond, will appear at once moſt clear in this view; viz.

D. 52. 2 Theſſalonians, in 53. 1 Corinthians, Galatians, 2 Corinthians, and Romans, in 57. Epheſians, Philippians, Coloſſians, and Philemon, in 62. Hebrews in 63. 1 Timothy, and Titus, in 65. and 2 Timothy, in 67, For the reaſons of which great difference, and how to reconcile this, and the other difficulties occurring, in the beſt manner we are capable, the reader will excuſe us, till we come ſeverally to theſe Epiſtles, as they ſtand here before us.

'Tis agreed however, that this Epiſtle to the Romans was not the firſt in order of writing: But that it was plac'd firſt, in ancient times as well as now, we may learn from Epiphanius; who affirms, that it was always ſo placed, in all authentic copies of the Sacred Canon; and that only Marcion the Heretic had taken upon him to ſet the Epiſtle to the Galatians in the firſt place. And the reaſon of this precedence ſeems to have been, either, 1. The reſpect to the dignity of Rome, the Imperial Seat: Which as it afterwards occaſion'd the precedence of the Biſhop of that city, before other cities which were ſooner converted; ſo, in forming the canon of Scripture, it gave the like occaſion to ſet this Epiſtle before others which were more early written. Or elſe, 2. The ſublimity of the matter, and the excellency of the doctrine contain'd in it; with reſpect to which ſome have call'd it The marrow of divinity, The key of the New Teſtament, The Chriſtian church's confeſſion of faith, and The moſt divine Epiſtle of the moſt holy Apoſtle.

Now, that it was written from Corinth, is evident, 1. From ch. xvi. 23. where he mentions "Gaius his hoſt," (where he then lodged,) and "Eraſtus the chamberlain of the city;" which Gaius appears to have been of Corinth, 1 Cor. i. 14. and that "Eraſtus abode" there alſo, 2 Tim. iv. 20. And, 2. Becauſe he recommendeth Phœbe, here, ch. xvi. 1. as being "a ſervant of the church at Cenchrea;" which Cenchrea was a ſea-port of Corinth.

As to the preciſe time when it was written, Dr. Hammond ſays, It was after St. Paul's coming again to Corinth from Epheſus, a little before the Emperor Claudius's death, which is placed by chronologers in A. D. 55. That this appears from his own words, ch. xv. where he ſays, ver. 19. that he had preach'd the goſpel through Greece, "round about unto Illyricum;" agreeable to what we find in Acts xx. 2, 3. that, after his departure from Epheſus, "he came into Greece, and there abode three months;" meaning the region from Achaia to Illyricum: And again he ſays, He had then no more to do in thoſe parts, but was "going unto Jeruſalem, with the contributions for the poor Saints there," Rom. xv. 23, &c. Which journey we find him ready to undertake, Acts xx. 3. but, becauſe "the Jews laid wait for him, he purpoſed to return through Macedonia." By which it is manifeſt, that this was the point of time wherein this Epiſtle was written; viz. after his coming to Illyricum, and before his going up to Jeruſalem with the contribution; which was about the time of Claudius's death. This is controverted by Dr. Whitby, 1. Becauſe it is not ſaid that St. Paul came to Corinth, in that journey through Greece, Acts xx. 2. but rather gainſaid by himſelf, 2 Cor. i. 15, 16. where he excuſes himſelf for not coming to them; and declares ch. xiii. 1. that "the third time" he was ready to come to them. And, 2. Becauſe, when he wrote to the Romans, he knew the contributions of the church of Corinth were actually made, and even depoſited in his hands, and was going up to Jeruſalem with them, Rom. xv. 25, &c. whereas, when he travell'd Greece, and came to Macedonia, Acts xx. 1, &c. they either indeed were not ſo, or at leaſt he knew not that they were ſo; and therefore ſent Titus firſt, and then his ſecond Epiſtle to them, that they might be ſo, 2 Cor. viii and ix. However, ſince 'tis agreed on all hands, that this Epiſtle was written from Corinth, and about that time beforemention'd, the reader will not (I ſuppoſe,) think it material enough to ſpend more time here upon the preciſe queſtion, whether it was the firſt, or ſecond, or third time of St. Paul's being there, or the 55th or 57th year of Chriſt. Only this may be obſerv'd by the way, That Dr. Whitby himſelf, from Dr. Lightfoot, tells us, in his preface to the Second Epiſtle to the Corinthians, That St. Paul did come to Corinth, in his journey from Philippi to Troas; he ſailing about from Philippi to Corinth, to make good his promiſe, while the reſt who were with him, Acts xx. 4. went directly the next way to Troas, and there waited for him.

In the next place, we may obſerve, That this Epiſtle to the Romans was written before he had ever been at Rome; as is evident from ch. i. where he mentions his "longing to ſee them," ver. 11. and informs them, "that oftentimes he purpoſed to come unto them, but was let hitherto," ver. 13. But, whereas there ſeems to have been a Church already planted at Rome, in ſo eminent a manner, as to be "ſpoken of throughout the whole world," ver. 8. Dr. Hammond thinks, That ſome other Apoſtle, and particularly St. Peter, muſt be ſuppoſed to have preach'd there, becauſe the ancients were wont to ſay, that this Church was founded and edified by thoſe two Apoſtles. But, whatever may be ſaid for this ſuppoſition, 'tis not eaſy to believe, that if theſe firſt Chriſtians at Rome had receiv'd the faith from ſo eminent an Apoſtle, (and eſpecially if he had then been actually their Biſhop, as the modern Romaniſts do contend,) St. Paul in this whole Epiſtle ſhould not honour him with ſo much as a common ſalutation, amongſt others. Baronius, I know, pretends, That St. Peter might then be abſent from Rome, and preaching in other parts; or, ſuppoſing him there, he might have ſent him particular letters by the ſame hand, and therefore did not mention him in this Epiſtle! But the learned Cardinal ſhould have told us, how it happen'd alſo, that there was no notice taken of him, when St. Paul came himſelf to Rome, and "called the chief of the Jews together," Acts xxviii. 17. who plainly appear'd to be much more ſtrangers to the principles of "this ſect," (as they ſtiled Chriſtianity, ver. 22.) than they could reaſonably be ſuppos'd to have been, in caſe they had already receiv'd inſtruction from the great Apoſtle of the circumciſion himſelf. But in truth, the church here at Rome, when St. Paul wrote this epiſtle, ſeems (as that alſo at Antioch was) for the moſt part to be made up of foreigners, both Jews and Gentiles, whom buſineſs had drawn thither from other converted provinces; as appears both from the Apoſtle's ſalutations of former acquaintance, ch. xvi. and from his writing to them, not in Latin, but in Greek. See more in the notes on the ſeveral texts here quoted.

And laſtly, The main deſign of this famous epiſtle is, fully to ſtate and determine the great controverſy between the Jews and Gentiles, about the obligation of the rites and ceremonies of the Jewiſh law, and thoſe main and material doctrines of Chriſtianity, which did depend upon it; ſuch as of Chriſtian liberty, the uſe of indifferent things, &c. and, which is the main end of all religion, to inſtruct them in, and preſs them to, the duties of a holy and good life, ſuch as the Chriſtian doctrine does naturally tend to oblige men to.

CHAP. I.

Paul declareth his calling in general, and his particular deſire to viſit them: What the goſpel is, and the righteouſneſs which it teacheth: That God is angry with all manner of ſin; ſuch eſpecially as the Gentiles were moſt addicted to.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. PAUL, a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, called to be an Apoſtle, ſeparated unto the goſpel of God, (Which he had promiſed afore by his prophets in the holy ſcriptures) Concerning his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; which was made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the ſpirit of holineſs, by the reſurrection from the dead: By whom we have received grace and apoſtleſhip, for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name: Among whom are ye alſo the called of Jeſus Chriſt. To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be ſaints: Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Paul.] See the notes on Acts xiii. 9.

A ſervant.] The word doulos is not here taken as oppoſed to a freeman; but ſignifieth a miniſter, or a man wholly addicted to Chriſt's ſervice; whoſe ſervice is perfect freedom: In which ſenſe, Moſes, Joſhua, David, and other holy men are called the ſervants of the Lord. (Aſſ.)

Called to be an Apoſtle.] Cletos Apoſtolos; The called Apoſtle. He expreſſeth here his call, partly becauſe it was "not of men, neither by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt" immediately, Gal. i. 1. and partly to ſhew the Romans, that what he wrote to them in this epiſtle was according to the duty of his calling, and that he had good warrant and commiſſion for it. (Idem.) The word Apoſtolos ſignifies here a legate, or ambaſſador of Chriſt, ſent to declare the goſpel to all nations: And ſuch a one was St. Paul, who had a general commiſſion, to preach both to the Jews and Gentiles; tho', ſpecially, by the appointment of God, with the conſent of both parties, "the goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed unto Paul, as the goſpel of the circumciſion was unto Peter," Gal. ii. 7. (Idem.) See the notes on Matth. xx. 16.

Separated unto the goſpel of God.] That is, Set apart in the purpoſe and decree of God; "ſeparated from his mother's womb," Gal. i. 15. Immediately and extraordinarily called by Chriſt himſelf to this great work, Acts ix. 15. And mediately by the officers of the church, Acts xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c. The work of diſpenſing the myſteries of the everlaſting goſpel, is to be undertaken by none but thoſe who are ſolemnly ſeparated and ſet apart for it, and regularly called to it. I would to God, the lay-preachers at this day would conſider this. Theſe uſurpers of the ſacred function can neither pray in faith, for a bleſſing upon what they undertake, becauſe they have no promiſe to bottom their faith upon, nor can the people expect to profit by what they hear from them; for this would be to expect God's bleſſing out of God's way. Read with trembling what God ſays, Jer. xxiii. 32. "I ſent them not, neither commanded them; therefore ſhall they not profit this people at all." Where mark, That the peoples not profiting by theſe men, is not charged upon their falſe doctrine, but upon their want of a call and commiſſion: It is not ſaid, that their doctrine is unſound, but they preach unſent; "therefore they ſhall not profit this people at all." Theſe men contradict the command of God, the univerſal practice of the Chriſtian church; violate the rules of order and right reaſon, and expoſe a moſt awful and tremendous ordinance of God to contempt and ſcorn; yea, lay it open to the bold preſumption of every ignorant aud impudent pretender. (B.) See the notes on Acts ix. 15. and xiii. 2.

Promiſed afore by his prophets.] Proepengeilato; promiſed or foreſhew'd: Foreſhew'd in the types of the law, and promiſed before in the words of the "prophets which were ſince the world began," Luke i. 70. See the notes on Luke xxiv. 27, 44.

In the holy ſcriptures.] The ſcriptures are holy, in ſeveral reſpects; 1. In regard of their author and inditer; the holy Spirit of God. 2. In regard of the penmen and writers of them; "holy men of God." 3. In regard of the ſubject-matter contained in them; the holy will of God. 4. In regard of them to make us holy both in heart and life. And if the word of God be an holy word, then let it be treated by us with all holy deference and regard. Lord, what an impious liberty do ſome men take in this wanton age, to furniſh our jeſts in ſcripture attire, and in their jocular humour to make light and irreverent applications of ſcripture phraſes and ſentences! They lay their ſchemes or ridiculous mirth in the Bible, and play the buffoons with the moſt ſerious things in the world! Theſe men bring forth ſcripture, as the Philiſtines brought forth Sampſon, only to "make them ſport, Judg. xvi. 25." But they ſhall e'er long find Almighty God in earneſt. tho' they were in jeſt! He that magnified his word, above all his name, will not brook it, that any man ſhould make it vile and contemptible, by rendring it the theme of his giddy mirth and prophane drollery. (B.)

Made of the ſeed of David.] Genomenos, genitus, begotten, according to Vatablus: Natus, born, according to Eraſmus, and others. But the word properly ſignifieth made: Which doth better ſet forth the admirable conception of Chriſt, of a virgin, without the help of man; which is not ſo well expreſſed in the other reading, to ſay he was born, or begotten. (Leigh and Aſſ.) See the notes on John i. 14.

Declared to be the Son of God.] Horiſtheis; Demonſtrated, or defined. (H.) Bellarmin ſaith, horizein never ſignifies in ſcripture to declare; and that all the Latins render it predeſtinated. I anſwer, 1. That horizein ſignifies in this very place to declare; as St. Chryſoſtome interprets it, who well underſtood the force and import of the word: And ſo do Tertullian, Occumenius, Theodoret and Theophylact. 2. That the Latin fathers follow'd the vulgar tranſlation; in which this word is ignorantly and improperly rendred; as Eraſmus, and Faber, and Cajetan do obſerve, and every one muſt confeſs who knows any thing of the Greek. (Whitak.) And, 3. That this word horizein, never ſignifies to predeſtinate, in ſcripture; nor doth the ancient interpreter any where elſe render it ſo; but wherever we find the word predeſtinate, except in this place, the Greek is not horizein, but prohorizein. (Eſtius) The ſame who "was made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh," was alſo declared, and by moſt demonſtrative arguments proved, "to be the ſon of God." And this ſenſe is moſt agreeable to the words there following. (Williet, and Leigh) The word in the original ſignifieth more than a bare declaration; namely, a declaration by a ſolemn ſentence, or definitive judgment; as in Pſa. ii. 7. "I will declare the decree; The Lord hath ſaid unto me, thou art my ſon." (Aſſ.)

By the reſurrection from the dead.] Here we learn, 1. That the reſurrection of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt from the dead, by the Holy Ghoſt, is a powerful and convincing demonſtration that he was "the ſon of God." Chriſt, as man, is no where ſaid in ſcripture to be the ſon of God, but with relation to the divine power of the Holy Ghoſt, by whom he had life communicated to him from the father, both at his conception and at his reſurrection. At his conception he was the ſon of God, by being conceived by the Holy Ghoſt; but this was ſecret and inviſible, known only to the mother of our Lord: Therefore at his reſurrection, by "the ſpirit of holineſs," that is, by the immediate power of the Holy Ghoſt, God thought fit to give a publick and viſible demonſtration to the whole world, that Jeſus was his own ſon, the promiſed and true Meſſias; and conſequently did thereby give teſtimony to the truth and divinity of our Saviour's doctrine and miracles. God did now publickly own his ſon in the face of the whole world, and freed him from all ſuſpicion of being an impoſtor or deceiver: For it is not ſuppoſable, that God ſhould put forth an Almighty power to raiſe him from the grave, if he had by robbery aſſumed that glorious title of the ſon of God: Therefore, ſaith the Father of him, in the morning of the reſurrection, "thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee;" that is, in the words of our Apoſtle here, declared, and made thee conſpicuouſly appear, "to be the ſon of God with power, according to the ſpirit of holineſs by the reſurrection from the dead." Yet obſerve, 2. That tho' Chriſt was raiſed from the dead, by the power of God's holy ſpirit, yet did he certainly raiſe himſelf by his own power, as God, according to his own prediction, John ii. 19. "Deſtroy ye this temple of my body, and in three days I will raiſe it up;" according to St. Peter's aſſertion, 1 Pet. iii. 18. "Being put to death in the fleſh;" that is, in his human nature, "but quickned in the ſpirit;" that is, by the power of his godhead or divine nature quickning himſelf: For had he been only raiſed by the power of God, and not by his own power, how could his reſurrection have been a declaration that he was the Son of God? What had more appeared in Chriſt's reſurrection than in other mens? For they were raiſed by the power of God, as well as he: But here lies the difference; Chriſt roſe by a ſelf-quickning principle: Others are raiſed by a quickning principle, derived from Chriſt; with reſpect to which he is called "the reſurrection and the life," John xi. 25. that is, The principle of quickning life, by which the dead Saints are raiſed. 3. That the Apoſtle doth not ſay, Chriſt was made, or conſtituted, the Son of God by his reſurrection from the dead, but declared ſo to be: Multa tunc fieri dicuntur, quando facta eſſe manifeſtantur; according to the phraſe of ſcripture, things are then ſaid to be, when they conſpicuouſly appear. Nothing can be more evident, than that Chriſt was the Son of God before the reſurrection; yea, before his incarnation, being the father of eternity, Iſa. ix. 6. But the glory of his divinity was much clouded, darkned, and eclipſed, by the frailty of his humanity, by the miſeries of his life, and the ignominy of his death. But by his reſurrection God rolled away his reproach, and freed him from all the aſperſions and accuſations of his enemies; who charged him with blaſphemy, for affirming that he was the Son of God: And thus our Jeſus, in whom we truſt, was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the ſpirit of holineſs by the reſurrection from the dead." (B.) See the notes on John ii. 19.

Grace and Apoſtleſhip.] Charin cai apoſtolen; The grace and authority of the Apoſtleſhip. (Fell) See the notes on Eph. iii. 8.

For obedience to the faith.] That God may be obey'd, thro' faith in the goſpel; not that men ſhould engage in prophane diſputes concerning the nature of God. (G.) The ſpirit of faith is not a ſpirit of diſputation, but of obedience. (Q.) See the notes on Matth. xx. 7.

Called to be Saints.] Chetois hagiois; the called Saints. (H.) See the notes on ver. 1.

Grace to you, and peace.] The uſual ſalutation, in former times, was pax vobis: But after the new gift of the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, purchas'd by our Lord, the new evangelical ſalutation adds grace; gratia & pax. (Fell) Either by grace he underſtands all ſpiritual and ſupernatural, and by peace all temporal bleſſings, agreeable to the ſignification of the Hebrew ſhalom, which implies happineſs, or proſperous ſucceſs in all things; or by grace, God's free-will and favour, and by peace the fruit and enjoying of the ſame, which brings peace of conſcience, termed Chriſt's peace, John xvi. 33. and "peace with God," Rom. v. 1. (Aſſ.) Grace and peace comprehend all bleſſings, ſpiritual and temporal: Grace implies and includes both the ſpring and fountain of all divine favour, and likewiſe the ſeveral ſtreams which flow from that fountain: All the effects and fruits of grace and peace, according to the Hebrew manner of ſpeaking; all good things, for ſoul and body, for time and eternity. (B.) See the notes on John xiv. 27. and xx. 19.

The Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] Here note, The perſons from whom theſe bleſſings are derived; "from God the father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:" From God, as the ſovereign and fontal cauſe; and from Chriſt, as the mediator of all; without whom we have nothing to do with any of the divine favours; for both "grace and peace come by Jeſus Chriſt:" And whereas Chriſt is called Lord, and here joined with the Father, and the ſame bleſſings are ſaid to flow from Chriſt as from the Father; we learn, that Chriſt is really and undoubtedly God, equal with the Father, bleſſed for evermore. But, Why is the Holy Ghoſt here excluded; no mention at all being made of him? Anſ. He is not excluded, tho' he be not named, but neceſſarily imply'd in the forementioned gifts: Becauſe grace and peace are the fruits of the Spirit, they come from God the Father, through the mediation of the Son, and are wrought in us by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt. Beſides, in other ſalutations, tho' not in this, the Holy Ghoſt is expreſly mentioned; as in 2 Cor. xiii. 14. "The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghoſt be with you." (B.) The Apoſtles commonly attribute the name of God to the Father, and of Lord to the Son. (Fell)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Firſt, I thank my God through Jeſus Chriſt for you all, that your faith is ſpoken of throughout the whole world. For God is my witneſs, whom I ſerve with my ſpirit in the goſpel of his Son, that without ceaſing I make mention of you always in my prayers, Making requeſt (if by any means now at length I might have a proſperous journey by the will of God) to come unto you. For I long to ſee you, that I may impart unto you ſome ſpiritual gift, to the end ye may be eſtabliſhed; That is, that I may be comforted together with you, by the mutual faith both of you and me. Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purpoſed to come unto you (but was lett hitherto) that I might have ſome fruit among you alſo, even as among other Gentiles. I am debter both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians, both to the wiſe, and to the unwiſe. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the goſpel to you that are at Rome alſo.

I thank my God, through Jeſus Chriſt.] As no petition is, ſo no thanks are, acceptable to the Father, but "through Jeſus Chriſt;" through whom deſcend all our bleſſings; by whom are preſented all our prayers; and who is the mediator in all things between God and us. (Fell) See the notes on ver 7.

That your faith is ſpoken of.] The modern Romaniſts would perſwade us, that St. Paul here doth not only declare what the church of Rome was then, but moreover that he did propheſy, that it ſhould be an excellent church unto the world's end; and that his commendation reſpecteth not only the Chriſtians at Rome in his days, but alſo their poſterity and ſucceſſors for ever: And many of them do unwarily take it for granted, that ſince the faith of their church was once right and ſound, (which St. Paul doth here intimate and confeſs,) ſhe neither did nor could adulterate and corrupt it; and ſo, that is as ſincere and pure now, as ever it was in the Apoſtle's days. For the detection of which fallacy, we muſt obſerve, 1. What the faith was, which the Apoſtle here commendeth the church of Rome for, and which he ſaith, was "ſpoken of throughout the whole world." Tis certain, in the general, that their faith was not different from that of other churches; for, as there was but "one Lord," ſo there was but "one faith" faith" over the whole Chriſtian world, Eph. iv. 5. And the reaſon, why St. Paul with thankfulneſs takes notice of the Romans faith, was, not becauſe it was other, or more excellent, than that which was receiv'd in other places; but becauſe Rome being the great imperial city, whereunto the world was neceſſitated to have recourſe, the Chriſtian faith was likely thence to diſſeminate it ſelf over all the parts of the empire in a ſhort time. In thoſe days, the creed of all Chriſtians was a plain, eaſy, and ſhort one: For they thought themſelves obliged only to believe the eſſentials of Chriſtianity, and to lead good lives; and it had been well for Chriſtendom, had after ages taken no other care: But, by multiplying articles, ſome have multiplied errors too. And this appears from hence, 2. That the primitive faith of the church of Rome is actually altered; which if prov'd, will at once take away all their pleas of an infallible ſpirit, all their pretences to antiquity, all their arguments againſt our Reformation, and all thoſe inſinuations whereby they beguile ignorant and unwary men. And, for the proof of this, we may (among many other conſiderations here waved for brevity-ſake,) obſerve, 1. That whereas St. Peter and St. Paul refer us to the holy Scripture, as a "ſure word of propheſy," 2 Pet. i. 19. and that by which "the man of God may be perfect, throughly furniſhed unto all good works," 2 Tim. iii. 17. their pretended ſucceſſors teach the neceſſity of tradition. 2. Whereas St. Peter affirms, that there is no ſalvation in any other, but in Chriſt only, and that "there is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we muſt be ſaved," Acts iv. 12. and St. Paul that "there is one mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus," 1 Tim. ii. 5. now there is taught the doctrine of the invocation, and truſting in the interceſſion and merits of Saints! 3. Whereas the ſame Apoſtles teach us, that "Chriſt ſuffered once for ſins," 1 Pet. iii. 18. and that "once for all," Hebr. x. 10. now the doctrine there is the daily ſacrificing Chriſt in the Maſs! 4. Whereas St. Peter teacheth us, that "the king is ſupreme," 1 Pet. ii. 13. and both he and St. Paul command "every ſoul to be ſubject to the higher powers," Rom. xiii. 1. the modern doctrine at Rome is, that the king himſelf is not the ſupreme; but may be reſiſted, depoſed, or murder'd, and his ſubjects abſolv'd from the obligation of their natural allegiance! &c. See Dr. Edward Pelling's ſermon on this text.

Throughout the whole world.] That is, throughout all the churches, this joyful news was ſpread, that there were Chriſtians even in the imperial city it ſelf. (Fell) For as there was a reſort to Rome from all parts of the world, every one might relate the news of this in his own country. (Aſſ.)

God is my witneſs.] See the notes on Matth. v. 34.

Without ceaſing.] See the notes on Luke xviii. 1.

That I may impart to you ſome ſpiritual gift.] This, by moſt, is interpreted of the ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge, by which St. Paul would inſtruct them. I rather chuſe to refer it to ſome ſpiritual gift which he at his coming would beſtow upon them, by the impoſition of his hands upon ſome of them, as the Apoſtles uſed to do, Acts viii. 17. xix. 6. 2 Tim. i. 6. For, 1. That is moſt agreeable to the phraſe metadounai chariſma pneumaticon, to give the ſpirit, or a ſpiritual gift. 2. To his words in the cloſe of this epiſtle, ch. xv. 29. that he ſhall come to them "in the fulneſs (eulogias) of the bleſſing of the goſpel of Chriſt;" that phraſe being applied to the giving of the Spirit and his gifts, Gal. iii. 14. Eph. i. 3. And, 3. To the end here aſſigned of the imparting this gift, viz. The eſtabliſhment of the Romans in the faith: For the vouchſafement of the Spirit, and his gifts, unto the churches, is ſtill called bebaioſis, the confirmation of them in the faith, 1 Cor. i. 5, 6. 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. (W.) See the notes on ver. 15.

That I may be comforted.] As he had, in the foregoing verſe, intimated, that the Romans were as yet but weak in the faith; here he ſoftens what he had ſaid, ſhewing, that he ſhould not only impart comfort to them, but they alſo to him. (G.) So that he might not ſeem to upbraid them with their weakneſs. (Fell)

But was lett hitherto.] That is, hindred; viz. Either by buſineſs, as ch. xv. 22. or by perſecution, as 1 Theſſ. ii. 2. or by the Spirit, as Acts xvi. 7. (Idem)

Have ſome fruit among you alſo.] Meaning converts or proſelytes: For ſo the words corn, and fruit, do frequently ſignify; as in Pſa. lxxii. 16. Iſa. xxvii. 6. Matth. xiii. 23. and Col. i. 6. (Johnſon) See the notes on John iv. 35, 36. and xv. 16.

Even as among other Gentiles.] Of all whom St. Paul was the Apoſtle, in a peculiar manner. See the notes on ver. 15. and Gal. ii. 7.

I am debter both to the Greeks.] To wit, to preach the goſpel to them, by the command of God. See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 16.

To the wiſe, and to the unwiſe.] By this addition, he explains what he meant by the foregoing terms of Greeks and Barbarians. See the notes on Acts xxviii. 2.

I am ready to preach.] St. Paul here ſeems plainly to challenge Rome as part of his province, as being "the Apoſtle of the Gentiles." So alſo in ch. xi. 13. and xv. 15, 16, &c. When therefore the ancients tells us, that St. Peter was the Biſhop of Rome, as well as St. Paul, this can only be true of St. Peter, as to the Jewiſh converts there, while St. Paul was the Apoſtle and Biſhop of the Gentiles at Rome, according to the agreement, Gal. ii. 9. And ſo, the Biſhop of Rome, if he will be St. Peter's ſucceſſor, muſt only preach to the Jews, or be the Biſhop of the circumciſion. Moreover, it ſeems highly probable, that St. Peter was not yet come to Rome; much leſs had ſettled his ſee there. For, if ſo, why ſhould St. Paul be ſo deſirous, ſo often purpoſing to come to them, to "impart ſome ſpiritual gift to them, to the end they might be eſtabliſh'd," unleſs St. Peter were either inſufficient for, or very negligent in, that work? (W.) See the preface.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. For I am not aſhamed of the goſpel of Chriſt: For it is the power of God unto ſalvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Greek. For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed from faith to faith: As it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith. For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs, and unrighteouſneſs of men, who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs. Becauſe that which may be known of God, is manifeſt in them; for God hath ſhewed it unto them. For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; ſo that they are without excuſe: Becauſe that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkned. Profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, they became fools: And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God, into an image made like to man, and to birds, and four-footed beaſts, and creeping things. Wherefore God alſo gave them up to uncleanneſs, through the luſts of their own hearts, to diſhonour their own bodies between themſelves: Who changed the truth of God into a lye, and worſhipped and ſerved the creature more than the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever. Amen. For this cauſe God gave them up unto vile affections: For even their women did change the natural uſe into that which is againſt nature: And likewiſe alſo the men, leaving the natural uſe of the woman, burned in their luſt one toward another; men with men working that which is unſeemly, and receiving in themſelves that recompenſe of their error which was meet. And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do thoſe things which are not convenient: Being filled with all unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, coveteouſneſs, malicioufneſs; full of envy, murder, debate, malignity; whiſperers, backbiters, haters of God, deſpiteful, proud, boaſters, inventers of evil things, diſobedient to their parents; without underſtanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful: Who knowing the judgment of God (that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death) not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them.

Not aſhamed of the goſpel.] I am ſo far from concealing, that I am very forward and earneſt to make known "the goſpel of Chriſt," whatſoever oppoſition or perſecution or pains it coſt me. (H.) Here note, 1. He does not ſay, I am not afraid to preach the goſpel; but "I am not aſhamed;" becauſe ſhame hinders our readineſs more than fear: A man may be fit and ready to preach the goſpel, and yet be afraid to undertake it; but he who is aſhamed of the work can never be fit for it. 2. When the Apoſtle ſays, he is "not aſhamed of the goſpel," more is intended than expreſs'd. I am ſo far from being aſhamed, that I count it my glory: As if he had ſaid, Verily, I eſteem it the higheſt honour than can be conferr'd on me, to preach the goſpel at Rome, tho' it ſhould coſt me my life. (B.) See the notes on Matth. x. 32. and Luke xii. 8.

The power of God unto ſalvation.] That is, the preaching of the goſpel is attended by and accompanied with an almighty power, which renders it effectual to ſalvation, if we do not bolt our ears and hearts againſt it. Learn hence, That the plain and perſuaſive preaching of the goſpel is the choſen inſtrument in God's hand, which he uſes and honours for conveyance of ſpiritual life unto the ſouls of men, tho' it be deſpiſed and ridiculed by the men of the world. The goſpel is powerful: It is the power not of men or angels, but of God; not the eſſential, but the inſtrumental power of God: It works as an inſtrument, yet not as a natural, but as a moral inſtrument in God's hand; freely, not arbitrarily. The power of the goſpel is not from the preachers of the goſpel; therefore do not idolize them: But they are the inſtruments in God's hand, their words are the vehicle or organ, through which the vital power of the Spirit is convey'd; therefore do not villify and think meanly of them. (B.) Men are called by the miniſtry of the goſpel, 2 Theſſ. ii. 14. ſeconded and made powerful by the Spirit of God. For, 1. By it our minds are enlightened, Luke i. 79. Acts xxvi. 18. to ſee our own miſery in ourſelves, and the infinite mercies of God in the myſtery of ſalvation by Chriſt. 2. By it, as by "the arm of God," Iſa. liii. 1. men are drawn unto him, that they may turn unto God, and believe in Chriſt. Neither is there any means in the world ſo effectual to work the converſion of a ſinner, or to bring him unto faith in Chriſt, as the miniſtry of the word; by which if a man will not be perſwaded, neither will he believe, tho' an Angel ſhould come from Heaven, or a man be raiſed from the dead, Luke xxvi. 31. For indeed the miniſtry of the Goſpel is "the power of God to our ſalvation:" And, tho' in the world it be contemned, as a weak and fooliſh means, yet it is the good "pleaſure of God, by the fooliſhneſs of preaching, to ſave them that believe," 1 Cor i. 21. (Downame)

To the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Greek.] Greek, when put in oppoſition, or contradiſtinction, to Jews, always ſignifies a Gentile. (Beza) See the notes on Matth. x. 6. Acts iii. 26. and xiii. 46.

The righteouſneſs of God.] For the explaining of this verſe, the firſt thing to be examined, is the notion of Dicaioſune, righteouſneſs, and with the addition of Theou, "the righteouſneſs of God." Dicaioſune, righteouſneſs, ſignifies not always the virtue of juſt dealing, but ſometimes, by a metonymy, the matter about which that is converſant; the things which by law are required of any, and in performance of which his righteouſneſs conſequently conſiſts. Thus, Mat. iii. 15. when Chriſt ſaith to John, "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs;" by righteouſneſs are meant all thoſe things that, under that more imperfect miniſtry of John, were preſcribed men, and required of them to do, to their being approved by God. Thus, thoſe things which are required of Jews to perform under the Moſaical law, are called "the righteouſneſs which is in the law," Phil. iii. 6. And, there being two ſorts of proſelytes of the Jews, one of thoſe which undertook the whole law of the Jews, and were circumciſed, &c the other of thoſe which only received the ſeven precepts of the ſons of Adam, and Noah; the former of theſe were called indifferently proſelytes of the covenant, and proſelytes of righteouſneſs: Where righteouſneſs ſignifies all thoſe commands and ordinances, which in that Moſaical covenant were required of the Jews, and without ſubmiſſion to which no ſtranger was permitted to come into their inner court of the Temple, and joyn with them in the worſhip of God. To this purpoſe it is obſervable, what was the prime occaſion of this epiſtle, the great charge which by the Jews was laid on Paul, for preaching the goſpel to the Gentiles, and thereby promiſing them acceptance and mercy from God for all their paſt ſins, on condition of their embracing the goſpel, and living for the future according to that rule, without any performance of the ritual laws of Moſes, circumciſion, &c. This the Jews violently oppoſed, as that which was an apoſtatizing from the law of Moſes, and the ſetting up a new righteouſneſs, a new ſummary of performances, a new law, to the prejudice of the Moſaical. What Paul had thus done, he here aſſerts and ſtands to; as that which was now the declared will of God, under the goſpel, tho' diſtinct from that which had before been required of Jews under the law. And as now he ſets up the faith of Chriſt, the law of faith, the ſummary of thoſe things which Chriſt from God requires of all men, againſt the ordinances of external obedience in the Moſaical law, ſo he thinks fit to ſtyle one "the righteouſneſs of God," as the other was the Jews righteouſneſs; and this "righteouſneſs of God," of, or by, faith, that is, that which Chriſt hath now revealed or declared to be our righteouſneſs; that which is required of us now under the goſpel, to our being juſtified in God's ſight, in oppoſition to that ſort of legal performances, circumciſion, &c. by obſervation of which the Jew and the Judaizer pretended to be acceptable, and juſtified before God, and without which they contended that there was no juſtification to be had, and conſequently that the uncircumciſed Gentiles could not be juſtified, or acceptable in the ſight of God: The contrary to which is by St. Paul here undertaken to be proved, and is after enlarged on, ch iii, and iv. &c. Thus much for the occaſion of this phraſe, and the general importance of it; to note that way of œconomy of ſaving and juſtifying men under the goſpel. As for the more particular nature of this way of God's dealing in Chriſt, that is alſo contained in the words "by faith;" as faith ſignifies the embracing, and obeying of Chriſt, after a former life of ſin and ignorance, ſuch as the Heathens had lived in. For whatſoever their former lives had been, againſt which the Jews objected, that they were idolatrous and vile, and neither capable of God's favour, nor fit to be convers'd with by any pious perſon, yet Chriſt that "came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance," came particularly, tho' not primarily, to call, and offer place of repentance to them, and upon reformation, to allow them pardon: which tho' it were not a righteouſneſs by, or from, works, a way of œconomy, whereby only juſt or worthy perſons are called and received, yet it is a righteouſneſs by, or from, faith, whereby thro' God's mercy, and pardon of ſin in Chriſt, thoſe that come in to him, and give up themſelves to ſincere obedience for the future, are accepted, and juſtified by God, as Abraham was; which is ſtiled God's juſtifying the ungodly; becauſe thoſe that have been moſt impious, have yet place of repentance given, and are accepted by God upon repentance. In this ſenſe, we ſhall oft find this word righteouſneſs in the enſuing chapters. So ch. ix. 30. The Gentiles laid hold on righteouſneſs; that is, on this evangelical way: And ch. x. 3. The Jews, not knowing this courſe of juſtifying ſinners, ſet down in the goſpel, ſought "to eſtabliſh their own (Judaical) righteouſneſs," and were not ſubject to Gods righteouſneſs. So again, ver. 6. The ſame phraſe, as here, in this placing and conſtruction of the words, the righteouſneſs from, or by, faith; that is, this evangelical way, which is by the faith, or the goſpel, and is oppoſed to the diaconia thanatou, the promulgation of the law, which brought nothing but death to every act of wilful ſin. So the Apoſtles are called, Diaconoi dicaioſynes, "miniſters of righteouſneſs," 2 Cor. xi. 15. viz. of this way of juſtifying men in Chriſt, who elſewhere are call'd "miniſters of the covenant;" noting righteouſneſs, in this notion, to ſignify this new covenant, or this evangelical way under it, explain'd, ch. iii. 24. by our "being juſtified freely by his grace," or mercy, without any ſuch precedent obedience of ours as may any way challenge it. All that remains is to inquire, Firſt, Why ec piſteos, from, or by, faith, ſhould in the conſtruction be joyn'd with dicaioſyne, righteouſneſs? And ſecondly, Why eis piſtin, to faith, ſhould ſignify "that we may believe?" For the firſt, It is but an ordinary hypertaton, both in theſe and other authors, thus to tranſpoſe words, on the like occaſion: And that it is ſo here is evident, by the enſuing citation out of the prophet, (which notes theſe two to be parallel,) "As it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith;" and by the like phraſe, ch. iii. 22. and x. 6. And, for the ſecond, that will be very agreeable alſo to many other places in this book: For ſo eis ſoterian, to ſalvation, ver. 16. is, that they may be ſaved; eis cauſin, to burning, Hebr. vi. 8. that it may be burnt; eis metanoian, to repentance, Wiſd. xi. 23. that they may repent; eis hypocoen, to obedience, Rom. vi. 16. that ye may obey; and eis anomian, to iniquity, ver. 19. that ye may commit all villany; as, in the concluſion of that verſe, eis hagiaſmon, to purification or ſanctification, is, that ye may live pure and ſanctified lives (H.) By "the righteouſneſs of God," both here and elſewhere, in the epiſtles of St. Paul, ſeems to be meant God's method of juſtifying, or pardoning, the paſt ſins both of Jews and Gentiles, (that is, of the whole world,) through faith in the merits and blood of Chriſt, which is ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins. This method "is revealed from faith to faith." The meaning is, this method, which was wholly unknown to the Gentiles, and but obſcurely made known to the Jews, is revealed in the goſpel to be "by faith:" And this, in order to beget faith in men, or to perſwade them to believe in Chriſt; it being the only way, whereby thoſe to whom the goſpel is preach'd, could obtain ſalvation. Nor can any take encouragement from hence to live wickedly: For faith in Chriſt includes the receiving him as a prophet to teach, as a prieſt to make atonement, and as a king to rule and govern, and the living up to the religion which Jeſus Chriſt taught the world. The prophet, long ago, taught, that "the juſt ſhall live by faith;" that is, by faith in the promiſe of God, which lays an indiſpenſible obligation to obedience. (Fox)

The wrath of God is revealed.] Our Apoſtle having aſſerted and laid down a general propoſition, that the juſtification of a ſinner is to be expected by the righteouſneſs of the Mediator in a way of faith; he now undertakes the proof and demonſtration of it thus: He diſtributes the whole world into Gentiles and Jews; The former ſeeking righteouſneſs by the dim light of nature, or the law written in their hearts; the latter by the works of the law, that is, by their external conformity to what the law of Moſes exacted and required of them. Now, his preſent buſineſs is to prove, diſtinctly and fully, that neither Gentile nor Jew could ever find what they thus ſought. He begins here with the Gentiles, and ſhews, that indeed they had inbred notions of a God, imprinted in their minds by nature, and alſo had the book of the creatures before their eyes, in which much, very much, of God might be ſeen: Yet theſe common notices of God, and of good and evil, they did not obey and put in practice, but rebelled againſt the light and dictates of their natural conſciences; for which cauſe "the wrath of God was revealed from Heaven againſt" them. Here obſerve, 1. A dreadful manifeſtation of divine wrath; "the wrath of God revealed from Heaven:" The wrath of God; that is, the indignation or vengeance of God. This the ſinner ſhall feel who doth not fear it: For the fears of an incenſed deity are no bugbears; nor the effects of ignorance and ſuperſtition, as the Atheiſts fancy. This wrath is ſaid to be "revealed from Heaven;" that is, diſcovered and made manifeſt by the God of Heaven; partly by the light of nature, their own conſciences giving them notice and warning of it; and partly by the examples of others, in the laſhes of a divine ſeverity on the back of ſinners, by the hand of an incenſed God. Thus the wrath of God was revealed to the Gentiles from Heaven. 2. The object or impulſive cauſe of his revealed and inflicted wrath; namely, "all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men. Ungodlineſs compriſeth all ſins againſt God, or neglect of the duties of the firſt table: Unrighteouſneſs comprehends all ſins againſt our neighbour, or the breaches of the ſecond table. Note here, that the abſtract is put for the concrete; the ſins for the ſinners that commit them: The wrath of God is revealed "againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men;" that is, againſt all ungodly and unrighteous perſons: The meaning is, that God will certainly puniſh theſe ſins upon the perſons of the ſinners. 3. The ſpecial aggravation of theſe their ſins, or that which made them ſo very provoking to almighty God; namely, that they "held the truth in unrighteouſneſs;" that is, their natural convictions were kept down, under the dominion and power of their corruptions: Luſt in their wills and affections was too hard for the light in their underſtandings; they entertained the light of truth in their minds, but did not ſuffer it to have its proper effect and influence upon their hearts and lives; thus making that a priſoner which would have made them free. Learn, 1. That it is a very great aggravation of ſin, for men to offend againſt the light of their own minds, and to rebel againſt the convictions of their own conſciences. 2. That the wrath of God is dreadfully incenſed againſt all thoſe that live in any courſe of ſin, rebelling againſt the dictates and convictions of their own enlightened conſciences. Dread it then, as thou dreadeſt hell itſelf, to ſin againſt knowledge, to rebel againſt the light of thy own mind, to ſlight the whiſpers, or ſtifle the voice of thy own conſcience; but reverence and obey its dictates as the commands of God. (B.)

Manifeſt in them.] En autois; In them, or among them: Namely, among their wiſe and learned ones; who left a number of clear and judicious eſſays and ſentences hereof in their writings, tho' they themſelves did act contrary to the ſame. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John i. 9. and Acts xiv. 17. and xvii. 30, 31.

From the creation of the world.] Apo ctiſeos coſmou, is here join'd with aorata autou, "the inviſible things," or attributes, of God, "his power and godhead, from the foundation or "creation of the world," that is, ever ſince the creation; as alſo the like phraſe doth ſignify, Matth. xiii. 35. xiv. 21. and xxv. 34. Mark x. 6. and xiii. 19. Luke xi. 50. Hebr. iv. 3. and ix. 26. 2 Pet. iii. 4. Revel. xiii. 8. and xvii. 8. By which it appears that there is no neceſſity of underſtanding God's poiemeta, doings, or actions here, of the works of the creation only; but of all things which from that time to this incluſively, have been done in the world by him: And ſo it will be extended to all the doctrines and miracles and actions of Chriſt, the whole buſineſs of the goſpel. (H. and W.) Learn hence, 1. That much of the being and eſſential perfections of God may be known by the light of nature, if attended to; and much more may be underſtood by the book of the creatures if attentively look'd into. "The inviſible things of God are clearly ſeen from the creation;" that is, the creation of the world is a plain demonſtration to men of the being and power of God. 2. That all ſuch perſons will be left for ever "without excuſe" before God, who either extinguiſh the light of nature, and ſmother the natural notices which they have of God, or do not improve them by a due conſideration of the works of God. Without opening the eye of reaſon, the book of the creation is of no more uſe to us than to the brute beaſts: They ſee the creatures as well as we, but many of us conſider the creatures, and ſee God in the creation no more than they: And this will leave us "without excuſe." 3. How endearing are our obligations to almighty God, for the favour and benefit of divine revelation; that, together with the light of nature, we have the ſuperadded light of ſcripture; the law to convince us of our ſin; the goſpel to diſcover a Saviour. The Heathen had only thoſe natural Apoſtles of ſun, moon, and ſtars, to guide them to God, and inſtruct them in their duty to him: But we have the wiſdom of the father, the incarnate ſon of God, and his inſpired Apoſtles and miniſters, to lead us into all truth, and his holy ſpirit to excite and quicken us in our obedience to him. Therefore eternally magnified be omnipotent love, for the light of ſcripture, for the benefit of divine revelation: For tho' there be a natural theology, there is not a natural chriſtology; there is a natural divinity, but not a natural goſpel; a knowledge of God by the light of nature, but no knowledge of Jeſus the mediator, without the light of ſcripture. All thanks, be to God for his unſpeakable gift! Lord, how will all ſuch as contemn it be left "without excuſe." (B.) See the notes on Acts xiv. 17. and xvii. 27.

When they knew God.] From this verſe to the end of the chapter we have a large and black catalogue of ſins which the old Heathens or Gentiles were guilty of; ſome of which they voluntarily committed, and others they were judicially deliver'd up unto; for God, without any impeachment of his holineſs, often puniſhes ſin with ſin. Their ſins voluntarily committed are here recited: And the firſt of them is their ſinning againſt light and knowledge. (B.) and Q.) This phraſe, gnontes ton theon, knowing God, is here, by ſome, thought to refer this whole diſcourſe to the Gnoſticks; ſo call'd from their aſſuming to themſelves ſo much of the knowledge of God, and the myſteries of religion. (See Dr. Hammond at large upon this place.) But this is look'd upon as a ſtrange conceit; becauſe ſome of the ſins here mention'd, and particularly, ver. 23. and 26. were never charg'd upon thoſe Hereticks by any of the ancients (W.) See more of this point in the notes on 1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Pet. ii. 1 &c. and Jude 4 &c.

Glorified him not as God.] That is, they did not conceive of him, and worſhip him, as became his divine excellencies and perfections; they did not eſteem ſo highly of him as they ought, and pay that homage and honour to the deity which they ſhould. (Bever. and B.) To know God, and not to adore and glorify him, by putting truſt in him alone, and referring every good thing to him by thankſgiving, would be a ſin leſs ſurprizing, and more tolerable, were it to be found only in Pagans. Whoever imitates them in their infidelity will be puniſh'd like them. Human reaſon muſt needs be very corrupt, ſince, having been given to man on purpoſe to ſeek God, it ſerv'd the wiſeſt perſons to no other end, but to lead them to a greater diſtance from him. And here we may obſerve the ſeveral degrees of puniſhment in ſuch caſes, viz. 1. To loſe the light which men have abuſed, and to fall into darkneſs and blindneſs of heart, ſo far as no longer to know God. 2. Not to know themſelves any longer; and to think themſelves ſo much the more wiſe, the more fooliſh they really are. 3. No longer to know the reſt of the creatures, but to look upon their images as gods, 4. Even to give to beaſts that honour which is due to God alone. 5. A general corruption, which paſſes from the heart to their bodies; and from their own bodies to thoſe of others; and from the natural uſe to all manner of brutality and abomination. And, 6. The falling into a fulneſs of unrighteouſneſs, and conſummate wickedneſs, and ſuch a torrent of all ſorts of crimes, that nothing eſcapes his depravation. (Q.)

The glory of the uncorruptible God.] The deſcription of God, in the New Teſtament is this, that he "dwelleth in the light which no man can approach unto," 1 Tim. vi. 16. That he "is light," 1 John i. 5, 6. And thus he always exhibited himſelf to men in a mighty ſplendor of flame and light, as a viſible token of his ſpecial and majeſtic preſence. Thus he appear'd to the Antediluvians; to Adam, Cain and Abel, when they brought their offerings to the Lord, i. e. to the place where his Schechinah, or glorious preſence, uſed to appear: For God "had reſpect unto Abel and his offering;" i. e. ſaith Theodotion's tranſlation, he ſet it on fire by a ſtream of light, or flame from the Schechinah, which then uſually appear'd at the place of worſhip. Why elſe doth Cain complain, "from thy face ſhall I be hid?" Or why is he ſaid to "go out from the preſence of the Lord?" Gen. iv 4, 14, 16. So, after the flood, we may preſume, he appear'd to Noah, offering burnt-offerings to him: For, God accepting his oblation, as he did Abel's, 'tis reaſonable to conceive, that he gave the like token of that acceptance. So he appear'd to Abraham, Gen. xv. 17. Whence St. Stephen ſays, Acts vii. 2. "The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham." In this viſible majeſty God appear'd again unto him, Gen. xvii. 1. For in the concluſion of that chapter 'tis ſaid, ver. 22. "God went up from Abraham;" i. e. the glory of the Lord aſcended, ſay the Chaldee paraphraſt, and B. Uzziel. So he appear'd to Moſes in the buſh, Exod. iii. 2. and to the people on mount Sinai, ch. xxiv. 16, 17. where "the ſight of the glory of the Lord was like fire." This viſible appearance of God in light is, above thirty times, in the Old Teſtament, ſtiled "the glory of the Lord." And this Schechinah was not only given to the Jews after the law, but to the Gentiles before the law, as a preſervative from idolatry; or to inſtruct them to make no other reſemblance of him, or ſymbol of his preſence, beſide that which he from the beginning had choſen to appear in: But this, ſaith the Apoſtle here, they changed into the ſimilitude of men and birds &c. And of the Jews making the golden calf, God ſays, "they changed their glory into the ſimilitude of a calf," Pſa. cvi. 20. and of the ſame Jews departing from God to idols, it is ſaid, "my people hath changed their glory for that which doth not profit," Jer. ii. 11. (W.)

Birds, and four-footed beaſts, and creeping things.] As the Ibis among the Egyptians; the golden calf among the Iſraelites; the owl among the wiſe Grecians; the eagle among the Romans; Belus, in the ſhape of a dragon, among the Babylonians; and worms among the Troglodytæ: Nay, they deſcended even to worſhip garlick, and a piece of red cloth; as Strabo relates of nations in the north eaſt. (Andr.)

God alſo gave them up.] See the notes on Acts vii. 42. and xxviii. 26.

Changed the truth of God into a lie.] That is, the true God into an idol; call'd "a lie," becauſe it deceives men, as a lie doth, by ſeeming to be that which indeed it is not: It ſeems, in the dolater's fancy, to have ſomething of divinity in it; when in reality it is but wood or ſtone. (B.)

Worſhipped and ſerved.] Eſebaſtheſan cai elatreuſan. The former of theſe words is wont to be ſpoken of ſacrifices; and the latter of the bodily geſture uſed in religious worſhip. (G.) In ver. 23. they are charg'd only with falſe repreſentations of God, but in this alſo with a falſe object of their worſhip, by giving the divine honour to a creature. (W.) See the notes on ver. 23.

More than.] Of the uſe of para here for above, one inſtance will ſuffice, in the epiſtle of Eleazar, the high-prieſt, to Ptolemy; telling him by way of great acknowledgment and gratitude, All things that are profitable to you, though they be (para phyſin) above nature, we will obediently perform. Thus Luke xiii. 2, 4. "ſinners above all others," tho', Luke iii. 13. it be more fully expreſs'd by pleon para, more beſides, or above. As for the other notion of para, for contrary to, which here may have place alſo (for he that worſhips any thing above, or beſide the one true God, doth it in oppoſition to him, and to the wronging and robbing him), we have an expreſs teſtimony for it, Acts xviii. 13. para ton nomon, "contrary to the law." (H.) In the time of St. Paul this had prevail'd ſo far, that the Cæſars, when dead, were honour'd with divine worſhip: And if any was perjur'd, in ſwearing by the Emperor, he was ſeverely puniſh'd; if by God, he eſcap'd unpuniſh'd. (G.)

Bleſſed for ever. Amen.] See the notes on John xxi. 25.

That which is unſeemly.] Aſchemoſyne: A filthy action, join'd with the moſt ſhameful geſtures. (Leigh)

They did not like.] Ouc edocimaſan. This word docimazo hath many meanings: But moſt uſually it ſignifies to prove; not by arguments, but by trial and experience; As Luke xiv. 19. Rom. xii. 2. and xiv. 22. 1 Cor. xi. 28. and xvi. 3. 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Gal. vi. 4. Phil. i 10. 1 Theſſ. ii. 4. and v. 21. 1 Tim. iii. 10. Jam. i. 12. and 1 Pet. i. 7. Here it ſignifies, Not allowing, or regarding, or making a due and precious account of the knowledge of God. (Leigh) See the notes on ch. ii. 18.

To retain God in their knowledge.] That obſervation of ſome is moſt true, that, in the Scripture, verba ſcientiæ connotant affectus, words of knowledge do imply affections and actions anſwerable. To know God, is not ſo much to know his nature and eſſence, as to honour and obey him; which thoſe who do not, are ſaid not to know him, tho' they know ever ſo much of his nature and attributes: Knowledge without practice is with God accounted ignorance; and hence all ſins are termed, agnoemata, ignorances. (Andr.)

To a reprobate mind.] Eis adocimon noun; to a mind which could not be approved of by God or man; to do (ta me catheconta,) things not agreeable to nature, or to reaſon. (W.) Here we may obſerve the conſonance in the original, between adocimon here and ouc edocimaſan in the beginning of the verſe: The puniſhment like the fault; as in ver. 24. the puniſhment of their diſhonouring God was diſhonouring themſelves. (Fell) Which manner of ſpeaking is very frequent in the ſcripture; eſpecially in ſetting down God's puniſhments, wherein the ſacred writers delight to obſerve ſome correſpondence: As, Pſa. xviii. 26. Mat. v. 19. and many more places. (H.) See the notes on ch. ii. 18. and Acts xxviii. 26.

Filled with all unrighteouſneſs.] He that would ſee a larger comment upon this, and the two following verſes, may conſult the learned Grotius. I only ſhall obſerve, from the Greek commentators, 1. That from theſe words it ſeemeth reaſonable to interpret all that follows, as ſome ſpecies of unrighteouſneſs or injuſtice. That poneria ſignifies that wickedneſs, which cauſes men to do miſchief againſt their neighbours by treachery; cacia, to do it out of malice; and cacoethia, to accuſtom themſelves to do ſo. 3. That pſithyriſtai are they who whiſper things to the damage of others when they are preſent; and catalaloi, they who openly defame them when abſent. And, 4. That hyperephania is that pride which puffs us up, on account of the things we do enjoy; and alazoneia, that boaſting we make of things which we have not. (W.)

Covetouſneſs.] See the notes on Luke xv. 15.

Malignity.] Cacoethia; A ſowreneſs of diſpoſition, apt to diſcommend; oppoſed to candour. (Fell) See the note foregoing.

Such things are worthy of death.] That murder, adultery, and unnatural luſts deſerved death, they knew; not only by the light of nature and of conſcience, but by their own laws, condemning thoſe to death who did them. That all theſe ſins, being ſpecies of injuſtice, condemn'd by the law of nature, rendred them obnoxious to the diſpleaſure of that God who is the governor of the world, and the avenger of all unrighteouſneſs, and ſo obnoxious to death for violating the laws he had given them to govern themſelves by, they might know by the light of nature. Hence of their Tartarus, which they held to be carcer pænarum infernarum (the priſon or dungeon of helliſh puniſhments) Tertullian ſpeaks thus, Illuc abſtrudi ſolent impii &c. [Into that place are thruſt, thoſe who are undutiful to their parents, and the inceſtuous, and the adulterers, and the raviſhers of virgins, and the ſodomites, and the cruel, and thieves, and murderers.] And to this agrees the deſcription of their puniſhments, in the poet;

Hic, quibus inviſi fratres, dum vita manebat,
Pulſatuſve parens, & fraus innexa clienti;
Aut qui divitiis ſoli incubuere repertis,
Nec partem poſuere ſuis, quæ maxima turba eſt;
Quique ob adulterium cæſi; quique arma ſecuti
Impia; nec veriti dominorum fallere dextras;
Incluſi pœnam expectant, &c.—
Vendidit hic auro patriam, dominumque potentem
Impoſuit; fixit leges pretio, atque refixit:
Hic thalamum invaſit natæ, vetitoſque Hymenæos;
Auſi omnes immane nefas. Virgil. (W.)

Here thoſe who brothers for a crown diſown,
Turn out their parents, and uſurp the throne,
Deceive the ſubjects who are not their own:
Who ill-got riches like a God adore,
Forgetting nature's ties, their parents poor;
Of ſuch, in hell, there is a mighty ſtore.
Theſe kill'd for lawleſs love: Bold rebels there,
Who 'gainſt their lawful prince had levied war;
Ungrateful creatures, impious as unjuſt,
Contemn'd their honour, and betray'd their truſt.—
Here's one his country to a tyrant ſold,
Impos'd a foreign lord for foreign gold:
Who laws repeal'd and chang'd, or new laws made,
Not as the people pleas'd, but as they paid.
Here's one his daughter's bed by marriage ſtain'd:
All dar'd the worſt of ills, and what they dar'd obtain'd.
Lauderdale.

In the ſoul of man two things are to be conſider'd; the ſyntereſis, and the ſyneideſis. The ſyntereſis reſpects the underſtanding, which comprehends certain principles of nature; as that murder, adultery, and ſuch like, are ſins, and worthy of puniſhment: The ſyneideſis reſpects the conſcience, which makes the aſſumption, or particular application, after this manner; but we have committed ſuch things; therefore, we are worthy of puniſhment Now, in the ſyntereſis, or general apprehenſion of the underſtanding, the Gentiles themſelves diſcern'd theſe things to be ſins, and "worthy of death:" But in the ſyneideſis, or application, they greatly fail'd; viz. that they were guilty of theſe ſins, and therefore that eternal death belong'd to them. (Reſſold)

Have pleaſure in them that do them.] This, ſay the Greek commentators, is much worſe than the bare doing of them. For a man may do them through the power of temptation, and by conſideration may after become ſenſible of his ſin, and repent of it: But, when he is arriv'd at that height of wickedneſs, that he not only approves, but delights in ſeeing the like things done by others, he demonſtrates ſuch a ſtrong affection to them as is incurable. (W.) See the notes on Acts viii. 1.

CHAP. II.

They who commit ſin, tho' they condemn it in others, are inexcuſable and ſelf condemn'd; So that they cannot eſcape the judgment of God, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. The Gentiles judged by the law of nature. Circumciſion not available to the Jews, unleſs they keep the law.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. THerefore thou art inexcuſable, O man, whoſoever thou art that judgeſt: For wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thy ſelf; for thou that judgeſt, doeſt the ſame things. But we are ſure that the judgment of God is according to truth, againſt them which commit ſuch things. And thinkeſt thou this, O man that judgeſt them which do ſuch things, and doeſt the ſame, that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgment of God? Or deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? But after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up unto thy ſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God; Who will render to every man according to his deeds: To them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality; eternal life: But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs; indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh, upon every ſoul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile: But glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile. For there is no reſpect of perſons with God. For as many as have ſinned without law, ſhall alſo periſh without law: And as many as have ſinned in the law, ſhall be judged by the law, (For not the hearers of the law are juſt before God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified. For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, theſe having not the law, are a law unto themſelves: Which ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another) In the day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt, according to my goſpel.

Thou art inexcuſable.] See the notes on ch. i. 20.

Whoſoever thou art.] Whether learned philoſopher of the Gentiles, or Jew boaſting of the law.

That judgeſt.] That is, cenſureſt, and condemneſt others; as the philoſophers did the vulgar, and the Jews the Gentiles. (Fell) See the notes on Matth. vii. 1. &c.

Doeſt the ſame things.] If to any one it ſeem ſtrange, that the Apoſtle ſhould pronounce the Jews (to whom he here addreſſes himſelf,) guilty of the ſame ſins of which he had accuſed the Gentiles, ch. i. let him conſider what their own Joſephus hath recorded of them, and he will ceaſe to wonder. For he aſſures us, there was not a nation under Heaven more wicked than they were. What (ſaith he) have ye done of all the good things required by our law-giver? What have ye not done of all thoſe things which he pronounced accurſed? So that, had the Romans delay'd to come againſt theſe execrable perſons, I believe, (ſays he) either the earth would have ſwallowed up, or a deluge would have ſwept away, their city; or fire from Heaven would have conſumed it, as it did Sodom; for it brought forth a generation of men far more wicked than they who ſuffered ſuch things. There is not a ſin mention'd, ch. i. of which he doth not, in that hiſtory, accuſe them, not excepting that of unnatural luſts. (W.)

We are ſure.] Oidamen; We know. (H. and W.) Reaſon itſelf teaches us this. (G.)

According to truth.] That is, uprightly and juſtly; not according to the outward appearance, but as things are indeed. (Aſſ.) The Hebrew, by one word, ſignifieth both truth and juſtice, and is rendred in the Greek by aletheia and dicaioſyne; of which the former is here put for the other, as on the other ſide the unjuſt mammon is oppoſed to the true riches. (H.) See the notes on Luke xvi 9.

Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs.] Here he argues eſpecially againſt thoſe who were of opinion, that their caſe ſtood not ill with God, foraſmuch as God bleſſed them many ways in this world, and gave them abundance of wealth and honour; as he did to the Romans, above other people, who had the command over all other nations (Aſſ.) But, beſides this, the proſperity, or preſent impunity of the wicked draweth with it an erroneous perſwaſion in others, of their own freedom from danger. "Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily; therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil," ſaith the preacher, Eccleſ. viii. 11. They harden their hearts, becauſe they ſee wicked men eſcape puniſhment; and conclude, with him in the Pſalmiſt, that God "is altogether ſuch a one as themſelves," Pſa. l. 21. Whereas they ought to reaſon, as the Apoſtle doth here, that "the goodneſs of God leadeth them to repentance;" and that he deferreth his puniſhment, that they ſhould not defer their repentance (Andr.)

Treaſureſt up unto thy ſelf wrath.] Theſaurizes; Heapeſt up God's judgments upon thee, in the manner of a treaſure, which increaſeth by daily addition. (Aſſ.) He who accumulates ſin, accumulates wrath (Fell) that is, puniſhment. (Aſſ.) As ſinners have treaſure of ſin, ſo God has treaſures of wrath for ſinners. (B.) See the notes on Acts vii. 51.

Revelation of the righteous judgment.] Obſerve here, the deſcription given by the Apoſtle of the day of judgment: He calls it a "revelation of the righteous judgment of God." The judgment of God is always righteous; but it is not always revealed and openly made manifeſt now: Therefore a time ſhall come, when there ſhall be a full revelation of it; a day in which the righteouſneſs of God's proceedings ſhall be univerſally manifeſted and magnified. Then will all the divine attributes be conſpicuouſly glorified; God's wonderful clemency ſweetly diſplay'd; his exact juſtice terribly demonſtrated; his perfect wiſdom clearly unfolded; all the ſecret ſprings of providence wiſely manifeſted; all the myſterious depths of divine counſels fully diſcover'd, and the injur'd honour and glory of almighty God viſibly clear'd and repair'd; to the joyful ſatisfaction of all good men, and to the dreadful conſternation and confuſion of the wicked and impenitent world. (B.) This the word apocalypſis properly ſignifies: But the king's manuſcript reads it antapodoſis, which ſignifies retribution. (H.)

Who will render.] Apodoſei. The ſame word is tranſlated "ſhall give," 2 Tim. iv. 8. But it had been more proper, and agreeable to the Greek, to have ſaid there alſo, as here, will render or repay: Which nevertheleſs is wholly of mercy in reſpect of us or our deſerving, but of juſtice, in reſpect of his promiſes, and Chriſt's merits, unto which is rendred and repaid that which he deſerv'd for us. The crown therefore (mentioned in that text to Timothy) is a due debt, becauſe it is promiſed to us, for Chriſt's ſake; not becauſe any works of ours are able to purchaſe it. (Fulke) From the text here before us, Papiſts infer merit of works: But, 1. The word apodounai, to render, ſignifieth not only a juſt retribution, but a gift of favour; as in Matth. vi. 4, 6, 18. and xx. 8 (Pareus and Willet) 2. The Apoſtle ſaith "according to his deeds," not for his deeds, or for any merit of his works: Which diſtinction noteth the quality, not the merit of their works; that is, that good works ſhall be recompenſed with reward, and evil with puniſhment. (Faius) See the notes on Luke xvii. 10.

To them, who by patient continuance.] The Apoſtle, having, in the foregoing verſe, declar'd the impartiality of the judge, here proceeds to ſhew the univerſality of the judgment, and the diſtinct rewards aſſigned to the righteous and the wicked reſpectively, according to the quality of their works. Wherein obſerve, 1. The righteous perſons deſcribed, and their reward declared. They are deſcribed by their "well-doing;" by their "continuance in well-doing;" and by their "patient continuance in well-doing." They are not weary in well-doing; they can undergo ſufferings for the ſake of it; and they can patiently wait for the reward of it till hereafter, while others ſnatch at their reward here: Yet, in the mean time, they are ſeeking after, and ſecuring this their reward; They "ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality;" that is, They ſeek for a portion of glory and immortality in the world to come; they leave the world to the men of the world; and while thoſe are ſcrambling for earth, theſe are making ſure of heaven: And there their reward ſhall be "eternal life." 2. The wicked are alſo here characteriz'd; and their reward aſſigned them. They "are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs:" That is, They contend with God, and reſiſt the light of his revealed truth; they refuſe the offers of his grace, and kick againſt his word, diſobeying the Goſpel of truth, but obeying unrighteouſneſs: And for ſo doing, their reward ſhall be "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh." (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 29.

Of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile.] See the notes on ch. i. 16.

No reſpect of perſons with God.] That is, He regardeth not the outward quality or condition of men, nor meaſureth them by their country, nation, power, riches, or honour, either to receive them, or to caſt them away. The Greek word proſopolepſia ſignifies as well countenance as perſon; and the ſenſe comes all to one: For by countenance we are to underſtand the outward appearance of men in the world, or thoſe things by which men are outwardly valued and eſteemed. (Aſſ. and Leigh) See the notes on Acts x. 34.

As many as have ſinned.] The Gentiles, which had only the law of nature, ſhall not be judged by the law of Moſes: The Jews, which have both the law of nature and the law of Moſes, ſhall be judged by both: And conſequently, Chriſtians, which have the law of nature unwritten, the Moſaical law written, and moreover the Evangelical law, both written and preached, ſhall lie under greater guilt, and receive a more aggravating condemnation. (B.) See the notes on Luke xii. 47, 48.

For, not the hearers of the law.] That is, not the bare "hearers of the law" ſhall upon that account, be "juſt before God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified;" that is, accepted of God, as acting ſuitably to their holy profeſſion. It is notoriouſly known, the Jews, gloried in, and reſted upon, their outward privileges for ſalvation, becauſe they were Abraham's ſeed; becauſe they were circumciſed; becauſe they were employed in reading and hearing of the law; they concluded this ſufficient to render them acceptable with God: Therefore, ſays the Apoſtle, "not the hearers, but doers, of the law ſhall be juſtified;" that is, the perſons whom God will accept, and account righteous, for the ſake of Chriſt. Note here, That the doers of the law, or word of God, are the beſt hearers; yea, the only hearers in the account of God: Hearing is good, but it muſt not be reſted in; a great underſtanding may a man have, by much reading the word and law of God: But "a good underſtanding only have they that do the word and will of God, the praiſe and fruit of that endureth for ever, Pſa. cxi. 10." (B.) See the notes on Matth. vii. 21.

The Gentiles, which have not the law.] The ſenſe is, that "the Gentiles, which have not the law" of Moſes promulged, are yet not without a law ingrafted in their conſciences: And altho' they have not a written law, yet are they a law, that is, a rule of living, to themſelves; doing thoſe things "which ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſciences bearing witneſs" to it, and their natural reaſon either accuſing or defending of them from it. Learn, 1. That there is a law of nature ingrafted, and written by God, in the hearts of men, whereby the common notions of good and evil are found with them. 2. That this law of nature ſerveth for the inſtigation and provocation of men, to many good actions and duties towards God and man. 3. That to rebel againſt, and not walk in conformity unto this ingrafted law of nature, is a provoking ſin. 4. That altho' many of the Gentiles gave themſelves over to all manner of uncleanneſs, yet others "ſhewed the works of the law written in their hearts:" They ſhewed it two ways; 1. by their temperance, righteouſneſs, and moral honeſty; wherein (to our ſhame) they excelled many of us who are called Chriſtians. 2. In the efficacy of their conſcience; which as it cleared, and comforted, them for things well done, ſo it witneſſed againſt them, yea judged and condemned them, for doing evil: And theſe evidences of a law written on the heart are every where to be found, wherever men are found. (B.) Moſt interpreters underſtand this of the believing Gentiles, "the righteouſneſs of the law being fulfilled in them only, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit," ch. viii. 4. And he being only the inward Jew, who hath "the circumciſion of the heart in the ſpirit," here, ver. 29. But all the ancient commentators interpret theſe laſt ſix verſes not of the idolatrous Gentiles, but of ſuch Gentiles as liv'd before the law, as Melchiſedec and Job; or ſuch as were worſhippers of the true God, as Cornelius; or of ſuch of them as repented, as the Ninevites did. Theſe examples, ſaith Chryſoſtome, he ſets before the Jews, as being ſuch as they could not contradict. And, in his Comment on ver. 15. he makes this inference from the words, By theſe things he ſhews, that God made man ſufficient of himſelf to chuſe virtue and avoid vice; adding, that this was neceſſary to be ſaid, to ſtop the mouths of them who enquir'd, Where were the footſteps of ſuch a providence in former times? This the Apoſtle ſeems plainly to inſinuate, by arguing, that God did, and will, accept the Gentile, living according to the law written in his heart, and therefore owning him as the true God, and honouring or glorifying him, as that God, who made the heaven and the earth, becauſe he "is no reſpecter of perſons." This ſeems the obvious meaning of theſe words of St. Peter, in the caſe of Cornelius, Acts x. 34, 35. And the argument of Origen ſeems here conſiderable, That if God condemn'd the Gentiles, becauſe they "held the truth in unrighteouſneſs, and when they knew God, did not glorify him as God, neither were thankful," ch. i. 18, 21. it ſeems reaſonable to conceive, that had they done what they culpably neglected, and might have done, that is, had they "glorified him as God, and been thankful," they would have done what had been acceptable to God, and fit to be rewarded by his goodneſs: Or, in other words, had they held the truth in righteouſneſs, and abſtaining from thoſe actions for which their conſcience did accuſe them, and for which "they knew they were worthy of death," ch. i. 32. as they, who were inexcuſable for not doing of them, might have done, they would have eſcaped "the wrath of God revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs," ver. 18. See the notes on the ſeveral texts here quoted. But then, theſe things may here be offer'd to conſideration, 1. That this acceptance may not reach ſo far as to put them under the ſame privileges and favours with his church and people: But, if they live in ſuch times and places where an exacter knowledge of his will might be obtain'd, it may induce his providence to find out means of imparting that alſo to them; as in the caſe of Cornelius and his friends, who were told things, "by which he and his houſe ſhould be ſaved," Acts xi. 14. 2. That, tho' God may, and will, reward ſuch honeſt Heathens, becauſe otherwiſe they could have no encouragement to own, or ſerve, him as their God, ſince "he that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him," Hebr. xi. 6. Yet he is not obliged to give them the glorious reward which he hath promiſed to the Chriſtian. For this not being due to their works, they could not, from the light of nature, be aſſured of it: And it being ſo particularly aſſign'd to faith in Chriſt, both affirmatively and negatively, John v. 24. vi. 27, 29. and xvii. 3. and 1 John v. 11. &c. it cannot well be ſaid to belong to any other; and therefore Origen freely grants this, and yet thinks ſuch perſons may not be utterly depriv'd of a reward: Eſpecially, it ſeems not equitable, that they ſhould be depriv'd of all reward, purely for want of an impoſſible condition; i.e. becauſe they believed not in him, of whom they had not, and very often could not, have heard. And, it may be added, 3. That if any of them did arrive at ſuch a ſtate, as made them indeed to fear God, and work righteouſneſs, they did this, not meerly by the ſtrength of natural light, for tho' ſome of them ſeem to ſay, that nature, or philoſophy, was a ſufficient guide to virtue, (Cic. de leg. l. i. n. 3.) yet, that they meant not this excluſively of the divine aſſiſtance, which they ſaw neceſſary to preſerve them againſt the infirmities of humane nature, their own words do fully teſtify (Idem de nat. Deor. l. ii. n. 124, 125.) And if God own'd any of them as truly righteous, it was by virtue of their faith in God; i. e. that faith by which they believ'd he was a rewarder of them who diligently ſeek him: Which being, as to kind, the ſame with that which the Apoſtle ſo highly commends, Hebr. xi. 1. even the expectation "of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen," when it produced in them a ſincere endeavour to ſerve and pleaſe him, according to the light of nature, and cleave to their duty, tho' they might ſuffer for it in this world, might be imputed unto them for righteouſneſs. But I conclude theſe conjectures, with Origen on the ſame place, the reader is at his diſcretion, either to approve theſe conjectures or not. (W.)

And their thoughts] The Logiſmoi metaxu allelon here are the practical common notions of good and evil, which are among the generality of men, even Heathens, without any light from the Moſaical law: And they are call'd Logiſmoi, reaſonings; becauſe reaſon, when it comes to a maturity, if it be not precorrupted with falſe doctrines and prejudices, will be able to conclude, that this ought to be done, and not that, and ſo give us the principles of all moral actions. (H.)

According to my goſpel.] St. Paul's preaching wherever he came, is literally to be ſtiled his goſpel. So Clemens Romanus, contemporary with this Apoſtle, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, after having mention'd bleſſed Paul's Epiſtles, bids them mark what he hath firſt written to them (en te arche tou euangeliou) in the beginning of the Goſpel; that is, at the time when the Goſpel was by him firſt preach'd among them. (Idem)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. Behold, thou art called a Jew, and reſteſt in the law, and makeſt thy boaſt of God; And knoweſt his will, and approveſt the things that are more excellent, being inſtructed out of the law, And art confident that thou thy ſelf art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkneſs, An inſtructer of the fooliſh, a teacher of babes, which haſt the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law. Thou therefore which teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thy ſelf? Thou that preacheſt a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal? Thou that ſayeſt a man ſhould not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery? Thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit ſacrilege? Thou that makeſt thy boaſt of the law, through breaking the law diſhonoureſt thou God? For the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles, through you, as it is written. For circumciſion verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: But if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumciſion is made uncircumciſion. Therefore, if the uncircumciſion keep the righteouſneſs of the law, ſhall not his uncircumciſion be counted for circumciſion? And ſhall not uncircumciſion which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumciſion doſt tranſgreſs the law? For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh: But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumciſion is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men, but of God.

Behold, thou art called a Jew.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds in his former argument; namely, to prove, that the Jews could no more rationally expect to be juſtified before God by the law of Moſes, than the Gentiles by the law of nature. The Apoſtle allows them all their privileges, which they ſo much doted upon, boaſted of, and gloried in; but withal aſſures them, that all theſe, yea more than theſe, were inſufficient to juſtify them before God: As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Thou beareſt thy ſelf mightily upon this, that "thou art called a Jew;" that is, a profeſſor of the true religion, and a worſhipper of the true God; "Thou reſteſt in the law;" that is, either in the divineneſs and perfection of it, or in thy external obedience to it, and in the outward performances of it: "Thou makeſt thy boaſt of God," as a God in covenant with thee above all nations of the earth; and "thou knoweſt his will," having his word and law in thy hands; the oracles of God committed to thee, and the writings of Moſes and the prophets alone found with thee; and "approveſt things that be moſt excellent, being inſtructed out of the law;" that is, thou thinkeſt that thou haſt ſuch a degree of knowledge of God's word and will, that thou canſt clearly diſcern between ſin and duty, and compare one duty with another, preferring that which is moſt excellent; "and art confident, that thou thy ſelf art a guide of the blind, and a light of them that are in darkneſs;" that is, thou haſt a ſtrong conceit that ſuch are the meaſures of thy knowledge, that thou art able to be "a guide to the blind" Gentiles, who ſit in darkneſs, and to be a "teacher of babes;" that is, ſuch as have little or no knowledge in the matters of religion, conceiting, "that thou haſt the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law;" that is, ſuch a method and meaſure of divine knowledge as may enable thee to inſtruct others, whether Gentiles or Jews, which never reach to thy attainments. Theſe external privileges the preſumptuous Jew reſted upon, and thought them ſufficient to ſalvation, tho' he lived looſely, and his practice gave his profeſſion the lye. Hence learn, 1. That perſons are exceeding prone to be proud of, and puffed up with church privileges; glorying in the letter of the law, whilſt neither in heart nor life they are conformed to the ſpirituality of the law. 2. That gifts, duties, and ſuppoſed graces, are the ſtay and ſtaff which hypocrites reſt upon, and repoſe their truſt and confidence in; "thou art called a Jew, and reſteſt in the law;" that is, in the outward profeſſion of the law, or in an external obedience to the law: The Apoſtle ſpeaks of this their "reſting in the law," not barely by way of narration, but by way of reproof; telling us not only what they did, but how ill they did in ſo doing. The duties which Chriſt has appointed are the truſt and reſt of the hypocrites; but Chriſt himſelf is the reſt and truſt of the upright: They deſire to be ever acting graces, never truſting to them; to be much in duty, and yet much above duty; much in it in point of performance, much above it in regard of dependance. (B.) Thou alſo, who art called a Chriſtian, and reſteſt in the goſpel, and makeſt thy boaſt of Chriſt, of his graces, his blood, his myſteries, his ſpirit &c. Where is the life, worthy of that name? Where is the practice of that goſpel? Where is the uſe of all thoſe gifts, and a converſation anſwerable to ſo many graces? What will even all the reſt ſignifie to us without practice, but only to expoſe us to a judgment, without compariſon, more dreadful and ſevere? (Q.)

Reſteſt in the law.] Epanapaue to nomo; Thou ſo wholly relieſt upon thy bare profeſſion of the law, as that thou art utterly careleſs, in the mean time, of the practice of, or obedience to the law. (Baſire)

Approveſt the things] Docimazeis ta diapheronta; Trieſt the things that differ, or are indifferent: That is, thou art able to judge, what things are commended, what things are forbidden, or what is truly good, which thou art to follow, inſtead of that falſe good which carnal reaſon or ſenſe doth preſent unto thee. (Aſſ.) That docimazein, to prove, or try, ſignifies ſo to examine and prove as to approve, appears by ſome other places, where the word is uſed. So 1 Cor. xi. 28. "Let a man (prove, or) examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat" &c. where 'tis ſaid, that, if upon examination he find himſelf unworthy, he muſt not ſo eat; for if he do, "he eats damnation to himſelf," ver. 29. And therefore it muſt ſignify the approving himſelf to God and his own conſcience. So Rom. xiv. 22. "Happy is he who doth not (judge, or) condemn himſelf", (en ho docimazei) not in what he examines himſelf, but in what, upon deliberation, he ſo likes, and approves, as to think fit to act accordingly; that is, Happy is he that, when he is reſolved of the matter of the action, that it is lawful, doth it with ſuch care that he hurt no others, that he hath nothing to blame in himſelf when he hath done it. So Gal. vi. 4. "Let every man (docimazei) prove his own work;" that is, ſo prove, or examine his own actions, as to approve them to himſelf, his own conſcience, and to God, "and then he ſhall have (glorying, or) rejoycing;" that is, he ſhall be able to comfort himſelf, (eis heauton monon) toward himſelf alone; that is, by looking on himſelf abſolutely, and not only in conjunction or compariſon with other men, which is meant by (cai ouc eis ton heteron,) "and not towards another;" to which belongs the reaſon rendred in the next verſe, "for every one ſhall bear his own burthen." So Eph. v. 8, 10. "Walk as children of light, (examining, or) approving, what is acceptable to the Lord;" but this ſo, that they alſo approve themſelves to ſtudy and purſue it, or elſe they do not walk like children of light, like Chriſtians. The truth is, This is not ſo familiar a phraſe, the "proving what is acceptable to God," as the former is, of proving and approving himſelf, or, his own works: Yet becauſe the examining, and the approving of God's will, is a direct undertaking, and obligation to practice it; and becauſe it is a ridiculous thing, and that which will never ſtand in any ſtead, to examine what is well pleaſing to God, and, when he hath done ſo, to act or practiſe the contrary; therefore the Apoſtle, who exhorts to this, as to a duty which will ſtand them in ſome ſtead, and as an evidence of their walking as children of light, (not as the partial condition, or a means to perform God's will, but as the knowing God's will in the ſcripture, when 'tis looked on as a good thing, is the practiſing of it) muſt be ſuppoſed to contain, in this phraſe of proving, the approving alſo, and not only ſo, but alſo the performing (at leaſt in endeavour and ſtudy) what is acceptable to the Lord, and ſhall to them appear to be ſo, and not only the examining what is thus acceptable. And then one other place, Rom. xii. 1, 2. will by the ſame reaſon, be clearly intelligible alſo in this ſenſe; where they are exhorted, by all the exceeding mercies and compaſſions of God, "to preſent themſelves to God a living and well pleaſing ſacrifice," and inſtead of conformity with the world, to be transfigured, that is, eminently and viſibly changed by, or in, the renovation of their mind, (eis to docimozein, which notes this to be an effect, if not the end of this renovation of mind) "that they may prove what is the will of God," the good, the acceptable, the perfect, which is directly the ſcheme, or form of ſpeaking, uſed to the Epheſians (only with the addition of ſome more words, not to alter, but to enhance this notion of it) ſo to ſearch into the will of God, what is good and acceptable to him in the higheſt degree, as to practiſe and purſue it, and approve themſelves to God and their own ſouls to have done ſo. And by this means, the meaning of docimazein ta diapheronta, both here, and Phil. i. 10. will be more intelligible alſo, than otherwiſe, if it were not compared with theſe two laſt places, it would be. In that to the Philippians, thus, "I pray that your love may abound," &c. your great forwardneſs to the advancing and propagating the goſpel, ver. 4. eis to docimazein humas (as an effect again of their abundance of Chriſtian charity, or zeal to the goſpel) "that ye may examine firſt, and then approve, or like, and then ſet your ſelves to the purſuit of (ta diapheronta) the things that excell," that are eminently good, (proportionably to the abounding of their charity going before) that is, do as much good as ye can poſſibly; or as Theophylact interprets diapheronta, by ta catheconta hecaſto, the things that belong to every man, and ta ſympheronta, profitable, thoſe things which are proper and expedient for you to do. And then this will without queſtion belong alſo to the ſame phraſe in this place, where he ſaith, thou knoweſt (that is, pretendeſt to know, above all, the will of God, and proveſt, that is, examineſt with all acuteneſs and diligence, and having by examination found out what is moſt excellent, moſt acceptable in the ſight of God, thou likeſt, chooſeſt, approveſt it (that is, pretendeſt and aſſumeſt to thy ſelf to do ſo) and practiſeſt accordingly, being firſt, for thy foundation, inſtructed in the law of Moſes, as all pious men ought to be, to lay their foundation there; and thus aſſuming to thy ſelf this high perfection above all others, ver. 19. "thou haſt confidence to thy ſelf that thou art a guide to the blind," &c. that none are ſo fit to be inſtructers, and to be heeded, as you. Thus, in Ignatius's epiſtle to the Smyrnæans, ſpeaking of the reverence due to the Biſhop's judgment, he ſaith, What he ſhall, upon examination, approve of, this is alſo well pleaſing to God. (H.)

A guide of the blind.] "The blind, and them who ſit in darkneſs," is a periphraſis of the Gentiles; as Iſa. ix. 2. xlii. 6, 7. xlix. 9. Luke i. 79. and Eph. v. 8. (W.)

A teacher of babes.] The fooliſh, and the babes here ſeem to be proſelytes to the Jewiſh law, whom they accounted as infants new-born. (Idem) See the notes on John iii. 5.

Haſt the form of knowledge.] That is, the way to teach and inform others in the knowledge of truth. The word in the original is not morphe, but morphoſis, which ſignifieth a pattern to work by, or a perfect frame; not only of what belongeth unto the true ſervice of God in itſelf, but likewiſe of all that which we comprehend and judge of it in our ſelves. It may be rendred a ſett manner, or model of knowledge. (Aſſ.) Or the formulary of it in the law. (Maſſey) Unhappy is that perſon, who has in his hands the rule of knowledge and the truth, and makes no other uſe of it, but only to ſet up for a teacher, and to exalt himſelf above others! More unhappy ſtill is he, whoſe preſumption makes him imagine, that he is able ſufficiently to inform and direct himſelf! If this vice be to be feared, even in thoſe who guide and inſtruct others, by the call and appointment of God; how much more is it to be dreaded in thoſe who, undertaking theſe miniſterial functions of their own heads, do thereby alone juſtly deſerve intirely to be left and abandon'd to themſelves! (Q.)

Thou therefore which teacheſt another.] Becauſe the Jews were ſo exceeding apt to dote upon, and reſt in, their external privileges, the Apoſtle did, in the foregoing verſes, recount and reckon the ſeveral privileges which they enjoy'd; "Thou art called a Jew" &c. But now, in the verſes here before us, he takes occaſion to aggravate their ſins committed, from their high privileges and prerogatives enjoy'd; becauſe they ſinn'd againſt light and knowledge, againſt the convictions of their own conſciences, and contradicted the dictates of their minds, as the Gentiles did; and, beſides all that, rebelled againſt the precepts of the written word, which was all in their hands. The law of Moſes was near in their mouths, but far from their reins: For thus the Apoſtle expoſtulates the caſe with them; "Thou that teacheſt another, teacheſt not thou thy ſelf? Thou that undertakeſt to be a teacher of, and a guide unto, the ignorant and blind Gentiles, wilt thou not practice thine own inſtructions, but condemn thy ſelf out of thine own mouth? Wilt thou, O Jew! be guilty of theft, adultery, ſacrilege, rapine and murther? Sins which the very Heathens condemn; and all this while you call yourſelves the only people of God? Verily, "the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles through you Jews;" who pretend to be the favourites of Heaven, whilſt ye do the works of hell. Learn hence, 1. That it is much eaſier to inſtruct and teach others, than to be inſtructed and receive inſtruction ourſelves. 2. That it is both ſinful and ſhameful to teach others the right way, and to go in the wrong way ourſelves. It is a double fault in a private perſon, when his actions run croſs to his profeſſion; but it is an inexcuſable, if not an unpardonable, fault in a teacher, when the crimes which he condemns in others, may be juſtly charged upon himſelf. 3. That the name of God ſuffers very much; yea, by none ſo much as thoſe who preach and preſs the duties of Chriſtianity upon others, but practice them not themſelves. "the name of the Lord is blaſphemed" by ſuch preachers; the wicked prophane world taking occaſion from thence, to wound the name of God with the poiſoned arrows and darts of reproach. The ſins of teachers are teaching ſins. 'Tis true, ſin, ſtrictly ſpeaking, cannot injure the name and glory of God: He is above the reach of any miſchief that ſin can do him: His eſſential glory is perfect, and can neither be increaſed nor diminiſhed by the creatures: God can no more be hurt by our ſins, than the ſun can be hurt by throwing ſtones in the air, or the moon by the barking of dogs. But his manifeſtative glory, or the preſent manifeſtations of his glory, theſe are clouded and eclipſed by ſin, and therefore God will deal with knowing ſinners, eſpecially with ſuch as undertake to be teachers of others, as with thoſe that have blaſphemed his name, wounded his glory, trampled upon his honour, and cauſed his holy ways to be evil ſpoken of, by reaſon of their wicked and unholy lives. Lord, let all that adminiſter unto thee in holy things conſider, that they have not only their own ſins to account for, but alſo the ſins of their people, if committed by their profligate example. (B.) This verſe may be illuſtrated out of the Jewiſh writings. For they ſay, that he who teacheth others what he doeth not himſelf, is like a blind man, who hath a candle in his hand to give light to others, while he himſelf doth walk in darkneſs. So appoſite is this firſt queſtion, to convince thoſe Jews, who pretended to be guides and lights to the blind Gentiles, that they themſelves were blind. And again how can a wiſe man ſay in the congregation, "thou ſhalt not ſteal," when he himſelf ſteals? Whence it appears, that, in their account, this was ſufficient to cut off their pretence to wiſdom. Yea, of all theſe things the Jewiſh doctors were notoriouſly guilty; and of moſt of them they were accuſed by our Lord himſelf, Matth. xix. 9. xxi. 13. and xxiii. 3, 4. and John ii. 16. And Joſephus doth pronounce them guilty, not only of theft, treachery, ſacrilege, but of rapines and murders, and new ways of wickedneſs invented by them, of all which the temple was made the receptable. (W.) And the argument hath the ſame force concerning the Chriſtians that are out of the ſtate of grace, compared with the Mahometans and Heathens. (Fell) See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 27.

Thou that abhorreſt idols.] Bdeluſſomenos; one ſo zealous againſt idolatry, that he ſtops his noſe at the very ſmell of an idol! And yet, behold, this very zealot is here indicted by the Apoſtle, as not ſcrupling to "commit ſacrilege." (Baſire) Some here make a queſtion, why the Apoſtle changeth the word, and doth not ſay (in the ſame terms, as in the foregoing,) "Thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit" idolatry? To which a double anſwer may be given, 1. That the Apoſtle uſeth an aggravation; as if he ſhould ſay, Doſt thou commit a worſe ſin, to wit, ſacrilege? And, 2. That idolatry is ſpiritual ſacrilege; becauſe it robbeth God of his honour: For if, by the imperial law, in the code, it is defined ſacrilege, to take away from the Emperor any thing that is his; it ought to be much more accounted ſacrilege to take away from God that which is his. (Aſſ.) Viz. His "tythes and offerings;" of which God accuſes the Jews, as robbers of him, Mal. iii. 8. (Fell) The Apoſtle here, not without good reaſon, compares together theſe, as parallel ſins, or ſins of affinity. Where, by ſacrilege underſtand not only the uſurpation of things ſacred, but the violation of that which is ſacred in general: As if he had ſaid, thou haſt mended the matter well indeed; for ſtill thou daſheſt againſt the ſame principle: For it is one of the exemplifications of what he ſaith, in the beginning of the chapter, that he who judgeth or condemneth another and doeth the ſame or the like himſelf, is inexcuſable. By this it appears, how much they are miſtaken, who, under pretence of avoiding idolatry and ſuperſtition, cannot endure, that any diſtinction ſhould be made between things ſacred and common. Is not this to unhallow God's name one way, that ſo we might not profane it another? Far be it from me, to be a patron of idolatry or ſuperſtition in the leaſt degree: Yet, I'm afraid, leſt we who have reformed the worſhip of God from that pollution, by bending the crooked ſtick (as St. Baſil expreſſes it) too much the other way, have ſome of us run too far into the contrary extreme, and taken away all difference, in a manner, between ſacred and profane; and by his tranſgreſſion in doing God's work, made ourſelves liable to this upbraiding of the Apoſtle, "Thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit ſacrilege?" That is, profaneſt thou God's name, by violating that which is ſacred? (Mede)

As it is written.] Viz. Iſa. lii. 5. and Ezek. xxxvi. 20, 23.

Circumciſion verily profiteth.] See the notes on ch. iv. 11.

The righteouſneſs of the law.] Dicaiomata is ſometimes, uſed for the divine judgments; which being always done in equity, and according to the deſerts of men, are fitly rendred righteous judgments, ch. i. 32. and Rev. xv. 4 And ſometimes it relates to the ceremonial inſtitutions, which God thought fit for a ſeaſon to preſcribe to the Jews; and then it ſeems beſt to be rendred ordinances, as Hebr. ix. 1, and 10. And ſometimes to the moral precepts of the law: As when the Apoſtle ſays, "the righteouſneſs of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit," Rom. viii. 4. which ſeems to be the ſenſe of this phraſe here. (W.)

He is not a Jew.] See the notes on Matth. iii. 9. and John iv 24. and viii. 39.

CHAP. III.

The Jews prerogative; which they have not loſt: Tho' Jews and Gentiles are all under ſin. None juſtified by the works of the law: But all by faith in Chriſt; whereby the law is not aboliſh'd, but eſtabliſh'd.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. WHAT advantage then hath the Jew? Or what profit is there of circumciſion? Much every way: Chiefly, becauſe that unto them were committed the oracles of God. For what if ſome did not believe? Shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? God forbid: Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, That thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mighteſt overcome when thou art judged. But if our unrighteouſneſs commend the righteouſneſs of God, what ſhall we ſay? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I ſpeak as a man) God forbid: For then how ſhall God judge the world? For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I alſo judged as a ſinner? And not rather (as we be ſlanderouſly reported, and as ſome affirm that we ſay) Let us do evil, that good may come? Whoſe damnation is juſt.

What advantage then hath the Jew?] Here the Apoſtle undertakes to obviate the objections, which may be made to his foregoing doctrine. The firſt of which is this; You of the Jews will object and ſay, If outward circumciſion avails nothing, but the inward circumciſion is all in all; and if the uncircumciſed perſon, keeping the law, is to be reckoned as circumciſed, "what advantage then hath the Jew above the Gentile, or what profit is there of the circumciſion above uncircumciſion?" He anſwers it, ver. 2. ſaying, The advantage is "much every way: But chiefly, becauſe unto them were committed the oracles of God;" that is, The holy ſcriptures contained in the Old Teſtament, the ſacraments and ſeals of the covenant, the prophecies and promiſes of the Meſſiah, and the whole revelation of the word and will of God, was then found with them, and in their hands only. Hence learn, 1. That great is that people's privilege and mercy, who enjoy the word of God, the audible word, in the holy ſcriptures, the viſible word in the holy ſacraments. This enlightneth the eyes, rejoiceth the heart, quickneth the ſoul: This is compared to gold for profit, to honey for ſweetneſs, to milk for nouriſhing, to food for ſtrengthening. O how many ſouls are bleſſing God eternally for the benefit and bleſſing of divine revelation! The Jews had this ſpecial favour, "To them were committed the oracles of God;" that is, the writings of Moſes and the prophets. But we Chriſtians have a privilege beyond them; the doctrine of Jeſus delivered to us by Evangeliſts and Apoſtles; not like the killing letter of the law, but a goſpel bringing life and immortality to light. 2. The title which St. Paul gives to the holy ſcriptures; he calls them "the oracles of God:" St. Stephen calls them "the lively oracles," Acts vii. 38. partly becauſe delivered by a lively voice from God, partly becauſe they ſhould be to us as oracles; that is, conſulted with, upon all occaſions, for reſolving all doubts, determining all controverſies. Had the church of Rome conſulted theſe oracles more, and councils, &c. leſs, ſhe had kept the doctrine of faith much freer from corruption than ſhe has done. Laſtly, That the original word here rendred oracles, is the ſame which prophane wretches made uſe of for the dark and doubtful oracles of the devil: Nevertheleſs, the Holy Ghoſt doth not diſdain, nor decline, to make uſe of this word, as he alſo doth ſeveral others, tho' abuſed to Heatheniſh ſuperſtition; which may ſerve to rectify their miſtake who ſcruple to make uſe of words, much more of ſome things, which have been abuſed to ſuperſtition: Verily, there may be ſuperſtition in avoiding ſuperſtition; and tho' we cannot be too circumſpect in our words and actions, we may be too nice and preciſe in both. Yet note, That tho' the ſame word (Logia) ſignifies God's oracles and ſatan's; yet theſe oracles were not delivered in the ſame manner: Satan delivered his oracles ambiguouſly and doubtfully, keeping his dark and blind votaries as much as might be in the dark; what he ſaid might bear ſeveral conſtructions, that ſo whatever the event or iſſue proved to be, he, the father of lies, might have the reputation of ſpeaking truth: But God's oracles are plain and clear, free from ambiguity and darkneſs; the ſcriptures are not dark, tho' ſome places are difficult; and that proceeds from the ſublimity of the matter, not from the intention of the writer. (B.)

Chiefly.] Proton here clearly denoteth a form of enumeration, anſwerable to our Imprimis; and ſignifies, that the Apoſtle was about to reckon up all the advantages of the Jew, in this place; and accordingly began with one, reſolving to have proceeded, had not an objection here diverted his purpoſe for many chapters together, not permitting him to return from that digreſſion till c. ix. where again he falls to the ſame matter, and enumerates the remainder of thoſe privileges, particularly v. 4. &c. The only privilege, which here he begins with, is, their being intruſted with "the oracles of God." What is meant by that phraſe 'twill not be amiſs to explain, in both parts of it; and firſt logia, oracles. Beſide the four garments, uſed by the Prieſt when he officiated, there were four more, proper to the High Prieſt. The firſt of them was called the pectoral; becauſe it was faſtned about the neck, and came down hanging upon the breaſt, ſaith Sol. Jarchi, on Exod. xxviii. 4 before, or near, the heart. In the ſcripture 'tis call'd the pectoral, or "breaſt-plate, of judgment," Exod. xxviii. 30. becauſe by it the High prieſt receiv'd the reſponſes of God in all matters of difficulty; as when they ſhould make war or peace, &c. And this is called, by Joſephus, Eſſen, (the very Hebrew word;) of which he ſaith, that in the Greek language it ſignifieth logion; not rationale (I ſuppoſe,) but rather orationale; becauſe the word, or "oracle of God," was reveal'd thereby. And from this uſe of the word logion, for that pectoral by which all the reſponſes and oracles of God were receiv'd, the word logia, in the plural, is uſed to ſignify thoſe oracles and reſponſes, all the revelations of God's will by this means vouchſafed to men. Of the other ways of revelations among the Jews, ſee the notes on Acts xxiii. 9. If it be demanded, how theſe reſponſes, or oracles, were given and receiv'd, the moſt probable way, and that which is moſt agreed on, the curious may find in Dr. Hammond, on the text now before us, to which I refer him, for this, and other particulars. (H.) It is certain, That the Jews did not receive the books call'd Apocrypha, as a part of the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament. Notwithſtanding which, the Apoſtle here reckons it to be one advantage which the Jews had above other nations, that "unto them were committed "the oracles of God." It is likewiſe certain, That neither our Lord, nor his Apoſtles, charge them with a breach of truſt, tho' they did not own, nor receive them; which they queſtionleſs would have done, had the Jews ſinned in not receiving them. We have therefore here a very good argument, to prove, againſt the church of Rome, that the Apocryphal books are not a part of the holy Scripture. Some of them, particularly the books of Wiſdom and Eccleſiaſticus, contain excellent moral precepts: Our church therefore allows them to be read, for example of life, and inſtruction of manners; but ſhe doth not apply them to eſtabliſh any doctrine. (Fox) See the notes on Acts vii. 38.

What if ſome did not believe?] Here follows a ſecond objection. Some might ſay, True, the Jews had "the oracles of God," but ſome of them never believed them, nor gave any credit to the promiſe of the Meſſias contained in them, therefore they had no advantage by them. Be it ſo, ſaith the Apoſtle; yet ſhall the unbelief of ſome make the faith, or fidelity of God, in his promiſes, of no effect to others? God forbid! that ſuch a thought ſhould enter into our hearts: But on the contrary, let God be acknowledged true and faithful to his word, tho' all men ſhould prove liars. Learn thence, 1. That man's infidelity cannot ſhake the ſtability of God's word, whether we believe the fidelity of the promiſes, or aſſent to the veracity of God in his threatnings or not; his word ſtandeth faſt for ever. The promiſe ſhall be fulfilled; the threatning executed; only with this difference, we cannot perſonally find the comfort of the promiſe without faith, but we ſhall experimentally feel the terror of the threatning, whether we believe or no. 2. The wonderful condeſcending grace of God, towards thoſe who have any meaſure of true faith, tho' with great mixtures of unbelief. O, how faithful is God to us, if in truth believers, in the midſt of our unfaithfulneſs to him! The unbelief of men ſhall not make the fidelity or "faith of God of no effect!" 3. That as God is a God of truth, ſo all men are falſe and liars compared with God: As God cannot lie, neither deceive, nor be deceived, ſo every man is fallible and falſe; that is, under a poſſibility of deceiving, and being deceiv'd: "Let God be true, and every man a liar." 4. That a good man under afflictions, is very careful to juſtify and clear God from dealing unjuſtly with him, in any of his ſevereſt diſpenſations towards him. The Apoſtle here quotes Pſal. li. 4. "That thou mighteſt be juſtified when thou ſpeakeſt, and be clear when thou judgeſt." As if David had ſaid, I know, the men of the world, when they ſee me afflicted, will be ready to judge hardly of God for it: Therefore, to ſtop their mouths, and to clear the juſtice of God, that he "may overcome, when he is judged" for dealing rigorouſly with me, I do freely confeſs my ſin unto him, with all the aggravating circumſtances of it; that all the world may juſtify him, how great ſoever my ſufferings may be from him. A child of God, under the rod of God, deſires nothing more than to juſtify him in all his ſevereſt dealings with, and diſpenſations towards him. (B.) Note alſo, That St. Paul here forewarns us, not to be concern'd, nor to let our faith be ſtagger'd, when wicked men, and renegades, fall off from the church, and forſake her: For what if ſome have fallen from the faith? "Hath their unbelief made the faith of God of none effect? God forbid! For God is true, and every man a liar." (Cypr.)

God forbid!] Me genoito: Let it not be; or, Far be it from us to ſay or think ſo. (Aſſ.)

Let God be true.] That is, Confeſs'd and acknowledg'd to be true, in maintaining his covenant, and fulfilling his promiſe, notwithſtanding the unbelief of ſome, and the unworthineſs of all. (Idem)

That thou mighteſt be juſtified.] That is, That thy juſtice may be made manifeſt; or that thy ſingular goodneſs, and thy faithfulneſs in performing thy promiſes, may appear to all. (Beza) And as for the word crineſthai, judged, Heſychius ſays, it ſignifies to have a ſuit in law, or any civil controverſy, or contention. The Hebrew, in Pſal. li. 4. here cited, hath In judicando te, "when thou judgeſt," literally, but then the Hebrew word, tho' it ſignify judicare, to judge, ſignifies often litigare, to contend; alſo to plead, or manage a cauſe, for one againſt another. So Ezek. xx 4. "Wilt thou judge them?" That is, wilt thou plead for them? So 1 Cor. vi. 1. Dares any wage a ſuit at law, or implead another? So in Demaratus Arcadicor. 2. Being impleaded of murther, he was freed from the accuſation: Where, critheis, muſt ſignify not judged, or condemned; (for 'tis added, he was abſolved;) but accuſed, or impleaded: And again, it was by his mother that he was critheis, not by the judge; another evidence that it ſignifies accuſed, or perſecuted, not condemned. And agreeable to this will be that notion of crima, Rom. v. 16. for charging of ſin upon us by indictment, or impleading; after which follows the catacrima, or condemnation. From this notion of crineſthai, to contend, in the forinſecal ſenſe, for pleading, or managing the ſuit in law, will appear alſo what is the original notion of the word dicaiouſthai, to be juſtified, which is ſo often uſed in theſe Epiſtles. For the phraſe, "That thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings," in the former part of this verſe, is viſibly of the ſame importance with "That thou mighteſt overcome when thou pleadeſt," in the latter: And then, as logoi muſt ſignify pleadings, ſo muſt dicaiouſthai, the good ſucceſs, or victory, of the pleader, being acquitted by the judge; as in that known place of Solomon, Prov. xvii. 15. juſtifying is ſet oppoſite to condemning. From hence it is juſtly reſolved by divines, that tho', Rev. xxii. 11. (and perhaps in ſome other places of the Greek of the Old Teſtament, as Ecclus xviii. 22. and xxxi. 5. dicaiouſthai is oppoſite to adicein, and ſo ſignifieth to live, or do, righteouſly; yet there is this other notion, which belongs to the word, and muſt conſtantly be affixed to it in almoſt all the places of the New Teſtament. For the due underſtanding of which, theſe three things will be neceſſary to be remembred: 1. That the word, being juridical, muſt always, when it is uſed in this ſenſe, imply a legal proceeding; and therein a judge, a client, and a law, or ſomewhat proportionable to each of theſe. Thus, when a man is ſaid to be juſtified by the deeds of the law, or by the faith of Chriſt, in the ſight of God, as the man is the client, ſuppoſable to be impleaded by Satan the (antidicos, or) adverſary (en dice) in judicature, and God the judge, and the law of Moſes on one ſide, or the Chriſtian law, the law of faith, on the other, the rule, or law, by which the judgment is made; ſo he that is ſaid to be juſtified, muſt be ſuppoſed to be acquitted by the rules of that law by which he is tried and judged, whether it be that given by Moſes, or this by Chriſt. Thus in that eminent place, Acts xiii. 38, 39 (the ſummary of the whole Goſpel, and from which the notion of this word in the Epiſtles may moſt fitly be taken,) "Be it known unto you, that by this perſon (Chriſt) remiſſion of ſins is declared, or preached, unto you, and through him every one that believeth is juſtified (dicaiou) from all thoſe things from which ye could not be juſtified in, or by, the law of Moſes." Where, as it is evident, that the law of Chriſt allows pardon and remiſſion for thoſe ſins, for which the law of Moſes allowed no mercy, viz. in caſe of repentance, and ſincere returning to the obedience of Chriſt, after one or more acts of preſumptuous ſins, (for which the law of Moſes admitted no ſacrifice, no expiation, but inflicted death without mercy on the offender, were he never ſo penitent, Heb. x. 26, 28. and tho' there were hope of pardon for ſuch in another world, yet this was not by the purport of Moſes, but of Chriſt's covenant:) So the juſtification which is now declared from Chriſt, and conſiſts in God's pardoning ſuch ſins, acquitting the penitent believer, that now comes in to the obedience of Chriſt, whatſoever his paſt ſins have been, is a judicial act of God's proceeding according to this rule now in force, this law of Chriſt, this covenant under the Goſpel; which becauſe it is an act of meer mercy in God through Chriſt, the purchaſe of which coſt Chriſt his blood, but coſt us nothing, ("by his ſtripes we were thus healed") and becauſe the condition of new life required of us, to make us capable of this remiſſion, hath nothing of virtue, or merit, of natural or moral efficiency in it, towards the purchaſing remiſſion, therefore it is here affirmed, that we are, ver. 24. "juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption which is by Jeſus Chriſt." 2. That the Goſpel, or the faith of Chriſt, being now that rule by which God either acquits or condemns, juſtifies or not juſtifies any, whenſoever juſtification is mentioned, it muſt be underſtood with this reference to that rule, which is ſometimes mention'd explicitly, (as when we read of his juſtifying him that is of the faith of Jeſus, ver. 26. juſtifying by faith, and through faith, ver. 30 that is, according to that evangelical rule, the law of faith, which gives place for repentance and remiſſion upon ſincerity of new life,) and is to be ſuppoſed, and implied, whenſoever it is not mention'd. The promiſes of mercy and pardon in the Goſpel, tho' general, being yet conditional, and no ground allow'd for any to hope for his part of it, but upon performance of that condition, which again muſt not be confined to any one notion of any one Chriſtian virtue, Faith, or the like, but to ſincere obedience to the whole law of Chriſt, and that comprehends all the particulars required by him in the retail, or as it is in the groſs ſet down by the moſt comprehenſive words, either of repentance or converſion, without which we "ſhall all likewiſe periſh," and we "ſhall in no wiſe enter into the kingdom of God," or of holineſs, "without which no man ſhall ſee God." The not obſerving of which is the procreative miſtake of the many great and dangerous errors in this matter. And, 3. That the Hebrew word for righteouſneſs ſignifies two things, either a lower or a more eminent degree of righteouſneſs; theſe two differing one from the other, as juſtice and charity appear to differ, one ſuperadded to, and ſuperſtructed on the other: And as it is the part of a judge to conſider theſe ſeverally, and as well to reward the higher degree of the one, as to acquit the innocence, and reward the lower degree of the other, ſo there is a double notion of juſtifying in Scripture: The one for acquitting and pardoning, accepting, and rewarding, in a lower degree, which upon repentance and forſaking of ſin, and converting ſincerely to God, is afforded every one, through the ſatisfaction and blood-ſhedding of Chriſt, under the Goſpel; another for an higher degree of approving and condemning, and adjudging to reward, and that proportion'd to ſome eminent act of faith, or obedience, in caſe of extraordinary trial; ſuch as Abraham's believing in hope, and above hope, and his obedience to the higheſt commands, leaving his country, and ſacrificing his only ſon; and ſuch as were the ſeveral acts of faith mention'd Heb. xi. and the works, in James ii. 14, &c. And thus there ſeems to be a difference between "God's imputing no ſin," and his "imputing to righteouſneſs:" The latter being his adjudging to a high reward, the former only forgiving iniquity, and accepting in a lower degree; the one upon ſome eminent act of faith or obedience, the other upon undertaking new life, anſwerable to theſe two ſorts of juſtification. And accordingly, that which here, in ch. iv. 5. is ſaid to be "counted for righteouſneſs," is in ver. 4. called "the reward reckoned;" noting an eminent reward of ſome eminent act, to be comprehended in that phraſe. And ſo ſometimes it is, in the word juſtified: And when it is ſo to be interpreted, the context will generally determine (H.) See the notes on ver. 27, 28.

But if our unrighteouſneſs.] A third objection here followeth; namely, that if the unrighteouſneſs of men, that is, both of Jews and Gentiles, tends ſo viſibly to commend, that is, to illuſtrate and recommend the righteouſneſs of God, namely, his wiſdom, grace, and favour, in appointing this way of juſtification by faith in Chriſt, how can it be right in God to puniſh them for this unrighteouſneſs, which tends ſo highly to illuſtrate the glory of the goſpel-grace? The Apoſtle tells us, That in making this objection, he "ſpake as a man;" that is, as natural men are ready to think and ſpeak: But, ſays he, God forbid, that we ſhould entertain ſuch a thought, as if God either were or could be unrighteous; "for then how ſhall God judge the world" for their unrighteouſneſs? Learn hence, 1. That tho' the unrighteouſneſs and wickedneſs of men be over ruled by God, to ſubſerve the purpoſes of his glory, yet is God juſt in puniſhing all unrighteouſneſs and wickedneſs whatſoever. God in never intentionally, but is ſometimes accidentally, glorified by the ſin of man: There never was ſuch an helliſh wickedneſs committed as crucifying Chriſt; nothing, by which God ever reaped greater glory than by the death of his Son: Yet is the wrath of God come upon the Jews to the utmoſt, and that moſt juſtly, for their committing of that wickedneſs. 2 That the righteous of God neither doth nor can do any iniquity or unrighteouſneſs whatſoever; "Is God unrighteous? How then ſhall God judge the world?" God is judge of the world, and cannot but do right; becauſe the univerſality of his power puts him above all poſſibility of error in the exerciſe of his power. The very reaſon why God cannot exerciſe his power beyond the limits of juſtice, is becauſe his power is altogether unlimited; he can do whatſoever he will do, and whatſoever he will do is, for that reaſon juſt. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" (B.)

I ſpeak as a man.] See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 8.

If the truth of God hath more abounded.] "If the truth of God" be rendred more illuſtrious by the falſeneſs of men, with what juſtice can the man that is thus falſe be dealt with as a ſinner? Since his falſeneſs is a means of bringing glory to God, ſurely it can be no crime! (Bradf.) As if this lye, that is, falſeneſs or perfidiouſneſs, were purpoſely ordained by him for ſuch an end! (Fell) This indeed is, by ſome, thought to be an objection of great force. (H.) But St. Paul anſwers it with deteſtation, ver. 8. denouncing the puniſhment juſtly due to ſuch blaſphemy. (Beza) We muſt therefore by no means underſtand theſe words as ſpoken by the Apoſtle himſelf, in his own name, and his own ſenſe; as if he had told lies for upholding the truth, and that "the truth of God had abounded" to the glory of God through his lie: For he ſpeaks all this only in the perſon of a profane objector. (B.)

And not rather, as.] Cai me, cathos &c. The placing of the words in this verſe hath ſome harſhneſs, and conſequent obſcurity in it. Grotius is inclined to believe a tranſpoſition of me hoti, for hoti me, and then renders the hoti by why, thus, Why ſhould we not "do evil, that good may come?" reading the reſt in a parentheſis. But, I ſuppoſe, the more obvious and ſimple way ought here to be preferr'd, and the why to be repeated from the foregoing verſe; or elſe the ſenſe ſo to hang, as that the (ti,) why, there ſhall have an influence here upon the (me) not, and be thus rendred, (Cai me) And why not, "as we be ſlanderouſly reported" &c. Or, And why ſhould we not ſay (H.)

As we be ſlanderouſly reported.] Cathos blaſphemoumetha; As we are blaſphemed. Blaſphemein is to ſpeak reproachfully, either of God or man, Jude 8. Tit. iii. 2. and elſewhere; in which men are ſaid to be blaſphemed, in the Greek. And indeed, if we were only to reſpect the etymology, 'tis more properly applicable to men than to God: For it properly ſignifies, to hurt the fame or credit of another. (Johnſ. B. and Milb.)

Do evil, that good may come.] Ill men, when they have nothing elſe to plead for themſelves, ſuppoſe they may come off at laſt, in the opinion of the charitable and credulous world, by pretending, that what they do, they do for the publick good: If they do that which is in itſelf evil and unjuſtifiable, they do it only, "that good may come of it." But whatever the Pope, by virtue of the plenarty of his power, may do, according to the Canoniſts, &c. we are perſwaded, that no private judgment, built upon Hobbian or atheiſtical principles, can make virtues vices, or vices virtues: And we are as thoroughly convinc'd, that we cannot, without the moſt extreme and damnable guilt, do thoſe things, which Scripture or common ſenſe have declar'd to be ſinful, tho' all the Prelates in Chriſtendom ſhould take upon them to aſſoil us; tho' we pretend ever ſo ſeriouſly, that we do them only that good, univerſal good may come of it. (Milbourne) 'Tis in truth, ſuch an open defiance to God and goodneſs, ſuch a flat contradiction to truth and reaſon, as well as to Chriſtianity, that it very well became the Apoſtle thus to expreſs himſelf concerning it. (Bradf.)

Whoſe damnation is juſt.] Whoſe? Theirs, whoſoever they are, that either own, or act upon, ſuch a principle, as this, that it is lawful "to do evil, that good may come:" Or theirs, who thus callumniate us, as if this principle was ours; that is, as if this were a Chriſtian principle, either taught or allow'd by the Apoſtles of our Lord; for the word whoſe may refer to either of them. From whence we may obſerve, 1. That tho' God can, and doth, over-rule the evil actions of men to his own glory, and cauſe bad means to conduce to a good end: Yet, 2. That, notwithſtanding this, 'tis a deteſtable and damnable principle, that unlawful means may be uſed, in order to the bringing about an end that is good; and therefore, 3. It is a ſlanderous, unjuſt, and deteſtable practice, to charge this principle upon thoſe who not only diſown it, but whoſe actions have given no juſt occaſion for ſuch an imputation. (Idem, B. and Milb.)

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. What then? Are we better than they? No, in no wiſe: For we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under ſin; as it is written, There is none righteous, no not one: There is none that underſtandeth, there is none that ſeeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, there is none that doth good, no not one. Their throat is an open ſepulchre; with their tongues they have uſed deceit; the poiſon of aſps is under their lips: Whoſe mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs: Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood: Deſtruction and miſery are in their ways: And the way of peace have they not known: There is no fear of God before their eyes. Now we know that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the law: That every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore by the deeds of the law there ſhall no fleſh be juſtified in his ſight: For by the law is the knowledge of ſin.

What then? Are we better than they?] Here the Apoſtle ſtarts another objection, in the name of the Jews. Some of them might ſay, are we not better than the Gentiles? Do we not excell them in outward privileges? Is not the knowledge of the law found with us, and the oracles of God commited to us? True, ſays the Apoſtle; the Jews are better than the Gentiles, in reſpect of inward qualifications. Jews and Gentiles are alike by natural corruption; alike under ſin by actual tranſgreſſion: And ſo they ſtand in need, both alike, of juſtification by faith; and the goſpel righteouſneſs is no leſs neceſſary for one than for the other. (B.) Ou pantos, which we here tranſlate, "no, in no wiſe," may be rendred, not altogether; as well as ou pantes is rendred "not all," 2 Theſſ. iii. 2. Hebr. iii. 16. as we learn from Oecumenius, who paraphraſes them thus, not in every kind. And ſo the ſame phraſe, ou pantos, 1 Cor. v. 10. and ſignifies, I do "not altogether' forbid &c. (W.)

We have before proved.] Proetiaſametha, is, by ſome tranſlated, we have accuſed; by others, we have pronounc'd. The ſenſe will be more full, if we render it, we have already made it evident by reaſon, or argument, or good proof. For the word is forenſical, (taken from the proceſs in courts of judicature;) being derived from aitia, which ſignifies a cauſe: As when we ſay, to a perſon whom we have charg'd with a crime, you are the cauſe why ſuch a thing was done; that is, you are guilty of it. And thus the Apoſtle had before, viz. ch. i. 18. &c. convicted the Gentiles, as in ch. ii. 1. he had convicted the Jews.

That they are all under ſin.] That is, guilty of ſin, or under the power and penalty of ſin. (Aſſ.) All, except thoſe whoſe hearts were purified by grace and faith, (the doctrine and goſpel which the Apoſtle preach'd,) which "come by Jeſus Chriſt," John i. 17. who were but a very few, in compariſon of the reſt; as Abraham, Zacharias &c. the kingdom of grace being then far narrower than ſince. (Fell)

None righteous, no not one.] See the notes on John iii. 32. In this and the following verſes, we may obſerve the ſeveral effects of ſin reigning in the heart: As, 1. That it ſtrips us of all righteouſneſs, ver. 10. 2. It corrupts the reaſon and underſtanding: And, 3. It depraves and perverts the heart in turning it from God, ver 11. 4. It cauſes a man to ſeek his chief good, his joy and happineſs in the creatures: 5. It renders him unprofitable, and utterly incapable of doing good: And, 6. It corrupts the beſt actions, in not referring them to God, ver. 12. 7. It diffuſes the poiſon of the heart upon the tongue, and makes it become a world of iniquity: 8. It renders the tongue an inſtrument of deceit, by lying, perjury, flattery, and wicked counſel: And, 9. It makes the tongue, as it were, the tongue of an aſp; which cauſes not only the death of the body, by means of falſe accuſations, falſe teſtimonies, falſe or true reports; but likewiſe that of the ſoul, by wicked diſcourſe, and dangerous doctrines, ver. 13. 10. It puts into the mouth of ſinners words of impiety and blaſphemy againſt God, and of hatred, "curſing and bitterneſs" againſt their neighbour, ver. 14. 11. It makes a revengeful perſon breathe nothing but vengeance and blood, ver. 15. 12. It cauſes them to think of nothing ſo much as how to deſtroy, and make others miſerable, ver. 16. 13. It deprives the ſinner of light, and of the knowledge of the laws and ways of God, which only can bring him to true peace, ver. 17. And, 14. It often ſtifles and ſuppreſſes the "fear of God," and all ſenſe of religion in the heart. (Q.)

Become unprofitable.] Echreiotheſan; that is, unfruitful of good works. (Fell) Or unfit to do any good; like rotten and unſavoury things, that are caſt out of doors. 'Tis a ſimilitude taken from corrupted wines, or meats putrefied and unſavoury. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xvii. 10.

Their throat is an open ſepulchre.] Theſe ſix verſes here following are evidently taken out of ſeveral places of the Pſalms, and other Scriptures, and by the Apoſtle accommodated to his preſent purpoſe: And by occaſion of their being annex'd to the foregoing three verſes, taken out of Pſa. xiv. it hath come to paſs, that ſome ancient Latin copies of that Pſalm have taken them in from hence, and added them to that Pſalm; and accordingly, the tranſlation which is uſed in the Liturgy hath theſe, in three verſes, more to that Pſalm, than the tranſlation in our Bible doth acknowledge. (H.) Theſe ſtand all together in the Septuagint, Pſa. xiv. 3. But tho' 'tis true, theſe words are not found there in the Hebrew; Yet they are all to be found in the Hebrew Bible, tho' in ſeveral places, viz. in Pſa. v. 9. x. 7. xxxvi. 1. cxl. 3. Prov. i. 16. and Iſa. lix. 7, 8. (to which our margin here refers us:) So that, if they were not all the words of David, yet they are the words of men divinely inſpired; and, as ſuch, I ſuppoſe, there can no good reaſon be given, why we may not rehearſe theſe words all together (in our Service,) ſince St. Paul has done ſo before us here in this Epiſtle (Johnſ.) From this, and other paſſages, it appears, that St. Paul, being the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, generally made uſe of the Greek verſion of the Old Teſtament, as St. Luke, his companion, alſo did.

Curſing and bitterneſs.] The Hebrew word which properly ſignifies deceits, was by the Septuagint rendred picria, bitterneſs, and ſo continued here by the Apoſtle in this citation. (H.) See the note foregoing

Deſtruction.] Syntrimma, contritio, is a breaking all to pieces. The word is not here uſed actively, but paſſively; for that deſtruction which they bring upon others. (Aſſ.)

The way of peace.] Meant of innocency, the mother of peace. (Fell) And this, according to the Hebrew phraſe, thoſe are ſaid "not to know," who do not take care to keep it. (G.)

No fear of God.] The Apoſtle concludes his quotation with this, becauſe the want of "the fear of God before our eyes," is the fountain from which all other evils do proceed and flow. The fear of God is the bridle and curb which reſtrains from ſin: Where that is wanting, all iniquity abounds: Where that is prevalent it keeps the ſoul ſo cloſe to God, that it will "not depart from him," Jer. xxxii. 40. We uſually depart far, and run faſt, from thoſe we fear: But the true fear of God will make us cleave cloſe to him; becauſe love is intermixed with it, and renders it a delightful fear. (B.)

What things ſoever the law ſaith.] Leſt the Jews ſhould think to evade the force of the foregoing teſtimonies, concerning man's corruption and depravation, as not belonging to them, but to the Gentiles only, he tells them, that "what the law," that is, the books of the Old Teſtament, "ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the law;" that is, to thoſe who are ſubjects of it, and obliged by it; to ſuch as are under the inſtruction and direction of it, as the Jews are known to be: And if ſo, then "every mouth muſt be ſtopped;" Jews and Gentiles both muſt own themſelves before God to be obnoxious to his wrath, without being able to ſay any thing for themſelves. Learn hence, that the holy law of God brings ſuch plain evidence and conviction with it, that no man can have a word to ſpeak againſt it, when God ſpreads before men the purity of his laws, and impiety of their own lives, every man muſt ſit down ſilent, and lay his hand upon his mouth; not having one word to object, why ſentence ſhould not be executed, becauſe they have all tranſgreſs'd. (Idem) All the precepts therefore of the moral law, and of the Goſpel, are, in like manner, directed to all thoſe who are under the Goſpel. If a man deſire to read them with profit, he muſt apply the maxims contain'd in them to himſelf. Whoſoever will not hearken to them now to his own ſanctification, will be forc'd to hear them one day to his condemnation. The firſt principle of piety and religion, which is to be learn'd therein, is, the general corruption of nature: And the uſe we ought to make of it is, to confeſs and acknowledge it, with humility; to lament it from the bottom of our heart; and to dread the fatal conſequences of it, eſpecially the judgment of God. (Q.)

Guilty before God.] Hypodicos, according to St. Chryſoſtome, properly ſignifies one, who of himſelf is not ſufficient to make a defence for himſelf, but has need of the aſſiſtance of another to defend him. (Leigh)

There ſhall no fleſh be juſtified.] Here we have St. Paul's concluſion, drawn from all the foregoing premiſes: Seeing all mankind, ſince the fall, are diſabled by their innate corruption, and actual tranſgreſſion, to fulfil the law, either natural or written; it muſt neceſſarily follow, that "by the works of the law can no fleſh, (that is, no perſon, either Jew or Gentile,) be juſtified before God;" all the efficacy which the law now has, being to diſcover ſin, and condemn for ſinning; "by the law is the knowledge of ſin:" By the law we apprehend our malady; but by the Goſpel we underſtand our remedy. Learn hence, That no ſon of Adam, ſince the breach of the law, can ſtand juſtified before God by his beſt obedience to the commands of the law. By being juſtified, underſtand that gracious act in God, whereby we are acquitted, and finally diſcharged, from the guilt and puniſhment of all our ſins: By the law here, and by the deeds of the law, we are to underſtand ceremonial and moral law both, eſpecially the latter: For by the moral law is the knowledge of ſin; 'tis the moral law forbids theft, adultery, &c. Beſides, it is evident, that the antitheſis, or oppoſition, runs all along, not between ceremonial works and moral works, but between works in general and faith: The law of works, and the law of faith, are oppoſed to each other, ver. 27. But, Why can no fleſh, that is, no perſon, be juſtified by the deeds of the law? Anſw. 1. Becauſe he is fleſh; that is, depraved by original corruption, and obnoxious to the curſe of the law, by actual tranſgreſſion. Now that which condemns cannot juſtify: An after-obedience to the law can never attone for a former diſobedience. 2. Becauſe the beſt obedience we can perform to the law is imperfect. Now he that mixes but one ſin with a thouſand good works, can never be juſtified by his Works: He that would be juſtified by his works, muſt not have one bad work amongſt all his works; for that one will lay him under the curſe and condemnatory ſentence of the law; Gal. iii. 10. "Curſed is every one that continues not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." Nothing that is imperfect can be a ground of juſtification before God; becauſe the deſign of God is to exalt his juſtice as well as his mercy in the juſtification of a ſinner. 3. No fleſh can be juſtified by the works of the law, becauſe all that we do, or can do, is a debt which we owe to the law: We owe all poſſible obedience to the law as creatures, and by performing our obligations as creatures, we can never pay our debts as tranſgreſſors. But now our ſurety, Chriſt Jeſus, who has given ſatisfaction for our violation of the law, was under no obligation to the law, but what he voluntarily laid himſelf under upon our account. And if ſo, let us eternally bleſs God, with the higheſt elevation of ſoul, for the Goſpel-revelation; for ſending his own Son to juſtify and ſave us, by working out a compleat and everlaſting righteouſneſs for us: And let us plead with him inceſſantly for the grace of juſtifying faith which is as neceſſary in its place as the death of Chriſt; one renders God reconcileable unto poor ſinners, the other actually reconciled. (B.) See the notes on Acts xiii. 39.

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. But now the righteouſneſs of God without the law is manifeſted, being witneſſed by the law and the prophets; even the righteouſneſs of God which is by faith of Jeſus Chriſt unto all, and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference: For all have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God; being juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt: Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs, for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I ſay, at this time his righteouſneſs: That he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him which believeth in Jeſus. Where is boaſting then? It is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay: But by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude, that a man is juſtified by faith without the deeds of the law. Is he the God of the Jews only? Is he not alſo of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles alſo: Seeing it is one God, which ſhall juſtify the circumciſion by faith, and uncircumciſion through faith. Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: Yea, we eſtabliſh the law.

But now the righteouſneſs] Our Apoſtle, having proved negatively, that by the works of the law, righteouſneſs and juſtification is not to be had for any perſon, be he Jew or Gentile, comes now to prove the affirmative part of his aſſertion; namely, that God hath manifeſted another way of juſtification in the goſpel; to wit, by faith in Jeſus Chriſt. For, ſaith he, Now, that is, ſince the coming of Chriſt, ſince the diſpenſation of the goſpel, "the righteouſneſs of God," that is, the righteouſneſs which God appoints, approves, and accepts, for a ſinner's juſtification, "is without the law," that is, without performing the works of the law, either natural, ceremonial, or moral; and is manifeſted to "be the righteouſneſs which is by faith in Chriſt;" which all that believe and obey the goſpel, ſhall be admitted to the participiation of, both Jew and Gentile; "For there is no difference;" that is, no difference between Jew and Gentile, as to the way and means of juſtification. And the reaſon aſſign'd by the Apoſtle, why there is, and can be, no other way of juſtification but this, we have in the next verſe; namely, "becauſe all have ſinned;" the whole race of mankind, not one meer man excepted, and ſo will fall ſhort of obtaining the glory of God and eternal life, if they ſeek it not in this way. Learn hence, 1. That there is no ſtanding before God for any creature in a creature's righteouſneſs; but the wiſdom of God has appointed another righteouſneſs, or the righteouſneſs of another, even of Jeſus Chriſt, for that purpoſe. 2. The neceſſity and excellency of faith; "the righteouſneſs of God "is unto all, and upon all that believe:" Faith is the bond of union, the inſtrument of our juſtification, the ſpring of our conſolation; "being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God," ch. v. 1. 3. That in reference to, or in reſpect of our juſtification before God, there is no difference among believers, ver. 22. "For there is no difference;" that is, no difference as to the way of juſtification, between Jew and Gentile, male, and female, bond and free; but all without the righteouſneſs of faith in Chriſt, muſt die and be damned to all eternity. There is now a difference amongſt believers, with reſpect to their degree of ſatisfaction, and with reſpect to their meaſures of conſolation, and will be hereafter with reſpect to the degrees of glorification: Some Saints have more grace and comfort on earth, and ſhall have higher degrees of glory in Heaven than others: But the juſtification of all believers is alike. There is the ſame ſin in all, not for the meaſure and degree, but in reſpect of guilt and obligation to puniſhment: There is the ſame price paid by way of ſatisfaction to divine juſtice for all; namely, the death of Chriſt: There is the ſame righteouſneſs imparted amongſt all, and the ſame ſpirit of holineſs imparted amongſt all, and the ſame manſions of glory deſigned for all; thus "there is no difference." And there is no difference amongſt believers in reſpect of truth of grace, but much in reſpect of ſtrength of grace: No difference amongſt them in reſpect of God's promiſes, but much with reſpect to their performances: No difference in reſpect of God's covenant, but much in reſpect of God's counſels, as alſo in reſpect of God's diſpenſations: No difference in reſpect of God's acceptation, but much in reſpect of their application; No difference as they are a body in reſpect of their head, but much as they are members of that head. And if there be no difference amongſt believers, as ſuch, before God, why ſhould there be ſo much difference amongſt themſelves, as there is oftentimes here in this world? Ye are all dear, truly dear to God, why ſhould ye not be ſo to one another? Why ſhould not one church and one communion hold you now, e'er long perhaps one priſon may, one Heaven ſhall certainly hold you all. (B.) See the notes on ver. 28.

No difference] Or diſtinction. See the notes on Acts x. 35.

Come ſhort.] Hyſterountai, the word here uſed, is taken from thoſe who come ſhort in the race, and cannot attain unto the mark that is ſet before them. (Leigh)

Of the glory of God.] That is, of the fruition of God in glory. (W.)

Juſtified freely by his grace.] Obſerve here, 1. A glorious privilege vouchafed to believers, which the Scriptures call juſtification, whereby they are judicially acquitted and diſcharged from the guilt and puniſhment of all their ſins, and accounted righteous before God. 2. The efficient cauſe of our juſtification; "It is God that juſtifies:" Who can forgive the crime but the perſon againſt whom we have done the wrong? The moving or impulſive cauſe, namely, the free grace of God; "being juſtified freely by his grace." 4. The meritorious cauſe, the blood-ſhedding and death of Chriſt; "through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt." 5. The final cauſe: "To declare his righteouſneſs;" not his clemency and mercy only, but his juſtice and righteouſneſs, eſpecially that attribute which diſpoſes and inclines him to puniſh ſin and ſinners. 6. The inſtrumental cauſe of juſtification; faith: "Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood," &c. Some of the Papiſts, eſpecially Cajetan and A lapide, do call faith cauſa applicans in our juſtification: Verily, an unapplied Chriſt juſtifies none, ſaves none. Learn thence, 1. That in order to a ſinner's being ſaved, he muſt be juſtified, that is, diſcharg'd of, abſolv'd from, the guilt of all ſin, upon the account of a compleat ſatisfaction given to divine juſtice for ſin. 2. That not all and every ſinner, but only repenting and believing ſinners are juſtified by God. 3. That when the Lord juſtifies a believing ſinner, he doth it freely; "being juſtified freely by his grace." It is an act of meer grace; there is nothing in the creature that can merit or deſerve it! Then it would be debt and not grace. 4. That God's free grace, and Chriſt's full ſatisfaction, were conſiſtent, and both concurring in the believer's juſtification: We are juſtified freely by God's grace; yet through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus: "Him God having ſet forth to be a propitiation." The word propitiation, is an alluſion to the Mercy-ſeat, which covered the ark wherein the law was: This typified Chriſt, who fully covers our ſins, the tranſgreſſions of the law, out of God's ſight. When therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that God hath ſet forth Chriſt to be a Mercy-ſeat to us, "thro' faith in his blood;" we have reaſon to believe the blood of Chriſt, as our ſin-offering, doth make an attonement for us, and renders God propitious to us. 5. That Almighty God, in the juſtification of a believing ſinner, is not only gracious and merciful, but juſt and righteous in the moſt exalted degrees: "To declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſin." Where note, that the deſign and end of God in exacting ſatisfaction from Chriſt, was to declare his righteouſneſs in the remiſſion of ſin; but the Apoſtle would have us take notice, that our juſtification is an act of juſtice as well as mercy, and that God, as he is a juſt God, cannot condemn the believer, ſince Chriſt has ſatisfied for his ſins. O bleſſed be God*!* That pardon of ſin is built upon that very attribute, the juſtice of God, which is ſo affrighting and dreadful to the offending ſinner. This attribute, which ſeemed to be the main bar againſt remiſſion, is now become the very ground and reaſon why God remits. Hence ſaith St. John, "God is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins:" Faithful with reſpect to his own promiſe, and juſt with reſpect to his Son's ſatisfaction. Who then can lay any thing to the charge of God's elect, when juſtice itſelf doth juſtify them? Behold here, The ſweet harmony of the divine attributes, in juſtifying and pardoning the believer: One attribute is not robb'd to pay another; neither is one attribute raiſed upon the ruin of another; but juſtice and mercy both triumph. And well might the juſtice of God triumph, for never was it thus honoured before, to have ſuch a perſon as the Son of God ſtand at its bar, and ſuch a ſum as his Son's blood paid down at once by way of ſatisfaction to its due demands. O glorious and all-wiſe contrivance! Whereby God made ſufficient proviſion for the reparation of his honour, for the vindication of his holineſs, and for the manifeſtation of his truth and faithfulneſs, and for the preſent conſolation and eternal ſalvation of all repenting and believing ſinners, to the end of the world. (B.) Theſe words contain the catechiſm of Chriſtian righteouſneſs, thus; How is God glorified in us, and we in him? "By his grace." What does his grace work in us? True holineſs. Upon what motive? Becauſe it pleaſes him. By whom does he give it us? By Jeſus Chriſt. How has Chriſt obtained it for us? By redeeming us. What price did he give? "His blood." What does his blood effect? It reconciles us to God. How is it applied? By faith, animated with charity. Who gives us this faith? Jeſus Chriſt himſelf: For it applies his blood to us, and is notwithſtanding the fruit of his blood. Who gave us that victim of reconciliation? God. Why did he chuſe theſe means? To confound the falſe righteouſneſs of the Gentiles; to aboliſh the figurative righteouſneſs of the Jews; and to eſtabliſh his own. What does this righteouſneſs perform? It cleanſes and purifies the heart from ſin. Whoſe heart does it cleanſe and purify? Thoſe of all people; and even of all the righteous perſons, who liv'd in the four thouſand years which preceded Chriſt. Why did God ſtay ſo long, before he made his righteouſneſs appear? To make it the more valued; to ſhew his fidelity in the performance of his promiſes; to make known the virtue and efficacy of Chriſt's blood, which ſanctifies the preſent, extends its influence backward to the paſt, and forward to future ages. What then is due from us on this account? Adoration, thankſgiving, love, and truſt in Jeſus Chriſt: Our treaſure is in him; and our heart ought to be in him alſo. (Q.) See the notes on ver. 4. and John iii. 16.

Set forth to be a propitiation.] Or rather, a propitiatory, placatory, or mercy-ſeat; alluding to the mercy-ſeat, or the covering of the ark, Exod. xxv. 21, 22. called hilaſterion, (the word here uſed,) as is here already noted. (Aſſ. Fell, H. Stanhope, W. and B.) Chriſt is to us what the mercy-ſeat was to the Jews. Now the Jews were never the better for the mercy-ſeat, if they did not apply themſelves to it in the method which God by his law had preſcribed: And that method was by offering ſacrifice, and ſprinkling the blood thereof upon the veil, drawn before this throne where the divine majeſty did in ſo peculiar a manner reſide, Levit. iv. 6, 17. Thus our Saviour has directed us where, and how, we are to make our addreſſes to him, as our mercy-ſeat; and that is, by offering the memorial which he himſelf hath appointed, even that of the ſacrifice of his ſpiritual body and blood: And 'tis ſtrange, that Chriſtians can think of making application to their mercy-ſeat in a leſs ſolemn manner, than the Jews did to theirs. (Johnſ.)

To declare his righteouſneſs.] Endeixis dicaioſunes will here beſt be rendred, the demonſtration of his righteouſneſs: And accordingly, as the method of demonſtrating is wont to be by the cauſe, ſo here follows dia; which, with an accuſative caſe, is a note of a cauſe, (dia ten pareſin) becauſe of the paſſing by (not taking notice) of paſt ſins, the ſins, whether by Jews or Gentiles, formerly committed, that is, before the revealing and manifeſting of God's will unto them by Chriſt: According to that of Acts xvii. 30. that God (huperidon) looking over, not taking notice of, that "time of ignorance, doth now command all men every where to repent;" and Wiſd. xi. 23. (paroſas hamartemata anthropon eis metanoian,) Thou lookeſt another way, and beholdeſt not the ſins of men, that they may repent. The huperidon and paroron there is the direct interpretation of God's pareſis here, differing from (apheſis,) pardon, as preterition doth from remiſſion; as paſſing by, and not yet laying to their charge for puniſhment, doth from abſolving, or acquitting of them. For tho' in order to their repentance and change, God doth at the preſent ſo paſs by their forepaſt ſins, as not to forſake them, or ſhut up all ways of mercy againſt them, but reveals Chriſt to them, with promiſe of pardon for what is paſt, if they will now obey him (this is the meaning of pareſis;) yet unleſs that change be wrought, and for the future approved to him, there is no (apheſis) remiſſion or pardon to be expected from him. This pareſis then conſiſts in God's forbearance, or long-ſuffering, (ſo the word ſignifies, ch. ii. 4.) in his not proceeding ſo ſwiftly and ſeverely with ſinners, as to cut them off, or forſake, and leave them helpleſs and hopeleſs in their ſins, but treating them gently, giving them ſpace to repent and amend, and uſing all effectual means to win them to it; all one with God's (macrothumia,) ſlowneſs to puniſh, mentioned oft, in the caſe of Pharaoh, and elſewhere. And this being now God's dealing in Chriſt, is here mention'd as the medium to demonſtrate God's righteouſneſs; that is, that evangelical way revealed by Chriſt, wherein it conſiſts; not in the purchaſe of pardon and forgiveneſs abſolutely, or for any but thoſe that do ſincerely return from their wicked lives, and embrace the faith and obedience of Chriſt, but to give ſpace, and to admoniſh and call to repentance, and uſe means on God's part effectual, if they be not obſtinately reſiſted or contemned by us, to bring us to new life. And that is the meaning alſo of the (apolutroſis) "redemption which is in Chriſt," ver. 24. his freeing men from that neceſſity of periſhing in their ſins, calling them to repentance, uſing all probable means to redeem and purify them from all iniquity, which is expreſs'd by (lutrouſthai) redeeming, Tit. ii. 14. and (poiein lutroſin) to work redemption, Luke i. 68. And ſo ſometimes alſo forgiving ſignifies, as when Chriſt ſaith, (Pater aphes,) "Father forgive them," Luke xxiii. 34. For there he prays not for final or actual, preſent, abſolute forgiveneſs to them, but for the giving them ſpace to repent, and means to convince them of their ſin, by the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Apoſtles preaching to them the reſurrection of Chriſt from that death which they had inflicted on him. And ſo muſt we underſtand "the remiſſion of ſins," which in the Creed is propoſed to all to believe. (H.) See the notes on ch. i. 17. Acts x. 22. xiii. 38. and xvii. 30.

That he might be juſt.] That is, that all might learn to acknowledge and approve this new way of proceeding of the juſtice of God, in juſtifying him who is a ſinner in himſelf, by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: Or the word juſt is here taken for true and faithful; or one who obſerveth ſtrict juſtice, and would not juſtify ſinful man by any means but by full payment and ſatisfaction. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 24.

Where is boaſting then?] See the notes on ch. ii. 17.

By what law?] The main paſſages in this, and other Epiſtles of St. Paul, concerning juſtification and ſalvation, having an immediate reference to the great controverſy between the Orthodox and the Judaizing Chriſtians, which was determin'd by the Apoſtles and Elders in the Synod at Jeruſalem; (See the notes on Acts xv.) but nevertheleſs gave St. Paul no little trouble afterwards with thoſe zealous Judaizers, eſpecially among the Romans and the Galatians; it will therefore be neceſſary to obſerve, That when he ſpeaks of law, he uſually means the Jewiſh law; which was a complex body of laws, containing moral, ceremonial, and judicial precepts, each of which had its uſe and office, as a great inſtrument of duty. Theſe three made up the entire code and pandects of the Jewiſh ſtatutes: All which our Apoſtle comprehends under the general notion of "the law;" and not the moral law ſingly and ſeparately conſider'd; in which ſenſe it never appears that the Jews expected juſtification and ſalvation by it; nay rather, that they looked for it merely from the obſervation of the ritual and ceremonial: So that the moral law is no farther conſider'd by him in this queſtion, than as it made up part of the Moſaical conſtitution, of that national and political covenant, which God made with the Jews at mount Sinai. Hence the Apoſtle all along in his diſcourſes conſtantly oppoſes the law and goſpel, and the obſervation of one to the belief and practice of the other: Which ſurely he would not have done, had he ſimply intended the Moral law; it being more expreſly incorporated into the goſpel, than ever it was into the law of Moſes. And that the Apoſtle does thus oppoſe the law and goſpel might be made evident from the continued ſeries of his diſcourſes; but theſe few may ſuffice. "By what law (ſays he here) is boaſting excluded? By the law of works? (that is, by the moſaical law, in whoſe peculiar privileges and prerogatives the Jews did ſtrangely flatter and pride themſelves?) Nay, but by the law "of faith;" that is, by the goſpel, or the evangelical way of God's dealing with us. And elſewhere, giving an account of this very controverſy, between the Jewiſh and Gentile converts, he firſt oppoſes their perſons, "Jews by nature," and "ſinners of the Gentiles;" and then infers, "that a man is not juſtified by the works of the law," (that is, by thoſe legal obſervances whereby the Jews expected to be juſtified,) "but by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt;" that is, by a hearty belief of and compliance with that way which Chriſt has introduced; "for by the works of the law (by legal obedience,) no fleſh (neither Jew nor Gentile) ſhall (now) be juſtified," Gal. ii. 15, 16. And again, "Fain would I learn of you, whether ye received the ſpirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith," ch. iii. 2. That is, whether ye became partakers of the miraculous powers of the Holy Ghoſt, while ye continued under the legal diſpenſation, or ſince ye embraced the goſpel and the faith of Chriſt. And ſpeaking afterwards of the ſtate of the Jews before the revelation of the goſpel, he ſays, "before faith came, we were kept under the law;" (i. e. before the goſpel came, we were kept under the diſcipline of the legal oeconomy "ſhut up unto the faith," (reſerv'd for the diſcovery of the evangelical diſpenſation,) "which ſhould afterwards (in its due time) be revealed" to the world, ver. 23. And this he diſcourſes more at large in the following chapter: By all which 'tis evident, that by "the law," and "the works of the law," in this controverſy, the Apoſtle is to be underſtood of the law of Moſes, and that obedience which the legal diſpenſation requir'd at their hands. (Cave)

Juſtified by faith.] The Apoſtle uſeth this word faith, either, 1. More generally, for the goſpel, in oppoſition to the law of Moſes; as is ſhewn in the note foregoing: Or, 2 More particularly, for a practical belief, or ſuch an aſſent to the evangelical revelation as produces a ſincere obedience to the laws of it: And indeed, as 'tis concerned in this matter, 'tis uſually taken, not for this or that ſingle virtue, but for the entire condition of the new covenant, as comprehending all that duty which it requires of us, 1 Cor. vii. 19. Gal. v. 6. and vi. 15. From which places there needs no skill to infer, that the faith whereby we are juſtified, contains in it a new diſpoſition and ſtate both of heart and life, and an obſervation of the laws of Chriſt; in which reſpect the Apoſtle does, in one and the ſame verſe, expound believing, by obeying, Rom. x. 16. And ſuch, he aſſures us, was that very faith by which Abraham was juſtified, ch. iv. 2. &c. and Hebr. xi. 28. (Idem) From which and what more this learned author has ſaid on this ſubject, (in his Life of St. Paul, ſect. ix.) he draws theſe two plain conſectaries; 1. That works of evangelical obedience are not oppoſed to faith in juſtification: And, 3. That the doctrines of St. Paul and St. James, about juſtification are fairly conſiſtent with each other. See the notes on ver. 4.

Is he the God of the Jews only?] God is ſaid to be their God, in the ſcripture-phraſe, who are in covenant with him, and whom he dearly loveth and tendereth. (Aſſ.) The force of the Apoſtle's argument here lies in this, That that cannot be neceſſary to our juſtification, which excludes the greateſt part of mankind from all poſſibility of being juſtified, as the juſtification by the Moſaical law plainly does; a thing by no means conſiſtent with God's univerſal love and kindneſs to his creatures. (Cave) See the notes on Acts x. 35.

The circumciſion by faith, and uncircumciſion through faith.] That is, "through faith," to the Gentile now firſt exhibited; "by faith" to the Jew now accompliſhed. (Fell)

God forbid! Yea, we eſtabliſh the law.] Obſerve here, The wiſe and holy caution, which the Apoſtle uſes, to take away the calumny and reproach caſt upon him, by the adverſaries, as if his doctrine would render the law of God void and altogether uſeleſs: "Do we then make void the law through faith?" As if he had ſaid, there may be thoſe who will ſay ſo; but untruly: For "we eſtabliſh the law;" becauſe we acknowledge, that without exact obedience and conformity to the law, both in our natures, and in our lives, as a rule of living, there can be no ſalvation. (B.) "We eſtabliſh the law," in preaching the accompliſhment of that, which the law and the prophets promiſed and foretold; under, and even before which alſo, juſtification was had only by faith; as is ſhew'd in the next chapter. We eſtabliſh the ceremonial law, in completing the type in the ſubſtance itſelf: And the moral law alſo, in thoſe ends, for which it was given; viz. "the knowledge of ſin," ver. 20. and Gal. iii. 19. Which likewiſe, for the fulfilling of it, is now firſt eſtabliſhed; in Chriſt, who liv'd in perfect obedience to it without ſin, and in the faithful too, in ſome meaſure, by the power of the Holy Spirit in them, which Chriſt hath given unto them, ch. viii. 4. (Fell) The Judicial law, being not properly of religious, but meerly of civil, importance, can have little or no place in the preſent queſtion: The Moral precepts are not only retain'd, but even enforc'd and exalted in the Chriſtian rule of manners: And the Ceremonial, partly as diſtinctions peculiar to that people, partly as figures of things then to come, but now already come, but upon both accounts neither of univerſal nor perpetual obligation, are not ſo properly caſt off as worn out; they ceaſe of courſe, becauſe the grounds and uſes, to which they were appointed, have long ſince ceaſed. So that what was of intrinſick goodneſs in the Jewiſh oeconomy is preſerv'd entire in the Chriſtian; what was typical with them is accompliſh'd with us; what was defective there is ſupplied here: And all this in ſuch a manner, as, we make no doubt, was intended from the beginning, and ordain'd by God to be, when the proper ſeaſon ſhould come for that inſtitution (wiſe and good for the time, and perſons, and purpoſes it was ſuited to,) to be ſucceeded by another of greater excellence, and of more general extent and benefit; one which that all along look'd forward at, and was intended to prepare men for. (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 27.

C H A P. IV.

Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſs; and that before he was circumciſed. The promiſe made to him, and his ſeed, extends alſo to us by faith.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. WHAT ſhall we ſay then that Abraham our father, as pertaining to the fleſh, hath found? For if Abraham were juſtified by works, he hath whereof to glory, but not before God. For what ſaith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteouſneſs. Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs. Even as David alſo deſcribeth the bleſſedneſs of the man unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſs without works; ſaying, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered: Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute ſin. Cometh this bleſſedneſs then upon the circumciſion only, or upon the uncircumciſion alſo? For we ſay, that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteouſneſs. How was it then reckoned? When he was in circumciſion, or in uncircumciſion? Not in circumciſion, but in uncircumciſion. And he received the ſign of circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of the faith which he had yet being uncircumciſed: That he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumciſed; that righteouſneſs might be imputed unto them alſo: And the father of circumciſion to them who are not of the circumciſion only, but alſo walk in the ſteps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumciſed. For the promiſe that he ſhould be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his ſeed, through the law, but through the righteouſneſs of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promiſe made of none effect: Becauſe the law worketh wrath: For where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion.

What ſhall we ſay then?] The underſtanding of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe in this chapter depends much on a right underſtanding of this verſe; which contains the queſtion to which the ſatisfaction is rendred in the following words. And in this verſe four things muſt be obſerved; 1. That the words "What ſay we then?" Is a form of introducing a queſtion, and tho' not here (in the ordinary printed copies) yet in other places hath a note of interrogation immediately following it, as ch. vi. 1. and vii. 7. This being ſuppoſed, The 2. is, That the remainder of the verſe is the very queſtion thus introduced, "that Abraham," &c. that is, Do we ſay, that Abraham found according to the fleſh? And this interrogation being not here formally anſwer'd, muſt itſelf be taken for an anſwer to itſelf: And as ſuch interrogations are the ſtrongeſt negations, ſo will this; and muſt thus be made up by addition of theſe or the like words, No certainly he did not. Then 3. What is here the meaning of heurekenai, "hath found," will ſoon be anſwered, 1. That to find, agreeably to the Hebrew, ſignifies to gain, obtain, acquire; as to find life, Mat. xvi. 25. That there muſt be ſome ſubſtantive underſtood, ſomewhat which he may be ſaid to have found: And that is either, indefinitely, that which he did find, or obtain; or elſe, more diſtinctly, righteouſneſs or juſtification, which had before been named favour, approbation with God. So we have, (heures charin) "Thou haſt found favour," Luk. 1. 30. which ſeems to be a proverbial form, and will then be the ſame with being juſtified, ver. 2. And ſo the illative particle, for, concludes, Do we ſay he hath found? (or, certainly he hath not found:) For if he were juſtified, that is, if he had thus found; which notes finding, and being juſtified to be all one. 4. What is meant by (cata ſarca) according to the fleſh. And 1. It appears to connect with the heurekenai; for ſo it lies, "found according to the fleſh," and is not joyned with "Abraham our father," as in reaſon it would have been, and not heurekenai interpoſed, if the meaning of it had been, "our father according to the fleſh:" Which being ſuppoſed, it will likewiſe follow, that, according to the fleſh," muſt ſignifie the ſame with (ex ergon,) "by works," ver. 2. in like manner as found and juſtified import the ſame. And this again is evident by the laws of reaſoning. For this ſecond verſe being, by the for in the front, evidenced to be the proof of what was ſet down in the firſt, and this proof being in form of an hypothetical ſyllogiſm, thus, If Abraham were by works juſtified before God, then he hath matter of boaſting before God: But Abraham hath not any matter of boaſting before God; therefore he was not juſtified by works; It muſt follow neceſſarily that this concluſion, Abraham was not juſtified by works, was the ſame with that which was ſet down in other words, ver. 1. or if not, of the ſame latitude and extent with it, was comprehended as a part, under it: Which it cannot be, unleſs (cata ſarca,) "according to the fleſh," and (ex ergon) "by works," be either of the ſame force directly, or the latter contained in the former; any greater, tho' never ſo ſmall, difference, that ſhould be admitted, being of neceſſity to affix four terms to the Apoſtle's ſyllogiſm, and ſo to evacuate all force in his argument. From hence it follows, that the way of diſcerning what is meant by (ex ergon) "by works," will be the moſt probable means of interpreting (cata ſarca) "according to the fleſh." And this we have from ver. 4, and 5. in theſe words, "To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt: But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is reckoned for righteouſneſs." Where it is evident, that working is that to which "reward is by debt," or juſt wages, to be adjudged; and that in oppoſiton to God's "reckoning of grace," or favour, and "juſtifying the ungodly." From whence it follows, that being juſtified by works in this place (in St. Paul's and not St. James's dialect) ſignifies that innocence of the former life, and thoſe eminent performances, wrought by a man's ſelf, that may challenge from God as due unto them God's acquittance and ſpecial reward, without any intervening of pardon, as to an offender, or of grace, in giving him any thing that is not perfectly due to him. Whereas on the contrary, "God's imputing righteouſneſs without works," ver. 6. is God's pardoning graciouſly the ſins that the man hath been guilty of, (viz. upon repentance and reformation) which he might moſt juſtly have puniſhed, ver. 7, 8. and rewarding ſome mean imperfect act, or acts of fidelity, or obedience in him, which could no way challenge impunity, much leſs ſuch a degree of reward, did not God out of meer mercy thus improve, and enhanſe the value of them. So that (erga) works are the man's own performances, firſt blameleſs in not ſinning, and then meritorious, as the eminent difficulty of the commands, wherein his obedience is tryed and exerciſed, is apt to enhanſe the value of them: And he that were ſuppoſed to be juſtified by them, muſt 1. Have lived blameleſly all his former life, and then have done eminent, rewardable actions alſo, at leaſt the former of theſe. And Abraham having been (aſebes) a ſinner, ver. 5. having lived in idolatry for ſome time, and all that he did, upon which he was juſtified, Gen. xv. 6. being but obeying God's call, Gen. xii. 4 and believing his promiſe, Gen. xv. 5. it is clear he was not, nor could be thus juſtified, but only by the way mention'd by the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. xxxii. 1, 2. By God's forgiving, covering, not imputing of ſin. And ſo this muſt be the meaning alſo of his not finding, according to the fleſh; viz. being not juſtified by any thing in himſelf, abſtracted from the mercy and gracious acceptance of God. Thus Rom. ix. 8. "The children of the fleſh" are oppoſed to "the children of the promiſe," and ſignify literally Iſhmael that was begotten by the ſtrength of nature, as Iſaac was a work of God's promiſe and ſpecial mercy; and myſtically the Jews conſider'd with their own performances, whereby they expected juſtification, without any reſpect to the pardon and mercy of Chriſt. And thus, Gal. iv. 29. Iſhmael is ſaid to be "born according to the fleſh," and Iſaac "according to the ſpirit," in the ſame notion; the ſpirit and the promiſe ſignifying the ſame thing in that place, as appears by ver. 8. The words being thus interpreted, are a confutation of one part of the objection of the Jews againſt the Apoſtle's practice of preaching the goſpel to the Gentiles, viz. that taken from the ſins of the Gentiles, which here, by the example of Abraham, is proved to be of no force againſt their juſtification; they being as juſtifiable as Abraham a ſinner was, by God's free pardon of ſins paſt, upon forſaking of them. And this is inſiſted on, and proved, in the eight firſt verſes In the ninth verſe the Apoſtle proceeds to the confuting of the other part of their objection, viz. That if the Heathens would be capable of any part of the benefit of God's promiſe, they muſt then be proſelytes of their Moſaical covenant, or righteouſneſs, be circumciſed, &c. Which again is proved falſe; by the example of Abraham, who was juſtified before he was circumciſed, and before the giving of the law; by faith, not by circumciſion; by God's pardon and mercy, not by any legal performances. The only matter of doubt and uncertainty is, Whether theſe objections, which are thus in the enſuing chapter confuted, were both propoſed in the firſt verſe, (for if they were, then, (ex ergon) "by works" ver. 2. will not be of the ſame latitude with (cata ſarca) "according to the fleſh," but contained under it, as a part under the whole; or whether the firſt only were there comprehended, and the ſecond ſeverally ſubjoyned, ver. 9. The latter of theſe ſeems moſt probable; and accordingly the explication of the chapter proceedeth: Tho' if the former were true, it would be of no greater concernment than only this, that (cata ſarca) "according to the fleſh" ſhould refer to circumciſion, and Moſaical obſervances, as well as to the blameleſs and meritorious performances wrought by a man's own natural ſtrength, abſtracted from God's pardon and favourable acceptance. (H.)

Abraham believed God.] See the notes on ver. 13. &c.

It was counted unto him for righteouſneſs.] His faith was counted to him for, and therefore it was not of itſelf properly, righteouſneſs; ſo that, as there is no merit in works, neither is there any in faith: This counting of faith ſo, is only by virtue of God's covenant and promiſe; and this promiſe and covenant only from God's free grace and bounty. (Fell)

To him that worketh.] By working here, is meant a perfect obedience to the law of God, by what way ſoever it is made known to us. For Abraham's working was before the giving of the law of Moſes; and the rule here laid down by the Apoſtle holds true, of all manner of works, whether of the moral or ceremonial law. For whoever ſhall perfectly, and in all points, keep the law, the reward of his obedience is not conferr'd on him by grace and favour, but it is a debt due unto him. But, neither Abraham, nor any other meer man, did ever perform ſuch an obedience; and conſequently he could not plead the merit of his works, for his juſtification and ſalvation: But, by virtue of God's covenant and promiſe, his faith in the goodneſs and power of God to perform his promiſe was "counted to him for righteouſneſs;" that is, God did not lay the guilt of his ſins to his charge, but juſtified, or pardon'd him on the account of his faith, and dealt with him as a righteous perſon, one who had never offended him. But, this faith obliged Abraham, as our faith obliges us, for the future, to a ſincere and univerſal obedience to the laws of God. If the ungodly repent of and forſake their ſins, and ceaſe to be ungodly, they may obtain pardon: But if, notwithſtanding their faith, they ſtill continue to be ungodly, they deceive themſelves if they hope to be ſaved by a meer notional and unfruitful faith. (Fox) See the notes on Luke xvii. 10.

The reward not reckon'd.] See the notes on Hebr. xi. 26.

Of grace, but of debt.] See the notes on ch. iii. 24.

Juſtifieth the ungodly.] Meaning ſuch as formerly had been ungodly; not ſuch as ſtill continue ſo. The Apoſtle deſcribes the temper and frame of their hearts and lives before juſtification, and not after it; as it found them, not as it leaves them. 'Tis true, Chriſt "juſtifies the ungodly;" yet ſuch as continue ungodly are not juſtified by him: We muſt bring credentials from our ſanctification, to bear witneſs of the truth of our juſtification. (B.)

As David alſo deſcribeth.] To the example of Abraham the Apoſtle ſubjoins the teſtimony of David, Pſa. xxxii. 1. &c. "deſcribing the bleſſedneſs of the man, to whom the Lord imputeth righteouſneſs, (to wit, the righteouſneſs of the mediator,) without any works," brought before God to be juſtified by. Sin, in reſpect of the offence, is remitted; in reſpect of the turpitude, it is cover'd; in reſpect of the puniſhment, not imputed. All theſe words ſerve only to amplify the abundant grace of God in the act of pardoning ſin. (Idem)

Cometh this bleſſedneſs then.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Let us ſee then, what ſort of perſons are qualified for this bleſſedneſs? Whether ſuch alone who are circumciſed, and ſo live under the law? And, for the reſolution of this enquiry, the ſcripture is expreſs, that Abraham was eſteemed righteous in the ſight of God, on the account, and at the time, of his believing the promiſe of God made unto him: But this, 'tis plain, was before he was circumciſed.

Therefore the Gentiles, by faith, ſhall be accounted righteous, tho' they be never circumciſed. (Stanh. and B.)

He received the ſign of circumciſion.] Circumciſion was a ſign and token of the covenant which God made with Abraham and the Jews. It was a commemorative ſign of God's covenant with Abraham: A repreſentative ſign of Abraham's faith and obedience towards God: A demonſtrative ſign of original ſin, and the depravity of human nature: A diſcriminating and diſtinguiſhing ſign of the true church and people of God from all the reſt of the world: An initiating ſign, by which all ſtrangers that were received into the commonwealth of Iſrael were admitted into the Jewiſh church: And it was a prefigurative ſign of baptiſm, which in the Chriſtian church was to ſucceed in the room of circumciſion. (B.)

A ſeal of the righteouſneſs of the faith.] That is, of the promiſes made to "the righteouſneſs of the faith." (Fell) Now this of a ſeal is a term naturally referring us to mutual contracts; and accordingly, we find it, at its firſt inſtitution, ſtiled "a covenant, and a token of the covenant of God in their fleſh," Gen. xvii. 10, 11, 13. In which covenant, 1. God, on his part promiſed, to bleſs Abraham, and his ſeed after him, with a numerous encreaſe, and wonderful ſucceſſes; to beſtow upon them the land of Canaan; to admit them into an everlaſting covenant with himſelf; and that "in his ſeed all the families of the earth ſhould be bleſſed," Gen. xii. xv. and xvii. And 2. The counterpart to be perform'd by them, was, that they ſhould be his people, and worſhip and obey him, and him only. (Stanh.) And as circumciſion was to the Jews, ſo baptiſm is to Chriſtians, one of the Lord's ſeals, as the other ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper is alſo another. Now, as in preaching the word of God, the miniſter is his ambaſſador to his people, and in publick prayer an orator for them; ſo in reſpect of the ſacraments, he is the keeper of the Lord's ſeals, whereby his people are aſſured, not of an earthly patrimony, but of an eternal kingdom in Heaven. If therefore it be a great honour, (as it is indeed) to be the Lord keeper of the king's ſeal, which notwithſtanding hath uſe but in temporal affairs; what ſhall we think of their function, who are the keepers of the Heavenly king's ſeals, which alſo ſerve for the confirmation of ſpiritual bleſſings in Heavenly things? (Downame) Nay, what ſhall we think of thoſe, who glory in ſhewing their contempt of that ſacred function, prophanely reviling the perſons, and blaſpheming all that relates to their divine inſtitution?

Which he had, yet being uncircumciſed.] Here our tranſlators have inſerted theſe words "he had yet," as it ſeems, contrary to the mind and meaning of the Apoſtle. For this verſion has reſpect to the faith of Abraham only while he was uncircumciſed: But the Apoſtle ſeems to ſpeak eſpecially of the future faith of the Gentiles. In teſtimony whereof, to wit, that the Gentiles in proceſs of time ſhould become heirs of the faith of Abraham, the "father of many nations" according to the promiſe, Abraham received the ſeal (as it is here call'd) of circumciſion: And therefore we ſhould tranſlate it thus, "And he received the ſign of circumciſion, a ſeal (or aſſurance) of the righteouſneſs of faith, which ſhould be in the uncircumciſed" (Maſſey)

The father of all them that believe.] See the notes on Luke xix. 9.

Walk in the ſteps of that faith.] That is, who imitate him in his faith, and in the holineſs and obedience of his life, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. As Abraham readily obey'd the call of God, ſo do they: As Abraham left his idolatrous country and kindred, and tho' he had opportunity of returning, yet never return'd more; ſo do the faithful ſons and daughters of Abraham leave all known ſins, and no temptations can prevail with them to return to the delight or practice of them. Did Abraham break through all impediments, difficulties, and diſcouragements whatſoever? So do, and will, all thoſe who "walk in the ſteps of that faith of our father Abraham," ſurmount all difficulties, and bid defiance to all dangers; that they may yield a ready, chearful, and perſevering obedience to the commands of the God of Abraham. (B.)

For the promiſe.] The argument runs thus; If the promiſe made to the father of the faithful was accompliſhed, not by legal obedience, but by "the righteouſneſs of faith," then it follows, that all his children are juſtified by faith, as Abraham their father was: But, the promiſe of the earthly inheritance, and under it that of the Heavenly one, was accompliſhed, not by legal obedience, but by the righteouſneſs of Abraham's faith, as Abraham their father was. Therefore all his children are juſtified by faith, as Abraham their father was. (B.) Let us either renounce the promiſes of the goſpel, or live according to the faith of the goſpel. It is not faith alone, but "the righteouſneſs of faith," or a life conformable to the faith, which gives the true children of Abraham a right to the new world, which is the church in Heaven. (Q.)

Becauſe the law worketh wrath.] To wit, to the tranſgreſſers of it. (W.) This argument runs undeniably thus; That which condemns cannot juſtify: But the law of God condemns the ſinner for his tranſgreſſion; Therefore it can never be the inſtrument and means of his juſtification. (B.) See the notes on ch. v. 13.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that alſo which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all, (as it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations) before him whom he believed, even God who quickneth the dead, and calleth thoſe things which be not as though they were: Who againſt hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations; according to that which was ſpoken, So ſhall thy ſeed be. And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sarah's womb. He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief, but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God: And being fully perſwaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs. Now it was not written for his ſake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us alſo, to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and was raiſed again for our juſtification.

Therefore it is of faith.] Obſerve here, three privileges of the righteouſneſs of faith. 1. It is the effect of the grace and operation of God in us: Faith therefore is a free gift of God; otherwiſe we ſhould not be juſtified freely, in being juſtified by faith. 2. It is ſure, unchangeable, and for ever; whereas the ſtate of the law was to ceaſe. And, 3. It is not deſign'd for one particular ſmall people, but for all nations. (Q.) See the notes on ver. 11. ch. iii. 24. and John i. 12.

Father of many nations.] Obſerve here, That as Abraham's faith exceedingly honour'd God, ſo God highly honours Abraham's faith: Making him, like himſelf, "a father of many nations." As God is an univerſal father, not of one but of all nations, ſo was Abraham; as God is their ſpiritual father, not by carnal generation, ſo was Abraham: God made faithful Abraham like himſelf; a father not of this or that nation only, but univerſally of all believers, among all nations, believing after his example. Thus Abraham's faith honours God, and God honours Abraham's faith, ſtiling him the father of the faithful throughout all generations. (B.) The Jews themſelves prove from hence, That a Proſelyte, converted to the Jewiſh faith, might be a legate of the ſynagogue. Before this time, ſay they, Abraham was only a father of the Syrians; but from this time he was the father of all nations. (W.) See the notes on Luke xix. 9.

Before him whom he believed.] The import of catenanti Theou, "before God," is not ordinarily obſerv'd, and muſt be fetch'd from the Hebrew, as it is uſed, Gen. ii. 18. where God ſays, he will make for Adam an Help, we render it "meet for him;" and the vulgar renders it (ſimile ei) like, or agreeable, or anſwerable to him; where the Septuagint hath it (cat' auton) by him, or on the ſide of him, anſwerable, or parallel to him. The Greek (catenanti) bears exact proportion to the Hebrew: And ſo 'tis here underſtood by St. Chryſoſtome and Theophylact. This obſervation may poſſibly be uſeful to the finding out the full import of ſome other places: As, when the commandment is given to Abram, to "walk before God, and be perfect," Gen. xvii. 1. the word (before) in this notion of it, will be all one with, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," Matth. v. 48. (H.)

God, who quickneth the dead.] This being an inſtance of Abram's faith, it ſeems moſt reaſonable to refer it to the object of his faith; viz. That he ſhould have a numerous ſeed; yea, that he ſhould have the promiſed ſeed from Sarah, notwithſtanding "the deadneſs of her womb:" And ſo this phraſe is interpreted by Hilary the deacon. (W.)

And calleth thoſe things which be not.] He who is far from God, (ſaith Origen) as we Gentiles were, before we came to the knowledge of the truth, is ſaid not to be: And therefore, God, deſigning to render them the ſeed of Abraham by faith, is ſaid "to call thoſe things that be not, as if they were." For (ta me onta) "things which are not," both in the language of the Old Teſtament, and of the Jews, and of the primitive Chriſtians, ſignifies the Gentiles; by converting whom (Clemens Romanus ſays) God called (hemas ouc ontas) us that were not, and would (ec toume ontos einai hemas) that of nothing we ſhould have a being. (Idem) He making them to be by his word; and as it were calling them to come forth and appear, for that end to which he hath ordain'd them : As he did in the creation of all things, and in the miraculous raiſing of the dead. (Aſſ.) For in reſpect of God they are already, which otherwiſe with reſpect to themſelves have no being; ſince he can, even with a word, make any thing out of nothing. (Beza) The ſacred Claſſicks are more noble and ſublime upon any ſubject than the other Claſſicks: But never do the Greek and Latin authors look ſo out of countenance upon the compariſon, as when the diſcourſe is upon God and divine ſubjects. No human wit could diſcover the myſteries of Heaven, or diſcourſe on 'em, with an adequate and proper majeſty of language. Pindar, who ſpeaks of divine perſons and things with as much reverence and emphaſis as any writer in the Pagan world, ſays of God, that he can catch the eagle on the wing, and out-ſtrip the ſea-dolphin. Which is a pretty thought, and neatly dreſs'd: But yet, how trifling and inſignificant, if compar'd with this ſolid and glorious piece of ſublime; "God, who quickens the dead, and calls things that are not, as things that are!" (Blackw.)

Againſt hope believed in hope.] Here St. Paul farther expatiates in the commendation of Abraham's faith; telling us, That "againſt hope he believed in hope;" that is, he had a ſtrong hope, a firm faith and truſt in the promiſe and power of God, againſt all natural grounds of hope; namely, that he ſhould certainly have a ſon, and a ſeed like the ſtars of heaven for multitude. He farther adds, That "he conſidered not the deadneſs of his own body, nor the barrenneſs of Sarah's womb; neither ſtaggered at the promiſe through unbelief;" that is, he regarded not any difficulties which lay in the way of his faith; he admitted no doubts or queſtions touching the promiſe or power of God; but without all diſputing, depended fully upon God for the performance of his own promiſe, and ſo gave God the glory of his omnipotency and faithfulneſs. Obſerve here, 1. What was the ground of Abraham's faith; namely, the ſpecial promiſe, yea, the abſolute promiſe of God, that he ſhould have a ſon. 2. The height and meaſure of his faith; He was "ſtrong in faith, and ſtaggered not through unbelief," but was fully perſwaded of God's all-ſufficiency. It is a metaphor taken from ſhips that come into the harbour with full ſail: And thus was it with Abraham; there was not any ſail of his ſoul but what was filled with the wind of aſſurance. As a ſhip with full gale and ſtrong ſail is carried to the haven againſt winds and waves; ſo Abraham, by the ſtrength of his faith, overcame all waves of doubts and difficulties beating upon his mind. 3. What was the fruit and iſſue, the end and the event of Abraham's faith: It brought glory to God; He "was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God." All faith glorifies God truly, but ſtrong faith glorifies him abundantly: It gives him the glory of his power and faithfulneſs, goodneſs and truth. Queſt. 1. But how could Abraham's body be ſaid to be dead, when he had ſeveral children afterwards by Keturah? Even ſix ſons, forty years after Sarah's death. Anſ. Abraham's and Sarah's bodies received now a bleſſing, or new generative faculty from God, which rendered them capable of begetting and bearing children, when by nature they were not ſo. Queſt. 2. Was Abraham's faith ſo ſtrong as to exclude all doubting? Did not he diſtruſt when he ſaid, "Shall a child be born to Abraham that is an hundred years old; and ſhall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?" Gen. xvii. 17. Anſ. Theſe words are not words of doubting, but enquiring; they proceeded from a deſire to be further inform'd how theſe things could be. But Abraham laughed, and Sarah alſo, at the mention of a ſon. True; they did both laugh, but not both alike: Abraham's laughter proceeded from admiration and joy, but Sarah's from diffidence and diſtruſt; and accordingly, we find Sarah reprimanded, but not Abraham reprehended for laughing. Abraham "ſtaggered not at the promiſe through unbelief, but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God." (B.) Hope increaſes or diminiſhes, in proportion as faith grows ſtronger or weaker. Theſe two virtues always move together, with an equal pace. It is certainly ſufficient, to have the word of God for ſecurity. God is ſufficient. This is enough, to any one who believes. Whoever is aſſured of his promiſes, ought to leave to him the choice of thoſe means whereby he ſhall think fit to perform them. Thoſe ways, which in the judgment of men ſeem moſt contrary to the divine promiſes, are ſometimes the moſt fit and proper for him, who brings life out of death, and fruitfulneſs out of barrenneſs itſelf. (Q.) God is not diſabled by any caſualties, occurrences, or ſtraitneſs of time. "The Lord alſo will be a refuge for the oppreſſed; a refuge in times of trouble," Pſa. ix. 9. That is his due time commonly, when it ſeemeth too late to us, and when things are grown in the eye of reaſon almoſt deſperate and remedileſs. The moſt proper time for him to lay to his hand, is when, to our apprehenſions, his law is even quite deſtroyed; when men have fallen upon moſt curſed deſigns, trampled all laws of God and men under their feet, and proſper'd. And here indeed is the right trial of our faith, and whether we be the true children of faithful Abraham. (Sanderſ.)

He ſtaggered not.] The Greek word diacrineſthai is by Budæus expounded, alternantibus ſententiis ſecum diſceptare; that is, when a man is at no certainty with himſelf, but at variance, ſometimes being of one mind, and ſometimes of another. (Leigh)

Delivered for our offences.] Here we may obſerve, 1. By whom Chriſt was delivered; viz. i. By God, Acts ii. 23. And 2. By Judas. ii. To what; viz. 1. To ſhame, Iſa. liii. 3. 2. To pain, ver. 4, 5. And, 3 To death, Gal. iii. 13. iii. For what; viz. For our offences: Becauſe, 1. All men are guilty, Pſa. xiv. 3. Gal. iii. 22. 2. This guilt cannot be taken away, but by ſatisfying God's juſtice, Hebr. ix. 22. 3. No creature can ſatisfy it, Pſa. xlix. 7, 8. 4. Hence Chriſt undertook it, 1 Tim. ii. 5. 5. Neither could he do it, but by ſuffering, Hebr. ix. 22. Matth. xx. 28. 1 Tim. ii. 6. 6. No ſuffering would ſerve the turn but death, and that on the croſs. 7. By his death he hath ſatisfied for our offences, 1 John ii. 1. Rom. iii. 25. Rev. i. 5 8. Hence our ſins came to be pardoned; and ſo he being "deliver'd for our offences," we are deliver'd from them: And that, both, 1. As to the guilt; and, 2. As to the ſtrength of them, Acts iii. 26. (Bever)

And raiſed again for our juſtification.] Obſerve here, 1. That ſo long as Chriſt lay dead, he had not ſatisfied juſtice, 1 Cor. xv. 14. 2. His riſing again argued death conquer'd, and juſtice ſatisfied, Acts ii. 24. Therefore, 3. Being riſen, he cleanſes us from our ſins, and ſo juſtifies us, Rom. viii. 34. (Idem, Aſſ. and Fell)

CHAP. V.

Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, and joy in our hope. Since we were reconciled to him by the blood of Chriſt, when we were enemies, we ſhall much more be ſaved now being ſo reconciled. As ſin and death came by Adam, ſo righteouſneſs and life came by Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. THerefore being juſtified by faith we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. By whom alſo we have acceſs by faith into this grace wherein we ſtand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only ſo, but we glory in tribulations alſo, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not aſhamed, becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt which is given unto us. For when we were yet without ſtrength, in due time Chriſt died for the ungodly. For ſcarcely for a righteous man will one die: Yet peradventure for a good man ſome would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us. Much more then being now juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath through him. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son: much more, being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life. And not only ſo, but we alſo joy in God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom we have now received the atonement.

Therefore, being juſtified by faith.] Here is an argument taken from the effect, thus; We are juſtified by that which truly appeaſeth our conſciences before God: But faith in Chriſt doth appeaſe our conſcience, and not the law, as was before proved: Therefore, by faith we are juſtified, and not by the law. (Beza, and Aſſ.) In this and the following verſes, we have alſo repreſented to us the bleſſed effects of our being juſtified by faith; viz. 1. "Peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," ver. 1. 2. Grace and favour with God: And, 3. Joy, "in hope of the glory of God," ver. 2. And 4. "Glorying in tribulations," ver. 3. (B. and Q.) Glory in tribulations.] Obſerve here, 1. What ſort of ſufferings they are which the Saints glory in: They are tribulations; that is, ſuch trials and perſecutions, as did befal them for the profeſſion of the goſpel. In theſe a child of God may rejoice, yea, boaſt and glory, as a ſoldier doth of his marks, wounds and ſcars received in the wars; but not in thoſe ſufferings, afflictions and trials, which we bring upon our ſelves as puniſhments for our ſins;

Theſe we have no more reaſon to glory in, than a child has to glory in his whipping; “What glory is it when we are buffeted for our faults?” 2. To what a height and heroick pitch the ſpirit of a juſtified believer may be raiſed, under ſufferings for Chriſt; He may “glory in tribulations:” It is an high ſtrain of ſpiritualneſs in bearing afflictions, when a Chriſtian can ſay, I love to bear; tho' I love not that which I ſuffer, and that which I bear, yet I love to bear what I ſuffer: But it is a higher pitch than this, to ſay with the Apoſtle, “I rejoice in my ſufferings,” Col. i. 24. For joy is a degree beyond love: Yet is it a degree higher ſtill to “take pleaſure in reproaches and diſtreſſes for Chriſt's ſake,” 2 Cor. xii. 10. For pleaſure is a degree beyond joy; but to “glory in tribulations,” is beyond all; 'tis more than to love, more than to rejoyce, more than to take pleaſure in them. 3. That it is not in the tribulations themſelves that believers glory, but in the ſweet iſſue, happy fruit, and gracious effects of them; finding that by the ſanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit, “tribulation worketh patience,” that is, exerciſeth and increaſeth patience; and patience begetteth and giveth experience of God's gracious preſence with us, of his aſſiſtance of us, and of his faithfulneſs towards us, in, and under all our afflictions: And experience of theſe things worketh in us hope of reward. One grace generates and begets another; graces have a generation one from another, tho' they have all but one generation from the Spirit of Chriſt. Yet it is not tribulation in its own nature, but when ſanctified by the bleſſed Spirit, that by a happy gradation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope: For when affliction is not ſanctified, but meets with a ſtubborn ſpirit, Lord, what dreadful effects doth it produce! Then tribulation excites impatience, impatience cauſeth perplexity, perplexity deſpair, and deſpair confuſion. 4. The effect and property of the believer's hope: It “maketh not aſhamed;” his hope will not make him aſhamed, neither will he be ever aſhamed of his hope: Fruſtrated hopes fill men with confuſion and ſhame; the juſtified perſon ſhall not find his hopes of glory fruſtrated, but exceeded: And the reaſon is added, why the Chriſtian hope will not deceive or ſhame him; namely, “Becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghoſt:” That is, the Holy Spirit doth in time of tribulation teſtify his love to the hearts of the people, which cauſes them to glory in tribulations. Learn hence, That in time of affliction, eſpecially of perſecution for the ſake of Chriſt, good men have a more ſenſible feeling of God's love ſhed abroad in their hearts by the bleſſed Spirit, both to prepare them for trials, and to ſupport them under them. St. Peter calls this a joy unſpeakable; it has the very ſcent and taſte of Heaven in it, and there is but a gradual difference betwixt it and the joys of Heaven: No ſooner doth the Holy Spirit ſhed forth the love of God into the believer's heart, by clearing up his intereſt in the promiſe, and his title to eternal glory, but the ſoul is prepared to rejoice in affliction, yea, to glory in tribulation; and it will be as impoſſible to hinder it, as to hinder a man from ſatisfaction when he is moſt delighted and pleaſed; “We glory in tribulations, becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghoſt.” (B.) To be patient under afflictions and tribulations is enough for a philoſopher; to bear them with love is the proper character of a true Chriſtian; but to glory in them is an Apoſtolical grace. (Q.) See the notes on Acts v. 41.

Yet without ſtrength.] In this verſe the Apoſtle ſets forth the efficacy of Chriſt's love towards us before juſtification. He had a love towards us “when we were ſinners;” which prevailed with him to die for ſinners; “When we were yet without ſtrength, Chriſt died for the ungodly.” Note here, 1. Man's condition by nature deſcribed, a ſtate of enmity, “ungodly;” and a ſtate of impotency, “without ſtrength.” We were without ſtrength, and ſo wanted help: Ungodly, and ſo refuſed help. Man is but an impotent and an obſtinate creature; without power to reſiſt juſtice, and without affection to deſire mercy: So weak that he trembles at the appearance of a worm; and yet ſo wicked that he lifts up his head againſt Heaven: The ſtate of unregeneracy is both a ſtate of enmity and a ſtate of impotency. 2. The way and means found out for our recovery; the death of Chriſt; “When we were without ſtrength, Chriſt died for us.” Tho' he found the whole race of mankind buried in the ruins of their lapſed ſtate; yet he did not leave them ſo, but died for them. 2. The ſeaſonableneſs of the means interpoſed for our recovery: It was “in due time,” that Chriſt died: That is, in the fulneſs of time appointed by God the Father, and determined in his decree and purpoſe. Here we may remark, That Chriſt came not in the beginning of time, in the infancy and morning of the world, tho' it was then promiſed that he ſhould come; nor yet did he ſtay till the laſt period and end of time, but came as it were in the middle of time; which is called “the fulneſs of time,” Gal. iv. 4. and here “due time.” Chriſt came not for our recovery as ſoon as ever we were fallen, that mankind might be the more ſenſible of the badneſs of their condition: Had we been inſtantly cured as ſoon as we complained, we ſhould neither have apprehended the danger of our diſeaſe, nor eſteemed the kindneſs of our phyſician: Neither did he ſtay till the laſt period and end of time before he came, that the faith and expectation of his Church might not be put upon too long and ſevere an exerciſe. The Patriarchs believed in Chriſt that was to come; the Apoſtles in Chriſt then preſent; and Chriſtians now believe in him that long ſince did come, and is gone again: So that the Apoſtle might well ſay here, That “in due time Chriſt died.” (B.)

Scarcely for a righteous.] Here the Apoſtle amplifies, extols and magnifies the love of Chriſt, in dying for us “when we were enemies” to him; by comparing his love to us, with our love to one another: He intimates to us, That amongſt men it is very rare and ſeldom known, that one man will lay down his life to ſave another's; but if ſo, it muſt be for a very extraordinary friend, for a perſon of uncommon goodneſs, and of eminent worth; For, ſays he, “ſcarcely for a righteous man will one die.” As if he had ſaid, Such a thing may be, but it is ſcarcely ever known, that a perſon will lay down his life for another, tho' he be a very righteous, innocent, and truly honeſt man. Perhaps “for a good man,” that is, for a very kind and bountiful benefactor; for ſome perſon of rare charity, and extraordinary goodneſs, for a man that is a publick bleſſing and common good to the whole community, ſome perſon from a ſenſe of ſtrong obligations, would even dare to die. The ſcope of the Apoſtle is this, To ſet forth the tranſcendency of Chriſt's love in dying for the ungodly, to ſhew that it is beyond all human example, and that there can be no reſemblance, much leſs any parallel of it; “He loved us, and gave himſelf for us:” Had he only, as an advocate, ſpoken and pleaded for us, his condeſcenſion had been admirable, and his love unſpeakable: But to die, yea, to “die for us,” to be not only our Mediator, but Redeemer; not only our Redeemer, but our Ranſom; here is love beyond compariſon: Bleſſed Jeſus, was ever love like thine! (Idem) The diſtinction here between (dicaios) “a righteous man,” and (agathos) “a good man,” ſeems thus to be beſt accounted for. Before the captivity in Babylon, we find the word Chaſidim to ſignify the ſame as Tſadikim, juſt, or good men: Both were uſed promiſcuouſly, the one for the other, and both in oppoſition to the Reſchagnim, ungodly, or wicked men; the whole body of the Jews being then diſtinguiſh'd into the good and the bad. After the captivity, the Chaſidim began to be diſtinguiſh'd from the Tſadikim. For tho' the Tſadikim gave themſelves to the ſtudy of the Scriptures, and conform'd unto whatſoever the law required, the Chaſidim went further; as in the repair of the Temple, the maintenance of ſacrifices, the relief of the poor, &c. voluntarily adding, over and above, to what the law ſtrictly required of them. Thus the Jews were now diſtinguiſh'd into three ſorts, in reſpect of holineſs; 1. Reſchagnim, (aſebeis) wicked and ungodly men; 2. Tſadikim, (dicaioi) juſt and righteous men; and, 3. Chaſidim, who are ſometimes tranſlated (hoſioi) holy men, and ſometimes (agathoi) good men: And theſe laſt were, of all others, the beſt reputed and belov'd of the people. The Apoſtle therefore, ſhewing the great love of Chriſt, dying for us, amplifieth it by alluſion unto this diſtinction of the people; and the gradation ſtandeth thus: Some peradventure would die for one of the Chaſidim, that is, “for a good man;” ſcarcely any for one of the Tſadikim, that is, “for a (juſt or) righteous man;” but for the Reſchagnim, or ungodly, no man would die: And yet “Chriſt died for the ungodly;” even for us, being ſinners, and his enemies. (Godw.) Sinners: That is, in the ſtate of ſin, or while ſin reign'd in us, and we were wholly under the power of it. For otherwiſe, we are ſinners ſtill, 1 John i. 8. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John xv. 13.

Being now juſtified.] Having formerly given the notion at large of dicaioun, to juſtify, (note on ch. iii. 4.) all that is here neceſſary to be added, will be by way of enquiry, whether the paſſive dicaiothentes, “being juſtified” here, be only a nominal or real paſſive; that is, whether it only notes the action, as far as concerns Chriſt's part, in meriting, and obtaining God's pardon and acceptance for us, and God the Father's part, in admitting ſinners to pardon, giving them place of repentance; which is no more in effect, but the offering pardon, and acceptance on the conditions of the Goſpel; or whether to this action of the Father, and Chriſt, it farther ſuperadds the reception thereof in the patient, the actual partaking of it. For theſe two (ſomewhat diſtant) notions, the word is capable of; either 1. That we are, as far as belongs to God's and Chriſt's part, juſtified, the price being paid by him, and accepted by his Father; and that if we be not now actually ſo, 'tis through our own default, our non-performance of the condition; or 2. That we have the benefits of Chriſt's death beſtowed and conferred actually on us, pardon of ſins, &c. that is, are actually juſtified. That the former is the meaning of the word here, may appear, 1. By the general drift of this chapter; which is to ſet out the love of the Father, and of Chriſt, towards us, ver. 8, &c. “God commendeth his love to us,” &c. Where therefore the matter is determined to that which Chriſt doth for us toward our juſtification; that is, to his death, without looking to that which is extrinſecal to it, our performance or non-performance of the condition, which is required on our parts, to make us capable of the benefit thereof; that having been formerly (and often) mention'd, ver. 1. "being juſtified by faith:" 2. By that which is ſaid ver. 8. "We being yet ſinners Chriſt died for us;" Where 1. His "dying for us" is all one with our "being juſtified by his death;" as appears by the circumſtances of the context, the 8, 9, 10. verſes compared together; and 2. By ſinners meaning habitual groſs ſinners; which is alſo expreſs'd by aſthenon, ver. 6. not weak, but ſick, even to death (ſee 1 Cor. viii. 7.) 'Tis certain that to them, continuing ſuch, actual juſtification belongs not: So again ver. 10. "We, when we were enemies, were reconciled to God, by the death of his ſon;" where as death is all one with blood, ſo is "reconciled to God" with juſtified; and that belongeth to enemies, while they are ſuch, to whom yet we know, by many other places, that actual pardon, and ſo actual juſtification or reconciliation belongs not: 3 By comparing of this "juſtification by Chriſt" with the "condemnation by Adam," ver. 16. where Adam's condemnation belonging to all, the juſtification ſpoken of muſt be that alſo which belongs to all; and ſo not the actual pardon, which doth not belong to all, or to any, but thoſe who perform the condition. All which being ſuppoſed, 'tis from other places manifeſt, that ſome condition there is required of us to make us capable of this benefit of the death of Chriſt, the non-performance of which is that which reſtrains and limits the number of men actually juſtified to a far narrower compaſs than that which is here ſpoken of: And this condition being to be performed by us, by the means of the reſurrection and grace of Chriſt, 'tis therefore ſaid, ch. iv. 25. that he "roſe again forour juſtification;" that is, to make us capable of thoſe fruits and benefits of Chriſt's death, as well as "died for our ſins." (H.)

If when we were enemies.] Here the word if is not uſed as a term of doubting, but of argumentation. The Apoſtle ſuppoſes it to be a known truth, or a principle yielded by all Chriſtians, that the death of Chriſt was to reconcile ſinners unto God. (B.)

We were reconciled to God.] Here are many arguments to eſtabliſh the doctrine of our Lord's ſatisfaction, by ſuffering in our ſtead, to reconcile an offended God to us. 1. That here, and elſewhere (as 2 Cor. v. 15. Hebr. ix. 28. 1 Pet. iii. 18. and iv. 1.) one of theſe two things is intimated, That our Lord ſuffer'd in our ſtead, or that he bore the puniſhment of our ſin; this being the plain import of the like expreſſions, Deut. xxiv. 16. 2 Sam. xviii. 33. 2 Kings xiv. 6. 2 Chron. xxv. 4. and Ezek. xviii. And 'tis evident beyond exception, that in all piacular ſacrifices, both Jews and Gentiles always took this for granted, that the victim ſuffer'd in their ſtead, and for their ſins. Since then the Socinians own, that our Lord ſuffered as an expiatory ſacrifice, ſurely both Jews and Gentiles muſt conceive that all theſe phraſes here do import, that our Lord ſuffered in our ſtead, and for our ſins. 2. That the reconciliation is here mentioned as the effect of our Lord's ſuffering for us: For ſince it is alone the guilt of ſin, or ſin unpardoned, that makes God diſpleaſed with us, the death which is here ſaid to procure our peace and reconciliation to God, muſt make atonement for the guilt of our iniquities. Crellius replies, That by reconciliation here the Apoſtle intends not God's reconciliation to us, but ours to God, by that converſion to him, which makes us at friendſhip with him. But this may be refuted, 1. From the import of the words catallattein and catallage: For they do naturally import the reconciliation of one that is angry, or diſpleas'd with us, both in prophane and Jewiſh writers, 1 Sam. xxix. 4. 1 Eſdr. iv. 31. Ecclus xxii. 22. 2 Macc. i 5. v. 20. vii. 33. and viii. 29. Whence we learn, that reconciliation always reſpecteth ſome preceding anger or diſpleaſure; and that the reconciling of God was the appeaſing of his anger. When therefore we read here, in the ſame words, of "enemies reconciled to God," and ſo "ſaved from his wrath," what can we imagine, but that a God once angry and offended with them, is now appeaſed? And when we farther read, that this reconciliation was effected by the death and blood of Chriſt, is it not obvious to conceive, that his wrath and anger was averted by the ſhedding this blood for us? 2. 'Tis evident, that "when we were ſinners Chriſt died for us," ver. 8. and "when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his ſon," ver. 10. are words of the ſame import: For ſince theſe words, "Chriſt died for us," and "Chriſt ſhed his blood for us," ſignify the ſame thing, and by his blood ſhed we are reconciled; 'tis evident, that "Chriſt dying for us," and "Chriſt reconciling us by his death," or blood ſhed for us, muſt be the ſame: Now, we are juſtified by his blood, as it procures our "peace with God," ver. 1. and "ſaves us from his wrath," ver. 9. Therefore we are reconciled to God by it on the ſame account, 3. We being here conſider'd as ſinners, ungodly, and enemies to God, as perſons who have, on that account, fallen "ſhort of the glory," that is, ſaith Crellius, of the approbation of God, ch. iii. 23. is there no need of reconciling God to ſuch perſons? And when, under theſe circumſtances, we are ſaid to "be juſtified through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt," ver. 24. and "being juſtified, to have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," here. ver. 1. can we conceive, that nothing was done by this Jeſus, to procure God's reconciliation to the ſinner, or to purchaſe his peace with an offended God? Eſpecially, if we conſider, that the death of Chriſt here mention'd, as that by which we are reconciled to God, is the death of him, who ſuffer'd as a ſin-offering for us; the blood by which we are juſtified, is the blood of atonement, or propitiation, or the blood ſhed, "to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people," Hebr. ii. 17. (W.)

Now received the atonement.] Crellius excepts againſt this interpretation; alledging, that to receive, or obtain reconciliation, or atonement, is unknown to Jew and Gentile; and would have the words rendred thus, By whom we have obtained this converſion to God: But to obtain reconciliation, when it is the effect of blood ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins, is very proper. For it was the conſtant practice under the law, to procure reconciliation by ſhedding the blood, of the ſin-offering; and all nations by this means endeavour'd to reconcile God to them; and what reconciliation the prieſt, by offering this blood, procur'd, the ſinner receiv'd and obtain'd: And therefore, to "receive atonement," or obtain reconciliation, by an expiatory ſacrifice, muſt be a thing very well known to Jew and Gentile; but, to receive converſion by it, is indeed a phraſe unknown to them and the whole church of Chriſt. Moreover, this note of Crellius ſhews his little ſkill in the Greek: For, as tharſos lambavein is to be courageous, Acts xxviii. 15. archen lambavein, is to begin, Hebr. ii. 3. (and the like in other places;) ſo catallagen lambanein here is to be reconciled, as noxam capere is in the Latin, to be hurt. (Idem)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Wherefore, as by one man ſin entred into the world, and death by ſin; and ſo death paſſed upon all men, for that all have ſinned: For until the law ſin was in the world; But ſin is not imputed when there is no law. Nevertheleſs, death reigned from Adam to Moſes, even over them that had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, who is the figure of him that was to come. But not as the offence, ſo alſo is the free gift: For if through the offence of one, many be dead; much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jeſus Chriſt, hath abounded unto many. And not as it was by one that ſinned, ſo is the gift: For the judgment was by one, to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto juſtification. For if by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, ſhall reign in life by one, Jeſus Chriſt. Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even ſo by the righteouſneſs of one the free gift came upon all men unto juſtification of life: For as by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous. Moreover, the law entred, that the offence might abound: But where ſin abounded, grace did much more abound: That as ſin hath reigned unto death, even ſo might grace reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt our lord.

Wherefore] Dia touto here being an illative form, and moſt fitly rendred wherefore, makes it neceſſary to enquire, how that which follows is inferr'd from what went before: And the ſatisfying that enquiry will prepare for a right underſtanding of the remainder of this chapter. The former chapters had maintained the right of the Apoſtles preaching to the Gentiles, by ſhewing that God was an impartial judge both to puniſh impenitent, foul ſins, and to reward penitence and good living, without any partiality, whether in Jew or Gentile, ch. i. and ii. but moſt diſcernibly, ch. ii. 6. to the end. Then in the third chapter follow objections againſt this, and anſwers to them: And on occaſion of one of them, taken from the ſinfulneſs of the Gentiles, is inſerted a diſcourſe of juſtification under the goſpel; ſhewing how that is no way prejudiced by paſt ſins, if they be ſincerely forſaken, nor hindred by want of circumciſion and Moſaical obſervances. And this is inſiſted on, and exemplified, in both parts, by the ſtory of Abraham, ch. iv. and then brought home to all believers in the former part of this chapter. From all which, as ſo many premiſſes, or mediums of approbation, the concluſion is here inferr'd; but withal, by comparing the juſtification by Chriſt with the condemnation by Adam, farther confirm'd and illuſtrated in the remainder of this chapter; viz. that the mercy of God under the Goſpel belongs unlimitedly, or indefinitely, to all ſorts of men, the Gentiles as well as Jews.

For the diſcerning of which, it will be needful, that through the remainder of the chapter, an emphaſis be laid on the univerſal forms of ſpeech, (ton coſmon) "the world," and (pantas anthropous) "all men," ver. 12. (en coſmo) "in the world," ver. 13. (hoi polloi) "the many," and (eis tous pollous) "toward the many," ver. 15. and again (eis pantas anthropous) "toward all men," twice, ver. 18. and (hoi polloi) "the many," twice ver. 19. By all, and each of which, are meant, in the wideſt latitude, without excluſion of any, all mankind, to whom Jews and Gentiles, the mercy and life introduced by Chriſt belongeth, (only on condition of new life required of them) as the condemnation or death in Adam did to all his poſterity. (H.)

As by one.] It often happens, that an entire propoſition muſt be ſupplied to make up a compleat ſenſe, as Glaſſius, Hyperius, and others have obſerv'd. Thus, ſome think, that to compleat the ſenſe of this text, theſe words muſt be immediately ſubjoyn'd to the end of this verſe, Viz. So alſo by one man righteouſneſs was brought into the world, and life eternal by righteouſneſs; of which all are made partakers, provided they ſincerely believe in Jeſus Chriſt. (Eſt.) And to the like effect, we find it paraphraſed. (H. Fell and W.) But, if we read, verſe 13. and the reſt, to the middle of ver. 18. as in a parentheſis, we ſhall there find the other part of the compariſon, naturally following upon a repetition of this former; viz. "As by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation: Even ſo, by the righteouſneſs of one" &c. (Junius and Fell)

By one man ſin entred into the world.] This is plain, 1. That all men are ſinners, ch. iii. 23. 2 Cor. v. 14. and Gal. iii. 22. 2. That they are "by nature the children of wrath," Eph. ii. 3. and John iii. 36. and baptiſm being required of all, John iii. 3 &c. and the dying of infants (as death is the wages of ſin) do ſtrongly perſwade this. We are not children of wrath only by imitation: For then, why is it neceſſary that all ſhould be ſo? How are infants this way peccant, who know nothing? Or why do they die if innocent? 3. 'Tis plain, that our death is imputed to Adam's ſin, ver. 14, 15, 16, 19. Altho' we all have ſins of our own; yet why this, if that left no ſtain and root of evil in us? 4. That is the fountain of ſin, as Chriſt is of righteouſneſs, ver. 14, 19. But Chriſt is ſo, not only by being a pattern, or by imputation of his righteouſneſs, but by real infuſion of grace into us, to bring forth obedience. Therefore ſin ſeems here to be taken, as in ch. vii. for that acknowledg'd propinity, or proneneſs, to evil in our nature, deriv'd from Adam, of which actual ſins are the fruits. (Fell) Or for that diſeaſe which is ours by inheritance, commonly call'd Original ſin: For ſo the Apoſtle uſeth to call that, ſin, in the ſingular number; whereas, when he ſpeaketh of the fruits thereof, he uſeth the plural number, calling them ſins. (Beza and Aſſ.)

And death by ſin.] Death being both the curſe of ſin, Gen. iii. 3. and man's baniſhment from the tree of life, upon his ſin, being the cauſe of it. (Fell)

For that all have ſinned.] Eph' ho; In whom. The criticks have been very induſtrious to find ſome other ſenſe of theſe words; ſome rendring them, for that, and others, becauſe "all have ſinned:" But this expoſition is confirm'd, beyond all contradiction, 1. From the following words, which declare, that by the ſin of one man many die, ver. 15 &c. which are parallel to the expreſſion here, that death came "upon all men" through Adam, in whom, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle, all men die, 1 Cor. xv. 22. And the words here following, "by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners," ver. 19. are plainly parallel to theſe, in whom "all have ſinned." 2. None of the other ſenſes are true, or ſuitable to the ſcope and argument of the Apoſtle. For inſtance, It is not true, that death came "upon all men, for that, or becauſe all have ſinned:" For the Apoſtle here directly aſſerts the contrary; viz. That the death, and condemnation to it, which befel all men, was for the ſin of one; that is, of Adam only: Nay, he farther teaches, that it came upon all (di' henos paraptomatas) by one offence of that one man, ver. 18. And therefore it came not upon all men for the ſin of all. And this the compariſon plainly requires; which ſaith, the oppoſite juſtification and free gift came alſo upon all men "by one man Jeſus Chriſt; by the obedience of one;" and that too (di' henos dicaiomatos) by one righteouſneſs, ver. 15 &c. that is, by the obedience to the death, of that one man Jeſus Chriſt. Yea, 3. The Apoſtle doth not only thus plainly and frequently aſſert, that death came upon all men for the ſin of Adam, but he proves it by this argument; "Death reigned from Adam to Moſes, even over them that had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion," ver. 14. that is, againſt a law threatning death to them for ſin: They therefore, ſays he, could not die for their own ſins; for tho' indeed they were then ſinners, yet being under no ſuch law as Adam was, their ſin was not imputed to death, and ſo they could not die on that account: Death therefore came upon them through the ſin of Adam. (W.) See Dr. Delaune's ſermon of Original ſin.

Until the law.] Achri nomou; Before the law. (G. and Maſſey) From Adam to Moſes the world was almoſt ſolely govern'd by the natural law; which ſeems to be the meaning of this text; viz. That before the law of Moſes was given, men were capable of offending againſt ſome other law: For otherwiſe ſin could not have been imputed to them; for "ſin is not imputed when there is no law." And then it follows, "nevertheleſs, death reigned" &c. That is, during that ſpace, from Adam to Moſes men ſinned againſt the natural law, and were liable to death on that account, tho' they had not offended againſt an expreſs revelation from God, as Adam had done; for that the Apoſtle ſeems to mean, by "ſinning after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion." (Tillotſ. and Fox)

The figure of him that was to come.] The ſinfulneſs of man's nature gave St. Paul occaſion here to call Adam "the figure of him that was to come;" that is, of the Meſſiah; all men being made ſinners by his ſin, as on the other ſide they are juſtified by Chriſt's righteouſneſs. He enlarges on the parallel for ten verſes together in this chapter; which there would not be the leaſt ground for, unleſs, as "by Chriſt's ſtripes we are healed," ſo by Adam's ſin we had been wounded. (Delaune)

But not as the offence.] The Apoſtle, having noted the parity and reſemblance between Chriſt and Adam in the foregoing verſes; Here he obſerves the diſparity and difference betwixt them; and that in ſeveral advantageous particulars. 1. He compares the ſin of Adam with the obedience of Chriſt, and ſhews that the ſin of the one was not ſo pernicious, as the obedience of the other was beneficial; Chriſt's obedience being more powerful to juſtification and ſalvation, than Adam's ſin was to death and condemnation: For if the tranſgreſſion of Adam, who was but a meer man, was able to pull down death and wrath upon all his natural ſeed; then the obedience of Chriſt, who is God as well as man, will be much more available to procure pardon and life to all his ſpiritual ſeed. 2. There is a further obſervable difference betwixt Adam and Chriſt; as in reſpect of their perſons, ſo in reſpect of their acts, and extent of their acts: Thus Adam, by one act of ſin, brought death, that is, the ſentence of death, upon the whole world; all mankind becoming ſubject to mortality for that one ſin of his; but it is many ſins of many men, which Chriſt doth deliver from, in the free gift of our juſtification; abſolving us, not only from that one fault, but from all other faults and offences whatſoever. Learn thence, That the obedience of Chriſt extends it ſelf not only to the pardon of original ſin in Adam, but to all perſonal and actual ſins whatſoever. 3. The Apoſtle ſhews the difference betwixt them two, that is, the firſt and ſecond Adam, as in reſpect of the effects and conſequences of their acts; If by means of one man, and by one offence of that man, the whole race of mankind became ſubject to death, then much more ſhall they who are redeemed and juſtified by Jeſus Chriſt, be made partakers of everlaſting life, wherein they ſhall reign with him in glory. From the whole note, The infinite wiſdom, tranſcendant grace, and rich mercy of God to a miſerable world, in providing a ſalve as large as the ſore, a remedy as extenſive as the malady, a ſovereign antidote in the blood of the ſecond Adam, to expel the poiſon and malignity of the ſin of the firſt Adam. (B.)

The gift.] Dorea, in this verſe, and Dorema in the next; both tranſlated "the gift;" as Chariſma is "the free gift." Now theſe three words are thus diſtinguiſh'd; Chariſma ſhews the grace and favour from which the benefit proceedeth; Dorea the collation of the benefit; and Dorema the benefit it ſelf which is conferred. As if a prince ſhould give a great treaſure, to redeem one out of captivity; this favour of the prince is Chariſma, the grace; the free giving it is Dorea, the donation; and the other's enjoying it, and receiving his liberty by it, is Dorema, the benefit, or gift. (Beza, Willet and Leigh)

If by one.] See the notes on ver. 10.

Even ſo, by the righteouſneſs.] The righteouſneſs and obedience of the ſecond Adam is derived upon his children, i. e. believers, in the ſame manner as Adam's ſin upon his poſterity; their partaking Chriſt's ſpirit rendring them inclined to good, as partaking Adam's nature rendred them prone to evil. (Fell) See the notes on ver. 12.

The law entred, that the offence might abound.] That is, Before the law was written, we became obnoxious to death by one man's diſobedience, without much ſenſe of it; but after the law was given to Moſes, ſin did more clearly and conſpicuouſly appear to be ſin: Its odiouſneſs and uglineſs was more manifeſt to the conſcience of the ſinner: As the ſinner has abounded in ſin, in a way of commiſſion; ſo ſin doth by the diſcovery of the law abound in the ſinner's apprehenſion, in the ſight and ſenſe of it upon the conſcience of the ſinner. Nevertheleſs, "As ſin abounds, grace doth much more abound." As the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin is manifeſted by the law, ſo the ſuperabounding grace and pardoning mercy of God is rendred gloriouſly conſpicuous, in and by the Goſpel: That as the power of ſin appeared in making us liable to temporal and eternal death; ſo might the power of grace appear in beginning in us a ſpiritual life here, and bringing us to an eternal life in glory hereafter. In ſhort, when the Apoſtle ſays, that "the law entred that ſin might abound," he doth not mean, to make it abound, by encouraging the ſinner to the commiſſion of it, but by impreſſing that conviction of it upon the conſcience of the ſinner. A man without the law looks upon himſelf as a ſmall ſinner; but after he has viewed his ſins in the glaſs of the law, he ſees himſelf a great and mountainous ſinner: As a ſtar which a child thinks to be no bigger than a ſpark; but a man that views it through an inſtrument, computes it to be bigger than the globe of the earth. (B.)

CHAP. VI.

Being, by our baptiſm, dead unto ſin, we muſt no longer live under the dominion of it, but lead a new life, and yield up our ſelves intirely to the ſervice of God in righteouſneſs.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. What ſhall we ſay, then? Shall we continue in ſin, that grace may abound? God forbid: How ſhall we that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that ſo many of us as were baptized into Jeſus Chriſt, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptiſm into death; that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death, we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection: Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin. For he that is dead, is freed from ſin. Now if we be dead with Chriſt, we believe that we ſhall alſo live with him: Knowing that Chriſt being raiſed from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto ſin once: But in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewiſe reckon ye alſo your ſelves to be dead indeed unto ſin, but alive unto God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

What ſhall we ſay then?] See the notes on ch. iv. 1.

Shall we continue in ſin?] See the notes on ch. iii. 7, 8, 24. v. 20. and Acts xvii. 30.

God forbid.] See the notes on ch. iii. 4.

We that are dead to ſin.] Thoſe are, by the Apoſtle, ſaid to be "dead to ſin," who are in ſuch ſort made partakers of the virtue of Chriſt, that natural corruption is dead in them; that is, the force of it is taken away, ſo that it bringeth not forth its bitter fruits: And, on the other ſide, thoſe are ſaid to "live in ſin," who are in the fleſh; that is, whom the ſpirit of God hath not delivered from the ſlavery of this corruption of nature. (Beza and Aſſ.) In this, and the following verſes, are ſet forth the effects of the grace, or holineſs of the ſpirit of baptiſm; 1. To make us "die to ſin," ver. 2. 2. To apply and appropriate to us the "death of Jeſus Chriſt," ver. 3. 3. To make us live in forgetfulneſs of, and ſeparation from, the world, by the diſpoſition of our hearts, as if we were "buried;" And, 4. To "raiſe us up," and cauſe us to act and "walk in newneſs of life," like men "raiſed up from the dead," ver. 4. 5. To be nothing but in conformity to Chriſt, both in his death and his reſurrection; being "planted together in the likeneſs of his death," that we may recover a new life of righteouſneſs, ver. 5. 6. Not only to crucify and bury "the body of ſin," but even to deſtroy it, by mortifying and deſtroying its members, ver. 6. viz. "fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affection, evil concupiſcence, and coveteouſneſs" &c. Col. iii. 5. 7. To deliver and "free us from ſin," ver. 7. 8. To cauſe us to "live with Chriſt," and in him by the union of our hearts, ver. 8. 9. To make us perſevere in the new raiſed life, and to hinder relapſes; ſo that "death may have no more dominion over us," ver. 9. And, 10. To cauſe us to "live under God," and to conſecrate to him our whole life, in imitating Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 10. (Q.) For, 1. Chriſt's death was a death to ſin. 2. They who are baptiz'd, are "baptiz'd into his death," that is, into a death to ſin. And, 3. They who are baptized into that death, are to die as Chriſt did; that is, to die to ſin once, ſo as to live always afterwards to God. (Alleſt.)

Buried with him by baptiſm.] The Apoſtle urges, that this is what Chriſtians cannot but be ſenſible of: Becauſe, not only the terms upon which they are admitted into memberſhip with the Church, and all the preſent and future privileges conſequent upon their baptiſm, do expreſly mention the conditions; but alſo the rites of this ſacrament ſufficiently intimate it to them. The ceremony of immerging the body of the baptized repreſents the burial of a dead perſon under ground. The pouring water upon the party, in caſes where the former cannot conveniently be done, anſwers to the throwing earth upon the dead: But both agree in figuring a death and burial; as the emerging again doth a new life. (Stanh.) Dr. Whitby here expreſſes his wiſh, that the primitive cuſtom of immerſion in baptiſm were again of general uſe, and aſperſion only permitted, as of old, in caſes of great neceſſity; and that becauſe of the handle which the Romaniſts take from the preſent practice in this Sacrament, in order to juſtify their refuſal of the Cup to the Laity in the other Sacrament: But, as to the No-neceſſity of this, enough has been noted already, on Acts xvi. 33. Whoever deſires farther ſatisfaction, may find ſufficient in Mr. Wheatley's Rational Illuſtration of our Office of baptiſm.

By the glory of the Father.] See the notes on John ii. 19. x. 18.

Planted together.] Symphytoi. By this elegant metaphor the Apoſtle compares Chriſt to a plant, which being buried in the ground, ſprouts out again in its due ſeaſon: The Greek word means, that we grow up together with Chriſt; as we ſee moſs, ivy, miſsleto, or ſuch like, grow up by a tree, and nouriſhed with the juice thereof. (Leigh) See a further deſcription of this plantation, in the notes on John xv. 5.

In the likeneſs.] The Apoſtle does not ſay, we are planted together in his death and reſurrection; but (as St. Chryſoſtome and other Fathers obſerve) very emphatically interpoſes "the likeneſs of his death," and "the likeneſs of his reſurrection." Thus he intimates, that there is only a reſemblance of theſe things at preſent; yet this is ſuch a reſemblance, as is neceſſary to bring us to the reality: In ſhort, what our Saviour did and ſuffer'd for us, muſt be, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and ſo far as we are capable, imitated and acted over again by us; and is not only an object of our faith, but a rule for our practice. (Stanh.)

Our old man is crucified with him.] By "the old man" we are to underſtand our corrupt and depraved nature; ſo called, becauſe it is as old as Adam, and derived from Adam, born and bred with us: And this "old man" muſt be crucified, to ſhew our conformity and likeneſs to Chriſt in his crucifixion. (B.) But nevertheleſs, theſe phraſes, "the old man," and "the body of ſin," are of a collective ſignification; and import that, in the covenant of baptiſm, there is no manner of reſerve allow'd us; but that our obligations are univerſal, and every ſort of corrupt luſt, by the indulging whereof we are brought into diſobedience, is equally renounc'd. It is not human nature, conſider'd with the appetites and affections eſſential to it, but in regard of the corruptions ſuperinduced by ſin, which we liſt ourſelves againſt, and are to treat as an enemy. Baptiſm, when making us Chriſtians, leaves us ſtill men; and conſequently, neither does itſelf, nor can poſſibly engage us, to eradicate thoſe paſſions and deſires, which are interwoven with our original conſtitution: Nor indeed is there any reaſon it ſhould; for all our fault and miſchief proceeds, not from the affections themſelves, but from the miſapplication, or exceſs; in a word, from the abuſe of them. The meaning then is only, that, by our care and good habits, ſo entire a maſtery ſhould be attain'd, in the government of our affections, and the turning them to holineſs ſhould become ſo eaſy and familiar and conſtant a practice with us, that this cuſtom ſhould be a kind of new nature; and thoſe ſuggeſtions to evil, which, even in the beſt men, will now and then be ſtirring, ſhould have no more power to ſeduce us, than a dead carcaſs hath to move and act. For, properly ſpeaking, the will is the vital part of the ſoul: And as the life or death natural appears by the body exerting itſelf in, or being depriv'd of motion; ſo is the life or death ſpiritual to be judg'd by the determinations of the will: And, be the temptations from without, and the inclinations from within, to do wickedly, never ſo importunate and ſtrong; yet, if all theſe are not only dead, but buried, ſo conquer'd and ſo perfectly kept down, that they lye as it were under ground, and cannot get up again, cannot ſhake or move the will in any degree of indulgence or conſent; that ſoul is truly "dead with Chriſt, the old man in it crucified, and the body of ſin deſtroyed." (Stanh.)

The body of ſin.] Here the Apoſtle elegantly attributes a body to ſin, that is, to the habit or cuſtom of ſinning; becauſe it is, as it were, a machine, or compoſition, conſiſting of many members, that is, vices. (G.) To ſoma tes hamartias, "the body of ſin," ſignifies no more than ſin here; in like manner as to ſoma, "the body," when join'd with a genitive caſe following it, paſſes in the ſignification of that which is joyn'd with it, and loſes its own proper force; as "the body of death," ch. vii. 24. and many other ſuch like phraſes here inſtanced at large by Dr. Hammond.

If we be dead with Chriſt.] Obſerve here, 1. A ſuppoſition, or pre-ſuppoſed condition; the baptized perſon's being dead with Chriſt: "If we be dead with him," that is, by the exerciſe of daily mortification; if we have fellowſhip and communion with him in his death, that as he died for ſin, we daily die unto ſin: Then followeth, 2. The inference or concluſion, "We ſhall alſo live with him;" that is, we that have had fellowſhip with him in his death, ſhall have communion with him in his reſurrection: We ſhall live with him a life of grace and glory, of regeneration and glorification, the one to newneſs of life, the other to everlaſting life. Hence learn, That all thoſe that are "dead with Chriſt," have no reaſon to doubt but that they "ſhall alſo live with him." But who are the perſons that may be ſaid to "be dead with Chriſt?" Anſ. 1. All ſuch as own the obligation which their baptiſmal vow and Chriſtian profeſſion puts upon them, and ſolemnly lays them under; namely, to keep the whole Goſpel, even as they who were circumciſed were obliged to keep the whole Law. 2. Such as make conſcience of it, daily endeavour to perform it, and obtain the ſucceſs of their endeavours in ſuch a degree, that the reign of ſin is broken, tho' ſin itſelf be not totally deſtroyed. Theſe may be ſaid to be dead and crucified with Chriſt, having by the aſſiſtance of his ſpirit, in ſome meaſure, crucified the fleſh with its inordinate affections and luſts; and as they here live like him, ſo they ſhall alſo live with him. (B.)

He died unto ſin once.] Ephapax; once, or (as it is ſometimes tranſlated "once for all." This adverb is here and elſewhere of great emphaſis; ſignifying a thing once done, in ſo abſolute and perfect a manner, that it cannot be neceſſary, nor even lawful, to do the ſame again. (Leigh) Here it ſignifieth, that Chriſt ſo died for our ſins once, as never to undergo death again; and therefore his "living unto God" ſeems to import his reſurrection to eternal life; as the ſame phraſe is uſed Luke xv. 36, 38. (W.) See the import of this word farther treated of, in the notes on Hebr. x. 18.

Likewiſe reckon ye your ſelves.] We can have but one baptiſm: And this ſuppoſes, that, we ſhould ſo die to ſin once, as never to have occaſion to perform that work again Hence therefore it appears, how far theſe are from conformity to the death of Chriſt, who ſtill ſuffer ſin to revive in them, after that by pious reſolutions and repentance they have begun to mortifie it; and ſo are ſtill beginning again to die for it! (W.) In order to enter upon the practice of theſe great truths, in which holineſs of baptiſm and the main of Chriſtianity do conſiſt, we ought, 1. Frequently to conſider them in the ſight of God: 2. To depend upon Jeſus Chriſt, as the branch depends on the root, the building on the foundation, and the members on the head, And, 3. To unite our ſelves to him by charity and prayer. There needs no other anſwer to temptation but this, That "we are dead to ſin, but alive unto God:" That all our actions ought to be actions of life; and for that reaſon, to have Jeſus Chriſt for their principle, and God for their end. (Q.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof. Neither yield ye your members as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin: But yield your ſelves unto God, as thoſe that are alive from the dead; and your members as inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God. For ſin ſhall not have dominion over you: For ye are not under the law, but under grace. What then? Shall we ſin, becauſe we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. Know ye not, that to whom ye yield your ſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of ſin unto death, or of obedience unto righteouſneſs? But God be thanked, that ye were the ſervants of ſin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from ſin, ye became the ſervants of righteouſneſs.

Let not ſin therefore reign.] The reaſon of this caution is, 1. Becauſe ſin hath no right nor title to this kingdom; but only God, as our Creator, Preſerver, and Redeemer: 2. Becauſe we are buried with Chriſt in baptiſm, and ſo freed from ſin, ver. 1. &c. And, 3. Becauſe if ſin reigns in us, it will ruin us, ver. 23. (Bever)

In your mortal body.] The Apoſtle uſes the epithet mortal here, 1. To put us in mind, that the mortality of our bodies is the fruit and puniſhment of our ſins; becauſe ſin having brought in death upon us, our bodies muſt die for ſin. 2. To ſhew the vanity and tranſitorineſs of the delights and pleaſures of ſin, which after all its pampering muſt periſh. And, 3. To ſhew, that our conflict with ſin ſhall endure but a little while; becauſe e're long "this mortal ſhall put on immortality." (B.)

Your members as inſtruments.] Hopla, arms, or weapons. The Apoſtle here fitly compares our members, that is, the parts of our body, and faculties of our mind, either to ſuch inſtruments or tools as artificers work with, or to ſuch arms and weapons as ſoldiers uſe to fight withal; both which may be uſed either well or ill: For thus, with the ſame hand one man giveth an alms, and another ſteals; with the ſame tongue one bleſſeth, and another curſeth (Aſſ.)

Yield yourſelves unto God.] Paraſteſate; preſent yourſelves. See the notes on ch. xii. 1.

Sin ſhall not have dominion.] The deſign of the Apoſtle here is not to ſhew, that we may ſafely continue in ſin: But it is on the contrary, to ſhew, that we are obliged to become the ſervants of God, and to have our fruit unto holineſs; as is manifeſt from this and the following verſes. Thoſe therefore who fancy, that the Goſpel gives men a liberty to ſin, are under a very great and dangerous miſtake: For the great deſign thereof is to call men to repent and forſake their ſins. It commands us to "deny all ungodlineſs and wordly luſts," and to practiſe whatever is praiſe-worthy and of good report; all the duties which are comprehended under thoſe extenſive words, "living ſoberly, righteouſly and godly:" It requires us to outdo the ſtricteſt among the Jews, even the Scribes and Phariſees, in righteouſneſs; and it offers ſufficient grace and ſtrength to enable us to perform what it requires. We are not indeed under the curſe of the law, nor bound to obſerve thoſe burdenſome rites and ceremonies, which the Jews were: But we are admitted unto the gracious and merciful covenant made with man in Chriſt Jeſus; by virtue whereof a ſincere and univerſal obedience will be accepted, inſtead of one that is perfect. The law of Jeſus Chriſt therefore muſt be a rule of life to us; or we cannot have a reaſonable hope of being ſaved by him. Our obligations to holineſs are greater than thoſe the Jews were under; which are enforc'd upon us by a much clearer diſcovery of eternal rewards for good men, than was ever made to any other people. (Fox) The grace of the goſpel gives hopes of victory over ſin, ſeveral ways; 1. Becauſe it was the end of Chriſt's death to ſlay ſin. 2. Becauſe of the nature put into us; which is to help us againſt ſin. 3. By aſſuring us of the Spirit's help; which is to aſſiſt us in the mortifying and ſubduing of ſin: It is thro' the Spirit's operation that we begin, carry on, and accompliſh the work of mortification. 4. Becauſe the Goſpel furniſhes us with promiſes, and thereby gives us aſſurance of ſucceſs. So then, if, from all theſe encouragements, we bid a confident defiance unto, and make a courageous reſiſtance againſt ſin, it ſhall never have a final and full "dominion over us, becauſe we are not under the law, but under grace." (B.) See the notes on Matth. v. 17. and John viii. 36.

What then? Shall we ſin?] See the notes on ver. 1.

His ſervants ye are.] See the notes on Matth. vi. 24. and John viii. 34.

Or of obedience unto righteouſneſs.] That is newneſs of life. (Fell) If the Apoſtle had ſaid, "Whether of ſin unto death, or of obedience unto" life, the antitheſis, 'tis true, had been more plain and full: But this he does not ſay, becauſe tho' ſin be the cauſe of death, yet obedience is not the cauſe of life, but only the way to it. (B.)

God be thanked that ye were] We muſt not underſtand theſe words, as if the Apoſtle had bleſſed God becauſe they were once ſlaves to ſin and Satan; but thanks God that the time of that bondage was paſt and over: As if he had ſaid, "God be thanked," that tho' formerly "ye were the ſervants of ſin," yet, ſince your converſion, ye are become obedient to the precepts of Chriſtianity, "having obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine," or (according to the original) being caſt into the mould of that doctrine, "which was delivered to you." Learn hence, that to be turned from the ſervice of ſin to the ſincere obedience of the Goſpel, is a mercy that we can never be ſufficiently ſenſible of and bleſs God for: God be thanked, that altho' ye were the ſervants of ſin, ye are no longer ſo. 2. That the doctrine of the Goſpel has a divine efficacy attending and accompanying it on the hearts of all believers; it has a transforming power to change and faſhion men's minds into the likeneſs of it, as the mould doth the metal that is caſt into it: The doctrine of the Goſpel is the mould, and the heart is the metal, which when melted and caſt into the mould receives its form and figure. O happy they! Who having all their days ſat under the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, are able to ſay, we are transformed and changed into the ſame image from glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord. (G. H. W. B. Blackw. and Maſſey) Neither is this manner of expreſſion (tho' 'tis called a Hebraiſm) unuſual in the Greek and Roman Claſſicks of the firſt rank; as is prov'd by parallel paſſages, both in Thucidides and Tully. (Blackw.)

Form of doctrine] Typos; a mould, or pattern; as in the note foregoing. (Beza, Aſſ. and Leigh.) Thus, a miniſter muſt be (Typos) "a pattern of good works," Tit. ii. 7. See alſo the notes on ch. ii. 20.

Made free from ſin.] See the notes on John viii. 36. and Gal. v. 1.

Ver. 19, 20, 21. 22, 23. I ſpeak after the manner of men, becauſe of the infirmity of your fleſh: For as ye have yielded your members ſervants to uncleanneſs, and to iniquity unto iniquity; even ſo now yield your members ſervants to righteouſneſs, unto holineſs. For when ye were the ſervants of ſin, ye were free from righteouſneſs. What fruit had ye then in thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? For the end of thoſe things is death. But now being made free from ſin, and become ſervants to God, ye have your fruit unto holineſs, and the end everlaſting life. For the wages of ſin is death: But the gift of God is eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

I ſpeak after the manner of men.] Anthropinon legein here is thought to ſignify his taking expreſſions out of common life, in reſpect of the weakneſs of their groſs, or carnal underſtandings; his uſing allegories and figures: And as before, he had uſed proofs from ſacred types, the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, applied to his purpoſe of mortification, and new life; ſo now, proceeding to vulgar known ſimilitudes, taken from maſters, and ſervants, as Gal. iii. 15. And thus it may fitly be interpreted. But it may otherwiſe be rendred alſo, That "the weakneſs of their fleſh" be taken in reſpect of ſtrength to perform God's will, (and not to underſtand St. Paul's language) and conſequently the anthropinon legein, be, ſpeaking, or requiring from them, moſt moderately, by way of condeſcenſion to their infirmities; requiring the leaſt that in any reaſon could be required of them: So as anthropinos, 1 Cor. x. 13. ſignifies that which hath nothing extraordinary in it; that which is common among men. So St. Chryſoſtome there ſays, anthropinos ſignifies little, ſhort, proportionable to their ſtrength: And Demoſthenes contra Midiam uſes it, (anthropine cai metria ſcepſis,) an humane and moderate conſideration. So, in Horace, lib. 2. Humane commoda ſignifies parum commoda, Little profitable. And if it be here conſidered, how moderate and equitable a propoſal it is which here follows, 'twill be acknowledged that this of anthropinon lego, in this notion, may very well be the form to introduce it. (H. and W.)

As ye have yielded.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds to argue from another topick, and accommodates himſelf more immediately to the circumſtances of thoſe converts to whom he now wrote. He brings to remembrance their former condition, and their behaviour under it; and thence, by parity of reaſon; 1. He infers the equity of the ſame care and zeal, in ſatisfying the duties of their preſent profeſſion, with that which had been all along expreſſed, to ſatisfie thoſe corrupt appetites and paſſions, under whoſe influence they had liv'd heretofore: As if he had ſaid; As ye have formerly "yielded your members," and all the faculties both of your bodies and ſouls, to "the ſervice of uncleaneſs," adding "iniquity unto iniquity," and proceeding from one degree of ſin to another; "even ſo now yield your members ſervants to righteouſneſs," and conſecrate your ſelves to the ſervice of God; proceeding at leaſt with as much diligence and induſtry as formerly, from one degree of holineſs to another, ver. 19. (Hall, G. H. and Stanh.) 2. He enforces the ſame, by the ordinary way of diſtributive juſtice: As "when ye were the ſervants of ſin," righteouſneſs or godlineſs had no part of your ſervice, but ſin had the whole of your thoughts and time and endeavours; ſo now, "being made free from ſin, and become the ſervants of righteouſneſs," your obedience ought to be entire, and the rules of juſtice will oblige you, not to allow ſin any part of your ſervice, ver. 18, and 20. (Hall, H. Stanh. and B.) 3. Tho' theſe arguments from equity and juſtice would hold good, ſuppoſing the advantages of both ſervices to be but equal; yet, to ſhew, that they are far from being ſo, the Apoſtle ſtrengthens them ſtill farther, by the powerful motive of intereſt: And all this with reſpect to the time paſt, preſent, and to come. Thus, 1. As for the time paſt, he asks them, "What fruit had ye then in thoſe things?" ver. 21. That is plainly, Ye had no fruit at all; ye got nothing by thoſe things: For ſuch kind of queſtions are commonly, and emphatically, reſolv'd into the ſtrongeſt negatives. As if he had ſaid, whereas, in your ſervice of ſin, ye reaped no manner of profit or benefit, but are indeed infinitely loſers; now, in the ſervice of God, ye will be gainers, beyond compariſon. 2. As to the time preſent, whereas, when ye ſeriouſly look back upon your life ſpent in ſin, it naturally makes you "aſhamed of thoſe things," which ye have formerly done and delighted in, ver. 21. now, "ye have your fruit unto holineſs," ver. 21. your own reaſon juſtifying, and conſcience applauding, your better choice. And, 3. As to the time to come, the difference is ſtill greater: For whereas, after all your labour and pains in the ſervice of ſin, "the end of thoſe things is death," ver. 21. that is, death of the body, even when the ſins are renounc'd and repented of, and of body and ſoul both, without repentance; now your time ſpent in God's ſervice will have for its "end everlaſting life," ver. 22. (Hall Aſſ. G. H. Frank, Stanh. W. and B.)

The wages of ſin.] Opſonion, tho' properly a Latin word, is here uſed in the Greek; as being a term well known among the Romans, to whom this was now written. (Lightf.) It is a metaphor taken from ſoldiers, who, at the end of their ſervice, receive their pay or ſtipend. (Beza, Aſſ. Leigh, G. Stanh. and B.) All the wages, yea, the delicates that ſin can afford us, is death; and thus much doth Opſon properly ſignify; all kind of pleaſant meat that may be prepared, or made ready, with fire. (Athen.) Now, ſince God, who, as our natural Sovereign, has a right to demand our ſervice on what terms he pleaſes, has yet condeſcended to enforce his laws by promiſes of rewards, and threats of puniſhment; death is as much the wages of ſin, as if we had actually contracted with him for it; that being the penalty expreſly fix'd and denounced for ſin; and what thoſe, who know beforehand, upon what terms they enſlave themſelves, do by their obſtinacy deſerve. (Stanh. and Jenks)

The gift of God.] Chariſma; The free gift. (See the notes on ch. v. 15.) Kings are wont to give unto brave ſoldiers, coronets, or other diſtinguiſhing badges of honour, over and above their proper pay: To which the Apoſtle here compares "the gift of eternal life," becauſe it far ſurpaſſes any merit on our part. (G.) We may deſerve our puniſhment indeed, becauſe ſin is entirely our own act; but not a recompence for ſuch acts as are not entirely, nor originally, our own; and that too at his hands, whoſe free grace and good Spirit it is, that works in us both the will and the deed: Moſt juſtly therefore doth the Apoſtle here put the difference, between wages and gift; that being the effect of juſtice, this of meer bounty; not procured by any merit of ours, but "through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord." (Beza, Aſſ. G. H. Stanh. and B.)

CHAP. VII.

The Apoſtle here explains how we are not under the dominion of the law, by an inſtance in the law of marriage. The law of ſin, and the law of grace. The conflict between the fleſh and the ſpirit.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. KNOW ye not, brethren (for I ſpeak to them that know the law) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband ſo long as he liveth: But if the husband be dead, ſhe is looſed from the law of her husband. So then if while her husband liveth, ſhe be married to another man, ſhe ſhall be called an adultereſs: But if her husband be dead, ſhe is free from that law; ſo that ſhe is no adultereſs, though ſhe be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye alſo are become dead to the law by the body of Chriſt; that ye ſhould be married to another, even to him who is raiſed from the dead, that we ſhould bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the fleſh, the motions of ſins which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter.

Know ye not.] Here the Apoſtle opens a great myſtery, which had been firſt of all revealed unto him, among the many divine revelations, mention'd 2 Cor. xii. 1. viz. That even the Jews, who, having embraced the doctrine of Chriſt, had profited much thereby, are no longer under the obligation of the law of Moſes. (G.) And this he prepareth them for, by the known and familiar inſtance of the caſe of matrimony. As death freeth husband and wife from the law which bound them to each other, and impowereth the ſurvivor to marry to another perſon; in like manner, the death of Chriſt was the death of the law, as a covenant of works, holding us under the bond of the curſe of it: And ſo his dying gave us a manumiſſion or freedom from that bond, and a capacity of eſpouſal unto Chriſt; that ſo living as it were in conjugal affection, and obedience to him, we may be made fruitful by his Spirit, doing ſuch things as are agreeable to the will of God, and tending to the glory of God: "Ye are dead to the law by the body of Chriſt;" That is, through the offering up of Chriſt's body upon the croſs. Learn hence, 1. That he that is under the law, is as ſtrictly bound to the rigor and curſe of the law, as a married woman is bound to her husband during his life. 2. That one great end of Chriſt's death was to purchaſe our freedom from the law, that we might be capable of being eſpouſed to himſelf: For whilſt we were under the curſe of the law, we were not in a capacity of being married unto Chriſt. He or ſhe that is a ſlave to another, is not capable to be diſpoſed of in marriage until made free: In like manner, we were in bondage to the law, as well as in ſlavery unto ſin and Satan; but Chriſt has bought out our liberty, and thereby puts us into a capacity of being eſpouſed unto himſelf. Behold what manner of love the Redeemer has ſhewed unto us, that we ſhould be called his ſpouſe, and he our husband! He loved us, but not for any advantage he could have by us; for we had nothing but ſin and ſhame to preſent him with: Nay, he muſt purchaſe us, and that with his own blood, before he could be united to us. O incomparable! O fervent deſires! 3. That tho' believers are free from the rigor and curſe of the law by the death of Chriſt, yet have they not an undoubted liberty, but are ſtill under the government, under an head and guide. As a wife is under government of her husband, ſo are believers under the guidance and government of Jeſus Chriſt, who in a ſpecial manner guideth them by his word and Spirit; and their being ſaid to be "dead to the law," ſignifies no more than "the law's not having dominion over them," in regard of the curſe and condemnation of it (B.)

As long as he liveth.] Eph hoſon chronon ze. Theſe words, according to our tranſlation, do not well ſuit with the following ſimilitude; wherein the Apoſtle compares the law to the deceaſed husband, and us to the ſurviving wife. The word (ze) liveth, is not to be referred to (anthropou) the man, but to (nomos) the law, And therefore we ought to read it thus, "as long as it liveth," or is in force. (Maſſey) And thus we find it well interpreted, by Biſhop Hall, Biſhop Fell and Grotius.

The woman which hath an husband.] See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 39.

Married to another.] Ean genetai hetero; That is, literally, "If ſhe be to another." (H. and Fell) Or, become another man's. (Beza) The meaning is plain, If ſhe yields, or gives up herſelf to another.

Shall be called an adultereſs.] Chrematiſei; That is, notably called, or notoriouſly known to be ſo. (Greg.) See the proper import of this word, chrematizo, in the notes on Acts xi. 26.

Dead to the law.] It is apparent, ver. 2, 3. that the life or death of the perſon under ſubjection is not the thing taken into conſideration; and if it were, it would not tend to the inferring the deſigned concluſion: For the Jews could not be ſuppoſed to be dead, but the law which had had the power over them. And tho' the word ethanatothete, "ye are put to death," may make that ſeem poſſible to be here meant; yet the contrary being ſo evident, by the whole drift of the diſcourſe, 'tis certain, thoſe words, here rendred "ye are put to death to the law," muſt be interpreted, as a figurative ſpeech, to ſignify, The law is put to death to you; as it is expreſs'd, ver. 6. "That being dead wherein ye were held." (H.) Here note, 1. That the Apoſtle follows both metaphors of "the law being dead to us," and our "being dead to the law;" and uſeth one for the other, the ſenſe being the ſame. 2. That, in theſe places, he takes the law (i. e. the moral) as given by Moſes without the Spirit, exacting perfect obedience, and giving us perfect knowledge of ſin, without enabling us at all to do the one, or avoid the other; it ſo being the very "ſtrength of ſin," 1 Cor. xv. 56. 3. That therefore, he indifferently and equivalently, uſeth the phraſes, to be "dead to the law," and to ſin; to be "under the law;" and under ſin; they both (as the law is in this ſenſe taken) living and expiring together. For note, That the Apoſtle oppoſeth the law, as given by Moſes, without the Spirit, and with a curſe to the non-performers, (Gal. iii. 10.) to the law, as given now by Chriſt, with the Spirit, and ability to perform it, (ch. viii. 2. and 2 Cor. iii. 6 &c.) Moſes writing it on ſtones, the Spirit writing it in the heart, (Hebr. viii. 10.) the one killing, the other giving life; the matter of the law given by both, but the manner diverſe; the law, after the manner it was formerly given, being now expired and dead. 4. That to be "dead to the law," is to be freed from the obſervance of the law ceremonial, and from the condemnation of the law moral, which we had no ability formerly to keep, being without grace, and ſo ſtood liable to the penalty of it, till Chriſt deliver'd us; purchaſing pardon for all our former breaches, and grace for the future obſervance of his holy precepts, (ver. 12.) By which our walking by the Spirit, and our being filled with charity and the fruits thereof, and doing all things, by the Spirit dwelling in us, which are commanded by the law, the writing of the law becomes void and uſeleſs to ſuch, not only in its condemning power, but in its commands and directing power; not that we now are without law, but that we have it ſuperabundantly written in our hearts. (Fell) See the notes on ver. 1. and ch. vi. 2.

That ye ſhould be married to another] That is, to Chriſt, 2 Cor. xi. 2. and Eph. v. 29. And this is a very apt metaphor, to ſignify, how cloſely ſin adheres to the unregenerate, and righteouſneſs to the Saints. "They two ſhall be one." (Idem), See the notes on ver. 3.

That we ſhould bring forth fruit.] Here is a quick tranſition from one perſon to another; upon which Mr. Lock has this obſervation; That St. Paul, having all along, from the beginning of the chapter, and even in this very ſentence, ſaid Ye, here, with neglect of Grammar, on a ſudden changes it, into We: I ſuppoſe (ſays he) to preſs the argument ſtronger, by ſhewing himſelf to be in the ſame circumſtances and concern with them; he being a Jew, as well as thoſe he ſpoke to. This neglect of grammar (as this ingenious gentleman calls it) expreſſes the prudence and dextrous addreſs of the Apoſtle with great advantage: By familiarly uniting himſelf to them he gains their affections and engages their attention; and ſuch changes as this enforce an exhortation, and give an agreeable variety to the ſtyle. But if this tranſition from one perſon to another, for ſuch weighty cauſes and ſtrong reaſons, be a neglect of Grammar, the criticks muſt at leaſt excuſe it; becauſe 'tis frequent, and admired as emphatical and a beauty in Homer and Virgil, in Xenophon and Plato, and all the ſublimeſt writers in both the languages. (Blackw.) See the notes on ch. viii. 10. and on John xv. 8.

When we were in the fleſh.] That this phraſe ſignifies the Judicial ſtate under the law, appears by the whole diſcourſe in this chapter, of the ſtate of men conſider'd under the law; and particularly by the oppoſition here between "being in the fleſh," and "being delivered from the law." And it is thus ſtiled "being in the fleſh," in oppoſition to "being in the ſpirit," ch. viii. 9. As Chriſtianity is there call'd "the law of the Spirit of life," ver. 2. and here "the newneſs of the Spirit," in oppoſition to "the oldneſs of the letter," ver. 6. meaning the Moſaical law. And a peculiar propriety there is in this phraſe, for this matter, in many reſpects; 1. In reſpect of the nature of the Moſaical precepts; which were external, waſhings, circumciſion, bodily reſts, &c. (all which are ſeated "in the fleſh") and ſo, proportionably, carnal promiſes and threats: Whereas the precepts of Chriſt go deeper to the mind and ſpirit, require the purity of that, and accordingly are back'd with ſpiritual promiſes and terrors. 2. In reſpect of the aſſiſtance that Chriſt affords toward his obedience, by giving his ſpirit, to aſſiſt (if it be not griev'd and reſiſted) our ſpirits; in oppoſition to which the ſtate under the law, having none of that ſtrength join'd with it, may juſtly be called the "being in the fleſh." To which may be added, 3. That one eminent effect of the Spirit's deſcending, was the commiſſionating the Apoſtles for their office of preaching to the Gentile world remiſſion of ſins upon repentance; and, in oppoſition to that, the law allowing no place for repentance for any preſumptuous ſin, but inflicting preſent puniſhment on the offender, that ſtate may be fitly ſtiled "being in the fleſh." Mean while, as there is a difference betwixt the weakneſs of the natural eſtate, conſidered without any other aid than what the law affordeth, and the ſinfulneſs of carnal acts and habits continued in and indulged, and, on the other ſide, betwixt the ſtate of a baptized Chriſtian afforded the grace and ſtrength of Chriſt, and of him who makes uſe of that grace, and leads a pure Chriſtian life: So the "being in the fleſh" differs from the living, or walking, after, or according to, the fleſh; and, on the other ſide, "being in the ſpirit," or "being in Chriſt," differs from walking after the Spirit: All which phraſes are to be met with here, and in the next chapter; and muſt be nicely diſtinguiſhed, or elſe they will be apt to betray us to ſome miſtake. Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. What ſhall we ſay then? Is the law ſin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known ſin but by the law: For I had not known luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet. But ſin taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence. For without the law ſin was dead. For I was alive without the law once: But when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died. And the commandment which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. For ſin taking occaſion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it ſlew me. Wherefore the law is holy; and the commandment holy, and juſt, and good. Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But ſin, that it might appear ſin, working death in me by that which is good; that ſin by the commandment might become exceeding ſinful. For we know that the law is ſpiritual: But I am carnal, ſold under ſin. For that which I do, I allow not: For what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. If then I do that which I would not, I conſent unto the law, that it is good. Now then, it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in me. For I know, that in me (that is, in my fleſh) dwelleth no good thing: For to will is preſent with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not. For the good that I would, I do not: But the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in me. I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is preſent with me. For I delight in the law of God, after the inward man. But I ſee another law in my members, warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin, which is in my members. O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! I thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. So then, with the mind I my ſelf ſerve the law of God; but with the fleſh the law of ſin.

What ſhall we ſay then?] See the notes on ch. iv. 1. And note here, That all this, and what follows, is a digreſſion, to the beginning of the next chapter; where the Apoſtle reſumes the ſubject he was upon in the foregoing verſes. (Fell)

Is the law ſin? God forbid!] The Apoſtle will not allow, that "the law is the cauſe of ſin:" But, his meaning ſeems to be, That he who commits a ſin, which he knows is forbidden, both by the revealed will of God, and the law of nature, is guilty of a greater tranſgreſſion, than he who commits the ſame ſin, knowing only the law of nature. In this ſenſe, the revealed law of God may be ſaid to be the occaſion of making men more guilty; not that the law, conſidered in it ſelf, does this, but the wickedneſs of men, in breaking the law, and doing what they know it forbids. The Apoſtle inſtances in covetouſneſs: "I had not known," ſays he, that luſt, or deſire, had been a ſin, "if the law had not ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet:" That is, He who knows covetouſneſs to be forbidden by the revealed law of God, is guilty of a greater ſin, than he who knows only the law of nature, and allows in himſelf the ſame covetous deſires. We may here obſerve, That the laws of God extend vaſtly farther than human laws poſſibly can. Human laws do not denounce any penalty againſt him who entertains ſinful luſts and deſires in his mind, becauſe our ſecret thoughts are not known to men: But they being as perfectly known to God as our open actions are to men, he accounts him a tranſgreſſor, who indulges himſelf in thinking, and conſents to evil and wicked thoughts and deſires. There are many inſtances of oppreſſion, and injuſtice, and other ſins, which human laws cannot forbid, nor could puniſh if they did, by reaſon of the imperfection of the legiſlators; all which are forbidden by the divine laws, and will be ſeverely puniſhed by God. See inſtances in Biſhop Taylor, of Repentance, ch. vii. ſect. i. n 5. (Fox)

I had not known ſin.] It is an ordinary figure, to ſpeak of other men in the firſt perſon; but moſt frequent in blaming, or noting any fault in others: For then, by the putting it in this diſguiſe, faſtning it on one's own perſon, it is more likely to be well taken by thoſe to whom it belongs. Thus, St. Chryſoſtome ſaith of this Apoſtle, That when he mentions things that are any way grievous, or likely to be ill taken, he doth it in his own perſon: And St. Jerome on Daniel ſays, Confeſſing the ſins of the people, he doth it in his own perſon; which we read alſo practiſed by the Apoſtle to the Romans; that is, moſt probably, in this place. Thus when, 1 Cor. iv. 4. St. Paul had ſpoken in his own perſon, "I know nothing by my ſelf, but hereby I am not juſtified," he tells them plainly, ver. 6. That he had "in a figure transferred theſe things unto himſelf for their ſakes, that they might not be puffed up;" as counting ſuch ſchemes and figures as theſe, the moſt profitable and efficacious on the reader. Thus the ſame Apoſtle, 1 Cor. vi. 12. "All things are lawful to me, but all things are not expedient;" that is, Thoſe things which are by you look'd on as indifferent, if they be yielded to, may be very hurtful in you; and 1 Cor. xiii. 2. "If I have all faith, and have not charity;" that is, If ye want charity to your other gifts. So Gal. ii. 18. "If what I have deſtroyed I build the ſame again, I make my ſelf a tranſgreſſor;" that is, Whoſoever doth ſo, or whenſoever ye do ſo, it muſt needs be a fault in you. Thus, Rom. iii. 7. "If the truth of God have abounded by my lie unto his glory, why am I alſo judged as a ſinner?" Which words are certainly the perſonating of an impious objector, who ſpeaks or diſputes thus, and not of the Apoſtle himſelf. And the ſame ſcheme or faſhion of ſpeaking or writing is very frequent among all authors. And that it muſt be ſo taken here, may appear by theſe evidences: 1. By ver. 9. "I indeed once lived without the law;" Which can with no appearance of truth be affirmed of St. Paul's perſon, who was born and brought up a Jew, in the knowledge of the Moſaical law; and muſt therefore be the perſonating of a man firſt conſidered without, then with the law, to whom becauſe the law is given in the ſecond perſon, "Thou ſhalt not covet," ver. 7. therefore he, to whom it is given in the following verſes, fitly ſet down in the firſt perſon, I, being relative to the thou antecedent: And ſo Marcus Eremita, de Baptiſm. p. 921. and ſo Theophylact diſtinctly affirms. 2. By the ſeverals, affirmed in this chapter, which cannot belong to St. Paul. For that St. Paul was, at the writing of this, a reformed, regenerate perſon, there is no doubt; and they who would have it ſpoken by him in his own perſon, make that advantage of this chapter, by reconciling thoſe things which are here mention'd to a regenerate ſtate. But if we compare the ſeverals which are here mentioned, with the parts of a regenerate man's character, given by the ſame Apoſtle in other places, we ſhall find them directly contrary. Here in verſe 8. he ſaith, "ſin had wrought in him all manner of concupiſcence;" whereas of the regenerate man it is affirmed, Gal. v. 24. "They that are Chriſt's have crucified the fleſh with the affections and luſts." Here in ver. 9. 'tis ſaid, "ſin revived, and I died," whereas, of the regenerate man 'tis ſaid, ch. vi. 2. "How ſhall we that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein?" Here in ver. 14. 'tis ſaid, "I am carnal;" whereas, of the regenerate man 'tis affirmed ch. viii. 1. that he "walked not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit." Here again, in that ſame verſe, 'tis ſaid, "I am ſold under ſin;" whereas, of the regenerate, 'tis affirmed ch. vi. 18. that he becomes "free from ſin, and becomes the ſervant of righteouſneſs." Here ver. 20. "Sin dwelleth in me," and accompliſheth, or worketh, "that which I will not," or like not with my mind, or conſcience; and ſo 'tis ſaid ver. 23, 24. that "the law in the members carries him into captivity by the law of ſin," and, "who ſhall deliver him from this body of death?" and ſo that he is under the power of the law of ſin and death, that he "obeys the law of ſin" ver. 25. whereas ch. viii. 2. of the regenerate, 'tis affirmed, that "the law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus hath made him free from the law of ſin and death." Nothing can be more contrary and unreconcileable to a regenerate ſtate, in theſe ſo many particulars, than what is here affirmed of the, ego, I, the perſon here thus repreſented. And indeed, unleſs ſinning againſt conſcience be the only way of alleviating (and not aggravating) ſin, it is impoſſible, that the "doing that ill he would not," and the "not doing that good he would," ver. 19, 20. can be deemed a fit ingredient in the character of a regenerate man: 'Tis certain, this was, in the perſon of Medea, made, by the Heathens, the higheſt pitch of villany, to ſee and like that which was good, and do the direct contrary; and therefore cannot in any reaſon be thought to be the Apoſtle's deſcription of a regenerate man, or good Chriſtian. (H.)

Had not known luſt.] That by epithumia, coveting, here is meant the ſin forbidden in the tenth commandment of the decalogue, appears by the end of the verſe. But how the Apoſtle can truly ſay, that he "had not known it had been a ſin, if the law had not told him it was," will be all the difficulty. To which may be anſwer'd, 1. That the Apoſtle doth not ſpeak particularly of himſelf (as before is noted) but in the perſon of a Jew, or man in general: And then it is not only true of this, but of all other the commandments (of which this one may be ſet as the inſtance) that the knowledge of ſin is by the promulgation of the law that forbids it. But then there may, from the Jewiſh doctrine, appear ſome reaſon why the Apoſtle ſhould rather inſtance in this commandment, than any other. For the Jews, before aud under Chriſt's time, ſeeing that there was no puniſhment judicially appointed for thoughts or deſires, whether unclean, or of getting any thing from their neighbours, had reſolved this to be no ſin; and conſequently that the tenth commandment was but a moral proverbial eſſay or counſel, like that of Menander, not to covet ſo much as a pin of another's; but not any precept of God, or of nature; affirming that, unleſs it be in caſe of the worſhip of falſe gods, no ſin is committed by the bare will, without ſome actual commiſſion following it. This ſay Aben-Ezra, Kimchi, and Joſephus; according to which, St. Paul might well ſay, of any Jew brought up under ſuch maſters, that he had not believed coveting to be a ſin, had not the more exact conſideration of the direct words of the law aſſured him that it was. (Idem)

Sin taking occaſion.] Here the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth between the cauſe and occaſion. The law is not the cauſe, but only the occaſion; as wine is of drunkenneſs, and beauty of luſt. (Blackwood) Aphorme is taken ſeveral ways; 1. It properly ſignifieth the opportunity of doing a thing: 2. It ſignifieth any circumſtance or accident, whereby one is occaſioned to do any thing: And, 3. That which draweth a man from doing that which he intended.

It cometh (as ſome think) of horme, an aſſault; becauſe, if we give but our ſelves liberty, never ſo little, more than is fit, the fleſh will make an aſſault upon us. (Leigh) See the notes on ch. iv. 15. and v. 13, 20.

In me.] See the notes on ver. 7.

Taking occaſion.] See the notes on ver. 8.

Holy, and juſt, and good.] Obſerve here, What care and holy caution the Apoſtle uſes to vindicate and clear the holy law of God from all fault and blame, charging his guilt not upon the commandment, but upon the corruption of his own heart, which took occaſion to be ſtirring in him, and by the commandment ſlew him; affirming nevertheleſs, that the law of God in itſelf, and in its own nature, is "holy, juſt, and good." Here note, That the Apoſtle adorns the law with the moſt excellent elogy and commendation. 1. 'Tis holy, as it enjoins all acts of piety towards God; namely, adoration of his majeſty, imitation of his purity, reſignation to his providence, obedience to his commands. 2. 'Tis juſt, as it directs us in our duty to others in every capacity and relation wherein we ſtand, and obliges us to walk by that rule of equity, to do to others as we would they ſhould do unto us. 3. 'Tis good to the man that keeps it, commanding nothing but what is influential upon his well-being both here and hereafter: Could we ſet aſide the authority of the lawgiver, yet all the precepts of the law for their moral goodneſs deſerve our eſteem, and choice, and entire obſervation, nothing being required of us but what is our duty and intereſt as men, and which tends to the perfecting and ennobling of our natures: Well then might our Apoſtle determine that "the law is holy, the commandment holy, and juſt, and good." (B.) Or the epithet Holy may have a reference to the ceremonial law, Juſt to the judicial law, and good to the moral. (Aſſ.)

I am carnal.] See the notes on ch. iii. 9. and here ver, 23.

Sold under ſin.] Not as a willing ſlave, to obey and follow the deſire of ſin in all things; as it is ſaid of Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 20. but as a captive, yet detained, tho' his ranſom be paid: And one who, againſt his will and purpoſe, is yet ſubject to the aſſaults and luſts of ſin; not being able wholly and entirely to rid himſelf of them, altho' he do vehemently reſiſt them, and often ſubdue them by the Spirit of God that is within him, Gal. v. 17. 18. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 7. and 23.

Another law in my members.] For the underſtanding the ſenſe of the Apoſtle, in this whole chapter, 'tis uſeful to compare this paſſage with Gal. v. 17. "The Spirit luſteth againſt the fleſh, and the fleſh againſt the Spirit," &c. which is thought to be parallel, and to import the ſame ſenſe with this. Of theſe two places therefore it muſt firſt be remembred, That the difference which is between theſe texts ariſeth not from the diſtinction between "the Spirit" in the one, and "the law of the mind," in the other, nor conſequently is it to be placed betwixt the "luſting of the fleſh againſt the Spirit," ſimply taken, and the "warring of the law in the members againſt the law in the mind," as that is no more than a war; but betwixt the former ſimply taken, or with the addition of the "Spirit luſting back againſt the fleſh," or with the circumſtances mentioned, Gal. v. 17. (none of which imply a yielding to the luſts of the fleſh) and the latter, taken with that addition, here mentioned, of "bringing the man into captivity to the law of ſin." And this indeed is all the difference that can be aſſigned betwixt a regenerate and unregenerate man, that in the one the Spirit prevails, in the other the fleſh is victorious; that is, the will of the one is led by the Spirit, chooſes and acts the deeds of the Spirit (the will of God;) but the will of the other follows the carnal dictates, (telei epithumian ſarcos) performs the will of the fleſh, and ſo falls under the condemnation which belongs to ſuch: As ſaith Dorotheus, Such a ſtate is altogether ſubject to puniſhment; for every ſin that is acted is under hell, and they are all under hell in that they act. And if it be ſuggeſted, that the conſequents in that place Gal. v. 17, "So that what things ye would, ye do them not," ſeem parallel to "What I would that I do not," here, ver. 15. 19. and ſo neither of them ſignify this carnal ſtate, To this it muſt be anſwered, that theſe two are not parallel, but on the contrary that paſſage, "What I would, I do not," is really equivalent with the "captivation to the law of ſin," (as by the whole context appears;) tho' indeed there is ſome obſcurity in it, which, till by the context it be explained, may miſlead one to think otherwiſe. The truth is evident, theſe two things are conjoyned in both thoſe verſes, "What I would, that I do not; but what I hate, that I do, ver. 15. and "The good that I would, I do not," but the evil that I would not, that Ido, So ver. 19. And being, conjoyn'd in the ſame perſon, the ſubject of the diſcourſe, and but equivalent phraſes with thoſe other of "captivation to the law of the members," and "being carnal," and "ſold under ſin," the meaning muſt be, that he neglects to do the good that the law of God and his own mind dictates to him, and doth commit on the contrary, the evil that, according to his mind and the declaration of God's will in the law, he diſliketh and hateth, and ſo evidently acteth in oppoſition to conſcience, commits the ſins of the fleſh willingly and knowingly, non obſtante the contrary dictate and ſolicitation of conſcience. But then this is much more than is contained in that "Luſting of the fleſh againſt the Spirit," Gal. v. (ſtyled by Nemeſius, The ſtrife of the reaſon and luſt; a diſſenſion and emulation betwixt them.) For as there "the fleſh luſteth," ſo "the Spirit luſteth" too; and it is not affirmed of either of them, that it leads the other captive. All the event that is taken notice of is, that "What ye would that ye do not," which being the effect of the double epithumia, or luſting, muſt have ſuch a ſenſe proportioned to it as ſhall be founded in that double epithumia, and that can be no other than this, that (thelein) to will be taken in the ſenſe of (epithumein) to luſt, and ſo not for an act of the elective faculty which to one matter is but one, either chooſing or refuſing, but for an act of ſome kind of woulding, or appetite: And that is conſtantly two-fold to the ſame matter; the fleſh hath one woulding, and the Spirit hath another; the fleſh deſires, and would have a man yield to the pleaſant propoſal, the Spirit would have him reſiſt it; and both theſe are evidently mentioned in that verſe, one called "the luſting of the Spirit," and the other "of the fleſh." From the contrariety of which it neceſſarily follows, that whatſoever (in matters of this nature, good or evil) any man doth, he doth againſt one of theſe wouldings, and conſequently he doth not "do what he would." Whereas if thelein were taken for the elective faculty, which we ordinarily call the will of man, it is evident every voluntary agent doth "do what he will;" his actings follow his will or choice, and whenſoever he doth not ſo, he acts by violence, or rather is acted, and to that is required that he be conquered by ſome other; and yet of any ſuch conqueſt there is no mention in that place of Gal. v. 17. which mentions only an (epithumia) luſting equally on both ſides: And ſo the reſult is, that Gal. v. 17. there is no more ſaid but this, that which way ſoever a man acts, he acts againſt ſome deſire, or luſting of his; if he act according to the fleſh, he acts againſt the ſolicitation of the mind and Spirit; and if he act according to the Spirit, he doth not perform the will of the fleſh (telein epithumian ſarcos,) but acts contrary to all its importunities; and he that doth the latter of theſe is far from being led "captive to the law of ſin," which is in the fleſh, or members, being indeed a conqueror over it, tho' he have not eradicated or extirpated it. For the yet fuller clearing of this, take the plain importance of thoſe two verſes, and ſet them ſeverally, and then you will ſoon ſee how there is no correſpondence between them; Gal. v. 17. the Apoſtle ſets down this plain Aphoriſm, That the deſires of the fleſh and Spirit are one contrary to the other; and conſequently that to which ſoever of them the will of man conſents, it muſt needs reject the other. But here, ver. 15, 19. The Apoſtle ſets down the ſtate of a particular man; who deliberately chooſes and acts the evil which he knows he ſhould not do, or which the law of God in his own mind tells him diſtinctly he ought not to do: As when Nemeſius ſpeaks of an intemperate man, that his election is contrary to his luſt, yet he is overcome by his luſt, and acts what that ſuggeſts: And ſo St. Auguſtin (Confeſſ. l. 8. ch. 5.) ſays the law of ſin is the violence of cuſtom by which the mind is drawn and held againſt its inclination; plainly ſignifying the ſtate of the perſon ſpoken of here to be that of an habitual ſinner. What agreement now is, or can there be, betwixt theſe two verſes? 'Tis true indeed, that they who "do what they hate, and would not," may well be ſaid "not to do the things which they would," and ſo are included in thoſe words, Gal. v. 17. But that proves not that theſe places, are parallel; becauſe here 'tis determined to "doing the ill which he hates," whereas Gal. v. the ſpeech lies open to both parts, to the doing the good which the fleſh hates, as well as the evil which the fleſh loves. Now this being ſpoken of men indefinitely, is very diſtant from defining it on one ſide, and applying it to a particular perſon, as it is evidently done here ver. 19. when he ſaith, "I do not the good that I would, but the evil which I hate that do I:" And conſequently, tho' the fleſh's diſliking the virtuous actions, and liking the vicious, be perfectly reconcileable with "walking in the Spirit," and ſo with a regenerate ſtate; and ſo the place to the Galatians, (tho' not ſpoken particularly of the actions of regenerate men, but delivered as an aphoriſm indefinitely, applicable to mens actions whether good or evil) may be applicable to the actings of ſuch; yet this place to the Romans being determined to the doing the evil, and that evidently againſt the dictate of the mind, the reſiſtance of the conſcience, is ſtill unreconcileable with that ſpiritual walking and ſo with the regenerate ſtate, ch. viii. 1. Another notion there is, which ſome of the ancients have had of the words "What I hate that I do," viz. That it ſhould belong only to deſires or thoughts unconſented to. So St. Jerome; and St. Auguſtin alſo, being perſwaded by ſome Doctors, and a conceited advantage againſt the Pelagian hereſy, to retract in ſome part what before he had aſſerted, and ſpoken the moſt for of any man. And of this opinion is Methodius alſo; who ſaith "That which I hate, I do," is to be underſtood not of the doing that which is ill, but only of thinking, or imagining: And again, of aliene imaginations which frequently make incurſions on us, and bring us to fancy things which we would not; Adding, For it is not wholly in our power, to think or not to think abſurd things, but either to uſe or not to uſe ſuch thoughts or fancies; for we cannot hinder thoughts from coming upon us, but we can chooſe whether we will be perſwaded by them, or uſe them: And again, How did the Apoſtle do evil, if he ſpake not of abſurd thoughts? This intrepretation of St. Paul's words, if it were ſecure from being any farther extended than the authors of it deſigned, could have no hurt or noxiouſneſs in it; it being certainly true, that every regenerate man is thus infeſted with fancies and thoughts which he hates, and gives no conſent unto: Yet if the words of the text be well conſidered, this cannot but appear a ſtrange interpretation. For when it is certain that draſai ſignifies neither leſs, nor other, than (poieſai) to do, and when that word is varied unto catergazomai and pratto, ver. 15. and both thoſe are directly all one with draſai, and when (ho miſo) "what I hate" in one place, is (ho ou thelo) "what I would not," ver. 16. and that again (ho ou thelo cacon,) "the evil that I would not," ver. 19. and cacon and phaulon are directly all one, 'tis not imaginable how (ho miſo poio) "what I hate, I do," ſhould not be underſtood (epi tou draſai to phaulon) of doing evil; this being no leſs than a direct contradiction, to interpret poio, by draſai; for that is poio, by ou poio, pratto, by ou pratto, do, by not do, which neither Methodius, nor any other man's authority, can prevail with any reaſonable men to receive from him. This inconvenience when Methodius foreſees, his only anſwer is, that he deſires them who make this objection, to declare, what evil it was that the Apoſtle hated, and would not do, and yet did; whether when he willed to ſerve God, he yet committed idolatry? But ſure the whole force of this anſwer (if there be any) is founded in interpreting the words to be ſpoken by St. Paul in his own perſon; and ſo is perfectly prevented by him that underſtands the Apoſtle not of himſelf, but of an unregenerate man. From which proceſs of Methodius, and what he there adds in that place of the Apoſtle's pronouncing againſt idolaters, and other ſuch ſinners, that they cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven, the concluſion is regular and unavoidable, that if poio ſignifies I do, and pratto and catergazomai, do, and work, be interpreted of actions, or of any more than thoughts unconſented to, then the perſon that is ſpoken of here by St. Paul, is one that "ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God," and then ſure no regenerate perſon, by Methodius's arguing: Which therefore is moſt conſtringent, and convincing, that this chapter ſpeaks of an unregenerate perſon; for that 'tis beyond all controverſy, that he cannot uſe thoſe words, (poio) I do, &c. of meer thinking or fancying only, and not of conſenting, or doing. And ſo, in like manner, that "being carnal, and ſoid under ſin," (which is all one with a "ſervant of ſin," in other places of the ſame Apoſtle, it being then ſo ordinary to ſell ſervants ſub haſta, under his ſpear, as it were, that had taken or conquered them) and "carried captive by the law in his members," (that is, by his own carnal heart) cannot be affirmed of him that lives in, and "walks after the Spirit." To which this farther evidence may alſo be added, from the uſing the phraſe "the law of ſin," ver 23. the unqueſtionable importance of which we have from the immediate conſequents. Nomos hamartias, "the law of ſin," is ſure the command or empire of ſin, to which he that is captivated, as the perſon here ſpoken of is, muſt be acknowledged to be under the dominion of ſin, and that certainly is unreconcileable with a regenerate ſtate. This is farther expreſs'd, ver. 24. by "the body of death," and ſo bears proportion to what had been ſaid, ver. 5. "When we were in the fleſh, (as that is there oppoſed to the Spirit) the motions of ſin did work in our members, to bring forth fruit unto death;" which concludes the condition here ſpoken of to be a damnable condition. And it is remarkable, that ch. viii. 2. "The law of the Spirit of life which is in Jeſus Chriſt," is ſaid to "have made the Apoſtle free from the law of ſin and death." From whence the argument is irrefragable, That to which the perſon here is ſaid to be captivated, is the ſame from which the grace of Chriſt hath deliver'd the regenerate juſtified perſon, ch. viii. 2. But the grace of Chriſt doth not free the regenerate man in this life from the injections of fancy, or thoughts unconſented to (for certainly the regenerate man doth not pretend to that meaſure of grace as ſhall free him from all ſuch:) Therefore, that of thoughts unconſented to is not it to which the perſon here is ſaid to be captivated. Againſt the evidence of this, I foreſee not what can reaſonably be ſuggeſted. (H.)

The body of this death.] See the notes on ch. vi. 6.

I thank God.] Some of the Fathers, and particularly Fulgentius, (de Trinit.) reads it thus; O wretched man that I am! Who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? (Gratia Dei.) The grace of God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. (D. Heinſ.) Or, it might be underſtood, as if he had ſaid, I have wrote this as of my ſelf, modeſtly, in the firſt perſon; But indeed, to ſpeak without a figure, I am not ſuch a one, as to be ſenſible of theſe terrible conflicts, ſince God, through Jeſus Chriſt, has delivered me from this body of ſin; for which I return thanks both to God the Father, and to Jeſus Chriſt. (G.) But the Syriac, Arabic, and all the Greek commentators, agree with our tranſlation. (W.) Bleſſed be God, by the grace and ſtrength of Jeſus Chriſt, there is a way to get out of this curſed ſtate; 1. Pardon to every penitent ſinner; which may encourage any to break off this eſtate of ſin: And, 2. Grace, and ſtrength in Chriſt, to perform what God in Chriſt will accept; that is, ſincere, tho' not perfect, obedience, (the thing affirmed ver. 6. and reſumed at the beginning of ch. viii.) So then the concluſion of this digreſſion, from ver. 7. to this place, is, That the bare knowledge of the law of Moſes doth only direct the underſtanding what is the duty; which notwithſtanding, the carnal man, accuſtomed to his own ways of ſin, may think fit ſtill to go on in them, and ſo (tho' one and the ſame perſon) doth two things at once; with his underſtanding he ſerves the law of God, is delighted and pleaſed with thoſe things wherewith that is delighted, and yet at the ſame time with the fleſh ſubmits to the ſuggeſtions and cuſtomary actions of the fleſh, and falls into ſins directly contrary to the ſuggeſtions of his conſcience, and the law in it; and this is juſtly rewarded with death, ch. vi. 23. (H.)

CHAP. VIII.

Thoſe who are in Chriſt, and live according to the Spirit, ſhall not be condemned. The life of the fleſh, and that of the Spirit inconſiſtent. The glorious privileges of God's children.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14

THere is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life, in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made me free from the law of ſin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh, God ſending his own Son, in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh: That the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the fleſh, do mind the things of the fleſh: But they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded, is death; but to be ſpiritually minded, is life and peace: Becauſe the carnal mind is enmity againſt God: For it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God. But ye are not in the fleſh, but in the Spirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his. And if Chriſt be in you, the body is dead becauſe of ſin, but the Spirit is life becauſe of righteouſneſs, But if the Spirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, dwell in you; he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore, brethren, we are debters, not to the fleſh, to live after the fleſh. For if ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die: But if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God.

There is therefore.] See the notes on ch. vii. 1, 7.

Them which are in Chriſt Jeſus.] This phraſe, to "be in Chriſt," ſaith Mr. Le Clerc, is often uſed by St. Paul, for being a Chriſtian; which note he borrow'd from Caſtalio, who renders it Chriſtiani facti: But, if either of them mean only Chriſtians by profeſſion, or by being only members of the Chriſtian church, this will by no means agree with this place, or any other of like nature; ſince freedom from condemnation, and other benefits conferr'd upon us through Jeſus Chriſt, will not follow our being Chriſtians in this ſenſe, but upon a lively faith in Chriſt, our union to him by the Spirit, and our being ſo in him, as to become new creatures, according to ver. 9. and other places. (W.)

What the law could not do.] That freedom from the guilt of ſin and death which the law could not miniſter, "God, ſending his own ſon, in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh" (dunaton epoieſe) hath made feaſible: Which laſt words, tho' not expreſs'd, muſt neceſſarily be ſupplied. Examples of the like ellipſes are numerous in Scripture (Idem) But this is ſo far from being a fault, that it is an Attic elegance, common among the moſt celebrated Claſſicks. (Blackwall) See the notes on ch. vi. 18, &c. ch. vii. 23. and John viii. 36.

In the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh.] That is, In a mortal body, which was like ſinful fleſh, and differ'd nothing from it, ſave only in innocence. (D. Heinſ. Aſſ. H. and B.)

For ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh.] Peri hamartias; By a ſacrifice for ſin. (H. and W.) Mr. Lock ſays, the plain meaning of theſe words is, that ſin it ſelf was condemned, or put to death in Chriſt's fleſh; i. e. was ſuffer'd to have no life or being in the fleſh of our Saviour, he being in all things "tempted as we are, yet without ſin," Hebr. iv. 15. But this certainly is a falſe interpretation: For, as ſin could not be put to death in him, in whom it never lived, or could have any being; ſo, much leſs, could this be done by his offering a ſacrifice for ſin; that being only done at the cloſe of his life, whereas Chriſt was free from ſin from his conception, and that being done then by a ſin offering to make atonement for the guilt of ſin. The true meaning of the words is therefore this, that juſtification, or freedom from the guilt of ſin, which the law could not procure, becauſe of the weakneſs of the fleſh rend'ring us obnoxious to ſin, and ſo to death for it, God, by ſending his Son in our human nature, did procure, and by giving up his Son to be a ſacrifice, to make atonement for the ſin committed by the fleſh (ecrine cat' hamartian) he judged againſt ſin in the fleſh: That is, either, He ſhew'd, that it deſerv'd condemnation, as requiring an atonement to free us from the guilt of it; or elſe, He, by his ſacrifice, condemned that which before condemned us, and took away its power of condemning believers, enabling them to ſay, "Who is he that condemneth us? It is Chriſt that died," ver. 34. (W.) See the notes on 2 Cor. iv. 21.

That the righteouſneſs of the law.] Our Apoſtle here aſſigns another end and cauſe for which God ſent his Son into the world; namely, to do what the law commanded, as well as to ſuffer what the law threatned; perfectly to fulfil the righteouſneſs of the law for us, which it was impoſſible for us to do for our ſelves; for the ſake of which we are accounted righteous in the ſight of God. Learn hence, 1. That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt being made under the law, fulfilled the law; whatſoever the law did or could demand, is fully ſatisfied and fulfilled by Chriſt. 2. That, Chriſt having fulfilled the law on our behalf, whatever can be required of us by way of puniſhment, is diſcharged likewiſe. 3. That tho' the righteouſneſs of the law be fulfilled for us by Chriſt, yet the Goſpel-righteouſneſs muſt be perform'd by us our ſelves. Chriſt has anſwered the demands of the law for us: We muſt repent our ſelves, obey our ſelves, or Chriſt's obedience will profit us nothing: None can ſafely or comfortably pretend to an intereſt in Chriſt's obedience, either active or paſſive, but only ſuch who in their courſe are acted and influenced by the Spirit, and not by the fleſh. (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 26.

They that are after the fleſh.] Obſerve here, 1. A difference of perſons mention'd: Thoſe that are "after the fleſh," and thoſe that are "after the Spirit." 2. A difference of properties belonging to theſe perſons; the one "minds the things of the fleſh," the other "the things of the Spirit." They mind them; that is, they reliſh and ſavour them, they lay out their thoughts about them, and let out their endeavours after them. Learn hence, 1. That there are but two ſorts of men in the world; ſome after the fleſh, and ſome after the Spirit. 2. That theſe two different ſorts of men have two different objects, which they ſavour and reliſh; namely, the things of the fleſh, and the things of the Spirit. 3. That all men diſcover the true temper of the minds, and the complexion and diſpoſition of their ſouls, by their reſpect which they give to either of theſe objects, by minding the things of the fleſh, and the things of the Spirit; that is, by minding them willingly and chearfully, reſolvedly and conſtantly. (Idem) See the notes on John iii. 6.

To be carnally minded is death.] To phronema tes ſarcos here ſignifieth the act of a carnal mind; comprehending thoughts, deſire, and diſcourſe. Pareus well noteth, that the Apoſtle does not uſe the word phroneſis, which ſignifies prudence it ſelf, leſt he ſhould ſeem to condemn the natural gift and faculty; but phronema, which rather noteth the act and exerciſe of that faculty: And he addeth to it ſarcos, "of the fleſh;" not condemning all prudent actions, but ſuch as proceed from the pravity of the fleſh. And, here again, ver. 7. the ſame phraſe is uſed, to note even the beſt part of corrupt man; that is, the beſt thoughts, affections, inclinations, and motions of the mind of a natural man. (Leigh) See the notes on ver. 8, and 13. ch. v. 12. and vi. 21. Luke i. 17. and John iii. 6.

To be ſpiritually minded is life and peace.] To underſtand what it is to "be ſpiritually minded," we muſt know, that the mind is made ſpiritual by virtue of an inward principle, and by being employ'd about ſpiritual objects; which we muſt not think that we have at any time entertain'd with a due concern, unleſs we find our minds enlighten'd, our reſolutions ſtrengthen'd, and our affections warm'd towards virtue and goodneſs: For ſpiritual objects, when they are conſider'd as ſuch, have a renewing, a transforming power in them; they make our minds in ſome meaſure that very thing they contemplate; the glorious object leaves ſome of its glory behind, and the Heaven we ſpiritually think of diffuſes ſome part of it ſelf into our ſouls. Let none perſwade themſelves that their minds are ſpiritual, upon ſome few tranſient thoughts about religion, which paſs through and leave no divine tract behind them: Whereas the mind of a Chriſtian ſhould be a Temple for the Holy Ghoſt to reſide in; where holy thoughts ſhould dwell, like that bright cloud of glory, and pure deſires be kept up like the fire on the altar, which may be ſometimes cover'd over with aſhes, but upon the leaſt ſtirring will glow again: Accordingly, no one ſuppoſes that ſpiritual thoughts ſhould always have an actual poſſeſſion of our minds; they muſt give way ſometimes to the innocent deſigns and common refreſhments which this temporal life impoſes upon us; but, when they do give way, they leave a kind of perfume or incenſe, and to be imployed in them is the true life of a Chriſtian. For, to "be ſpiritually minded," is, 1. Life, in the more excellent ſenſe; the true and proper life of a Chriſtian; and, 2. Eternal Life; not only entitling us to Eternal Life, but being the pledge of it, and the beginning of it in this world. (Manningham) See the notes on ver 9.

Enmity againſt God.] Echthra, enmity; not echthros, an enemy, as the vulgar Latin reads it: And hereby is expreſs'd the irreconcilable enmity between the fleſh and the Spirit: Since an enemy may be reconciled, but enmity can never be reconciled. (Leigh)

They that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God.] The word fleſh here is not to be underſtood in a proper ſenſe, but in a figurative one: For it does not ſtand for a natural body, but denotes a worldly, carnal life, and the being in a corrupt ſtate and condition. When therefore the Apoſtle ſays, that ſuch "cannot pleaſe God," and, in the former verſe, that "the carnal mind is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be," his meaning is not, that this is utterly impoſſible, but that it is impoſſible ſo long as it continues to be carnal. "An evil tree (while it continues evil) cannot bring forth good fruit;" but if the ſame tree, by pruning, grafting, or any other method of cultivation, is made a good tree, it will then bring forth good fruit: And that a wicked man may become a good man, is manifeſt from the exhortations to "die unto ſin," to "crucifie the fleſh," to "put off the old man," &c. and from the promiſes of aſſiſtance and reward, and the threats of puniſhment, to prevail with him ſo to be. (Fox) See the notes on ver. 13. ch. vii. 23. and John xii. 39.

The Spirit of God dwell in you.] That God affords the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit in ſome degree to all men, and that he enlightens the minds of all Chriſtians, being ready to aſſiſt and enable them to perform ſuch an obedience as he will graciouſly accept and reward, is the plain doctrine of the New Teſtament. Did the Devil put it into the heart of Judas to betray his Lord and maſter? And does he inſpire his ſervants and votaries, ſuggeſting evil and wickedneſs to them? Can we then doubt, whether the Holy Spirit puts good motions into our minds, inſpiring us with good thoughts and deſires? But, beſides this common grace, it is manifeſt, from this and the other parallel texts, that ſincere and true Chriſtians have the ſpecial preſence and reſidence of the Holy Spirit vouchafed to them, expreſſed here by his dwelling and abiding in them; which can import nothing leſs than a continual influence and aſſiſtance, and that he is in them a powerful principle of ſpiritual life, enabling them to reſiſt temptations, and to deſpiſe all the allurements and reproaches of the world, and patiently to bear the afflictions which their being the faithful ſervants of God expoſes them to, and even to rejoice in them. By the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit they are enabled to grow in grace, and to become ſtill more and more like unto God, reſembling him in all his imitable perfections. The ſenſe hereof may not at all times be the ſame: It may be interrupted by application to buſineſs which our preſent condition makes neceſſary and a duty; or the mind may be clouded with melancholy: Not to inſiſt on the notion, advanc'd by many ſpiritual perſons, that God, ſometimes by way of trial, ſometimes by way of puniſhment, conceals, as it were, himſelf from the ſoul. (Idem) And here we may take notice, that in the former part of this verſe the Spirit is called "The Spirit of God," in the latter "The Spirit of Chriſt;" to teach us, that he is the Spirit of Chriſt, as Chriſt is God, that Chriſt is truly God, one with the Father; otherwiſe the ſame Spirit could not be the Spirit of Chriſt and of God too. And, as he is thus uſually in Holy Scripture called ſometimes "The Spirit of God," and ſometimes "The Spirit of Chriſt," ſo at other times he is called abſolutely "The Holy Spirit," or, which is the ſame, "The Holy Ghoſt," eſpecially when the three Divine Perſons are all named together, as Matth. xxviii. 19. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. and 1 John v. 7. to ſhew, that altho' he be the Spirit both of the Father and the Son, yet ſo as to be a diſtinct perſon from both, as each of the other perſons alſo is: As in the laſt quoted, "There are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are One." They are expreſly ſaid to be three, and three in the maſculine gender, that is commonly uſed to ſignify a Perſon; whereby we are given to underſtand, that they are three diſtinct perſons, properly ſo called, according to our common way of ſpeaking: But then it follows, "Theſe three are one;" three in the maſculine gender, one in the neuter gender; not (heis) one perſon, but (hen) one thing, one Jehovah, one eſſence or ſubſtance, as the Son himſelf alſo aſſerts of himſelf and the Father, John x. 30. (Bever.) See the notes on the laſt quoted text; and Biſhop Beveridge's ſermon on this.

And if Chriſt be in you.] As this whole chapter is a noble piece of divine eloquence, full of the ſublime myſteries of Chriſtianity, adorn'd and ſtrengthen'd with the moſt emphatical and beautiful figures; ſo particularly, from this tenth to the twentieth verſe, there is a perpetual variation of perſon. The Apoſtle tells 'em of their high privileges, in having the Spirit of God inhabiting and inſpiring them, which would be their preſent ſecurity againſt the enemies of their ſalvation, and a precious pledge of a happy reſurrection of the body and immortality, ver. 10. 11. In the next verſe, he joyns himſelf in the exhortation, and equal concern he had in leading that good and Chriſtian life, which ſuch precious promiſes and privileges require, which makes advice more eaſy and acceptable, ver. 12. Having thus encouraged and prepared them, he alters the manner of his ſpeech, and immediately addreſſes to 'em, and preſſes 'em to purity of life, and Chriſtian mortification, with boldneſs and a charitable vehemence, ver. 13. How wonderfully does the eloquent and devout Apoſtle enlarge upon the ineſtimable bleſſing and honour that he and all ſound Chriſtians enjoy'd through the counſel and comfort of that divine Spirit, which inhabits the chaſt minds and bodies of Chriſtians as acceptable temples; How noble is that amplification, how exact, how charming the oppoſition! ver. 16, 17. (Blackw.)

He that raiſed up Chriſt.] See the notes on Acts ii. 24.

We are debters.] Opheiletai. See the notes on Luke xi. 4.

If ye through the Spirit do mortifie.] The Spirit is here taken by interpreters for either the Spirit of God, or the Spirit of man: Both theſe, in their ſeveral ways and degrees, have to do in the work of mortification; viz. either actively, or paſſively. This then is true mortification of the deeds of the fleſh, when a ſinner, being convinc'd of the evil of his way, reflecting on his guilt, and apprehending his danger, ſeeing the jaws of deſtruction open before him, applies himſelf humbly to the methods of God, abſtains from his ſin, takes all that God preſcribes, waits on God for the effect in ſupplication and prayer: God is pleaſed to give him the conqueſt of his luſts, ſets him free from the bonds of death, creates in him a new heart and a new Spirit, which being purged from its filth, finds a new current for its affections; and ſets them wholly on things ſpiritual and eternal. The whole man being thus transformed in the image of God in goodneſs and holineſs and truth; he whoſe eternal delight is in theſe lineaments of himſelf, delights and dwells in that man whom he has thus conſecrated to himſelf by his Spirit. (Lloyd)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. For ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit it ſelf beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt: If ſo be that we ſuffer with him, that we may be alſo glorified together. For I reckon, that the ſufferings of this preſent time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which ſhall be revealed in us. For the earneſt expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God. For the creature was made ſubject to vanity, not willingly, but by reaſon of him who hath ſubjected the ſame in hope: Becauſe the creature it ſelf alſo ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groneth, and travaileth in pain together until now: And not only they, but our ſelves alſo, which have the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, even we our ſelves grone within our ſelves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our bodies. For we are ſaved by hope: But hope that is ſeen, is not hope: For what a man ſeeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we ſee not, then do we with patience wait for it. Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities: For we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: But the Spirit it ſelf maketh interceſſion for us with gronings which cannot be uttered. And he that ſearcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, becauſe he maketh interceſſion for the ſaints according to the will of God. And we know that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe.

The Spirit of bondage.] That the law was to the Jews "a yoke of bondage" the Apoſtle doth inform us, Gal. v. 1. And that they who were under it were "in bondage under the elements of the world," Gal. iv. 3. That it "gendred to bondage," and ſubjected its children to bondage, ver. 24. &c. That "they were all their life-time ſubject to bondage, through fear of death," he informs us, Hebr. ii. 15. And they had reaſon to be ſo, ſince the law given by Moſes did not exempt them from the death which Adam's ſin had brought upon them, but rather made that death abound, and them obnoxious to it on many freſh accounts; as the Apoſtle teacheth here, ch. v. 20. and vii. 9, 10. This therefore gives a clear account of the firſt part of the verſe, viz. "Ye have not received the Spirit of bondage again to fear: (that is, to the fear of death, as they who were under the law did, that threatening death to every one that continued not in all things written in the law to do them, Deut. xxvii. 26.) But we, ſays he, ſhall live a life immortal, and enjoy a happy reſurrection, as being "the ſons of God;" and, in token of this, "have received the Spirit of adoption," enabling us to call God Father and aſſuring us that we are his children; and ſo, he, being our God, muſt have "prepared for us a city," Hebr. xi. 16. (W.) See the notes on Luke xii. 32. and John i. 12.

We cry Abba, Father.] Crazomen Abba, ho pater. This phraſe may perhaps beſt be rendred crying Abba, that is, Father; ſo as the ho be the neuter, not the maſculine gender, and the abbreviate (ho eſti methermeneuomenon, or ho eſti,) which is by interpretation, ors which is. If that be not it, both here and Gal. iv. 6. then, as Mat. xiv. 36. (when it is uſed by Chriſt, who ſpake Syriac, 'tis certain that it was but the ſame word twice repeated) ſo muſt it be, here, and no more than a form of compellation, wherein a ſon expreſſeth his confidence and dependence on his father's kindneſs and goodneſs to him; or elſe a form of petitioning, as in Chriſt it was "Abba, Father, all things are poſſible to thee, remove this cup from me." And ſo it ſignifies no more than to look upon God, as children on a father, as on one that means all good to us, if we be not wanting to our ſelves; referring to his rich evangelical promiſes, in oppoſition to the more ſervile affections of the Jews, who performed thoſe external obediences only that were commanded under penalties, but had no care of purity and uprightneſs of actions; as ſlaves, and not as Sons. That this ſhould be taken from a Roman form of hæredipetæ, ſuing to a rich man for his inheritance, is but a fancy, ſufficiently confuted by this, that the "crying Abba," here ſuppoſes the having already, "received the Spirit of adoption," and doth not prepare for it. And ſo that in Gal. iv. 6. is, "Becauſe ye are (not that ye may be) ſons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father." And for that which follows here, "And if ſons then heirs," that is not peculiar to the Romans neither: For tho', among them, the children of both ſexes were admitted to inherit, but, among the Jews, the females were not admitted ſave in defect of males, yet, ſpeaking here of ſons, he may very fitly refer to ſons among the Jews, and from the law of their inheriting the father's goods, conclude of all children of God; and not only of males, (for that difference is not at all conſider'd here,) that they ſhall do ſo too, that is, be heirs alſo. Beſides, it was a law among the Jews as well as the Romans, that adopted ſons, in reſpect of inheriting, were equal with natural: And that is the thing here chiefly meant by "If ſons then heirs;" that is, this adoption into ſon-ſhip is as ſure to bring us the inheritance, as if we were the natural ſons of God. (H.)

The Spirit it ſelf beareth witneſs.] Poſſibly Almighty God may, by a voice or whiſper of the Holy Spirit, give to ſome perſons, and in ſome extraordinary caſes, an aſſurance that they are his children: But ſuch a teſtimony of the Spirit is not, that I know of, promiſed in Scripture; and therefore is not to be expected by us. The beſt evidence of our having the Spirit, and of our being "the children of God," is bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit in our lives and converſations; without which all other pretences are fruitleſs and vain. The advancing ſuch opinions as put people in expectation of the Spirit's ſpeaking to them, may be of dangerous conſequence: For good men, not finding any ſuch voice, may be apt to fall into deſpair, and it may expoſe others to preſumption, and the deluſion of the evil Spirit. That the Apoſtle does not here encourage any ſuch expectation, is manifeſt, becauſe ſuch a teſtimony would be the immediate teſtimony of the Spirit alone: Whereas the witneſs the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, is a witneſs concurring "with our Spirit;" that is, our minds and conſciences, which have therefore a ſhare in giving of it. See Biſhop Bull, on this ſubject, more at large. (Fox)

If ſo be that we ſuffer.] Here we ſee what accompanieth our adoption; namely, preſent affliction: We are now to ſuffer, but not alone; we ſuffer with Chriſt. "If ſo be that we ſuffer with him." This if is not a word of ambiguity and doubting, but a word of certainty and aſſurance; and ſignifies as much as ſeeing that we ſuffer with him. Learn hence, 1. That a ſtate of ſuffering and affliction on earth is one condition of obtaining our glorious inheritance in Heaven: We muſt ſuffer, that God may be glorified, our graces improved, our love to the world mortified, our longings for Heaven increaſed. 2. That the ſufferings of believers are the ſufferings of Chriſt: They "ſuffer with him," and he with them; they ſuffer with him in a way of conformity; he with them in a way of tender ſympathy; they are ſenſible of any indignity offered to him, and he is ſenſible of any injury offered to them; the ſuffering Saint pledges Chriſt in his own cup: Farther, they "ſuffer with him" when they ſuffer for him, when they ſuffer in his cauſe, and for his ſake, that is, for doing their duty: Finally, they ſuffer with him when they ſuffer by an aſſiſtance derived from him, when by his enablement, and by a power communicated from him, they ſuffer hard things for his name and truth Learn, 3. That as ſufferings go before glory, ſo glory ſhall certainly follow ſufferings: "If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall be alſo glorified together." Suffering is the beaten path to glory, and that which makes it ſo much the more glorious: Suffering fits us for glory, and diſpoſes us for the reception and fruition of it; by the croſs we are fitted for the crown. 4. That ſuffering members ſhall not only be glorify'd, but be conformable to their glorify'd head in glory: As they have here "ſuffered with him," they ſhall hereafter "be glorify'd together;" not with equal glory, but with the ſame kind of glory. Three things are imply'd in our being glorify'd together with Chriſt. 1. Conformity; we ſhall be like him in glory. 2. Concomitancy; we ſhall accompany him, and be preſent with him in glory. 3. Conveyance or Derivation: We ſhall be glorify'd with him; that is, our glory ſhall be derived from him; his glory ſhall be reflected upon us, and we ſhall ſhine in his beams. O happy condition of God's adopted and afflicted children! The ſupports which ye have under ſuffering, the comfort which ye have in ſuffering, the benefits which ye have by ſuffering, and the glory which will follow after ſuffering, render it not only tolerable, but deſirable: Well may they glory in tribulation, who expect ſuch a glory after it. (B.) This being joint ſufferers with Chriſt, as a condition of obtaining that inheritance, being a privilege diſtant and unſeen, and ſo under ſome diſadvantage, when put into the ballance with afflictions ſenſible and preſent, St. Paul does here prove the reaſonableneſs of being well content with ſubmitting to this condition, by ſeveral arguments. 1. From his own authority and certain knowledge. For that word (Logizomai) "I reckon," is not, as we ſometimes uſe it in our language, a form of ſpeech importing ſome remains of doubting, or the giving an opinion cautiouſly, with a reſerve of defence for others of a different judgment; but it carries the ſignification of a perſuaſion, as ſtrong and peremptory as can poſſibly be entertain'd: It implies the having ſtated an account, and conſider'd all matters nicely: The ſufferings, the very worſt "ſufferings of this preſent time," on the one part, and "the glory," the not yet revealed glory, on the other part: And after all reaſonable allowances and deductions made, upon a fair and exact computation of the whole, St. Paul pronounces the latter ſo vaſtly ſuperior to the former, that it is an indignity done to it, ſo much as to name them together, or to ſuppoſe a proportion between them capable of forming a compariſon upon. 2. By the common ſenſe, and wants, of mankind in general. This ſeems to be the meaning of the four following verſes. For "the manifeſtation of the ſons of God" denotes that reſurrection of the body, and immortality of the whole man, which is a privilege entirely owing to Chriſt, and an operation effected by the power of that almighty Spirit which raiſed him from the dead: And tho' it cannot be affirmed, that all mankind have conſtantly, and every where, entertain'd a firm and poſitive perſuaſion of ſuch an immortality; yet have ſome dark and indiſtinct preſages of, and wiſhes for it, been ſo general, as juſtly to be eſteem'd a dictate of nature: And theſe ſeem to be the earneſt longings, the melancholy ſenſe of their "bondage to corruption," the hopes of liberty, the "groaning and travelling in pain," meant by St. Paul in the Scripture before us. But all theſe receive a vaſt addition of ſtrength from another argument, added at ver. 23. viz. 3. The concurrence of Chriſtians in the ſame opinions and vehement expectations. (Stanh.) See more of this in the following notes, and thoſe on Acts xiv. 22.

The ſufferings of this preſent time.] Pathemata tou nyn cairou; Literally, The ſufferings of this now ſeaſon. Whereby the Apoſtle intimates, 1. That our tribulations and afflictions laſt but for a now; that is, a moment in compariſon: And, 2. That now, that is, this preſent life is the proper ſeaſon and opportune time, to lay out for a crown of celeſtial glory. (Aſſ.)

Not worthy to be compared.] Ouc axia. From this word axios cometh axioma, an axiom; becauſe it is axiopiſton, worthy of credit. Beza refuſeth the common interpretation of worthy, and reads it minime paria, not equal, or proportionable to the glory &c. Becauſe the word ſignifies the equality and like weight of ſuch things as are weigh'd together in a ballance. But I rather think (ſaith Dr Willet) with Dr. Fulk and Pareus, that this is a pregnant proof againſt the Popiſh opinion of merits. It taketh away all merit of condignity: For if the ſufferings of the Saints, neither for quantity nor quality, are proportionable to the glory of the life to come, it followeth neceſſarily that they are not worthy. (Leigh)

The glory which ſhall be revealed.] The Apoſtle here chuſes to expreſs the felicity of the Saints in the other world by (doxa) glory, 1. Becauſe he writes to the Romans, who were, at that time, martial, heroic, people, and naturally ambitious of glory: And, 2. Becauſe the deſire of glory is generally a ſtronger paſſion than the deſire of any other thing in the world. (Horn.) See Dr. Horneck's ſermon on this text, and the notes here on Matth. v. 12.

The earneſt expectation of the creature] Some by the word creature here, and "the whole creation," ver. 22. underſtand the Gentile world; and then the ſenſe is, that the Heathens ſhall, by the preaching of the Goſpel, be reſcued from their idolatry, unto which they have been long enſlaved, and be brought into the glorious condition of Chriſt's redeemed ones, to whom the glorious inheritance of Heaven doth belong: (H. Stanh. and Maſſey) But others, by the ſame phraſe, do underſtand this viſible world, ſenſitive and rational, animate and inanimate; and then the ſenſe is, that the whole frame and courſe of the creation is ſo order'd and diſpoſed of by God, as that it carries in it a vehement deſire and earneſt longings for the full manifeſtation of God's glory in and towards his children. (Trem. Beza, Heinſ. Aſſ G. Biſhop Hall, Biſhop Fell, W. and Q.) In either of theſe ſenſes the expreſſion is proper and very ſignificant; the metaphor clear and ſprightly: But, if they be applied to the latter, (which in my opinion avoids ſeveral difficulties attending the other interpretation,) 'tis the nobleſt proſopopeia in the world. So great is the ſalvation purchas'd by Chriſt, ſo infinite the glory of the reſurrection, and the enjoyments and triumphs of the future ſtate, that even the inanimate world is deſcrib'd as an order of rational beings, lifting up their heads with eager expectations of that glorious day, and hoping to ſhare in the joys which will attend the renovation of all things, and to be admitted into the full and moſt "glorious liberty of the ſons of God." The actions and paſſions of the rational creation are, by the beſt authors, applied to the inanimate, with great vigour and vehemence. (Blackw.) Whoever is curious, to inquire farther into the particulars of this difficult paſſage, which reaches to the end of ver. 23. may conſult Hammond, Lightfoot and Whitby at large, ſince we have not room to enlarge upon them farther here. But the word apocaradokia, which is here well rendred "earneſt expectation," ſignifies to lift up our head, and ſtretch as far as poſſible, to hear ſomething agreeable and of great importance; as to gain the firſt appearance and glimpſe of a friend who has long been abſent; to gain the ken of a veſſel at ſea, which has ſome precious freight that we have a concern in, or carries ſome paſſenger very dear to us. 'Tis hard, if not impoſſible, to reach the force of it in any language. Xenophon and Herodotus uſe it for, with eagerneſs and impatience waiting the event of the battle. (Idem, G. Leigh, H. and W.)

For the creature was made ſubject.] Mr. Lock puts the twentieth verſe in a parentheſis, and makes ep' elpidi, in the beginning of ver. 21. depend upon apecdechetai in ver. 19. which I think, is very natural, and clears the difficulty, which few of the commentators before could clear. (Blackw.) But, by the way, this was not Mr. Lock's diſcovery: For Dr. Hammond makes the ſame obſervation as to the parentheſis; tho' he reads ep' elpidi at the end of ver. 20. as our tranſlators and others do.

In hope.] Ep' elpidi. Theſe words, in the edition of the original, by Rog. Daniel, Lond. 1653. are connected to ver. 20. and pointed with a period following: But, in that of Elzevir, Amſt. 1662. they begin ver. 21. follow'd only with a comma; which different placing and pointing them ſeems to be the reaſon of the various reading, and may give ſome light into the note foregoing.

Groaneth, and travelleth.] Syſtenazei cai ſynodinei. Theſe are as good words in this caſe, as this noble language can afford; and carry very pertinent alluſions, and glowing metaphors in them. (Blackw.) Syſtenazo is to groan, as one preſs'd with a burden, deſirous to be eaſed (Leigh.) And ſynodino, to groan, as a woman in the pains of child-birth, doth, hoping for a happy delivery. (G.) As the pain is exquiſite, ſo the event is joyful. (Leigh.)

We are ſaved by hope.] That is, We are at preſent ſupported by hope; our preſent expectation of our future glorious condition beareth up our ſpirits under his ſufferings, and carrieth us joyfully thro' all difficulties: Or, "We are ſaved by hope;" that is, All the ſalvation which we have at preſent is in hope, not in hand; in expectation, not in poſſeſſion: Heaven in hope is more worth than the whole world in hand; and ſeeing there is a certainty of hope there is a certainty of ſalvation. Obſerve next, The nature of hope declared. 'Tis an expectation of good things promiſed, but not enjoyed: Viſion and fruition put an end to hope; none hopes for that he already enjoys: Hope is converſant about things unſeen as well as faith: "Faith is the evidence of things not ſeen;" and hope is the expectation of thoſe things: The object of hope is a future good, a poſſible good, a promiſed good, a good promiſed by God, and believed by us. Obſerve laſtly, The neceſſary adjunct, and the inſeparable companion of hope; and that is patience, and waiting for the Good hoped for: "If we hope, &c. then do we with patience wait," &c. Learn hence, That they only hope for eternal life aright, who continue in the purſuit of it with patience and perſeverance: There muſt be found with us a waiting patience, a working patience, a bearing and forbearing patience, with a perſevering continuance in well doing, if we hope for glory, and immortality, and eternal life. (B.) We are further to underſtand, that the Holy Ghoſt in Scripture is pleas'd, by the figure Synechdoche, for ſhortneſs of ſpeech, often to name one of the parts of our duty, and in that one to comprehend the whole worſhip of God: As in St. John xvii. 3. All the worſhip of God is attributed to knowledge: To fear, Eccleſ. xii. 13. And here, to hope; and ſo of the reſt: And this without injury to the reſt of the duties; for they all have good dependance one of another. (Andr.)

The Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities.] To pneuma, "The Spirit," here cannot ſignify the Spirit of a man: For that cannot be ſaid to help us, being a conſtituent part of us; or to "intercede for us," when we our ſelves "know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought:" For thus (ſays Theophylact) Moſes pray'd to ſee the land of Canaan; and Jeremy for the Jews, and St. Paul to be deliver'd from "the thorn in the fleſh:" But that Spirit of God, who is ſaid to intercede for us; not as an advocate, or mediator between God and us, (that being the office of our great High-prieſt,) but as an exciter or director of us in our addreſſes to God; to render them, for the matter according to the will of God, and for the manner fervent and effectual, (proſeuche energoumene,) in wrought prayer, and to make our very ſighs and groanings prevalent: For he is here ſaid to "make interceſſion for us with groanings," excited by him, after that redemption to which he ſealeth us, and of which, he being the earneſt and pledge, we are hence mov'd with greater faith and fervency to long for the enjoyment of it. And this is the reaſon, why I think not fit to interpret this paſſage, with ſome of the Fathers, of a public chariſma, or gift of prayer, ſince that muſt ſpend it ſelf in words for the edification of the church, and not in ſilent groanings. (W.) It cannot be inferr'd from this place, that the Holy Spirit aſſiſts Chriſtians in offering Extempore prayers. (Fox) The word ſynantilambanetai doth properly imply ſuch a help, as when another man of ſtrength and ability ſteppeth in to ſuſtain the burthen that lyeth upon our ſhoulders; ſetting his ſhoulders under it, to lift up, and bear a part of it with us. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke x. 40.

All things work together for good] That is, All diſpenſations of providence whatſoever, whether they be ordinary afflictions, or extraordinary trials, which do befal the children of God in this life, ſhall certainly be directed by his wiſdom, and over-ruled by his power and goodneſs, for the temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal good of his children and people. Obſerve here, 1. What thoſe things are, which are eſpecially intended in that comprehenſive term, "All things." By all things here we are to underſtand, omnia triſtia, non omnia turpia, all the Saints afflictions, not their ſins: For then they might rejoice in their ſins and wickedneſs, (which is a damnable impiety) as well as in their ſufferings for Chriſt, ſeeing they may rejoice in that which by God's deſignation tendeth to their good: But by "All things" the Apoſtle means all providential occurrences and diſpenſations, all ſtations and conditions whatſoever; be it proſperity or adverſity, health or ſickneſs, liberty or captivity, life or death, God's glory and his children's good ſhall be certainly further'd and advanced by it. 2. In what ſenſe "All things" may be ſaid to "work for good" to good men; namely, as they ſhall promote and further the temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal welfare of the children of God. If it be good for them to be rich, to be in honour, to be at liberty, they ſhall be ſo: If it be better for their ſouls, and more conducive to their eternal welfare, to be low in the world, to be frequently under the rod, to be harraſs'd with afflictions, and aſſaulted with temptations, they ſhall have them: Nothing that is needful ſhall be kept from them, only God muſt be judge what is needful, and when 'tis needful: He that thinks he can cut better for himſelf, than God can carve for him, makes himſelf wiſer than God, and has not only loſt his faith, but his wits too. 3. That "All things" are ſaid to "work together for good;" not ſingly, ſeparately, and apart, but as co-adjutors and adjuvant cauſes, and mutual helps. Afflictions and temptations ſeem to work againſt us; but being put into the rank and order of cauſes, they work together, with other bleſſed inſtruments, as the word and prayer, to an happy iſſue: More particularly, they work together with God, they work together with us, and they work together, one with another, for our good, ſooner or later. 4. How can "All things" be ſaid to "work for good;" particularly evil things? Sufferings from God, and ſufferings for man for God's ſake? What! Muſt we call evil, good? Pain, pleaſure? Torment, eaſe, and loſs, gain? Muſt we diſbelieve our ſenſes, that we may believe the Scriptures? Anſ. Tho' affliction, which is evil in its own nature, cannot bring forth good, yet ſurely God can bring forth good out of evil, light out of darkneſs, and make his people's troubles the way to their triumph, and every croſs providence a ſtep to the accompliſhment of his promiſe: God ſuffers evil things to befal us to keep out worſe things, and cauſes evil things to prepare us for better things; the croſs makes way for the crown: For affliction there is glory; for light affliction, a weight of glory; and for light affliction which is but for a moment, a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. 5. The character of the perſons to whom this privilege doth belong: They are deſcribed by their Chriſtian affection; they "love God," and by their effectual vocation, they are "called according to his purpoſe." They love God, and evidence their love to him, by an high eſtimation of him, by their delight in him, by their deſires after him, by their longings for the full fruition, and final enjoyment of him: And as they love God, ſo are they called of God; externally by the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, internally by the operation of his Holy Spirit: They are called out of darkneſs into light, out of bondage into liberty, and all this efficaciouſly and powerfully, yet ſweetly and freely; in a way congruous to the will's liberty. 6. The certainty and evidence of this propoſition and aſſertion, That "all things work together for good." It is not built upon conjecture, or bare probability, but upon certain knowledge: "We know;" partly by divine Revelation, God has told us ſo; partly by experience, we find it ſo. And when the Apoſtle ſpeaks it out, "We know," it is a word of confidence and aſſurance, it is a word of comfort and encouragement; all the Saints of God to the end of the world, as well as the Apoſtle himſelf, may depend upon it, live in the faith and aſſurance of it, and draw all their conſolation from it, which may render their lives (in ſome ſort) an heaven upon earth. And now if this be an indubitable and undeniable truth, That whatever ſufferings and afflictions a Saint meets with ſhall work together for good, then we may infer, That a ſuffering condition is not ſo bad a condition as the world ſuppoſes it: The lion of affliction is not ſo fierce as he is painted: Times of difficulty and trial bring ſerious thoughts of God into our minds, who are too prone to forget both him and our ſelves in affluence and quiet. Bleſſed be God, the time of affliction is no unprofitable time, nor uncomfortable time neither: 'Tis a thinking time, an awakening time, a teaching time, a repenting time, a weaning time; therefore bleſſed is the man whom God correcteth and teacheth. (B.)

Called according to his purpoſe.] Some have fancied, That this and the following verſes prove, that God, from all eternity, decreed ſome particular perſons to happineſs, in ſuch a ſenſe, as neceſſarily infers, that the much greater part of mankind are doom'd to miſery. But this opinion is ſo contrary to the natural notions which God has impreſs'd of himſelf upon our minds, and to many plain texts of Scripture, that it cannot be admitted. The purpoſe of God, with reſpect to the ſalvation of man, ſeems to be his determining to ſave, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, all who, upon the preaching of the Goſpel, ſhould receive and embrace it, and comply with the terms on which ſalvation is offer'd, living a ſober, righteous and godly life. Theſe "he foreknew," or fore-approv'd: Theſe, and theſe only, "he predeſtinated to be conform'd to the image of his Son:" Theſe "he called;" and they coming at his call, and living up to the terms of ſalvation, he will juſtify, or pardon them; and theſe in due time, he will glorify and make happy with himſelf. (Fox) See the notes on ver. 29. and John x. 15. And obſerve alſo, that the pronoun his is not in the original; the words being only cata protheſin, "according to purpoſe, as Dr. Hammond and others have well noted.

Ver. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his ſon, that he might be the firſt-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predeſtinate, them he alſo called: And whom he called, them he alſo juſtified: And whom he juſtified, them he alſo glorified. What ſhall we then ſay to theſe things? If God be for us, who can be againſt us? He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things? Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that juſtifieth: Who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died, yea, rather that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſſion for us. Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? Shall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword? (As it is written, For thy ſake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as ſheep for the ſlaughter) Nay in all theſe things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us. For I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor heighth, nor depth, nor any other creature, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

For whom he did foreknow.] Here all the ſteps and methods in which the goodneſs and wiſdom of God trains mankind up to the full enjoyment of the ſalvation purchaſed by Jeſus Chriſt, are preſented in a natural and moſt charming gradation, which raiſes up all good Chriſtians to the higheſt preferments and inward glories of Heaven, ver. 29, 30. Then, from the conſideration of theſe immenſe favours conferr'd on good Chriſtians, the Apoſtle draws a concluſion in the form of a vigorous interrogation, "What ſhall we then ſay to theſe things?" ver. 31. We need no further aſſurance, no ſtronger arguments for patience under our ſufferings for the Goſpel, and waiting with joyful hope of our happineſs in the completion of all the promiſes, and conſummation of all the bleſſings deſign'd for us; "If God be for us, who can be againſt us?" We are ſecur'd of the friendſhip and protection of God, which will effectually guard us againſt fear and danger, and render all the malice and efforts of enemies on earth and in hell impotent and ineffectual. And does not this divine author, in the next verſe, further aſſure all Chriſtians of their happy intereſt in the Father of Heaven, and the certainty of their ſupply of all things really good for them, from his care and bounty, by the moſt convincing and endearing argument that ever was uſed, or can be applied and addreſs'd to creatures capable of being parſwaded and obliged? ver. 32. A way of reaſoning, that at once convinces the judgment, and captivates the heart; that raiſes all the tender and devout paſſions that can work in an humane ſoul, and is a reſiſtleſs motive to the firmeſt hope, moſt flowing gratitude; to all the duties and graces of Chriſtianity. There is a great emphaſis in thoſe words, "ſpared not his own ſon;" which cannot, with any propriety, be applied to any mere man, or moſt glorious creature whatſoever. "His own Son" is by way of eminence and diſtinction from thoſe who were ſons of God by adoption and the grace of his own natural Son: And the Father not ſparing him, ſuppoſes an antecedent relation of the higheſt kindneſs and moſt ſacred endearment. Then the ſacred writer, with a great rapidity and fervor of ſpirit, proceeds to a great variety of triumphant interrogations; which imply full aſſurance, that nothing can ſeparate Chriſtians from the love of Chriſt their Saviour, ver. 35. What can be added to this ſelect enumeration of temporal evils, or things terrible in this world? So far are all things dreadful to humane nature from being able to alienate us from our Saviour, that in all of them "we more than conquer," ver. 37. A vigorous word, of noble aſſurance, compriſing the ſenſe of a full period. 'Tis well explain'd by Dr. Whitby. For we not only bear, but "glory in tribulations," ch. v. 3. We are "in deaths often", 2 Cor. xi. but ſtill "delivered from death," 1 Cor. i. 10. And, as the ſufferings of Chriſt abound towards us, ſo alſo doth our conſolation under them abound through Chriſt. To conclude this moſt divine and rapturous portion of Scripture, St. Paul expreſſes our unalienable and eternal intereſt in the merits and goodneſs of our bleſſed Saviour in the affirmative way, by mentioning every thing that might be a danger or temptation: And when he has enumerated all things that poſſibly might tend to withdraw us from our duty, and ruin us in the favour of our immortal friend; by a very eloquent and fervent redundance of ſpeech, he adds, "nor any other creature," ver. 39. that is, any other thing, or being, in univerſal nature. What ſtedfaſtneſs of faith, what joyfulneſs of hope, what conſciouſneſs of integrity, what rapturous flights of divine love, are here expreſs'd, in the moſt exalted ſuitable eloquence? "For I am perſwaded, that neither fear of death, nor hope of life, nor angels of Satan, nor princes, nor potentates, nor ſufferings preſent, nor ſufferings to come, nor height of preferment, nor depth of diſgrace, nor any other creature or thing, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord." (Blackw.) See the notes on ver. 28, and 35. And further, That the divine predeſtination and foreknowledge is conſiſtent with the freedom of man's will, See Dr. King (late archbiſhop of Dublin's) Sermon upon this ſubject.

Conformed to the image of his ſon.] Viz. 1. In Spirit; ver. 9. 2. In ſuffering, ver. 17. and, 3. In glory, ver. 17, 18. (Fell) That is, To be made like unto our Lord Jeſus in affection and diſpoſition; in life and converſation; in the temper of our minds, and in the actions of our lives: Like unto him in his ſufferings; in the cauſe of his ſufferings, righteouſneſs-ſake, and well-doing; in the kind of his ſufferings, reproach, hatred, outward violence, and death it ſelf; and in the manner of his ſufferings, with meekneſs and patience: And like unto him in his glory. (B.)

The firſt-born among many brethren.] There are two interpretations of the word prototocos, in this and the like texts; 1. That our Lord was before all things; that he had a being before any created being: He was before all creatures, both in duration and dignity; for ſo he muſt of neceſſity be, if all things were created by him. 2. That he is heir and Lord of the whole creation. The Greek word, (Arche) Col. i. 18. and Rev. iii. 14. tranſlated beginning, is frequently uſed to ſignify the principle and efficient cauſe: And then the meaning of the former place is, that our Lord is the principle and efficient cauſe of the reſurrection of the dead; and of the latter, that he is the principle and efficient cauſe of the creation. (Tillotſ. and Fox) The firſt-born likewiſe, in Scripture-language, ſignifies that which is moſt remarkable, either for greatneſs or excellency. If therefore our tranſlators, inſtead of calling our Saviour the firſt-born of Mary, had only call'd him her Son, St. Jerom had not been put to it to anſwer Helvidius, who from that phraſe took occaſion to maintain that the Virgin had other children beſides our Saviour, and Helvidius had had no followers: If, inſtead of calling him "the firſt-born of many brethren" here; the "firſt-born of every creature," Col. i. 15. and "the firſt-begotten of God," Heb. i. 6. they had tranſlated it, that he is the moſt auguſt, or moſt glorious of many brethren; the moſt excellent, or the moſt beloved, and the moſt favour'd of all the creatures; the moſt dearly beloved Son of God, Arius and his followers had never imagined that Chriſt was the firſt of all the creatures; and the church had been free from all the diſorders into which it fell on this account: And if, when he is call'd in the original "the firſt-begotten of the dead," Rev. i. 5 they had rendred it, that he is the ſovereign, or the moſt illuſtricus, of the dead, there would be no need of ſuch long commentaries upon this expreſſion, as the moſt learned Divines do acknowledge. (Eſſay)

If God be for us.] See the notes on ch. v. 10.

It is God that juſtifieth.] To what has been already noted of the beautiful turns of eloquence in theſe verſes, let us add, what St. Auguſtin and Eraſmus have ſaid, That neither Tully nor Demoſthenes could ſpeak any thing like it; there being nothing mean or low in the whole: For if we reſpect the perſons, here we have God, Chriſt at the right hand of the Father, principalities and powers: If we reſpect the things, here we have life, height, depth, things preſent, and things to come: And if we reſpect the rhetorical ornaments, what interrogations, what gradations, what antitheſes, what contraries, and what repetitions? So that this might juſtly make up the third part of St. Auſtin's wiſh, that he had ſeen Chriſt in the fleſh, Rome flouriſhing, and St. Paul preaching. (Sheridan) We may obſerve farther, That the words, It is, are not in the original, tho' twice inſerted here in the tranſlation: And therefore, as this whole paſſage is manifeſtly taken from Iſa. i. 8, 9. where the Prophet ſpeaks interrogatively, it ſeems to require the ſame reading and punctation here, whereby the ſenſe will be more clear, and the force of the words much ſtronger, one queſtion anſwering another, thus; "Who ſhall (plead againſt, or) lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? God that juſtifieth? (Or, Shall the God who juſtifieth them do it?) Who is he that condemneth? Chriſt that died? (Or, Can it be that Chriſt who died for them?" &c. Which is the interpretation of Mr. Lock, approv'd by Dr. Whitby, and ſeconded by Mr. Maſſey.

Maketh interceſſion for us.] Preſenting there his obedience, his ſufferings, his prayers, and our prayers ſanctified through him. (Fell) See the notes on ver. 26.

Who ſhall ſeparate us?] That is, None ſhall be able to do it. To anſwer the argument hence uſed, that men cannot fall from grace, becauſe if once they truly lov'd God, they cannot ceaſe to do ſo, Let it be noted, 1. That this inquiry is not, "Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love" with which we love God and Chriſt; but "Who ſhall ſeparate us," (who truly love God, and teſtify that love by our obedience to his commands, John xv. 10. and our patient ſufferings for his ſake, here, ver. 36, 37.) from his affections towards us? The Apoſtle therefore only intimates, that ſuch perſons, continuing in the love of God, ſhall be preſerv'd by him from, or enabled to overcome, the temptations here mention'd, and ſo ſupported by his grace and the Holy Spirit, as to be able to triumph over them: But he doth not ſay, that the love of no Chriſtian ſhall wax cold, contrary to Matth. xxiv. 12. or that none of them ſhall loſe his firſt love, Rev. ii. 4. Were there no fear of this, why doth Chriſt exhort his diſciples to "continue in his love," John xv. 9. and his Apoſtles exhort others to "keep themſelves in the love of God," Jude 21. to "continue in the grace of God," Acts xiii. 43. and to "look diligently to it, leſt they fall from the grace and favour of God," Heb. xii. 15.? And, 2. That the Apoſtle doth not ſay, that nothing ſhall ſeparate true believers from the love of God, or Chriſt; but only, (pepeiſmai) "I am perſwaded," ſwaded," nothing will do it; nor have I any cauſe to fear, that any of theſe temporal ſufferings, or enjoyments, ſhould ſhake their ſtedfaſtneſs in expectation of thoſe eternal and ineſtimable bleſſings which God hath promiſed, and Chriſt hath purchaſed for his church: Theſe light afflictions being "not worthy to be compared with the glory that ſhall be revealed," ver. 18. and all co-operating "for the good of them that love God," ver. 28. That, as for the weakneſs of the fleſh, which rendred theſe temptations ſo dreadful, and gave ſtrength unto them, they lived in hopes of a glorious "redemption of the body" from them, ver. 23. and whilſt they groan under them, they have the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God to ſtrengthen them and help them to bear their infirmities; a powerful and loving Father to be with them, a Saviour exalted to the right hand of God to intercede for them, ver. 33, 34. On all which accounts he might well ſay, "I am perſwaded," that none of theſe things ſhall "ſeparate you from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus." The Apoſtle doth not, by theſe words, intend to teach believers, that they could not be ſhaken by theſe things; for this would have contradicted the drift of his Epiſtles, in which he doth ſo often expreſs his fears, leſt they ſhould be ſhaken with them, and ſo far tempted by them as to be "moved away from the hope of the Goſpel," Col. i. 23. and render all his labour vain, 1 Theſſ. iii. 5. and offers ſo many arguments and motives, to prevent the effect of thoſe temptations; but only doth intend to ſay, that, upon theſe conſiderations, they had ſo great inducements to perſevere and "continue in the love of God," as made him ſtrongly perſwaded that they would do ſo. (W.)

Killed all the day long] By theſe words, the Apoſtle denotes the continuance of the perſecution, the unweariedneſs of the enemy, and the patience of the Saints. (B.)

CHAP. IX.

His great ſorrow for the Jews. All the ſeed of Abraham not the children of the promiſe. The extent of God's mercy. The rejecting of the Jews and the calling of the Gentiles were foretold. The reaſon why ſo few Jews embraced the Goſpel.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. I SAY the truth in Chriſt, I lye not, my conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt, that I have great heavineſs and continual ſorrow in my heart. For I could wiſh that my ſelf were accurſed from Chriſt, for my brethren my kinſmen according to the fleſh: Who are Iſraelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God, and the promiſes; whoſe are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the fleſh Chriſt came, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever. Amen.

I ſay the truth in Chriſt.] Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle's ſolemn aſſeveration or oath: He calls Chriſt, and the Holy Ghoſt, to witneſs for the truth of what he ſays; which is the very formality of an oath. Learn thence, That it is not barely lawful, but in ſome caſes expedient and neceſſary, to aſſert and confirm by oath the truth and certainty of what we ſpeak: In caſes of great moment, which cannot otherwiſe be ſufficiently confirmed, a Chriſtian may eſtabliſh his ſaying by an oath. 2. The perſons whom the Apoſtle ſwears by; "Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt;" he calls them to be witneſſes of the ſincerity of his conſcience in what he doth aſſert; "I ſay the truth in Chriſt," &c. But, why doth the Apoſtle ſwear by the name of Chriſt, and not rather by the name of God, ſeeing the Jews did not believe his divinity, and ſo were not like to give any whit the more credit to what was atteſted by him? I Anſwer, Probably to aſſert the God-head of Chriſt, which the Jews generally denied, and therefore wanted that honour which was and is due unto it. None but God was to be ſworn by: The Apoſtle ſwearing by Chriſt, proves him to be truly and really God; as alſo the Holy Ghoſt: For an oath, being an act of religious worſhip, and the Apoſtle ſwearing by Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt, doth thereby acknowledge their divinity, according to the words of Moſes, in Deut. vi. 13. "Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſwear by his name." 3. As the Apoſtle appeals to Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt, ſo alſo to his own conſcience, as the avoucher and witneſs of this truth of what he ſays; "My conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs." Learn thence, That God has placed a conſcience in every man; whoſe office it is to bear witneſs of all his words and actions; yea, of all his thoughts and inward affections. Conſcience is God's regiſter, to record whatever we think, ſpeak, or act; and happy he, whoſe conſcience bears witneſs for him, and doth not teſtify againſt him. (B.)

I could wiſh, that my ſelf were accurſed.] That is, So great is my concern for the ſalvation of my brethren the Jews, that I could undergo the greateſt miſery and evil that can befal my ſelf, to prevent their deſtruction. This wiſh of St. Paul is plainly an hyperbolical expreſſion of his great affection to his countrymen the Jews, and his zeal for their ſalvation; which was ſo intenſe and vehement, that were it a thing reaſonable and lawful, were it proper, and could avail to the procuring their ſalvation, he could have wiſh'd the greateſt evil to himſelf; for their ſakes not only to be excommunicated from communion with the church of Chriſt, but to be ſeparated from Chriſt himſelf. If it be ſaid, that ſuch a wiſh is ſinful and unnatural, to deſire the ſalvation of others with our own damnation; I Anſwer, True: And therefore the Apoſtle's words are not an abſolute and poſitive wiſh: He doth not ſay, I wiſh; but "I could wiſh:" Juſt as we are wont to ſay, when we would expreſs a thing to the height, which is not fit nor intended to be done by us; I could wiſh ſo or ſo; I could even be content to do this or that: Which kind of expreſſions no man takes for a ſtrict and preciſe declaration of our minds, but for a figurative expreſſion of a very great and vehement paſſion. Thus here the Apoſtle ſays not I wiſh, but, Were it proper to make ſuch a wiſh, I could even wiſh ſo great a bleſſing to my brethren, tho' with loſs of my own happineſs. Hence learn, 1. That it is neither lawful nor reaſonable for any man to renounce his own eternal ſalvation, and to be willing to be damned, upon any account whatever; be it for the good of his brethren, or for the glory of God himſelf. The very thought of ſuch a thing is enough to make human nature tremble at its very foundation; for the deſire of our own happineſs is the deepeſt principle that God has planted in our natures: And to pretend a reaſon, from the glory of God, is impoſſible; becauſe our damnation cannot make for the glory of God, unleſs, by our own impenitency and wilful obſtinacy, we have deſerved damnation. Learn, 2. That ſuch may be the ardency of a Saint's affection towards others, and ſo fervent his deſires for their converſion and ſalvation, that he may be willing to ſacrifice himſelf, and all that is dear unto him in this world, for the accompliſhing of that end: "I could wiſh I were accurſed from Chriſt for my brethren," &c. (Idem) Some interpreters nevertheleſs underſtand this of eternal damnation: But they might have obſerv'd, that the word Anathema, which is here render'd accurſed, doth never ſignify either excommunication, or eternal damnation, in the ſtile of the Septuagint, which the authors of the New Teſtament have imitated; but only that which is to be exterminated, or rooted out; as may be ſeen, Numb. xxi. 2, 3. and in a great many other places of Scripture. They ſhould therefore, with St. Jerom, have kept to that natural ſignification of the word, and have rendred it thus, "I could wiſh", that I was appointed to be exterminated, or put to death, for my friends. For this is likewiſe very agreeable, both to the example and doctrine of our bleſſed Saviour, who laid down his life for his ſheep, and makes the height of love to conſiſt, as indeed it plainly does, in one's laying down his life for his friends. (Eſſay) And ſo we find it well interpreted alſo by Mr. Fox.

Who are Iſraelites.] Our Apoſtle, to vindicate himſelf for bearing ſuch a paſſionate affection to the Jews, and for being ſo highly concerned for their eternal welfare, doth in theſe two verſes recount and ſum up the high privileges and prerogatives belonging to the Jews above any other nation under Heaven; viz. They were Iſraelites; that is, the ſeed and poſterity of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob: "To whom pertaineth the adoption;" that is, national adoption, not perſonal; God adopting the nation of the Jews to be an holy people to himſelf, and calling them his ſons and his firſt-born: "And the glory;" that is, the glorious preſence of God among them; the temple, the ark, but particularly the Shechinah, or Divine Preſence, from between the Cherubims: "And the covenants;" that is, the covenant made with Abraham and Moſes, the Old and New Covenant, Jer. xxxi. 32. "And the giving of the Law;" it was the prerogative of this people, that all their laws, ceremonial, judicial and moral, were compoſed and delivered to them by God himſelf: "And the ſervice of God;" that is, they only had the true worſhip of God amongſt them, and no other nation could have the like, but by being a debtor unto them for it: "And the promiſe;" that is, in general all the bleſſings promiſed to them in the land of Canaan, and in particular the promiſe of the Meſſiah, or God's gracious purpoſe and intention to ſend his Son into the world to accompliſh its redemption: "Whoſe are the Fathers;" that is, the beloved Fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, were their anceſtors, and they their offſpring: "Of whom as concerning the fleſh Chriſt came;" that is, of which Iſraelites Chriſt came; the promiſed Meſſias according to the fleſh or human nature was the offſpring, even he, who according to his divine nature, was "over all, God bleſſed for evermore." Note here, 1. How the Apoſtle reſerves the greateſt privilege for the laſt: Chriſt's being born one of their nation, and according to the fleſh deſcended from the Jewiſh ſtock, this was the chief privilege. 2. That this reflective clauſe, "according to the fleſh," plainly ſuppoſeth another nature in Chriſt, according to which he came not from the Iſraelites, which can be no other but the Divine Nature or Godhead, which in the following words is attributed to him: "Who is over all, God bleſſed for evermore." Which glorious title given to Chriſt, as it highly exalts the prerogative of the Jews, as being a people of whom ſo bleſſed and great a perſon deſcended; ſo on the other hand it aggravates their ſin and condemnation, in rejecting a perſon of ſuch infinite worth and dignity, notwithſtanding he deſcended from them. (B.) For a more particular illuſtration of "the glory," as meant of the Schechinah, ſee Dr. Hammond's notes here: And for the whole context, ſee Dr. Hickes's Sermon, entituled, Peculium Dei.

Who is over all, God bleſſed for ever.] This place is ſo clear a proof of the Divinity of Chriſt, that Proclus (de fide, p. 53.) ſaith, it convinces all the hereſies concerning Chriſt, and ſhuts and walls up all paſſages for calumny for them that love contumely, or railing at Chriſt. So Theophylact ſaith, From hence is Arius confuted and put to ſhame, St. Paul proclaiming Chriſt to be "God over all." This will more appear, if it be remembred, that it was a cuſtom among the Jews ſolemnly obſerved, that when ever the Prieſt in the Sanctuary delivered the name of God, the people us'd ſome words of bleſſing or praiſing him; ſuch as theſe, Bleſſed be the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever. So, in Gemara Babylonica, Rabbi ſaid, When I call on the name of Jehovah, do ye magnify our Lord: So ſaid Moſes to Iſrael, Deut. xxxii. 3. When I mention the name of the bleſſed God, do ye magnify. So ſaith Solomon Jarchi, From that command of Moſes it is, that, after the benediction in the Sanctuary, the people anſwer, Bleſſed be the glorious name of his kingdom. To theſe forms were afterwards added the words, for ever and ever, and to age and age, that is, to ages here, becauſe (ſay the Rabbins) of the hereſy of the Sadducees, who ſaid there was but one age: So Cod. Berackoth, c. 9. In all the concluſions of the benedictions, which were in the Sanctuary, they ſaid, From age; but after the Sadducees had perverted that, and ſaid, there was but one age, they decreed that they ſhould ſay, From age to age. Many evidences of this cuſtom there are in the Old Teſtament; eſpecially in the Pſalms: And the abbreviature of all theſe forms, was (the words uſed in ch. i. 25.) "Who is bleſſed for ever, Amen;" and here, ſomewhat more largely, "Who is over all, God, bleſſed for ever, Amen." Parallel to this are the Doxology at the end of the Lord's Prayer, Mat. vi. 13. and in this Epiſtle, ch. xi. 36. and xvi. 27. Gal. i. 5. and many of the like ſort: In all which places, this giving of glory, being an acknowledgment of the eternal God, and in ſeveral of them applied peculiarly to Chriſt (who is diſtinctly called God, Acts xx. 28. 1 Tim. iii. 16. and Tit. ii. 13.) as here, and Heb. xiii. 21. and in all the places in St. Peter, and Revel. i. 6. this is a moſt convincing proof of the Godhead of Chriſt, teſtified in all theſe places. And of this cuſtom of the Jews applied to Chriſt the Chriſtian church hath continued two imitations; the one in bowing at the name of Jeſus; the other in the eulogy, Glory be to thee, O Lord, when the Goſpel of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt is named. (H.) Bluſh for ſhame, ſaith Oecumenius, and be confounded, O thou wretched miſcreant, Arius, when thou heareſt Chriſt glorified by the Apoſtle with the title of God, in the ſingular number, with the article ho, the God, or only God, and "God over all," and "bleſſed for ever." (Aſſ.) The Socinians alſo, to avoid the force of this text, which fully proves the divinity of Chriſt, turn the words into a thankſgiving for Chriſt, reading them thus, God, who is over all, be bleſſed for ever, Amen. A manifeſt perverſion of the ſenſe of the Apoſtle's words, which were to ſhew, that according to the fleſh he deſcended from Abraham, but that he had another nature, which was not derived from Abraham; even a Divine Nature, according to which he was "over all, God bleſſed for ever." (B.) Thus, one of the cleareſt and ſtrongeſt proofs of our Saviour's eternal Divinity, here, is daringly ſet aſide, ſtript of all its grandeur and ſublimity, and turn'd into a low and odd ſenſe. Mr. Lock zealouſly follows the blunder of Eraſmus, and contrary to the natural ſenſe and uſage of that phraſe among the Hebrews, the interpretation of almoſt all the Fathers, with unnatural force and wire-drawing, racks it into this diſtorted form; Of whom was Chriſt, who is over all: God be bleſſed for ever, Amen. And he ſays not a ſyllable to excuſe this moſt horrid perverſion. (Blackw.) In like manner, Mr. Le Clerc's reflections upon Dr. Hammond's reaſonings are fairly and fully refuted by Dr. Whitby; not only by Placæus his ſolid confutation of Eraſmus, and by what Le Clerc himſelf had elſewhere ſaid of it, but by ſeveral other arguments, to prove, that the reading which we follow is certainly the true reading; for which I refer the reader to Dr. Whitby on this text. See the notes here alſo on John xx. 28.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Iſrael, which are of Iſrael: Neither becauſe they are the ſeed of Abraham, are they all children: But in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called: That is, They which are the children of the fleſh, theſe are not the children of God: But the children of the promiſe are counted for the ſeed. For this is the word of promiſe, At this time will I come, and Sara ſhall have a ſon. And not only this, but when Rebecca alſo had conceived by one, even by our father Iſaac, (for the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpoſe of God according to election might ſtand, not of works, but of him that calleth) It was ſaid unto her, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger: As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated.

Not as though.] Ouc hoion de hoti; It is not poſſible, that "the word of God hath taken none effect," or miſcarried. (Aſſ. and H.)

Not all Iſrael, which are of Iſrael.] The Apoſtle having declared, that both Jew and Gentile "had ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God," and ſo were to be juſtified only by faith in Chriſt, ch. iii. 23, 24. the Jews might probably object againſt this, that they being the ſeed of Abraham, to whom the promiſes were made, 'twas not conſiſtent with the divine veracity, to exclude them from the bleſſings promiſed, and to confer them on the believing Gentiles: To which the Apoſtle anſwers, 1. By diſtinguiſhing here betwixt "the ſeed of Abraham," according to the fleſh, and according to promiſe, or the ſpiritual ſeed: And 2. This juſtly befel them, becauſe they continued in their infidelity, after all the miracles wrought to convince them that Chriſt was the true Meſſiah: And as by this obſtinacy, like to that of Pharaoh, they had made themſelves obnoxious to the ſevereſt of his judgments; ſo had they rendred themſelves incapable of the bleſſings promiſed to Abraham, and to his ſeed; "they who are of faith being the children of Abraham, and heirs according to the promiſe," Gal. iii. 7, 9, 29. whereas the Gentiles, believing in Chriſt, are through this faith entitled to the bleſſings promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, ver. 14. for they, being Chriſt's by faith, "are Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe," ver. 29. (W. and B.)

The ſeed of Abraham.] See the notes on John viii. 37, 39.

At this time.] Cata ton cairon touton; According to this ſeaſon. The meaning of this phraſe will beſt appear by Gen. xvii. 21. and xviii. 10. In the former of which it is rendred in the Greek, according to this time in another year: And in the latter, according to this ſeaſon for times; or rather, according to this time of the year; which ſeems to denote, not that time twelve-month, but the next year, at the time of childbirth, reckoning from that time wherein the promiſe was made. (See Paulus Fagius, in collat.) And ſo 2 Kings iv. 16. "About this ſeaſon, according to the time of life, thou ſhalt embrace a Son," is, by the Hebrews, interpreted, After the time wherein the fruit ſhall be quickened in the womb, and come to a perfect firmneſs of parts, and ſo come to birth, thou ſhalt embrace, or have, a Son: So that, according to the time of life, may moſt fitly ſignify, according to the manner, or courſe, of children being form'd in the womb, quickened, and born. (H.)

The purpoſe of God.] See the notes on ch. viii. 28.

According to election.] The purpoſe and election of God here does not reſpect the eternal condition of Jacob and Eſau. The meaning therefore is not, that God, by an abſolute and unconditional decree, determin'd Jacob to happineſs, and Eſau to miſery, before either of them were born, or "had done any good or evil:" But that God, before they were born, had determin'd, that Jacob ſhould be the father of the Jewiſh church, and that Chriſt ſhould deſcend from his loins, not from the loins of Eſau. And this, God might do, without any injuſtice to Eſau, who was, notwithſtanding, capable of eternal happineſs. (Fox) Beſides, 'tis evident, that the Apoſtle ſpeaks not here at all of the perſons, but of the nations and poſterity of Jacob and Eſau; not of them perſonally, but nationally conſider'd, according to the note of Irenæus, that it was a prophecy of the two people or nations; 1. From the words of God to Rebecca, "Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people ſhall be ſeparated from thy bowels; and the one people ſhall be ſtronger than the other people, and the elder ſhall ſerve the younger," Gen. xxv. 23. 2. From this obſervation, that as to the perſons of Eſau and Jacob, it was never true, that "the elder did ſerve the younger;" but only as to their poſterity, when the Edomites became tributaries to David, 2 Sam. viii. 14. And, 3. Becauſe what is here offer'd as a proof, or confirmation of this, ver. 13. is cited from the Prophet Malachi; who propheſied long after Jacob and Eſau were perſonally dead, and ſo could only ſpeak of their poſterity, the Iſraelites and Edomites, as he expreſly doth. (W.)

Eſau have I hated.] See the notes on Luke xiv. 26.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. What ſhall we ſay then? Is there unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid. For he ſaith to Moſes, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compaſſion on whom I will have compaſſion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy. For the ſcripture ſaith unto Pharoah, Even for this ſame purpoſe have I raiſed thee up, that I might ſhew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will, he hardneth. Thou wilt ſay then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath reſiſted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, Why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump to make one veſſel unto honour, and another unto diſhonour? What if God, willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction: And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the veſſels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory? Even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but alſo of the Gentiles. As he ſaith alſo in Oſee, I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her, beloved, which was not beloved: And it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, Ye are not my people, there ſhall they be called the children of the living God. Eſaias alſo crieth concerning Iſrael, Though the number of the children of Iſrael be as the ſand of the ſea, a remnant ſhall be ſaved: For he will finiſh the work, and cut it ſhort in righteouſneſs: Becauſe a ſhort work will the Lord make upon the earth. And as Eſaias ſaid before, Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a ſeed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrah.

I will have mercy.] Theſe words are cited to prove that God was at liberty, if it ſo pleaſed him, to admit the Gentiles to the ſame privileges which were offer'd to the Jews, which even the believing Jews were unwilling to allow. They do not imply, that God will deny mercy to any perſon who is a fit object of it: Nor is it here implied, that God will be wanting to any, or refuſe to give grace ſufficient to fit thoſe for mercy who do their own part, and apply themſelves to him for it. I will farther add, that in the Goſpel ſenſe he is a fit object of mercy, who ſincerely performs the conditions on which it is promiſed. (Fox) Note here alſo, That God made this declaration after Iſrael had committed idolatry, in making the golden calf, and ſo had made themſelves naked, i. e. diveſted of the divine preſence and protection, or of a covenant-relation to him, inſomuch that God ſent this dreadful meſſage to them, "I will come up into the midſt of thee, and conſume thee in a moment," Exod. xxxiii 5. and had ſaid to Moſes, "Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot againſt them, and that I may conſume them," ch. xxxii. 10. And tho' God ſuffer'd himſelf to be prevailed upon by Moſes to adopt them again for his people; yet he lets him know, that this was part of his glory, to "be gracious to whom he will be gracious, and to ſhew mercy on whom he will ſhew mercy," ch. xxxiii. 19. If therefore, upon the infidelity of the Jews, he will call the idolatrous Gentiles, and receive them to be his people, as he did the Jews again after their idolatry, who can accuſe him of injuſtice on that account? (W.)

It is not of him that willeth.] That is, Ye ſee, this is not to be obtained by the moſt paſſionate wiſhes of a faithful Abraham, nor by the fervent deſires of an Eſau, Hebr. xii. 17. nor by the greateſt zeal we can imploy in ſuch courſes as ſeem beſt to our own wiſdom; but we muſt own it to be a bleſſing which depends meerly upon the divine goodneſs, and therefore muſt ſeek it according to his pleaſure, in ſuch ways as he appoints, and not in thoſe which ſeem to us moſt proper to obtain it: Tho' then ye have a zeal for God, and follow after the law, that ye may obtain righteouſneſs, it is not to be wonder'd, that ye obtain not the bleſſing of juſtification, promiſed to the ſeed of Abraham, becauſe ye ſeek it not by faith in the Meſſiah, which is the only way in which God hath declared he will confer it. (Idem)

For this ſame purpoſe have I raiſed thee up.] Our tranſlation makes God ſpeak thus, as if he had made Pharaoh on purpoſe, only to be an example of his ſeverity and vengeance: Whereas, according to the original, theſe words ſhould be render'd, For this cauſe have I made thee to ſubſiſt; intimating, that tho' Pharaoh had long before deſerv'd to be deſtroy'd, yet that God thought fit to ſpare him, and make him ſubſiſt for a conſiderable time, to ſhew his power, by the ſigns and wonders which he wrought in the land of Egypt, and by delivering his people at length, in ſpite of all the power of Pharaoh, with a ſtrong hand and an out-ſtretched arm; by which he made it appear to all, to whoſe ears thoſe things came, that the God of Iſrael was a great and powerful God, that he had all the creatures at his diſpoſal, and that there was no reſiſting him. (Eſſay) For particular proofs of this interpretation, See Hammond and Whitby at large on this text.

Whom he will he hardeneth.] This alludes to what befel Pharaoh, when God ſaith of him, "I have hardened his heart," Exod. x. 1. This was indeed foretold by God, from the firſt of his ſending Moſes to him, ch. iv. 21. and vii. 3. But this foretelling it ſo early is no argument that it was immediately done: But, on the contrary, his own hardning his own heart is alſo foretold, ch. iii. 19. And accordingly the hiſtory proceeds. God ſhews miracles and ſigns before Pharaoh, ch. vii. 10. And becauſe the magicians of Egypt did the like with their enchantments, it follows that Pharaoh's heart was hardened ver. 13. Not "He hardened Pharaoh's heart," (as if it had been God who did it:) But, according to the original, Pharaoh's heart waxed hard, or ſtrong, was hardened, or, by an ordinary acception of Kal for Hithpahel, Pharaoh's heart hardened it ſelf. And ſo it follows, ver. 14. "The Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Pharaoh's heart is waxen hard, he refuſeth," &c. And ſo the very ſame words are rendred by our Engliſh, ver. 22. and ch. viii. 19. "was hardned," in the paſſive; or hardned its ſelf, in the reciprocal; (not actively, he hardned;) "and he hearkned not unto them." After his hardning his heart thus againſt this firſt ſign and command, God proceeds to a judgment of "turning their water into blood," ch. vii. 16, 17. and this as a ſufficient conviction to Pharaoh: For ſo ſaith God, "Hitherto thou wouldſt not hear; but in this thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord, Behold I will ſmite," &c. And yet after this, "Pharaoh's heart was hardned," or hardned it ſelf, ver. 22. becauſe the Magicians did the ſame things alſo by their enchantments. Then comes the plague of frogs on him, Exod. viii. 4. even into the King's chamber, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſa. cv. 30. and to deliver him from them he calls for Moſes, and promiſes fair, ver. 8. and Moſes, to work ſome good upon him bids him chooſe his time when, ver. 9. and it ſhould be done for him, "that thou mayſt know that there is none like unto the Lord our God," ver. 10. But this had no effect on him neither: For "when he ſaw there was reſpite," not yet diſcerning God's purpoſe of vengeance on him for his contumacy, "he hardned his heart:" Whereupon, Kimchi ſaith, that God hardens hearts by concealing his counſels of judgment from them, as in Pharaoh and Sihon; and it is St. Baſil's obſervation, that God's long-ſuffering, giving him reſpite, was the cauſe, or occaſion, of his obduration of heart; "He hardned his heart, and hearkned not," ver. 15. And this was a third wilful act of his own obduration, agreeable to what God had foretold of him, (ch. iii. 19.) Then comes the plague of Lice, ver. 17. and the Magicians are poſed with that, and confeſs "the finger of God;" and yet for all this "his heart was hardned," (or hardned its ſelf, ver. 19.) and he hearkened not; as the Lord had ſaid." Then, 5. comes a ſwarm of Flies, and with it a ſign, as well as a miraculous puniſhment; no flies ſwarming in Goſhen, but in all the land of Egypt beſides; by the diviſion and particularity of the puniſhment, to make him ſenſible of his ſin, "to the end that he might know," ver. 22. on purpoſe to ſoften his heart. By this Pharaoh was wrought on a little, and gives leave, firſt, that they ſhould ſacrifice, then that they ſhould go into the wilderneſs, only "not very far a way," ver. 28. and upon this promiſe Moſes will intreat for him, ver. 29. But ſeeing Pharaoh had already hardned his heart four times, and at one of thoſe times, over and above, dealt falſly, promiſed fair, ch. viii. 8. and broke his promiſe, therefore now, after this fifth judgment, tho' Moſes promiſes to pray upon his promiſe to mend, yet he doth it with a particular admonition or warning, more than any time before, "But let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more," ver. 29. intimating that if he did, it would be worſe with him than before; And yet ver. 32. as ſoon as the judgment was removed, "Pharaoh hardned his heart, this time alſo." Upon this God ſends the ſixth plague, that of Murren upon all the cattel of Egypt, ch. ix. 6. and "the heart of Pharaoh was hardned," ver. 7. and ſo ſtill, all this while, for theſe ſix Judgments together, tho' Pharaoh were obdurate, yet this was not God's hardning his heart, but Pharaoh hardens his own heart, and will not let Iſrael go, as the Lord commanded. Upon this God ſends another judgment, that of Boyls and Blains, ver. 10. And then 'tis ſaid in a new ſtyle, "The Lord hardned Pharaoh's heart," ver. 12. which as it was the very time at firſt referr'd to by the prediction of God to Moſes, c. iv. 21. ſo was it the judgment implicity threatned in that ſpecial warning, c. viii. 29. And this God never did till then; and therefore as, after that warning 'twas ſaid, that "Pharaoh hardned his heart this time alſo," ſo 'tis here ſaid ver. 14. that this time, this turn, now, tho' not before, God would pour out "all his plagues upon his heart," viz. this obduration, or the effects of it. Upon which follows the paſſage wherein our common tranſlation hath ſo much miſtaken, c. ix. 14, 15. not, as we read, "For now I will ſtretch out my hand that I may ſmite thee and thy people with the peſtilence;" for the event proves there was no ſuch matter; Pharaoh was not ſmitten with the peſtilence, nor cut off by that means, but drowned in the Red Sea, ſome time after: But thus, And, or For now I had ſent, or ſtretch'd out my hand, and I had ſmitten thee and thy people with the peſtilence, and thou hadſt been cut off from the earth. It is, in the præter tenſe, ſent, or had ſent, as Mr. Aynſworth confeſſes: And the learned Paulus Fagius, out of the Chaldee paraphraſe reads it; I was near ſtretching out my hand to have ſent the plague, and have ſtruck thee, and thou hadſt been blotted out; referring probably to the plague of the murrein at the beginning of the chapter, that falling on the cattel might have fallen on him and the people alſo; or elſe to the Boyls ver. 12. which might be plague-ſwellings, and ſo proper enough to have cut him off: But (not, and) in very deed, for this cauſe I have made thee ſtand, kept thee alive, to ſhew, or make to be ſeen my power in thee; as when ſaith Chryſoſtome, a man condemned to death is cut up, and anatomized alive, that others may be inſtructed and benefited by that diſſection. By this then 'tis viſible, what was the point of time wherein 'tis truly ſaid of God, that "he hardned Pharaoh's heart:" Then when 'tis ſaid he kept him alive; that is, after the ſixth judgment, and a ſpecial warning before that, both contemned by Pharaoh, when he had filled up the meaſure of his obduration, and in ordinary courſe was to be cut off by death: And ſo 'tis here added in reference to this example of Pharaoh ver. 22. "God, willing to ſhew his wrath, and make his power to be known (to other men that might ſee or hear of this) endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction;" which notes that he was by himſelf fitted to deſtruction, when God thus reprieved him; at which time alſo 'tis ſaid that "he (that is, God,) hardned his heart." By this obſervation of the time when God hardned Pharaoh, not till after his hardning his own heart ſix times againſt God's ſigns and judgments, will appear what this hardning ſignifies; the total withdrawing of God's grace of repentance from him, in the ſame manner, as when one is caſt into hell, which Pharaoh, at that time had been, had it not been more for God's glory to continue him alive a while, in that deſperate irreverſible condition; which ſure was no whit worſe to him, but ſomewhat better and more deſirable, than to have been adjudged to thoſe flames all that time. To this may be added what the Greek fathers obſerve, that God's giving him reſpite, removing his puniſhments, was all that God poſitively did toward the hardning of him, (As ſaith Theophylact, when a Maſter forbears to puniſh a wicked ſervant, he makes him much more wicked) as on the other ſide the great mercy of reforming ſinners lives, is moſt effectually wrought by chaſtiſements. See Origen. Philocal. c. xxvi. This was a notable, and withal (as far as we find in Scripture) a ſingular example of God's dealing with an impenitent, that had filled up his meaſure, keeping him alive; but without all grace, and conſequent poſſibility of amending. And by this example appears, how juſtly God might now do the like to the Jews of that age, (if ſo he pleaſed) to thoſe, who, contrary to all his mercies and long-ſuffering, continued obſtinate, reſiſted all God's methods by Prophets, by Chriſt himſelf, by the Apoſtles, teſtifying the reſurrection, and giving them a ſpecial warning what would befal them if they now continued obſtinate, Acts xxviii. 28. and now are juſtly left to themſelves, the Goſpel taken from them and preach'd to the Gentiles; and this upon ends of infinite wiſdom; 1. In mercy to them, above the proportion of that to Pharaoh, that the Gentiles coming in might ſtir them up to emulation, and ſo if 'twere poſſible, work upon them: And, 2. That if this alſo prevailed not, God might be glorified in their deſtruction: That, as Pharaoh, by purſuing the Iſraelites after this, came to that moſt remarkable, illuſtrious deſtruction in the Red Sea, ſo theſe hardned Jews, (perſecuting the orthodox Chriſtians) and all the falſe impious profeſſors joining with them herein, might be involv'd in one common deſtruction; viz. that by Titus, and the Roman eagles, the moſt eminent and notable that ever was in the world. (H.) Execrable is the note of Eſtius, that God is here ſaid to "harden whom he will," becauſe the firſt riſe of any man's induration, which is God's dereliction of him, hath no other cauſe than the will of God! For, as this is contrary to the known ſaying even of St. Auſtin, that God deſerts no man who leaves not him firſt; So it makes God alone the cauſe of all men's hardning: For if this dereliction be the cauſe of induration, and that hath no other cauſe but the will of God, the will of God muſt be the cauſe of all men's hardning. It alſo makes all God's exhortations to men, "not to harden their hearts," and his reproofs and puniſhments of 'em for ſo doing, exhortations to his will is the true cauſe of their not doing, and what reproofs and puniſhments of that which his will cauſed them to do. (W.) See the notes on John xii. 40.

Hath not the Potter power.] The meaning of this alluſion ſeems to be this; As the Potter, out of the ſame lump of clay, hath power to make one veſſel for an honourable uſe, and another for a diſhonourable uſe: So Almighty God may, without injuſtice, make choice of one nation to be, in a peculiar manner, his people, and confer ſingular favours upon them, which he does not think fit to beſtow upon other nations. If therefore God be conſider'd only as the creator of the world, the Jews will not have any thing that they can reaſonably object againſt him, for caſting off the bulk of their nation, and chuſing for his people thoſe of them who believed, and the believing Gentiles. But God did not proceed in an arbitrary manner with them, as is manifeſt from the reaſoning in the following verſe. He bore long with them, and they had many gracious offers made to them by the Son of God: Nor were they deliver'd over to puniſhment before they had, by their own deſervings, fitted themſelves for deſtruction. It is farther obſervable, that when God made choice of the poſterity of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, to be his peculiar people, the reſidue of mankind were not left in a hopeleſs condition; for they were manifeſtly included in the promiſe made to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 18. "In thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed." (Fox) See the notes on Acts xiii. 42.

He will finiſh the work.] Logos, which we here tranſlate "the work," is properly meant of an account; and ſyntelein and ſyntemnein logon, is, upon the ballancing accounts, (that is the receipts on the one hand, and expences on the other) to cut off one from the other, and to ſet down the remainder, which ordinarily, in a Steward's account, is but a ſmall ſum: And thus it is, that the Prophets uſe the word remnant for that which remains of a far greater ſum; and ſo it is fit to denote the ſmall number of the Jews which received the faith of Chriſt, at the preaching the Goſpel then to them, in proportion to, and compariſon with, the far greater number which ſtood againſt it. So, ch. xi. 4. out of 1 Kings xix. 18. (Catelipon) "I have reſerved to my ſelf ſeven thouſand men:" And accordingly here, ver. 27. they who thus believe are called cataleimma, "a remnant;" and generally in the Prophets are expreſs'd, by that and the like words, fetch'd from the ſame metaphor of accounts. (H.)

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33. What ſhall we ſay then? That the Gentiles which followed not after righteouſneſs, have attained to righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs which is of faith: But Iſrael, which followed after the law of righteouſneſs, hath not attained to the law of righteouſneſs. Wherefore? Becauſe they ſought it, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law: For they ſtumbled at that ſtumbling-ſtone; As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion a ſtumbling-ſtone, and rock of offence: And whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed.

What ſhall we ſay then?] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Lord, What ſhall we ſay to this great myſtery of grace, the calling of the Gentile world, and the cutting off and caſting away of moſt of the preſent Jewiſh nation? That the Gentiles, who lived in ignorance and blindneſs, in ſin and unrighteouſneſs, ſhould attain to righteouſneſs by faith in Chriſt: And that the Iſraelites, who had God's own righteous law amongſt them, and truſted to be juſtified by the obſervation of it, yet ſhould not attain to that righteouſneſs which God preſcribeth for that end; namely, faith in the mediator; but thought it muſt be attained by the works of the law, keeping all the ceremonial precepts, by which no fleſh can be juſtified. And the reaſon why they ſought it not by faith was this, "They ſtumbled at the ſtumbling-ſtone;" that is, at the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, taking offence at his poverty and mean condition in the world, and at the ſpirituality of his kingdom. Learn hence, That the great humiliation of Chriſt, in the days of his fleſh, did prove a ſnare and occaſion to many perſons to deſpiſe and reject him, to ſtumble at him, and fall foul upon him. But in what reſpects is Chriſt called "a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence?" Anſwer; Negatively; not becauſe he was by God deſigned, either intentionally or accidentally, to be ſuch. All ſtumbling and offence-taking at Chriſt, are accidental, proceeding from the depravity of man, not from the deſign of God: Much leſs were the Jews fore-appointed and ordained by God to ſtumble at his Son; for God appoints no man to do that which he prohibits all men from doing. And as no man is neceſſitated by the decree of God, ſo neither is he conſtrained or neceſſitated by Satan, by his corruption, or any other inſtrument, to ſtumble or take offence at Chriſt; for actions neceſſitated upon men are neither meritorious nor puniſhable. But poſitively Chriſt is called a ſtone of ſtumbling, becauſe men, willingly and wilfully perverſe, do take offence at him. Tho' God never deſigned or deſired any man's ſtumbling at Chriſt, yet he knew and foreſaw that many, very many, would ſtumble at him; and accordingly expreſs'd him by a prophetical character anſwering the event, and predicting that which in time came to paſs: "Behold, I lay in Sion a ſtumbling ſtone" (B.) From this recapitulation of the whole diſpute of the Apoſtle in this chapter, and his declaration that this was the deſign of it, to juſtify God in this proceeding and dealing with them both, it is exceeding evident, that it was not at all deſigned to determine any thing touching God's abſolute decrees of dealing with mankind in general thus or thus, as to their final and eternal ſtate; but only to juſtify his dealings, as in his providence he had actually done with the unbelieving Jews, rejecting them upon their ſtubborn infidelity and the hardneſs of their hearts; and with the believing Gentiles, admitting them to be his church and people, and the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham upon their faith, and ſubmiſſion to the terms he had propoſed for their juſtification and acceptance with him. (W.) Tis alſo manifeſt, that the Apoſtle had no deſign to teach that God was a reſpecter of perſons; which he would be, had he by a ſecret decree determined, before people had done good or evil, that ſome few ſhould be neceſſarily happy, but the much greater number of men and women neceſſarily miſerable: For if this had been the Apoſtle's meaning, he would have mention'd it in the concluſion he draws from what he had ſaid. (Fox)

Hath not attained.] Here are three words together, diokein, catalambanein, and phthanein; To follow after, to attain, to be foremoſt, which are all agoniſtical, referring to the cuſtoms of the Grecian exerciſes in their Olympian, Nemæan, Iſthmian, Pythian games, which are often alluded to in theſe Epiſtles. Five of theſe games there were, cuffing, wreſtling, running, coiting, and leaping. That of running, (dromos, or podocein, (in reference to which, in Homer, Achilles is ſo conſtantly call'd podas ocus, ſwift-footed, to denote his excellence above all in that kind of exerciſe) is here ſpecified by (diocein) purſuing, or ſtriving to overtake; as any did in that exerciſe when he was behind another. In this, as in the other, there was (athlon or brabeion) a reward or prize propos'd to the racers; which he that came firſt to the goal was, by the brabeutes or judge, adjudged to have, and it was ordinarily a crown of leaves, called therefore (ſtephanos phthartos,) a fading crown, 1 Cor. ix. 25. and this generally ſet over the goal, that he that came thither foremoſt might catch it off, and carry it away with him; but ſo, as that the judgment of the judges of the game did firſt intervene; For ſo ſaith Ælian, Var. Hiſt. l. ix. c. 31. of the conqueror, going to the judges of the game that he might receive the crown: And this is called here catalambanein, to attain, 1 Tim. vi. 12. epilambanein, and lambanein, to apprehend and receive, 1 Cor. ix 24. which Plutarch calls catching the crown that hangs over the goal; from whence the conquerors are called (athlophoroi) thoſe that bear away the reward. Then, for phthanein, to be foremoſt, that is to conquer in this race, to come foremoſt thither, according to that of Plutarch, The victory is his that comes firſt. So is the word uſed, Phil. iii. 13. and is to get before other men, ſo that (as to the victory) the prize ſhall belong to him. Juſtification then, the approbation and mercy of God, was the prize (brabeion) that all ran for, Jews and Gentiles, ver. 30, 31. But the Jews running for it, or purſuing it by a wrong rule (or nomos) viz. by that of the external, legal performances, did not get foremoſt thither, nor conſequently had the reward, but the Gentiles had the advantage of them, and ſo got it: Where of the Jews 'tis ſaid particularly, that they met with a block in the way, ſtumbled and fell at that, as racers ſometimes do, and by that means utterly miſcarried. (H)

They ſtumbled.] They ſought not juſtification by faith in Chriſt, becauſe whereas God had pointed out to them this way of ſalvation, by ſaying, "Behold, I lay in Sion a corner-ſtone, elect and precious, and whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed," Iſa. xxviii. 16. This corner-ſtone became to them of Iſrael, according to the words of the ſame prophet, ch. viii. 14. "a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence;" they being offended at him, becauſe of his poverty, humility, and outward meanneſs, and the ſpirituality of his kingdom; and ſo they ſtumbled, and fell off from being God's people, and excluded themſelves from the bleſſings procured for, and offer'd to them, by the Meſſias, promiſed to their forefathers. See 1 Pet ii. 6, &c. (W.) See the notes alſo on Luke ii. 34.

Shall not be aſhamed.] The Hebrews, in Iſa. xxviii. 16. read it make haſt, but the Greeks are thought to have read it aſhamed: So Cappellus citeth it as the opinion of a learned man; and ſo Grotius's notes have it. But Mr. Pocock ſeems to have hit upon the right (and then there is no need of that conjecture) that the Hebrew word had anciently three ſignifications of ſome affinity one with another, which are all retained in the Arabic Hauſh and Hiſh, which anſwers it; 1. To make haſte, 2. To fear, 3. To be aſhamed; and it may well be here uſed in that ſenſe that comprehends all three: For he that is in a fright or conſternation, turns this way and that way haſtily, and is in confuſion of face or ſhame. In the firſt of theſe ſenſes the Syriac interpreter and Chaldee paraphraſt underſtood it; the former reading it, He ſhall not fear, the latter They ſhall not be troubled, or in commotion: In the ſecond, the Vulgar reads it, Non feſtinet, Shall not make haſte: In the third, the Greek, as alſo the Arabic, ou cataiſchunthe, He ſhall not be aſhamed: And this laſt is here made uſe of by the Apoſtle; and ſo 1 Pet. ii. 6. where the Syriac and Arabic and Vulgar are all to the ſame purpoſe. And this is capable of a double ſenſe, either as ſhame ſignifies baſhfulneſs, or inconfidence, which keeps us from confeſſing of Chriſt, and ſo ou cataiſchuntheſetai is, He will never be cowardly or baſhful, he will boldly and confidently confeſs Chriſt; or elſe it may ſignify being put to ſhame, as any man is that finds himſelf deceived, that hath miſcarried in a matter on which he hath depended; and ſo it belongs to Chriſt's not forſaking him; ou cataiſchuntheſetai, he ſhall never be deſtituted by Chriſt, never miſcarry or be diſappointed in that hope which he hath repoſed in him: And ſo it will moſt fitly be rendred in all the three places, here in oppoſition to the fate of unbelievers, they ſhall bruiſe themſelves at this ſtone, be the worſe for Chriſt, but the believer ſhall be ſure never to be fruſtrated in his expectation of all good from him. So ch. x. 11. as a proof that a man is juſtified by faith, ver. 10. this teſtimony is produced, "He that believeth ſhall not be aſhamed:" And ſo the word ſignifies, ch. v. 5. "Hope maketh not aſhamed;" the Chriſtian's hope will never miſcarry, he ſhall never be in danger to fail in his truſt repoſed in Chriſt: And ſo in St. Peter, it is as a demonſtration of the pretiouſneſs of that ſtone, that whoſoever depends on it, it will never fail him; he ſhall never miſcarry that lays all his weight on that foundation. (H.) Obſerve here, 1. What uſe and office our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is of to his church: He is a ſtone, a corner-ſtone, the chief corner-ſtone; a corner-ſtone for ſtrength, the chief corner-ſtone for ornament and beauty: As the corner-ſtone bears the weight of the building, ſo doth Chriſt bear the weight of his church, and ſupports all the pillars and ſupporters of it; yet this precious corner-ſtone is accidentally and eventually "a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence." Some are offended at the poverty of his perſon, and the meanneſs of his condition; others at the ſublimity and ſanctity of his doctrine: Some are offended at his croſs, others at his free grace; but ſuch as inſtead of being offended at him do believe on him, ſhall never be aſhamed of, or confounded by him. Learn hence, That thoſe who, according to the direction of the Goſpel, do believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſhall never have cauſe to be aſhamed. Here note, What they ſhall not be aſhamed of; when, and why they ſhall not be aſhamed. 1. What the ſincere believer ſhall not be aſhamed of. He ſhall never be aſhamed of his choice; he ſhall not be aſhamed of his profeſſion: He ſhall never be aſhamed of the cauſe and intereſt of Chriſt, which he has owned and vindicated in the world: He ſhall never be aſhamed of the work and ſervice of Chriſt, nor of any time ſincerely ſpent in that work and ſervice: He ſhall never be aſhamed of his reproaches and ſufferings, tribulation and perſecutions, for the ſake of Chriſt: In a word, he ſhall never be aſhamed hereafter, that he never was aſhamed here, either of Chriſt and his Goſpel, his work and ſervice, or his cauſe and intereſt. 2. When the believer ſhall not be aſhamed; namely, when he is called forth to bear his teſtimony for Chriſt before the world, at the hour of death, and at the day of judgment; neither the dreadfulneſs of the day, nor the impartiality of the ſentence, nor the ſeparation that ſhall then be made, will in the leaſt cauſe him to be aſhamed. 3. Why the believer ſhall never be aſhamed. The cauſe of ſhame is removed and taken away; namely, ſin: Thoſe only from whom he can reaſonably fear ſhame, will never be aſhamed of him; he can look God and Chriſt, his own conſcience, and the whole world in the face, without ſhame and bluſhing. Oh! that ſinners would now be aſhamed of their unbelief, which otherwiſe will put them to eternal ſhame, and bring upon them everlaſting confuſion in the day of the Lord. "Whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall never be aſhamed: But he that believeth not in him, ſhame and the wrath of God abideth on him." (B.)

CHAP. X.

The Apoſtle's great affection for the Jews. The Scripture ſhews the difference between the righteouſneſs of the Law, and that of faith. Thoſe who believe in Chriſt, whether Jews or Gentiles, ſhall be ſaved. The neceſſity of a divine miſſion. The Jews were not ignorant of theſe things.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. BRethren, my heart's deſire and prayer to God for Iſrael is, that they might be ſaved. For I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they, being ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted themſelves unto the righteouſneſs of God.

My heart's deſire.] Obſerve, 1. The mighty concern which the Apoſtle had for the eternal ſalvation of his countrymen the Jews, who ſought his deſtruction: Their ſalvation lay very near his heart, and he was afraid they ſhould miſs it, by taking the wrong way for obtaining it; by building all their hopes of ſalvation upon ſuch a bottom as would never bear the fabrick, but utterly fail them, namely, juſtification by works. 2. What it was that made the Apoſtle ſo concerned for the Jews. It was not on the account of their wicked lives, and ſcandalous immoralities, but their bad principles, and fundamental errors: They oppoſed the honour of God to the Son of God, and the obſervation of the law to the faith of Chriſt. From whence, learn, That we ought to be concerned for thoſe who lie under damnable errors, altho' they be men of good carriage, and commendable converſation. Not only the vicious and ungodly, but the erroneous and unſound, are to be the objects of our pity and prayer: For error is as damnable as vice: The one is an open road, the other a by-path, to hell and deſtruction; and accordingly, he that has a due care of his ſoul's ſalvation, will be as much afraid of erroneous principles as of debauched practices. (B.) Obſerve here, The marks of a truly paſtoral charity and zeal, 1. When a paſtor bears his ſheep in his heart; and even thoſe who are gone moſt aſtray. 2. To pray earneſtly to God for them. 3. To be ſo far from inſulting over their weakneſs, as to commend whatever is commendable in them. 4. Not to diſſemble their faults. And, 5. To ſoften his ſevere reprehenſions with mildneſs. (Q.)

Prayer to God.] That the Apoſtle ſpeaks not, in the preceding chapter, of the abſolute and peremptory rejection and reprobation of the Iſraelites, is evident from this prayer, and vehement deſire: For, on ſuppoſition of ſuch a decree of reprobation, this muſt not only be a vain prayer, but alſo an oppoſing of his will, and (eudokia) the good pleaſure of Almighty God revealed to him. For, 'tis evident, he prays here for all Iſrael; for them whoſe "zeal to God was not according to knowledge," and who were "ignorant of God's righteouſneſs," ver. 2, 3. And not for thoſe only (as Eſtius deſcants) whom God hath predeſtinated to be ſaved by the prayers of the Saints. (W.) The Apoſtle "prays to God" for them; not to Angels, to whom no divine worſhip is due; nor to Saints, who, when dead, are ignorant of the church's concerns, and cannot hear or help ſuch as ſue unto them. (R. Moore)

For Iſrael.] See the notes on ch ix. 4.

That they might be ſaved.] Soteria may here moſt probably ſignify the Jews converting to the faith of Chriſt, eſcaping out of that deluge of unbelief and obduration which had overwhelmed that people: For ſo it ſeems to be interpreted, ver. 3. by the contrary of "not ſubmitting to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt." So ch. xi. 11. "Salvation to the Gentiles" is the Gentiles coming in and believing on Chriſt; as ſozein alſo is, ver. 14. So "working out ſalvation," Phil. ii. 12. is to complete or perfect their Chriſtian courſe, in reſolving and acting accordingly; proportionably to "God's working in them to will and to do," ver. 13. So, in this Epiſtle, ch. i. 16, 17. where the Goſpel is ſaid to be "the power of God unto ſalvation," both to Jew and Gentile; and that prov'd by that ſaying of Habakkuk, "The juſt ſhall live by faith;" that is, return from captivity and live peaceably: And that, as an emblem of his returning from ſin and living a holy life, it will be moſt reaſonable ſo to interpret ſalvation, as may beſt agree with that notion of life, that is, for repentance and reformation. So perhaps "repentance to ſalvation," 2 Cor. vii. 10. will denote ſuch a repentance, or change, that proceeds to eſcaping out of, and forſaking, the ſins of the former life. So, 2 Pet. iii. 15. where he bids them "account that the long-ſuffering of our Lord is ſalvation; that is, that God's deferring the puniſhment of the Jews ſo long after the crucifying of Chriſt, was on purpoſe, that, by the preaching of the Apoſtles over all the cities of Jewry, they might yet timely return, and repent, and believe on him, and ſo eſcape in that great approaching deſtruction: Yet this ſtill not excluding, but including alſo, the reward of our faith, the eternal bliſs in heaven. For another notion of ſoteria, ſee ch. xiii. 11. (H.) See alſo the notes on Luke xiii. 23.

They had a zeal.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, I can bear them witneſs, that many, very many of the Jews, have a zealous deſire in their way, to pleaſe God, and do what is acceptable in his ſight; but tho' it be a warm, it is but a blind zeal, and not according to right knowledge. Here obſerve, 1. The Apoſtle is deſirous to ſay the beſt he could of his countrymen the Jews; he commends the good meaning of their zeal, but blames the ill conduct of it: It was a miſguided and miſtaken zeal, and not directed as it ought. Zeal is either one of the beſt or worſt things in the world: It is a good thing when it is right in its object, right in the meaſure and degree, and purſued by right means. As to the object of our zeal, it muſt be that which is certainly good, and conſiderably good: Certainly good, or elſe we are zealous for we know not what; and conſiderably good, or elſe it doth not deſerve our zeal. To be zealous and hot, beyond all due meaſure, for the obſervation of a ceremony or cuſtom (as ſome in the Chriſtian church were of old about the obſervation of Eaſter,) is certainly a zeal "not according to knowledge." Again, zeal muſt be proſecuted by lawful and warrantable means; we muſt not for any principle of zeal do any evil that good may come. But there is a zeal, amongſt the church of Rome, which, I am ſure, cannot be "according to knowledge;" and that is a zeal for ignorance. This is a zeal peculiar to themſelves: They will not allow the people to underſtand what they do in the ſervice of God; they require them to pray, but will not let them know what they pray for; and all this under a pretence, that ignorance is the mother of devotion! As if the leſs men underſtand the ſervice of God, the better he was pleaſed with it, and the more they were edified by it! (B.) The greater the zeal is, the more dangerous is it, when not regulated by a proportionable knowledge. True zeal acts, not by blind affections and impulſes of piety, but upon principles, with the cleareſt light, and with equity. (Q.) Now, to have a zeal "according to knowledge" imports, at leaſt, 1. That we be not miſtaken, as to the matter of our zeal; but that it be a good cauſe that we are zealous about. 2. That the principle alſo, from whence our zeal proceeds, be ſuch as we can juſtify to all the world. 3. That our zeal be regular alſo, as to the meaſure of it; not laying a greater weight upon a cauſe than it will bear, nor ſhewing as much warmth and paſſion for ſmall matters, as if the fundamentals of our faith were at ſtake. 4. That our zeal be always attended with hearty charity. And, 5. That our zeal do purſue lawful ends by lawful means; never doing any ill thing for the carrying the beſt cauſe. (Sharpe) See that Archbiſhop's Sermon on this text at large, and the notes hereafter on Gal. iv. 18.

Ignorant of God's righteouſneſs.] See here the cauſes of falſe zeal, 1. Little knowledge of the deſigns and ways of God: 2. Complacency and confidence in our ſelves: And, 3. A ſecret love of independency in the performance of good. (Q.) The Jews, "being ignorant of God's" way of juſtification, by faith in Chriſt, diſcover'd in the Goſpel, and relying upon, and truſting in, their own works, their obedience to the ceremonial and moral law, to juſtify and ſave them, they "have not ſubmitted themſelves to the righteouſneſs of God;" that is, to the way and method, which the wiſdom of God has diſcover'd, for the juſtification of a ſinner, by the blood of his ſon. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 17. and iv. 2, 3.

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. For Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth. For Moſes deſcribeth the righteouſneſs which is of the law, That the man which doth theſe things, ſhall live by them. But the righteouſneſs which is of faith, ſpeaketh on this wiſe, Say not in thine heart, Who ſhall aſcend into Heaven? (that is to bring Chriſt down from above) Or, Who ſhall deſcend into the deep? (that is to bring up Chriſt again from the dead) But what ſaith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: That is, the word of faith which we preach, that if thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe in thine heart that God hath raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved: For with the heart man believeth unto righteouſneſs, and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto ſalvation. For the ſcripture ſaith, Whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: For the ſame Lord over all, is rich unto all that call upon him. For whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved.

Chriſt is the end of the law.] There was a threefold law of God, which Chriſt may be ſaid to be the end of; the judicial, ceremonial, and moral. 1. The judicial law was that which contained directions for the adminiſtration of their civil government. Now Chriſt was the end of this law, as he has aboliſhed it; for the Jewiſh polity was to continue till the coming of the Meſſiah, and no longer, Gen. xlix. 10. and Dan. ix. 26. 2. The ceremonial law was that which did preſcribe certain ſacred rites and ceremonies, to be obſerv'd in the external worſhip of God by the people of Iſrael, as they were a church. Now Chriſt is the end of this law, as he has abrogated it; all the ceremonies of that law being ſhadows and types of Chriſt, which ſhadows were to ceaſe when once the ſubſtance was come. 3. The moral law is that holy and external rule of righteouſneſs given by God to men, for the right ordering of their thoughts, words, and actions, towards God, their neighbour, and themſelves. This law is ſummarily comprehended in the Ten Commandments, and is call'd "the law of righteouſneſs," ch. ix. 31. and "the royal law," Jam. ii. 8. Now Chriſt may be ſaid to be the end of this law alſo; 1. As he is the accompliſhment of it. For the precepts of the law point at Chriſt, as he by whom they are accompliſhed: The promiſes, as he by whom they are ratified; and the threatnings, as he by whom they are eſcaped: In a word, Chriſt is the ſum of the Law, as well as the ſubſtance of the Goſpel. And, 2. In as much as he is to a believer, what the Law would have been unto him, if he could have perfectly kept it; viz. righteouſneſs and life, juſtification and ſalvation: For "Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs," to be imputed to every one that believeth in him; "the Law being our ſchoolmaſter, to bring us unto Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith," Gal. iii. 24 (B.) The great and neceſſary ſecret is, to have him always before our eyes, when we read the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, of which he is the key. It belongs to him to make himſelf manifeſt in them, and to open the ſeals of thoſe adorable books; and to us, to invoke his aſſiſtance when we read them. Men love a meer phantom or ſhadow, when they love the obſervances of the Law, without any view to Jeſus Chriſt in them, who is the fulneſs and the end thereof. (Q.) See the notes on Acts xiii. 38, 39.

The man which doth theſe things.] "Theſe things" ſignify the ſeveral branches of the Judicial Law; which being required by Moſes, under ſevere penalties of exciſion to thoſe who contemn'd or deſpiſed them, and all the promiſes of long life in Canaan depending on the obſervance of them, and the law affording no place of repentance or pardon for any preſumptuous ſin committed againſt that law, it is from thence conſequent, that he who lives not in all thoſe commands, "to do them," could not have life by them; even that temporal life, or whatever elſe was typically contained or included in that. And accordingly, St. Paul concludes Gal. iii. 10. that there was no life to be had by the law; and indeed nothing but a curſe: For that it was alſo written, (Deut. xxvii. 26.) "Curſed is every one that continues not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them;" and only "he that doth them ſhall live in them," ver. 12. All this while ſuppoſing, that no man did all his life thus do, or continue, ſo as not to incurr this curſe. And herein doth the difference of the law and the Goſpel conſiſt, that the law promiſes life only upon doing all that was required of them to do, and pronounced a curſe to them that did not continue in all: He that wilfully offended in one, was guilty of all; that is, was involved as irreverſibly under the curſe for that one breach, according to that covenant, as if he had broken all; and repentance or reformation would not relieve him. But now, under the Goſpel, the condition was changed: Firſt, Many things were not required at all now, which were then enacted under the higheſt penalty; as circumciſion, &c. Only the inward purity is now called for, which had been always typified by that: Secondly, Place was allowed for repentance; and by the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, ſure mercy and pardon for the ſinner, whatſoever his ſins were, upon his return to new life: And, for frailties and weakneſſes, for which only there were ſacrifices admitted under the Law, now there was, without thoſe ſacrifices, free pardon to be had for all thoſe that ſincerely obey'd Chriſt, and laid hold on his ſacrifice for their expiation: And ſo faith is ſaid to be the condition of our juſtification, and not the "doing theſe things;" the law of faith, not of works, that by which the Chriſtian muſt live. (H.)

Bring down Chriſt.] The two phraſes here uſed, of "going up to heaven," or "deſcending into the deep," or abyſs, are certainly proverbial phraſes, to ſignify the doing, or attempting to do, ſome hard, impoſſible thing: And conſequently, To "ſay in the heart, Who ſhall do this?" is to be preſcribed ſome hard impoſſible task, that, either by our ſelves, nor by any body elſe we know not how to ſet about; as they that are at their wits end, and know not which way to turn themſelves, are wont to cry out, or ſay within themſelves, Who ſhall do it for them? Theſe phraſes had been of old uſed by Moſes in this ſenſe, Deut. xxx. 11, 12, 13. "For this commandment which I command thee this day, is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, Who ſhall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it and do it? Neither is it beyond the ſea, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, Who ſhall go over the ſea for us, and bring it unto us," &c. Which words, being uſed by Moſes, to expreſs the eaſineſs and readineſs of the way which the Jews had to know their duty, and to perform it, are here by the Apoſtle accommodated to expreſs the eaſineſs of the Goſpel-condition, above that of the Moſaical Law. "The righteouſneſs which is of faith ſaith thus;" that is, This is the ſtyle or language of the Evangelical Law, "the word of faith," ver. 8. "Say not in thy heart;" that is, the Chriſtian hath no need to ſay, or think within himſelf, "Who ſhall go up to heaven?" that is, that he hath any weighty, impoſſible condition required of him. This part of the words of Moſes, the Apoſtle (as in a parentheſis) applies to one of the moſt difficult things on which our ſalvation depends; viz. Chriſt's coming down from heaven to earth. This indeed, if it were required of us to contribute any thing toward it, would be a weighty task for us: But when Chriſt hath himſelf done it for us, without any contribution of ours, this is an evidence of the eaſineſs of the Chriſtian's task. As for the ſecond part of the words, in Moſes, the Apoſtle reads them with ſome change, not "over the ſea," as the Septuagint now reads it; but "Who ſhall go down into the deep," or abyſs? Which variety of readings may poſſibly be reconciled, by the various ſignification and uſe of the Hebrew prepoſitions. And accordingly, that which is here uſed by St. Paul, will be found to agree to the paraphraſe which we have in the Jeruſalem-Targum, Would we had ſome Prophet like Jonas, that might deſcend into the deep of the great ſea, and bring it up to us. And this ſeems to be the ground of St. Paul's application, which here follows, "that is to bring up Chriſt again from the dead;" that deſcending of Jonah into the deep (being devoured firſt, and then vomited up by the whale on dry land) being by Chriſt himſelf made the preſignification of his death and reſurrection. And ſo this again will be the meaning of the ſecond part of the ſpeech; the ſtile, or language of the Goſpel. The reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, the great ingredient in our Chriſtian religion, and which tends ſo much to our juſtification, ch. iv. 25. is that to which we contributed nothing our ſelves, but was wrought for us by the power of Chriſt: And as it follows here, ver. 9. our believing it, now it is done, and abundantly teſtified to us, is the great fundamental act of faith required of us; and that is no very weighty task to be required of us. (Idem) We need not ſay, "Who ſhall aſcend into heaven" for us? For Chriſt, being aſcended, hath given us a convincing proof, that the propitiation for our ſins is perfect; for otherwiſe our ſurety had not been receiv'd into God's ſanctuary: Therefore, to be under perplexities, how we may be juſtified, is to deny the value of his righteouſneſs, and the truth of his aſcenſion: And ſay not, "Who ſhall deſcend into the deep?" That is, to bear the torments of Hell, and expiate ſin; For this is to deny the virtue of his death, whereby he appeaſed God, and redeemed us from the wrath to come. (B.)

From the dead.] Note, The Apoſtle ſays not here, ab inferis, from Hell; but ec necron, "from the dead:" So that this place concerns not Chriſt's deſcent into Hell, in the ſenſe of Eſthius. (W.)

The word is nigh thee.] This word nigh is beſt to be underſtood by the oppoſition of it to hidden, and far off, Deut. xxx. 11. where the Hebrew for hidden is, by the Septuagint, rendred over-weighty and heavy; and, in other places, impoſſible. So, Gen. xviii. 14. (and from thence tranſcrib'd, Luke i. 37.) No word, or thing, "ſhall be impoſſible." This is there farther expreſs'd by thoſe proverbial ſpeeches of being in heaven, or, beyond, or in the bottom of the ſea; and being fetch'd from thence; all noting ſome ſpecial difficulty, or impoſſibility, above our knowledge, far off, removed out of our reach: And ſo the nigh, muſt be feaſible and eaſy, to be known firſt, and then to be practiced; "in thy mouth, and in thy heart," (the Septuagint adds, and in thine hands) that thou mayſt do it. (H.) This was ſpoken literally by Moſes, of the Law then written, and by God's deſcent on Sinai revealed to all; but eſpecially meant of, and verified in, the revelation of Chriſt and the Goſpel, and the Spirit in our hearts, enabling us to obey the word. (Fell) It is neither far from any man's hearing, for we preach it every where; nor far from his underſtanding; for in preaching it we "uſe great plainneſs of ſpeech:" It is in thy mouth to profeſs, and in thy heart to believe it. (W.) See the notes on ch. vii. 4.

Confeſs with thy mouth.] The conditions of ſalvation are not any where mention'd together, but ſcatter'd up and down in ſeveral places of the New Teſtament. In all thoſe places therefore, where only one or more of theſe conditions are expreſs'd, there all the other are to be underſtood; or that which is expreſs'd is to be taken in ſuch a large ſenſe as preſuppoſes and includes all the other conditions. Thus he who truly believes in Jeſus Chriſt, embraces his doctrine, and ſubmits to his Laws, which enjoin the other conditions of ſalvation. And therefore, tho' ſalvation ſeems here to be promiſed to him who owns and confeſſes Chriſt Jeſus, and believes "that God hath raiſed him from the dead," yet this gives not the leaſt encouragement to him who ſhall neglect or contemn his laws, and preſume to live wickedly. Again, "He that believeth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved:" But, if a man, by wicked works, denies his faith, and refuſes to perform his part of the Goſpel covenant entred into at his baptiſm, he will be excluded the kingdom of Heaven; becauſe the unrighteous ſhall not enter into it. Once more, It is ſaid, that "He that giveth a cup of cold water to a Diſciple, in the name of a Diſciple, ſhall not loſe his reward:" But a perſon muſt be but ill inſtructed in the Chriſtian Religion, and willing to deceive himſelf, who can think, that the practice of one duty will make amends for the omiſſion of many, or for the commiſſion of any ſin which God has forbidden: For God hates pride and covetouſneſs; and he will judge and condemn whoremongers and adulterers, and all ſuch as preſume to live in the wilful commiſſion of ſin of any kind or ſort: For all luſts and ſins, both of the fleſh and of the ſpirit, "war againſt the ſoul;" and without repentance, and a change of the mind and life, exclude the guilty from the kingdom of Heaven. (Fox) We need not underſtand this of actual and compleat ſalvation, to be imparted at the day of judgment; but that this faith, and this confeſſion, will put us into the way of ſalvation, and give us a right to it, while we continue to act ſuitably to this faith, which is the frequent import of the words ſalvation and ſaved, when aſcribed to faith and grace. (W.) See the notes on Matth. x. 32.

God hath raiſed him] See the notes on Acts ii. 24.

With the heart.] The principal ſeat and ſubject of faith is not the underſtanding barely, but the will, called here "the heart:" "With the heart man believeth unto righteouſneſs;" not with the head. Tho' knowledge is ſo neceſſary to faith, that it is ſometimes put for faith, as Iſa. liii. 11. Yet there may be much light in the underſtanding, where there is no life in the will; much knowledge in the head, where there is no faith in the heart, nor obedience in the life. (B.) There is in all men a corrupt deſire of appearing outwardly to men; like that of Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 30. But this appearance commends us not to God; for he delights moſt in the truth and ſincerity of the heart. Therefore the Wiſeman counſelleth, to "keep the heart with all diligence," Prov. iv. 23. For, 1. It is the principal member, and therefore gives God the chief glory: And, 2. It is the fountain of all our actions; by none of which is God honoured, if they come from a corrupt fountain: Nay, ſo far from it, that they are abominable; and therefore, according to the diſpoſition of the heart, life or death proceeds: If we worſhip God with a right heart, we ſhall reap life; if that be unſound, death eternal follows. And therefore we had need to keep that member right. If we believe, our faith muſt come from the heart: If we love, it muſt not be in word, but in truth; which comes from the heart, 1 John iii. 18. Our Obedience alſo muſt proceed from the heart, Rom. vi. 17. And, to conclude, "Whatſoever we do, we muſt do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not to men," Col. iii. 23. (Andr.) Now, the ſigns of ſuch a ſound heart are briefly theſe; 1. That rule of the Heathen,

—— Hic murus aheneus eſto,
Nil conſcire ſibi, nulla palleſcere culpa.

[An honeſt heart is like a wall of braſs:
Whate'er to ſuch a one ſhall come to paſs,
He's not afraid or 'ſham'd to ſhew his face.]

Such a one is ſo full of courage, that he can ſay, with the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. iv. 3. "With me it is a very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of man's judgment." This made John the Baptiſt's heart to be above king Herod's power, Mark vi. 18. And the want of this made Peter afraid, at a ſilly damſel's ſpeech, charging him to be of Chriſt's company, ch. xiv. 67, &c. 2. If we be firm and upright under the croſs, and afflictions alter us not: Like Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 3. Otherwiſe, if the heart be not ſound, then in any croſs, it will melt within us like wax, Pſal. xxii. 14. 3. If we deteſt ſin, and puniſh it no leſs in our ſelves than in others. And, 4. If we can with confidence ſay, with the Pſalmiſt, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and ſee if there be any wicked way in me; and lead me in the way everlaſting," Pſa. cxxxix. 23, 24. (Idem)

Unto righteouſneſs.] See the notes on ch. iii. 25.

With the mouth.] In vain does man pleaſe himſelf with the belief of his heart, if he contradicts it with his mouth, by his maxims, and his manners. Theſe two means, appointed of God, in order to ſalvation, include all others. Faith, qualified as it ought to be, honours God in the heart: Confeſſion honours him in the ſight of men. The former deſtroys in the ſinner all preſumption of his own ſtrength and ability as to good, by obliging him to put his truſt in God alone: The latter obliges him to deſpiſe the eſteem and the malice of men, ſo as to value and to fear none but God. Whoever is aſhamed of his maſter, is not worthy to ſerve him, much leſs to reign with him. (Q.) At the time of writing this Epiſtle, the Goſpel of Chriſt was had in the utmoſt contempt: The profeſſors of it were not only derided, but moſt barbarouſly perſecuted; and all that the men of the world eſteem moſt dear, was made the price of their fidelity to this Lord. Hence it is eaſy to perceive, how different a thing the confeſſing of Jeſus Chriſt was then, from that which too many make it now; a matter of mere form and courſe, the complying with faſhion and cuſtom, and carrying an empty title, with very poor, if any, regard to thoſe obligations, implied in the name and character of Chriſtians and Diſciples. This is a cheap and eaſy ſervice, when all the temporal encouragements and advantages, which the countenance of government and credit of the world can contribute, conſpire to promote and recommend it; in compariſon of that, which was a bidding open defiance to imminent danger, and general oppoſition. That was a degree of reſolution, ſcarce conceiveable to be attain'd, without long and ſerious deliberation; and ſuch as, with rational agents, can hardly be ſeparated from ſtrict holineſs and virtue: For ſurely they, who are not diſpoſed to live to Chriſt, can ſcarce be imagined capable of being content to forſake all and to die for him. Here was no room for hypocriſy and time-ſerving, when all, who took upon them this religion, were ſenſible they did it at their utmoſt peril. They, in their very baptiſm, declared war, not only with the Devil, and the Fleſh, but, in the very ſtricteſt ſpeaking, with the World too; the malice and menaces, no leſs than the pleaſures, and vanities, and allurements of it. As therefore ſuch ſolemn profeſſion at firſt implied a proſpect and purpoſe of encountring theſe difficulties; ſo the actual performance of, and unſhaken perſeverance in, that holy purpoſe, is a virtue ſo exalted, as may very well be preſumed to include a good life; and to proceed from ſuch aſſiſtances of divine grace, as cannot but determine the perſon under its influence to all other inſtances of obedience whatſoever. And as it is thus in the reaſon of the thing, ſo was it then in fact and in experience: Orthodox believing and careleſs living are abſurdities at all times; and ſuch as do not, in thoſe times, ſeem as yet to have met together in the ſame perſon. (Stanh.)

Call upon the name of the Lord.] The word in the original is Jehovah: Whence it is certain, that the Prophet ſpeaks theſe words of the true and only God. And yet it is as certain, that the Apoſtle here aſcribes them to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, both from the following words, in ver. 14. (for in this whole chapter he ſpeaks of faith in Chriſt,) and from the words foregoing, of which theſe are a proof, and to which they are connected with the particle for. Here then we have two arguments for the Divinity of Chriſt; 1. That what is ſpoken of Jehovah is aſcribed to him: And, 2. That he is made the object of our religious invocation. Mr. Lock indeed attempts to invalidate them both; 1. By ſaying, That this "calling upon the name of the Lord" doth not import the invocation of Chriſt, but only an open profeſſion of faith in him; becauſe St. Paul argues cloſely, and yet, in the three preceding verſes, requires an open profeſſion of the Goſpel. I anſwer, There is not one word of profeſſing, either in the 11th or 12th verſe: In the 9th and 10th he mentions "confeſſion with the mouth," and "believing with the heart," as neceſſary, becauſe "the Scripture ſaith, Whoſoever believeth ſhall not be aſhamed; the ſame Lord over all being rich to all that call upon him: For (Joel ii. 32.) Whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved." If then St. Paul be a cloſe reaſoner, he muſt ſpeak of invocation of the name of the Lord. Moreover, this being the character of the diſciples of Chriſt, even before they were called Chriſtians, and the continual practice of all Chriſtians from the beginning, the Apoſtle might well argue from believers to thoſe who call upon Chriſt's name. 2. The other argument he would invalidate, by denying, that the words cited by St. Paul from Joel are to be underſtood in the ſenſe in which they are uſed by the Prophet; which in effect is to deny, that the Apoſtle argued either cloſely or truly: For the whole of the Apoſtle's inference is loſt, if either "the Lord," ver. 13. be not "the ſame Lord" with him in ver. 12. or if to "call upon" him doth not bear the ſame ſenſe in both places. (W.) See the notes on John xvi. 23. Acts ii. 21. and ix. 14.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17. How then ſhall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how ſhall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how ſhall they hear without a preacher? And how ſhall they preach, except they be ſent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the goſpel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! But they have not all obeyed the goſpel. For Eſaias ſaith, Lord, who hath believed our report? So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

How then ſhall they call.] The ſcope of the Apoſtle in theſe words is to prove, that there was a neceſſity of preaching the Goſpel to the Gentiles, as well as to the Jews, in order to their believing on Chriſt; and his way of arguing is very forcible, demonſtrative, and convincing: Thus; God has by the Prophets promiſed ſalvation to the Gentiles; but without "calling on him" there is no ſalvation; and without faith there is no calling upon him by prayer; and without hearing there is no faith; and without a preacher there is no hearing; and without ſolemn miſſion, or ſending by Chriſt and his miniſters, there can be no preacher. And the Apoſtle's manner of ſpeaking is by way of interrogation; which is equivalent to a negation; "How ſhall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" That is, It is impoſſible to do it; and it would be impious and wicked to do it. None muſt be the object of our prayers but he that is the object of our faith and truſt; therefore he alone muſt be prayed unto. And if ſo, then the practice of the Papiſts, in praying to Angels and Saints departed, is very blame-worthy and abominable in the ſight of God. How can they pray unto them, unleſs they believe in them, and truſt in them? And if they truſt in them, that curſe falls upon them, "Curſed is that man that truſteth in man;" that is, in any creature. The truth is, If Chriſt himſelf were a mere man, and not God as well as man, we ſhould ſin by worſhipping of him: But it is one good argument to prove the Divinity of Chriſt, that the Scripture repreſents him as the object of faith and religious invocation. From the whole obſerve, That the only way to Heaven is by Chriſt; the only way to Chriſt is by faith; the only way to faith is by the word; it cometh by hearing: The only way, that is, the only ordinary way. What becomes of thoſe that never heard of Chriſt in the preaching of the Goſpel, God is only fit to judge. This is certain, that all men at the great day ſhall be judged according to the Law that they were under, and obliged by, and no other. Now promulgation being of the eſſence of a Law, the Goſpel cannot be a Law to them to whom it was not promulged, and made known: But a practical belief of the Goſpel is indiſpenſably neceſſary to the ſalvation of them to whom it is revealed. Obſerve further, The great reverence and high eſteem which is due and payable to the preachers of the Goſpel; and that by the approbation of God himſelf. He commands us to admire the very feet of them that preach the Goſpel of his Son unto us, and bring glad tidings of good things; "How beautiful are the feet of them," &c. And for great reaſon ſhould it be thus, becauſe the miniſters of the Goſpel are the meſſengers of Chriſt: They receive both their miſſion and commiſſion from him; they are inſtructed by him, they negotiate for him, they ſpeak in his name, they act in his ſtead; and whatſoever they either promiſe or threaten in God's name, he ſtands ready and reſolv'd to perform it. Iſa. xliv. 26. He "confirmeth the word of his ſervants, and performeth the counſel of his meſſengers." Lord! how beautiful and bleſſed are the feet of thy meſſengers and miniſters in thy account? Let them be ſo in the peoples eſtimation alſo. Learn hence, that nothing ought to be ſo welcome to us, and ſo joyfully entertained by us, as the preaching and preachers of the Goſpel. "How beautiful are the feet of them," &c. (B.)

How ſhall they believe.] See the notes on John xv. 22.

How ſhall they hear.] See the notes on ver. 18.

How ſhall they preach.] For the right underſtanding of this point, it may be proper to conſider it under theſe diſtinct heads; viz. The neceſſity of a miſſion: And the nature and requiſites of ſuch a miſſion. 1. The neceſſity of a miſſion, in order to the preaching the Goſpel of Chriſt, is plainly intimated in the text, "How ſhall they preach except they be ſent?" And indeed, if men would ſeriouſly conſider, That the miniſters of God in matters of religion are the repreſentatives of God Almighty, to publiſh his Laws, to paſs his Pardons, and to preſide in his Divine Worſhip; That God has committed to them the keys of the kingdom of Heaven, ſo that "whoſe ſoever ſins they remit, they are remitted unto them, and whoſe ſoever ſins they retain, they are retained;" That they are the "Stewards of the myſteries of God," and the Diſpenſers of his holy word and ſacraments; In a word, that they are the Ambaſſadors of Heaven, on whoſe miniſtrations the aſſiſtances of the Holy Spirit, and all the Graces of a good Life, do depend; (all which characters and powers are aſcrib'd to them in Scripture;) there would be no occaſion for any other argument to demonſtrate at once the dignity of this office, the neceſſity of a miſſion, and that none but God himſelf can give it. For, how dares any one, without the expreſs orders of Heaven, undertake an office, which includes ſo many and ſuch great powers? Should any man take upon him the character of an Ambaſſador; and ſhould preſume to offer terms of peace to enemies, pretend to naturalize Foreigners, and grant pardons, without a commiſſion from the Supreme Magiſtrate; as all his acts would be meer nullities, and void in themſelves, ſo would he himſelf be highly criminal, and liable to the ſevereſt puniſhment, for his uſurpation. John the Baptiſt, we are well aſſured by the Holy Ghoſt, was "a man ſent from God," John i. 6. The Apoſtles themſelves did not preach, before they had this warrant, "Behold, I ſend you," Matth. x. 16. And St. Paul hath told us, that "no man taketh (or hath a right to take) this honour unto himſelf, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron," Heb. v. 4. He, being the great Maſter of his houſe, the church, muſt appoint his own officers; for none goes into a well-govern'd family, and ſays, I will be Steward here. It was the ſin of Jeroboam, and the ruin of his houſe, to admit every one that would, to be one of his prieſts, 1 Kings xiii. 33, 34. And the falſe Prophets are, in the Hebrew, call'd ſelf-made Prophets; A name very well agreeing to the Teachers of our modern Sectaries; who, without any proof of a Divine Call, or any previous trial and examination, preſume to execute ſome of theſe offices, to the great danger both of their own ſouls, and thoſe of their hearers: For by this means, many bold pretenders to the Spirit, many ignorant, ſcandalous, and heretical perſons, (not to ſpeak of Papiſts in diſguiſe) have got into their conventicles, and been admitted, by the abuſed crowd, as preachers ſent from Heaven, and full of the Holy Ghoſt! (Maſon, Comb. and Wheatly) And thus far, we have the concurrence, not only of the Greek and Roman churches, but even of ſome of our Diſſenters themſelves; I mean the Presbyterians; who aſſert the neceſſity of a regular miſſion, and the abſurdity of pretending to preach without being regularly ſent, in like terms as we do. (See Baſſnett's and Calamy's Sermons on this text.) But the great diſpute with theſe laſt, is in relation to the other point, viz. 2. The nature and requiſites of ſuch a miſſion. Concerning which we need not doubt to affirm, That none, but thoſe who are ordain'd by ſuch as we now commonly call Biſhops, can have any authority to miniſter in the church of Chriſt: For that the power of ordination is ſolely lodg'd in that ſuperior Order, is prov'd from the inſtitution of our Saviour, and the conſtant practice of the Apoſtles. That this power, lodg'd in the Apoſtles, was of Divine Inſtitution, none can diſpute, who reads and believes theſe words of our Saviour to them, after his reſurrection, "As my Father hath ſent me, even ſo ſend I you," John xx. 21. and "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," Matth. xxviii. 20. From whence 'tis evident, 1. That it was by a Divine commiſſion that our Saviour ordain'd or ſent his Apoſtles. 2. That, by virtue of the ſame commiſſion, the Apoſtles were at that time impower'd to ordain or ſend others. And, 3. That this commiſſion to ordain, was always to continue in the Chriſtian church, and to remain in ſuch hands as the Apoſtles ſhould convey it to: From whence it naturally follows, that whoever has a power to ordain muſt derive it from the commiſſion which our Saviour receiv'd from God, and gave to his Apoſtles, and was by them convey'd to their ſucceſſors. The only way then to know in whoſe hands this commiſſion is now lodg'd, is to inquire what perſons were appointed by the Apoſtles to ſucceed them in this office. Now 'tis plain to any one, who will read the Scripture without prejudice, that there were three diſtinct orders of miniſters in the Chriſtian church, in the Apoſtles days, which were deſign'd to continue to the end of the world. For, beſide thoſe two, of Deacons and Presbyters (or Elders) there we find a third order, which was ſuperior to, and had authority over, both theſe: Such as that of the Apoſtles, and Timothy, and Titus, and others; who preſided over the Presbyters, had power to enforce them to their duty, to receive accuſations againſt them, and judicially to paſs ſentence upon them; which abundantly proves their ſuperiority: And theſe were they, whom the Holy Scriptures call (Apoſtoloi and Angeloi) "Apoſtles, and Angels of the Churches," 2 Cor. viii. 23. Revel. i. 20. and elſewhere; and who were termed Apoſtles and Biſhops by all Antiquity. Now, as to this power of ordination, or the authority of ſending forth miniſters to preach in the Church, 'tis confeſs'd on all hands, that the loweſt order (viz. that of Deacons) never had it: But that the higheſt order (of which Timothy and Titus were) had this power, is clear by the expreſs teſtimony of St. Paul, 1 Tim. v. 22. and Tit. i. 5. The only queſtion therefore is, Whether the ſecond order (viz. that of Presbyters) was ever inveſted with this power of Ordination? The affirmative of which can never be prov'd from Scripture or Antiquity. For, 1. 'Tis frivolous to argue from the community of names, to the ſameneſs of office: For the calling mere Presbyters by the title of Biſhop, does not prove, that all the powers, which belong to thoſe whom we now diſtinguiſh by that ſuperior title, were ever lodg'd in mere Presbyters. But the contrary is demonſtrable, even from the ſacred text: For if ſuch Presbyters, or Elders, had this power of Ordination lodg'd in them, What cauſe or reaſon could there be for St. Paul to leave Titus in Crete, "to ordain Elders in every city," as he himſelf tells him he did, Tit. i. 5. when 'tis evident, that iſland had been converted to Chriſtianity long before Titus was left there, and had already many Presbyters among them, to preach, and adminiſter the Sacraments, to the inhabitants?

habitants? Nor, 2. Can it be prov'd from that often-quoted, and much wreſted, expreſſion, of "the hands of the Presbytery," 1 Tim. iv. 14. as we ſhall clearly prove, when we come to that text. Nor yet, 3. Can it be inferr'd from any of the charges or directions given by St. Paul, that thoſe of the ſecond Order had ever any thing like the power of ordaining others. For thoſe whom the Apoſtles took care to ordain to ſucceed them, were at firſt call'd by the ſame title (Apoſtoloi); as Epaphroditus, the firſt Biſhop of Philippi, is call'd "your Apoſtle," in the original, tho' we tranſlate it improperly "your Meſſenger," Phil. ii. 25. tho' they afterwards in modeſty declined ſo high a title; as is expreſly affirm'd by Theodoret: Who tells us, That formerly the ſame perſons were call'd both Presbyters and Biſhops; and thoſe now call'd Biſhops were then call'd Apoſtles: But in proceſs of time, the title of Apoſtle was left to the Twelve ſtrictly ſo call'd, and that of Biſhop aſcribed to the reſt. And Pacianus, a writer in the fourth century, affirms the ſame thing. So that, if we ſhould grant, that mere Presbyters were Scripture-Biſhops, which ſome have ſo earneſtly contended for, yet nothing can from thence be inferr'd, to prove them to have equal power with thoſe we now call Biſhops, who are ſucceſſors of a higher Order. To all which we might add the joint teſtimony of all Chriſtians for fifteen hundred years together; and challenge our adverſaries to produce one inſtance of a valid ordination by mere Presbyters in all that time. In ſhort, ſince every commiſſion is naturally excluſive of all perſons except thoſe to whom it is given; and ſince it does not appear, that the commiſſion to ordain, which the Apoſtles receiv'd from our Saviour, was ever granted to any but thoſe of the ſuperior Order, which we now call Biſhops; It follows, that no others have any pretence thereunto: And therefore none but ſuch as are ordain'd by Biſhops can have any title to miniſter in the Chriſtian church; and conſequently, all who take upon them to preach, without being thus ſent, are Uſurpers of that holy Office, and all their other miniſterial acts, are mere nullities and impious uſurpations, equally dangerous to themſelves and all who adhere to them. (Hickes, Stanh. Comb. Brett, Barclay, Slater, Hughes and Wheatly) For a full and juſt defence of the miſſion of the Biſhops and Clergy of the church of England, againſt all the objections of the Romaniſts, the reader may have recourſe to Maſon's Vindication of the Church of England, and to other authors therein referr'd to. See alſo the notes on Acts vi. 6. viii. 4, 17. xiv. 23. and the other texts here cited.

Who hath believed.] See the notes on John xii. 38.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21. But I ſay, Have they not heard? Yes, verily, their ſound went out into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. But I ſay, Did not Iſrael know? Firſt, Moſes ſaith, I will provoke you to jealouſy by them that are no people, and by a fooliſh nation I will anger you. But Eſaias is very bold, and ſaith, I was found of them that ſought me not; I was made manifeſt unto them that asked not after me. But to Iſrael he ſaith, All day long I have ſtretched forth my hands unto a diſobedient and gainſaying people.

Their ſound went.] This place is cited out of the Pſalmiſt, Pſa. xix. 4. but ſo as it lies in the Greek tranſlation, not as in the Original: For inſtead of their voice here, 'tis rendred out of the Hebrew "their line," or rule, or direction; for ſo the word there ſignifies. The Pſalmiſt there ſpeaks of the heavens, ver. 1. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy work;" and ſo on ver. 2, 3. and then ver. 4. "Their line is gone out through the land, and their words unto the end of the world;" that is, in a poetical ſtile, (wherein the Pſalms are written) Tho' the heavens ſtand in one place, keeping one conſtant motion, equidiſtant from the earth, yet the commands and words thereof are heard every where; that is, their virtue and efficacy are underſtood and admired by all. Here the Septuagint ſeem to have read their voice, for their line; and ſo render it ho phthongos, nothing different from the meaning of it, as appears by the ta rhemata, their words, that immediately follow: For by that 'tis plain that the Hebrew ſignifies commands, (as it were,) or rule, or direction delivered by them, ſuch as may agree with words; and that is all one with their voice. Others rather think that the Septuagint, reſpecting the ſenſe and not the word, did thus render it paraphraſtically. But Mr. Pocock conceives, from the Arabic uſe of the word, that this very word was antiently uſed by the Hebrews for vociferation. (See his Miſcellan. p. 48.) And St. Paul, according to his manner, writing to thoſe that uſed the Greek Bible in their aſſemblies, recites it as he finds it there, and applies it by accommodation (frequent in theſe writers) to the Goſpel, that voice, or doctrine, of heaven, that is, of God himſelf: And when he ſaith it was "gone out into all the land," that ſeems (as frequently it doth) to belong to the land of Judea, as the bounds or "extreme parts of the earth," may well be the Gentile world: And this to convince the Jews (and repel their objection, ſuppoſed ver. 14. and now anſwered) that the Goſpel was amply revealed to the Jews, both within and without Judea, whereſoever they were in the Gentile cities: For being by the Apoſtles preached, not only in Jeruſalem, and over all the cities of Jury, but alſo in Ceſarea, Joppa, Antioch, Epheſus, Corinth, Philippi, Theſſalonica, Galatia, Laodicea, and Rome it ſelf, and firſt to the Jews in every of thoſe places, it muſt needs, as the influences of the heavens, to which the compariſon is here made, be dilated and extended to all other parts, wherever the Jews were diſperſed; ſo that the Apoſtle may (as he doth) appeal to their own conſciences ("But I ſay, Have they not heard?") whether they did not believe, that the Jews had univerſally heard of it, and conſequently did out of obſtinacy reject, and not remain ignorant of it; which was a full anſwer to their objection of "How ſhall they hear without a preacher?" And an account of the reaſonableneſs of the Apoſtles dealings in forſaking of them that had been thus obdurate. But withal, it may denote, that having begun, and ſo fully performed their duty to them, it is now by conſequence to be expected from them, that they ſhould lift up their voices to the Gentile people themſelves, and preach the Goſpel to them alſo over all the world. (H.)

Them that asked not after me.] That eperotoſi muſt here be rendred enquiring of, not after, (making God the terminus, or perſon to whom the addreſs is made, and not the matter of their queſtion, whom they asked, not concerning whom,) appeareth, 1. By the nature of the word, which literally denotes it; 2. By the uſe of it in all other places; as Matt. xii. 10 (eperoteſan auton,) "They asked him, ſaying," &c. and ſo ch. xvi 1. Mark xi. 29. Luke xvii. 20. and John xviii. 21. 3. By the Hebrew; which from Iſa. lxv. 1. is rendred by it: For that importeth, conſulting; as when one conſulteth the Oracle, or asks counſel of God. Agreeable to which is that of Heſychius, (eroteſometha, pythometha,) rendring it by that word which is ordinarily uſed for conſulting the oracle, and from which Apollo, that gave the Oracles, is called Pytho. For ſo the place belonged in that Prophet to thoſe that were delivered out of Antiochus's hands, at a time when they deſpaired, and hoped not for ſuch a mercy: And that deſpairing, or not hoping, of theirs, is there expreſs'd by "not ſeeking of God," nor conſulting him, nor applying themſelves to him at all for that purpoſe. So Hoſ iv. 12. where we read, "My people ask counſel of their ſtocks," the Greek hath it, They asked at their images. By this, I conceive, may be diſcern'd the meaning of that phraſe, 1 Pet. iii. 21. where Baptiſm is ſaid to be eperotema, which is ordinarily rendred, "The anſwer of a good conſcience toward God;" and otherwiſe, a promiſe, or ſtipulation, or bargain; becauſe thoſe conſiſted (ſaith Theophilus,) of a queſtion, and an agreeable anſwer, and were wont to be made in this form by way of anſwer to a queſtion, thus; Spondes? Spondeo: Dabis? Dabo. Doſt thou promiſe? I do promiſe: Wilt thou give? I will: And ſo the Catechumenus, Doſt thou forſake the devil? &c. I do forſake. (Piſteueis; piſteuo,) Doſt thou believe? I do believe. This interpretation of ſome learned men depends upon a preſumption, that eperotema is an anſwer, not a queſtion; The pretenſe of which is, becauſe eperotomai is rendred by the Gloſſary, promitto, ſpondeo; and eperoto, ſtipulor; which indeed will reaſonably be admitted by a Metonimy; as (in Seneca de beneficiis,) interrogatio is uſed for ſtipulatio; And ſo it may be applicable here; becauſe he that thus comes to God, or any, to deſire directions or counſel from him, is preſumed to promiſe on his part to perform what ſhall be required of him. But then ſtill this ſponſio is not an anſwer, but rather a queſtion; the anſwer being reſponſio, a return to this ſponſio; that is, an agreement between parties (ſymphonos apocriſis in Theophilus;) whereas erotema and eperotema is generally the queſtion, and it is not any more according to analogy, that it ſhould be the anſwer, than that the Latin inquiro, or interrogo, ſhould be the anſwering of a queſtion; which we know is only the asking of it. It may, I ſuppoſe, more regularly be rendred, the queſtion, or addreſs, of a good conſcience to God; as enquiring ſignifies, in our preſent notion, conſulting with, ſeeking to, asking counſel of God, (as in Dorotheus, ſaying, I never permitted my own conceit to perſwade me, without asking ſome other's counſel; and again, Be careful to ask others counſel, and not to be directed by your ſelves) when the true penitent believer comes to God, as to the oracle, to enquire of him for the whole future life, with a "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Or, "Good maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life?" Applying himſelf to God for his direction of all his future actions, and that with a ſincere, upright conſcience, reſolving firmly to do what is there required of him; which reſolution of univerſal ſincere obedience is that which is there ſet oppoſite to (baptiſma ſarcos,) the waſhing of the fleſh, (apotheſis rhypou,) the rinſing of ſullages with the water; which is but the ceremony that ſignified that other, and was not to be thought to avail any, but thoſe that perform'd what was ſignified by it, any more than the circumciſion of a Jew, without the inward purity. According to this it is, that, as Tertullian calls

Baptiſm, ſponſio ſalutis, an undertaking of ſalvation, that is, of the way laid down by God to it, (l. de Bapt.) and (l. de Reſurr. Carnis) Anima non lavatione ſed reſponſione (I ſuppoſe again it ſhould be read ſponſione) ſancitur; The ſoul receives its ſanction, not by waſhing, but by undertaking (for that is the meaning of ſponſio, and accordingly ſponſores and ſuſceptores are all one;) ſo Cyprian expreſly calls it interrogatio Baptiſmi, (Ep. 76, and 80.) the asking, or inquiring of Baptiſm. And this is indeed the peculiar nature of Baptiſm, the ceremony of the Chriſtian's proſelytiſm (his initiation and admiſſion into Chriſt's family) which is (according to the nature of the word proſelytos) his coming unto God as a diſciple, and accordingly it is matheteuſate baptizontes, Mat. xxviii. 19. make diſciples, baptizing; Baptiſm being the ceremony of their entrance on diſcipleſhip. (Idem)

CHAP. XI.

All the Iſraelites not rejected. The blindneſs of the Jews occaſion'd the enlightening of the Gentiles. The Jews are branches broken off; the Gentiles branches grafted in. The Gentiles to take warning at the fall of the Jews. There is a way to mercy yet open for the Jews. God's judgments are unſearchable.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. I Say then, Hath God caſt away his people? God forbid. For I alſo am an Iſraelite of the ſeed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. God hath not caſt away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the Scripture ſaith of Elias? How he maketh interceſſion to God againſt Iſrael, ſaying, Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they ſeek my life. But what ſaith the anſwer of God unto him? I have reſerved to my ſelf ſeven thouſand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal. Even ſo then at this preſent time alſo there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then is it no more of works: Otherwiſe grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: Otherwiſe work is no more work.

His people which he foreknew.] See the notes on ch. viii. 29.

Interceſſion to God againſt.] Entungchanein cata tinos is properly to complain, or commence an accuſation againſt a man; as 1 Mac. viii. 32. x. 61, 63 and xi. 25. (H. and W.)

Thine altars.] Not thoſe which God approv'd of after the building of the Temple; they being then obliged to offer all their ſacrifices "at the place which God had choſen, to put his name there," Deut. xx. 5, 6. But thoſe which had before been uſed, by the Patriarchs and Prophets, for the ſervice of God; as that of Samuel in Ramah, and in Miſpah, 1 Sam. vii. 9. and ix. 13. in Gilgal, ch. xi. 15. at Bethlehem, ch. xvi. 2, 4. and the altar of the Lord at Carmel, 1 Kings xviii. 30. on which the pious people of the Ten Tribes ſacrificed, when they were not permitted to go up to Jeruſalem; that Law, ſaith Kimchi, then ceaſing as to them. (G. and W.)

I am left alone.] Upon this reference to the caſe of Elijah, in 1 Kings xix. 14, &c. we may obſerve, 1. That, in the kingdom of the Ten revolted Tribes of Iſrael, (which in Jeroboam's time was ſo populous, as to afford an army of eight hundred thouſand fighting men at once, againſt the right heir, 2 Chron. xiii. 3. and therefore may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to contain ſeveral millions of ſouls in the whole,) the majority were ſo far alienated from God, notwithſtanding all their wonted zeal for the Law of Moſes, that now, in Ahab's time, (little more than half a century after their revolution) the text mentions no more than ſeven thouſand, who had not lapſed into downright idolatry. 2. That this prodigious lapſe was owing, partly to the indigence and corruption of the Clergy, whom the uſurper had pick'd out of the very loweſt, and meaneſt of the people, 1 Kings xii. 31. xiii. 33. and 2 Chron. xiii. 9. and intruded into the place of the Prieſts of the Lord, (whom he had deprived) as being men who would make undue compliances, "for a piece of ſilver, and a morſel of bread," 1 Sam. ii. 36. and partly through the covetouſneſs of the Laity, who had conſciences large enough to ſwallow all ſuch riches or honours as were the rewards of a time-ſerving profeſſion, and the baits to draw them into that faſhionable and lucrative idolatry. (Stillingfl. and Stubbs) 3. That tho' theſe ſeven thouſand were comparatively ſo few, and they too ſo ſcatter'd and diſpers'd, that they did not know one another, and much leſs could have any opportunities of correſpondence in publick worſhip; yet, by God's thus expreſly owning them, as his remnant, 'tis evident, the truth was with theſe few: For truth is the ſame and changeth not, whether they be few or many who profeſs it; and our Religion ſtandeth not in the multitude of pretending profeſſors, but in a holy doctrine and holy practice, which all ought to follow, even when the moſt do not. (Claget) Whereas, that the truths of Religion are to be eſtimated and carried by the major vote, is an argument to none but Fools, and which I dare ſay, no honeſt and wiſe man ever made uſe of. (Tillotſ.) And, 4. That God often leaves his ſervants nothing but the ſight of thoſe evils and diſorders by which he is diſhonour'd, on purpoſe to exerciſe and try them, and to inflame their zeal. This is an example, full of comfort and conſolation to thoſe who are grieved to ſee the ſmall number of ſuch as declare for truth and righteouſneſs: But more comfortable ſtill, both to thoſe who maintain and defend them, and to thoſe who love them ſo well, as to ſuffer and expoſe themſelves to the greateſt dangers for their ſake. (Q.)

The anſwer of God.] Chrematiſmos properly ſignified the Oracle or Anſwer of God, given from the Mercy-ſeat; yet it is generally taken for any Divine Anſwer or Oracle given by God. (Leigh) See the notes on Acts xi. 26.

To the image of Baal.] The article in the Original is feminine, te Baal: Not that the Heathens believed Baal to be a feminine idol: For, by Baal, as Sanchoniacho, and others, affirm, they meant Phœbus, or the Sun; but the article agrees with icon underſtood, that is, "the image of Baal." (Aſſ.) So it is alſo, Jer. ii. 28. Hoſ. ii. 8. xiii. 1. and Tobit i. 5. And this I prefer before the notion of the learned Selden, that Baal was male and female. (W.)

There is a remnant.] Here we have St. Paul making application of the foregoing example to the preſent caſe. As Eſau was not alone in the corrupt ſtate of Iſrael then, ſo neither was the Apoſtle alone now, in this time of general rejection of the Jewiſh church and nation. As God had a number then, ſo he has a remnant now; which according to his free and gracious purpoſe are brought to believe in his Son: Altho' the Jews who believed were few in compariſon of them that were rejected, called therefore a remnant, which is but ſmall and little in reſpect of the whole piece; yet there were many thouſands of them that did believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and obtained, no doubt, ſalvation by him, Acts xxi. 20. "Thou ſeeſt, brother, how many thouſand Jews there are which do believe." Obſerve farther, The concluſion which the Apoſtle doth infer and draw from the foremention'd aſſertion: If a remnant be ſaved according to the free purpoſe and gracious election of God, then 'tis not upon the conſideration of the merit of their own works; they are not juſtified and accepted for the works of the Law, "otherwiſe grace is no more grace:" For what need is there of grace, where men have continued in all things written in the Law to do them? For "the man that doth thoſe things, ſhall live in them." But on the other hand, "if it be of works" that we are juſtified and accepted, "then it is no more of grace, otherwiſe work is no more work." Learn hence, 1. That ſuch as are choſen in Chriſt to be a people near unto God, are put into this ſtate by mere grace; immerited favours. 2. That grace comes in to ſupply the defect of our works, and to procure pardon for the non-performance of them, according to the tenor of the Law. God was good to man before his fall, in making him his creature: He is gracious to man ſince his fall, in recovering him to the Divine favour, by reſtoring him to the Divine likeneſs. The fabrick of grace in the hearts of his people goes up as did the building of the ſecond Temple, with ſhouts and acclamations, grace, grace; and every ſtone in the building of our ſalvation, from the foundation to the ſuperſtructure, is all free; "Otherwiſe grace is no more grace." (B.) See the notes on ch. ix. 27.

The election of grace.] See the notes on ch. iv. 4, 5.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. What then? Iſrael hath not obtained that which he ſeeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the reſt were blinded: According as it is written, God hath given them the ſpirit of ſlumber, eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear, unto this day. And David ſaith, Let their table be made a ſnare, and a trap, and a ſtumbling-block, and a recompence unto them. Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not ſee, and bow down their back alway. I ſay then, Have they ſtumbled that they ſhould fall? God forbid: But rather through their fall ſalvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealouſy.

Hath not obtained.] See the notes on ch. ix. 30, &c.

The reſt were blinded.] See the notes on Matth. xiii. 14. and John xii. 40.

Given them the ſpirit of ſlumber.] The Hebrew word ſignifies to nod, as that is an effect either of ſleepineſs, or of old age, or again of ſtupor, lethargy, ſenſeleſneſs; and is accordingly rendred (catanuxis) "deep ſleep," Iſa. xxix. 10. from whence this place is cited. So Pſa. lx. 3. oinos catanuxeos is the ſtupifying wine uſed to be given to them that were to be put to death. And ſo Marcus Eremita ſpeaking of drinking wine, adds, the pain of ſtupidity, or intoxication, proceeding from it: But otherwhere it ſignifies not only a deep ſleep, and from thence alſo, ſtupor, or lethargy, among the Rabbins, but alſo aſtoniſhment, and is by the Septuagint rendred deinos phobos, 1 Sam. xxvi. 12. (where yet it ſhould be "a deep ſleep," and ſo the Targum reads it a ſtrong ſleep) and again a trance or extaſy; and ſo, Gen. ii. 21. 'tis rendred (ecſtaſis) extaſy: And ſo, Acts x. 10. (ecſtaſis) extaſy is ſet for a deep ſleep or trance, wherein viſions are received: Aquila renders it in Iſaiah (cataphora) tranſportation; Theotion extaſy, (ecſtaſis,) the Septuagint have (thambos) amazement. By all which it appears, that the word, in its latitude, ſignifies ſuch a ſupine habit of mind as is uſual in the ſtate of lethargy or ſtupidity, a ſtate of ſenſeleſneſs; a ſpirit of ſtupidity, ſaith the Syriac, however acquired, whether from a ſleepy lethargick humour (and ſo it follows here, "Eyes that ſee not," &c.) or elſe from a trance. The word, ſaith Theophylact, properly ſignifies being nailed and faſtened to any thing, and ſo denotes an incurableneſs, an immutableneſs of mind. But this refers to the Attical notion of the word as 'tis rendred compunction, which is not what the Helleniſts underſtood, or uſed it in. (H.) See the notes on Acts x. 10.

Let their table be.] Theſe, and other expreſſions of David, which look like imprecations, may as well be accounted prophetical predictions, foretelling what will come upon obſtinate ſinners, rather than praying that evil may come. Great is the ſin and danger of uſing imprecations lightly, either upon our ſelves or others. Some perſons uſe them to gain credit to what they ſay: But this will not do with wiſe men; who frequently obſerve, that perſons moſt guilty are moſt apt to call for vengeance upon themſelves, that they may be thought guiltleſs. Lord! How do ſome ſinners wiſh and call for that at which the devils tremble! I mean Damnation. Alas! It ſlumbereth not: Within a moment or two they ſhall feel what they will not fear. (B.) But thoſe who are skill'd in the Hebrew tongue know that theſe words are as capable of the future, as of the imperative mood and tenſe. Accordingly, they are rendred in the future by Arias Montanus: And the Seventy Interpreters ſometimes render them in the imperative, and ſometimes in the future. (W.)

Stumbled that they ſhould fall.] The Hebrew word which is rendred by pipto, to fall, often ſignifies to lie along in the poſture of one that is fallen; and accordingly, Exod. xxi. 18. is rendred (cataclineſthaï) to lie along: And ſo verbs are often taken in a ſenſe noting continuance or duration; as to "be born of God," is to live a regenerate or new life. And ſo the context here inclines it; where it cannot be denied that they did fall, and that that was the effect (he ſpeaks not of the intention or deſign) of their ſtumbling. All that can be denied therefore is, that this fall of theirs is to continue for ever: And accordingly he adds, that this their ſtumbling and falling was, if made uſe of, a very proper means as yet to recover them; for the Gentiles being preached to by this means, might very fitly move the Jews to emulation, and ſo recover them from their fall: And this God foreſaw, and had that, among other reaſons, in his wiſdom, why he did permit them to deny Chriſt, and reject the Goſpel. (H.)

Unto the Gentiles.] See the notes on Acts xiii. 45, 46.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminiſhing of them the riches of the Gentiles: How much more their fulneſs? For I ſpeak to you, Gentiles, in as much as I am the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office: If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my fleſh, and might ſave ſome of them. For if the caſting away of them be the reconciling of the world; what ſhall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead? For if the firſt-fruit be holy, the lump is alſo holy: And if the root be holy, ſo are the branches. And if ſome of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive-tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakeſt of the root and fatneſs of the olive-tree; boaſt not againſt the branches: But if thou boaſt, thou beareſt not the root, but the root thee.

The riches of the world.] By riches here the Apoſtle means the knowledge of Chriſt; in whom all the treaſures of riches and knowledge are hid: And by the world, all nations diſperſed throughout the whole world. (Aſſ.)

How much more their fulneſs.] The word pleroma, fulneſs, is a known famous word, uſed by the ancients for the whole body of the congregation or church compacted together, in oppoſition to ſchiſms and breaches in it. So in Meletius, The Governors and Prieſts, with all the fulneſs, (that is, church,) that bears the name of Chriſt. So in Dionyſius Alexandrinus, All the fulneſs of the congregation of Iſrael; from Exod. xii. where the Septuagint read (plethos) multitude. So in St. Baſil's Liturgy, p. 43. Preſerve the fulneſs of the church. And accordingly, being admitted into the church is, by St. Baſil, (Ep. 197. ad Diodor.) and the Fathers, expreſs'd by being received into the Eccleſiaſtick fulneſs; either according to the Hebrew idiom, (from being filled) for collecting and congregating; or perhaps according as Matt. ix. 16. pleroma is the piece put in, whereby the garment, which was before torn, is made whole again. In this ſenſe, I conceive, the word is here to be taken: For the Jews being added to the church, their coming in, or being gathered, and laying hold on the faith (being provoked thereto by ſeeing the Gentiles believe) and ſo filling up the vacuity, as it were, which was formerly in the church, by their ſtanding out impenitently. That this ſhould now ſtill belong to any (yet future) return of the Jews, in a viſible remarkable manner, is no way neceſſary; the circumſtances of the context applying it to thoſe firſt times, wherein the Epiſtle was written: And therefore Origen againſt Celſus, ſpeaking of the Jews, ſaith diſtinctly, We affirm confidently that they ſhall not be reſtored. And St. Chryſoſtome, in his diſcourſe againſt the Jews, denies that they ſhall ever be returned to their country; and cites Joſephus for that opinion, that their deſolation ſhall be perpetual. And ſo Cæſarius, Gregory Nazianzen's brother, being asked of the revocation of the Jews about the end of the world, anſwers reſolutely, I will never be perſwaded that the Jews ſhall be recalled; nor indeed doth the Apoſtle teach any ſuch thing in the words that are well and truly delivered by him, but not rightly underſtood or applied by others. And all this ſeems to have foundation in the expreſs words of Daniel, ch. ix. 27. "He ſhall make it deſolate even to the conſummation." And the Jewiſh writing (called Seder-Olam) affirms the ſame, viz. That after their ſecond ejection out of Canaan, the Jews ſhall never return thither again. Others indeed have been of another opinion, that there ſhall be a viſible calling of the Jews; and ſome of the ancients have join'd thereto the Thouſand years reign of Chriſt upon the earth, and pretended Apoſtolical tradition for it, but have not by the church of God been judged to have any juſt plea to it; undoubtedly cannot deduce it from this place, any farther than this, that if they ſhall repent and believe in Chriſt, they ſhall yet be received into mercy. And as the Jews fulneſs is their coming in to the faith, or the church of Chriſt, ſo likewiſe the fulneſs of the Gentiles, ver. 25. is the Gentiles coming in to the church, receiving the faith; they then becoming one part of the body of the viſible church, as the Jews another. See the note on Luke xxi. 24. And ſo Eph. i. 23. the church, as the body of Chriſt, is called (to pleroma) his fulneſs, in the ſame kind as idion megethos or idion ſomation, the churches greatneſs and body, is uſed by Ignatius in Epiſt. ad Smyrnenſes, of the reſtoring the aſſemblies of the church by a calm which had befallen the Chriſtians in Syria. (H.) As to what has been learnedly argued, for the converſion of the Jewiſh nation to the Chriſtian faith, the inquiſitive reader may find it at large, in Dr. Whitby's Appendix to his Commentary on this Epiſtle.

Apoſtle of the Gentiles.] See the notes on Acts ix. 15.

If the firſt-fruit be holy.] By "the firſt-fruit," and "the root," in theſe words, we are to underſtand the three great progenitors of the Jews, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; chiefly the firſt of them, who, being eminently holy, and dear to God, ſhould derive a bleſſing to his poſterity, on that account, and prevail, at laſt, to have them accepted as holy, and initiated in the favour of God. For, as the whole lump, or maſs of corn, under the Law, was hallow'd by the heave-offering of the firſt-fruits, dedicated to God, (Numb. xv. 20. where the words phyrama, and aparche, uſed by the Apoſtle, are likewiſe employ'd:) As the branches partake of the vigour and vertues of the root, from which they ſpring; ſo the great body of the Jews are accepted in Abraham, and ſanctified by their deſcent from him They cannot therefore be finally rejected, but ſhall, in God's good time, be admitted to partake of all the privileges, and benefits, which belong to that ſacred alliance. And this they ſhall attain to, partly in virtue of the promiſe made by God, when he enter'd into covenant with Abraham, and partly alſo, in virtue of thoſe principles of piety and goodneſs, which they deriv'd from their anceſtors, and from the holy Law of God committed to their cuſtody: Principles, which tho' they might be obſcur'd and buried for a time, yet would afterwards ſpring up, and bring forth fruit, qualifying the heirs of promiſe for thoſe bleſſings to which God had ordain'd them. All this, I apprehend to be within the intention of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe. For, the holineſs he ſpeaks of may be taken in a twofold ſenſe; either for that external or relative holineſs, which belongs to perſons or things offer'd to God, and appropriated particularly to his honour and ſervice; or for thoſe internal graces and qualities of the mind, which ſanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. But theſe St. Paul ſeems to point at in the words before us; and has, therefore, purpoſely, (if I miſtake not) illuſtrated his argument by two ſuch inſtances as refer diſtinctly to each of them: For the holineſs of the firſt-fruits and the lump, is an holineſs merely of inſtitution outward and nominal; whereas by the holineſs of the root and the branches, is to be underſtood an holineſs of nature inherent and real; That the holineſs of the Patriarch, ſhould in both ſenſes of that word, extend it ſelf to their progeny, and ſhould one day viſibly reſt upon all the Tribes of Iſrael; who, as, by vertue of their relation to Abraham, they were ſtill nearly related to God, and particularly dear to him, ſo ſhould they likewiſe inherit, and, in God's appointed time, exert the faith and vertues of Abraham, and, by that means, render themſelves every way objects of the divine favour and benediction: "For, If the firſt fruit be holy, the lump is alſo holy; and if the root be holy, ſo are the branches." (Atterb.)

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Thou wilt ſay then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in. Well; becauſe of unbelief they were broken off, and thou ſtandeſt by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear. For if God ſpared not the natural branches, take heed leſt he alſo ſpare not thee. Behold therefore the goodneſs, and ſeverity of God: On them which fell, ſeverity; but towards thee, goodneſs, if thou continue in his goodneſs: Otherwiſe thou alſo ſhalt be cut off. And they alſo, if they bide not ſtill in unbelief, ſhall be graffed in: For God is able to graff them in again. For if thou wert cut out of the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive-tree; how much more ſhall theſe which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive-tree?

Be not high-minded, but fear.] By fear, the Apoſtle doth not here mean that of diffidence or diſtruſt, but that of watchfulneſs or circumſpection. (Aſſ.) Tho' the Gentiles, through rich grace, were inſtated in the privileges of the Jews, yet the Apoſtle foreſaw, that inſtead of thankfulneſs to God, for the favours received from him, they would be puffed up with pride; and accordingly he adviſes them not to be high-minded, but fear: As if he had ſaid, O ye Gentiles, your ſtate is high, let your hearts be humble: The Jews are fallen, and unleſs ye walk in holy fear, ye cannot ſtand: Unbelief ruined them, take heed that pride doth not ruin you, for the juſt and holy God is no reſpecter of perſons: He that ſpareth not the natural branches, will no more ſpare thee. From the whole, Learn, 1. That man is naturally a very proud creature; and altho' he has nothing but what he has freely received, yet is prone to boaſt. 2. That man is eſpecially apt to magnify himſelf, and to glory over thoſe who are fallen before him, either into ſin, or under affliction. 3. That the beſt preſervative from falling, is humility, and holy fear. If ever we ſtand in the day of trial, it is the fear of falling muſt enable us to ſtand: Take heed ye do not fall, by thinking it impoſſible to fall. "Be not high-minded, but fear." Timor tuus, Securitas tua: Thy holy fear will keep thee from falling, when others ſecurity and preſumption will lay them on the ground. Let not a man that ſtands on the top of a tree boaſt of his height, but look to his hold. (B.)

The natural branches.] He calleth them natural, not as if they had any holineſs by nature, but becauſe they were born of thoſe whom the Lord had freely ſet apart for himſelf from other nations. (Aſſ.)

The goodneſs and ſeverity.] Our Apoſtle, in theſe and the following verſes, proceeds in his exhortation to the Gentiles, not to inſult over the rejected Jews, but to carry it towards them with great modeſty and Chriſtian humility; and he uſeth ſeveral arguments by way of motive to excite and quicken them thereunto. The two firſt are drawn from the ſeverity of God in cutting off the Jews, and the goodneſs and bounty of God in calling of the Gentiles: "Behold the goodneſs and ſeverity of God," &c. Juſtice and mercy, goodneſs and ſeverity, are attributes, or qualities eminently found in God; and contrary only in their effects upon men. The ſame God is merciful and ſevere, with reſpect to different perſons, and differing qualifications: All mercy is not a virtue, but that which is conſiſtent with other perfections of wiſdom and righteouſneſs. The next argument is taken from the condition upon which the Gentiles hold their preſent ſtanding in the favour and grace of God; namely, "If they continue in his goodneſs:" That is, if they walk worthy of this favour from God, and ſuitably to ſuch a kind and gracious diſpenſation; otherwiſe they, the Gentiles, ſhall be cut off and caſt away, as well as the ſtubborn and unbelieving Jews. The Lord is with a people only whilſt they are with him: If they ſerve and ſeek him, he will be found of them; but if they forſake him, he will caſt them off for ever. The next argument to ſuppreſs arrogancy and pride in the Gentiles, and to prevent their inſulting over the fallen Jews, is taken from the hopes of the Jews reſtoration; which the Apoſtle proves to be both poſſible and probable. "They ſhall be graffed in, if they abide not in unbelief; for God is able to graff them in again." As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, The ſame God that rejected them, is able to reſtore them, and re-ingraff them; the only obſtacle is their unbelief, and this God is alſo able to remove. Laſtly, he ſhews the probability as well as the poſſibility of the Jews converſion; namely, becauſe God had done that which was more unlikely already; to wit, in graffing the Gentiles, who were wild olives, into the true olive, which was more difficult and unlikely, than to graff in the Jews again, which were natural branches. The argument runs thus: If the Gentiles, which were a kind of wild olive branches, were graffed into a good olive-tree, (the church of God) which is contrary to nature, ſeeing men uſe to graff a good cion into a wild ſtock, and not a wild cion into a good ſtock; how much more ſhall the Jews, which are the natural branches of the good olive, be graffed again into their own olive tree, to which they formerly did belong? The one is according to the order of nature, but the other is againſt and contrary to nature. Learn hence, How improbable and unlikely, how difficult and impoſſible ſoever, the converſion and calling of the Jews to the Chriſtian religion may ſeem to us, it is neither contrary to right reaſon nor true faith. The greateſt obſtacle in the way of the Jews converſion to Chriſtianity, it is to be feared, lies in the wicked and ſcandalous lives of thoſe that call themſelves Chriſtians. (B.) The Greek word, apotomia, which is here tranſlated ſeverity, ſignifies a cutting off: And the metaphor ſeems to be taken from a Gardener, who, with a pruning-knife, cuts off dead boughs, or luxuriant ſtems. (Aſſ. and Leigh) Or from chirurgical operations, when a limb which is infected is cut off from the body. (G.)

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. For I would not, brethren, that ye ſhould be ignorant of this myſtery (leſt ye ſhould be wiſe in your own conceits) that blindneſs in part is happened to Iſrael, until the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in. And ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: As it is written, There ſhall come out of Sion the deliverer, and ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them, when I ſhall take away their ſins. As concerning the goſpel, they are enemies for your ſake: But as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers ſakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. For as ye in times paſt have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief: Even ſo have theſe alſo now not believed, that through your mercy they alſo may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! How unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counſeller? Or who hath firſt given to him, and it ſhall be recompenſed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him are all things: To whom be glory for ever. Amen.

Of this myſtery.] This Greek word, Myſterion, is moſt generally underſtood of every ſecret; and leſs generally, for the ſecrets of God; But, in a more ſpecial ſignification, it is taken for ſuch a divine ſecret, as is propoſed and repreſented by ſymbols, ſigns, and outward figures. In this ſenſe it anſwers to the Latin word Sacramentum. Some thus define it to be a religious ſecret, not obvious to the capacity of every underſtanding, requiring ſome extraordinary afflatus to the conceiving of it: Such as "the myſtery of Chriſt," Epheſ. iii. 4. "the myſtery of Godlineſs," 1 Tim. iii. 16. and "the myſteries of the kingdom of Heaven," Matth. xiii. 11. and ſuch like. Sometimes it is applied to things which in themſelves are open, when only the reaſon of the thing is ſecret: Thus here, the rejection of the Jews is a myſtery. Sometimes again, things have that appellation, for the coverture of the allegorical expreſſion; as Eph. v. 32. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 7. The vulgar Latin, three or four times, renders it a ſacrament; as Eph. v. 32. and elſewhere: Which tranſlation firſt led the Papiſts into that error, to make marriage a ſacrament. But the word ſacrament hath as large an extent as myſtery: And beſides, the ſame verſion it ſelf hath, in other places, tranſlated it myſtery, or ſecret, as we do, Eph. vi. 19. Col. i. 26. (Leigh) See the notes on Eph. v. 32.

Wiſe in your own conceits] That is, Leſt ye ſhould think your ſelves to be ſo wiſe, as to foreknow things which are to come hereafter. (G.)

Fulneſs of the Gentiles.] See the notes on ver. 12.

Turn away ungodlineſs.] St. Paul, as his manner is, cites the words of the Septuagint tranſlation, wherein they have a ſenſe very commodious, and moſt agreeable to the context here, that many of the Jews ſhall, by God's grace, and wiſe methods uſed toward them, be reformed and converted: But beſide this, it will be moſt reaſonable, to enlarge them alſo, and interpret them, according to the original notation of the Hebrew, that God will take care for the delivering of them who thus return and repent. As for the truth of that which is here concluded from this citation, that as yet many more Jews ſhould repent, and receive the Goſpel, that hath been demonſtrated by the event, 1. When the Jews ſaw Chriſt's predictions, Mat. 24. manifeſtly fulfilled, in the Roman armies ſitting down before the city: For then many turned Chriſtians, and went out of the city, and were delivered from the following evils: 2. After that, when the temple and the city were deſtroyed, and they brought in ſubjection by the Romans, then many were humbled and turned Chriſtians: And 3. After that alſo, in Juſtin Martyr's days, every day there were ſome that came in to be Chriſt's diſciples; which is the cauſe of the ſealing ſo many of every tribe, Revel. vii. 4. anſwerable to Ezek. ix. 4. and is the meaning of their eſcaping here. (H. and G.)

Without repentance.] Ametameleta; Such as God never repenteth the beſtowing them. (Leigh) See the notes on ch. iii. 3.

Have not believed God.] Epeitheſate to Theo. The Greek word apeitheo ſignifies both not to believe, as it is here render'd in our verſion, and not to obey, as it is in the margin: But the former is moſt proper here; becauſe, tho' he who believeth not is diſobedient, yet diſobedience is not always accompanied with infidelity. (Willet)

O the depth.] Here the Apoſtle crieth out, as being aſtoniſh'd with the wonderful wiſdom of God; which he teacheth us religiouſly to reverence, and not curiouſly and prophanely to ſearch beyond the compaſs of that which God hath revealed to us in his word. (Aſſ.)

How unſearchable.] There are myſteries of providence, as well as myſteries of faith; and both of them tranſcend our human underſtanding. (B.)

Of him, and through him, and to him.] That is, All things are of God, as the author and efficient cauſe: All things are through him, as the providential director, and preſerving cauſe; and all things tend to him, as the ultimate end and final cauſe. Therefore to him all praiſe, honour and glory ought for ever to be aſcribed. (Idem) Whatever we have, nay, whatever we are; As at firſt we had it all from him, ſo we ſtill hold it all of him; and that jure beneficiario, as feudatories, with reſervation of ſervices out of the ſame, to be perform'd for the honour of the Donor. Our Apoſtle therefore, in our Lord's behalf, preſſes us with the nature of our tenure, and challengeth this duty from us by a claim of right; "Ye have them of God, (ſaith he) and ye are not your own: Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are God's." 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20. Glorify him in both, becauſe both are his. As "the rivers return again to the place whence they came, Eccleſ. i. 7. they all come from the ſea, and they all run into the ſea again:" So, all our ſtore, as it iſſued at firſt from the fountain of his grace, ſo ſhould it all fall at laſt into the ocean of his glory. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on John iii. 1.

C H A P. XII.

The Apoſtle here proceeds to the application of his foregoing doctrine; exhorting them to ſeveral religious and moral duties, as an argument of their ſincerity, and an ornament of their profeſſion.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. I Beſeech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God which is your reaſonable ſervice. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. For I ſay, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think; but to think ſoberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the meaſure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the ſame office: So we being many are one body in Chriſt, and every one members one of another.

I beſeech you therefore.] Since the goodneſs of God is ſo exceeding great, as the former part of this Epiſtle hath ſhew'd, (in making all men capable of ſalvation by the righteouſneſs of faith, delivering us from the rigour and bondage of the law, and admitting Gentiles, as well as Jews, to be partakers of the Goſpel-Covenant,) let me conjure you, by this goodneſs, to offer and dedicate to God your perſons, a living (inſtead of the former dead) ſacrifice, a pure and holy (as thoſe were without blemiſh,) and exceptable, for its own ſake, which theſe were not: For this will be an oblation of rational, as thoſe were of brute and irrational creatures, and proceeds upon rational motives. (Stanh.)

By the mercies of God.] By this phraſe we may underſtand not only all thoſe things which the ancients compriſed under thoſe three heads, of, 1. The goods of fortune; as our eſtates, and enjoyments in the world, which make our lives a bleſſing, and without which to live, would be at preſent to be miſerable: 2. The goods of the body; as health, ſtrength, perfection, and due proportion of parts: And, 3. The goods of the mind; as the uſe of all our faculties, whereby we are able to reaſon, diſcourſe and diſtinguiſh between good and evil, and make proviſion againſt preſent and future exigencies; all which are ſo valuable, that we know not what price to ſet upon them, and the want of any one of 'em would neceſſarily infer the preſence of ſome great evil: But theſe mercies here include alſo thoſe good and perfect gifts, which come down from the Father of lights; and particularly the redemption of the world; and that by a price of ineſtimable value. And when, after all, we have liv'd unſuitable to his mercies, that he ſhould yet continue the means of grace, and tenders of ſalvation, and purſue us with all the glorious propoſals of bliſs and happineſs! That he ſhould ſtrive with us, by natural conſcience, the motions and whiſpers of the bleſſed Spirit, as if he reſolv'd to take no denial, but would even force himſelf and eternal glories on us! Theſe are mercies of the greateſt magnitude, the moſt winning endearments, that love and kindneſs can lay upon us: Obligations, that ſhould make us pliable to all the ſignifications of the divine will, and to turn our hands and hearts to every duty; eſpecially conſidering the great deſign of them is both to oblige, and alſo to enable us, to a pious and a holy life, for which cauſe the Apoſtle argues from them to the duty before us. (Baſſet) For, the mercies of God, reveal'd in the Goſpel, are the moſt proper, powerful, and effectual argument, to perſwade and prevail upon, ſinners, who have not yet given up and devoted themſelves to God to do it; and thoſe who have done it, to do it ſtill more and more. (B)

Preſent your bodies.] By "ſin reigning in our mortal bodies," and by obeying the motions of it in our actions, we are ſaid to preſent "the members of our bodies inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs to ſin," ch. vi. 12, 13. And therefore the Apoſtle doth here properly exhort us to preſent the ſame bodies now "a living ſacrifice," in oppoſition to the legal ſacrifices; which were firſt ſlain, and then offer'd up to God upon the altar: Viz. By being now "dead unto ſin, but alive unto God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord:" An holy ſacrifice, as being conſecrated to the ſervice of God, and "having our fruit unto holineſs," as the ſervants of God ſtill have, ch. vi. 11, 22. And as the ſacrifices offer'd to God were to be free from any ſpot and blemiſh, and ſo holy; ſo are our bodies made "a holy ſacrifice," when they are kept in ſanctification and honour, and free from all filthineſs of the fleſh, and ſo a ſacrifice acceptable, and well-pleaſing to that God, who "deſired not the legal ſacrifices, nor delighted in burnt-offerings," Pſa. li. 16. and Hebr. x. 8. And this, ſaith he, is not as the ſacrifices of the law, of dead and unreaſonable beaſts, which was bodily ſervice, or that in which the body chiefly was imploy'd; but it is logice latreia, a ſacrifice of our reaſon, devoting our ſelves, who are rational creatures, to his ſervice, and alſo is highly ſuitable to our reaſon. (W.) In this divine lecture of morality, the members of the ſeveral periods anſwer one another with a very agreeable variety of ſentiments and chriſtian doctrines, deliver'd in a few pure and proper words; and a wonderful ſmoothneſs and equality of numbers without nicety or affectation, eaſier than Iſocrates, rapid and vehement as Demoſthenes. The great eloquence of this chapter, and its quick and accurate turns, the excellent critic St. Auſtin admires; and after him Eraſmus, who ſays, in concluſion of his juſt encomium, that no muſick can be ſweeter. (Blackw.)

Your reaſonable ſervice.] What notion of logike lateria (which we have rendred "rational ſervice,") is here to be faſtned on, is not eaſy to determine. It may poſſibly be ſuch as will be agreeable to the notion of ho Logos, The Word, as it ſignifies Chriſt; and then 'tis the Chriſtian ſervice. It may be logos ſignifies the Word or Scripture, and then 'twill be that worſhip which is preſcribed to us in the Scripture: And ſo the Syriac ſeems to underſtand it, According to the mouth of the word; that is, ſuch as the word preſcribes. It may be alſo as logos, Word, is oppoſed to nomos, Law; and then 'twill be the evangelical worſhip. And once more, it may note ſuch a worſhip of God as is moſt agreeable to reaſon; and ſuch as a rational man will reſolve to be moſt agreeable to ſo excellent and pure a Deity. But the circumſtances of the place, and oppoſition to the ſacrifices of the law (the beaſts that were offered there,) ſeem to reſtrain it to the vulgar and ordinary notion of, logike, rational, in oppoſition to the irrational ſacrifices under the law, as, zoſa, living, before, to the dead bodies among them. Thus is the table of Chriſt called by Theodoret (logike trapeza,) rationalis menſa, (Serm. 6. de Provid.) that is, the table, or altar, where we offer up our ſelves, our ſouls and bodies, to be a reaſonable, holy, and lively ſacrifice unto God, inſtead of thoſe tables or altars on which the beaſts were offered. Thus in Hermes in Pœmandro, in the Hymn, or Eulogion, which cloſes the book, this prayer is to be found, Receive theſe rational ſacrifices. Thus, I conceive, may (logikon gala) rational milk, 1 Pet. ii. 2. be rendred alſo, not that milk of cattle, which mens bodies are wont to be fed with, but this rational milk by which mens ſouls are improved; to wit, inſtruction, or Chriſtian doctrine: And thus the ancient Latin tranſlation hath rendred it in both places. (H.)

Be not conformed to this world.] Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle's dehortation: As if he had ſaid, Do not faſhion, or accommodate your ſelves to the corrupt principles and cuſtoms, to the ſinful courſes and practices of the men of the world. The Chriſtian is to walk ſingularly, and not after the world's guiſe: He muſt not ſuit his profeſſion according to the faſhion of the times, or the humour of the company he falls into. 2. An apoſtolical exhortation; "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind:" That is, Be ye regenerated and changed in your whole man; beginning at the mind or underſtanding, by which the Spirit of God worketh upon the inferior faculties of the ſoul. Every converted perſon is truly and really changed, thorowly ſanctified and renewed, endowed with new diſpoſitions and affections: Yet this converſion and renovation is not a ſubſtantial, but a qualitative change; a change not in the ſubſtance of the faculties of the ſoul, but in the quality of thoſe faculties. And the renewed Chriſtian is ſanctified totus, but not totaliter; he is ſanctified thorowly in all faculties, but not perfectly in all degrees. There is in a renewed man's underſtanding too much blindneſs and ignorance, in his will too great obſtinacy and perverſeneſs, in his affection too much irregularity and ſenſuality: Yet ſuch is the indulgence of the Goſpel, as to call him an holy perſon, a perſon transformed by the renewing of his mind. 3. The reaſon of the Apoſtle's exhortation, "Be ye transformed, &c. that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God:" That is, that ye may diſcern and approve what the will of God is under the Goſpel, which requires not what is ritually, but what is ſubſtantially good, and conſequently always acceptable to him. Note here, That in oppoſition to the Levitical ceremonies and ritual injunctions, the Apoſtle ſtiles the Goſpel-inſtitution "the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God;" and as ſuch may we love to embrace it, and be found in the delightful practice of it. (B.) Here St. Paul paſſes from the ſacrifice of the body, to that of the mind; the firſt degree whereof is the renouncing the corruption of the world. All morality is compriſed in theſe two expreſſions; not to be "conformed to this world," by concupiſcence; and to "be transformed" into Jeſus Chriſt by charity; that is, to renounce the maxims of the world, and to embrace the precepts of the Goſpel. Concupiſcence is blind, and blinds the world. Whoever refers himſelf to the judgment of the world, concerning the truth of religion, the rules of morality, the knowledge of the laws and ways of God, cannot fail of being deceived. Faith and charity are full of light: And it is by the aſſiſtance of their light that we muſt ſtudy religion, and ſeek after the "will of God;" good, that is to ſay, the religion and the myſteries of Jeſus Chriſt, which faith diſcovers in the ceremonies of the law; acceptable, that is, the victim, of whom the hope and the promiſes were given by the ſacrifices of the law; and perfect, that is to ſay, the fulfilling of the law by charity, which the precepts of the law oblige us to ask and ſeek for in Jeſus Chriſt. Obſerve here three degrees of grace; for the weak, for the more advanc'd, and for the moſt perfect. We muſt be faithful in ſeeking and doing the will of God, every one in his degree, and according to his meaſure. (Q.)

Through the grace given unto me.] By grace here he means his Apoſtolical office, freely beſtow'd upon him; as the ſame word charis is alſo uſed; ch. i. 5. (Aſſ. Fell, Bever. Stanh. and W.)

Not to think of himſelf more highly.] The Apoſtle, having exhorted to an holy life in general, ver. 1. and to ſpiritual renovation of mind, in order to it, ver. 2. comes now to a cloſe exhortation to more particular duties; the firſt of which is modeſty and true humility of mind. This he recommends, eſpecially to ſuch who bear any publick office in the church, and had received ſome peculiar and ſpecial gifts to fit and furniſh them for the diſcharge of that office. St. Paul here particularly enjoins them, by virtue of his Apoſtolick office, to watch againſt pride and haughtineſs of mind; not to think themſelves wiſer or better than they are, but to think ſoberly and modeſtly of themſelves, according to the truth, and to the degree of faith and wiſdom given unto them of God: Plainly intimating, that ſuch as are exalted to a degree of eminency in the Church above others, are in great danger of the ſin of pride; which it is their duty to watch and pray againſt, and to be found in the exerciſe of that humility and lowlineſs of mind, which is ſo greatly ornamental to their perſons and profeſſion. "Let not any think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think, but let him think ſoberly." (B.) Which words afford us, i. An information, what great cauſe we have, not to be proud, either, 1. Of ſtrength, Jer. ix. 23. wherein, at beſt, the very beaſts excel us; and whereof we may each moment be deprived, Iſa. ii. 22. Or, 2. Of riches; which cannot make us happy, but may keep us from happineſs, Matth. xix. 23. and which we muſt part with before we can be happy: Or, 3. Of honours; which depend upon the thoughts of others; and may deprive us of true honours, John xii. 43 And ii. An exhortation, to ſteady humility, 1 Pet. v. 5. And that not only towards God, Mic. vi. 8. Iſa. lvii. 17. and lxvi. 2. conſidering, how many ſecret ſins we are guilty of, Pſa. xix. 12. and how many ſins we know our ſelves actually defiled with, Iſa. i. 5, 6. But towards men; conſidering, 1. That we know not, but they may be better, and more dear to God, than our ſelves, Rom. xiv. 3, 4. Phil. ii. 3. 2. If we excel them in ſome things, they may excel us in others, Rom. xii. 4. And, 3. That the more proud we are, the leſs cauſe we have to be ſo proud; pride cauſing both diviſion among men, Prov. xiii. 10. and ſeparation from God, 1 Pet. v. 5. (Bever.) In three words of the original Greek we have here a moſt elegant paranomaſia; all of the like ſound, hyperphronein, phronein, and ſophronein, and which cannot be expreſs'd in any other language: And the Greek Scholiaſt thereupon obſerves, That the Apoſtle ſometimes uſeth choice figures of Rhetoric, to ſhew, that he was not ignorant of that art; and yet not too frequently, that he might retain the ſimplicity and majeſty of his Apoſtolic ſtyle. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 16. and ch. xi. 20.

To every man the meaſure.] Thus the Levites ought not to arrogate to themſelves what properly belongs to the Prieſt's office. Againſt this precept Diotrephes offended, 3 John 9. And ſo do all the authors of ſchiſms. In the primitive church, the gifts were according to faith, and the miniſtry according to the gifts: For they were elected, without favour, without ſolicitation, without frauds, by the directing influence of the Holy Ghoſt. (G.) See the notes on ver. 6. and Luke xix. 13.

One body in Chriſt.] Here the Apoſtle lays before us a ſpecial reaſon, why the officers of the church ſhould exerciſe humility towards, and employ their gifts and talents for, the general good and benefit of the church; and the argument is drawn from a compariſon between the natural body and the myſtical body. As in the natural body there are "many members," and every member has its diſtinct office; the eye to ſee, the ear to hear, the hand to work, the foot to walk: In like manner, in the myſtical body, the church of Chriſt, there are many members, but each member muſt keep his own place, and not invade the duty, or uſurp the office of another, but every one employ his own proper gift to the benefit and comfort of the whole, without diſdaining or envying one another. Learn hence, 1. That the church of Chriſt is "one body." 2. That tho' the body of the church be one, and the head one, yet the members are many, united to Chriſt their head by faith, and to one another by love. 3. That all believers, which are members of this body, have every one his particular gift, his ſeveral function, his proper office; which they are duly to execute and perform, without incroaching upon others by proud curioſity or buſy meddling: But as all the members of the body labour jointly together for the preſervation of the whole, ſo ought all the officers and members of the church to keep their diſtinct ſtations, and employ and improve regularly the ſeveral talents for the mutual edification and benefit of each other, without encroachment, or intruding upon the offices of each other. God is a God of order, and hates diſorder in his church. (B.) The nature of this union, and the mutual relation declared here, will be beſt diſcern'd, by the ſeveral paſſages of Scripture, making mention of it; the principal whereof, beſides this, are 1 Cor. x. 16, 17. xi 3. and xii. 12, 13, 14, 27. Eph. i. 22, 23. iii. 6. iv. 4, 5, 6, 15, 16, 25. and v. 23, 30. and Col. i. 18. and ii. 19. From all which compared together, we may the more eaſily infer, 1. That this, above all other alluſions, was intended to figure the inſeparable intereſt we have, in our bleſſed Lord, and in one another. It ſcarce leaves us the liberty, (which all the other alluſions elſewhere do) of conſidering our ſelves, any longer, as diſtinct perſons: It preſents us with an image, of every one, thus cemented, being a part of Chriſt, and every Chriſtian a part of our own ſelves; as if He without us, and we without them, muſt want that perfection of being, which the nature of a body requires. 2. That therefore this union is peculiar to Chriſtians; and from hence it is, that we find the church ſo often mention'd as Chriſt's body. Conſequently, as they who are not of the church, are not of the body; ſo what methods ſoever thoſe be, which have been inſtituted, as inſtruments and means for grafting men into, or ſignifying their continuance and common rights in, the congregation of Chriſtians, the ſame do make them members of, and the denial, or the want, of the ſame, do exclude them from any part in, this body. Hence it comes to paſs, 3. That, in the paſſages above referr'd to, we find ſuch expreſs mention, not only of the ſame principles of religion, the ſame laws, the ſame privileges of grace, the ſame hopes of glory; but of the ſame Sacraments too: For theſe are neceſſary atteſtations of our confeſſing, and ſubmitting to the former, and inſtruments entitling us to a reaſonable expectance of the latter; nor indeed can any thing leſs than this be the meaning of thoſe texts, "One Lord, one faith, one baptiſm," Eph. iv. 5. "By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit," 1 Cor. xii. 13. and, "We, being many, are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread," ch. x. 17. So vain and preſumptuous is the deluſion of thoſe, who, becauſe they call Chriſt Lord, and profeſs to believe the doctrine he hath taught, arrogate to themſelves the name and privileges of Chriſtians, without that initiating ſacrament of Baptiſm, which he hath ordain'd, as the inſtrument of making them members of his viſible body: And ſo profane, ſo pernicious, is the neglect of that other confirming Sacrament, the bleſſed Supper of our Lord; ordain'd by him likewiſe for their ſtrength and nouriſhment, and neceſſary to preſerve them true members of his inviſible body. For, 4. 'Tis one thing to have the appearance and external privileges, and another to diſcharge the part, and attain all the benefits of this union. Hence 'tis evident, 5. That a very conſiderable difference is to be made, between the ſeveral inſtances of union, mention'd and recommended in Scripture. Some of theſe are abſolutely neceſſary to the being; others enjoin'd, as expedient to the growth, and well-being, of this body. Of the former ſort are, ſubmitting to the ſame Lord, agreeing in the fundamentals of the ſame faith, and, as a mark of this ſubmiſſion and agreement, adminiſtration of the ſame Sacraments: Of the latter, that holineſs of life, that exemplarineſs of practice, that mutual charity and concord, that peaceableneſs and order, that conſent in diſcipline, that ready compliance in all lawful matters, which, tho' not eſſential, ſhall yet (by the conſtitution of particular churches, and the judgment of perſons, thought proper to give rules in ſuch caſes) be enjoin'd, as proper for decency and edification. And this authority, being derived from our Lord upon his Apoſtles, and from them upon their ſucceſſors in the government of this ſociety ſo incorporated; the contempt of it is a contempt of him; a breach of that union, which every Chriſtian is bound to preſerve, under all the penalty, which thoſe declarations of our Maſter can be ſuppoſed to involve every wilful violater of it in; "As my Father hath ſent me, even ſo ſend I you," John xx. 21. and "He that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me; and he that deſpiſeth me deſpiſeth him that ſent me," Luke x. 16. But that part of this union, which we are more eſpecially concern'd to obſerve, is, 6. That between all theſe members and Chriſt; whom we find, in the texts above referr'd to, repreſented as their common Head: And this very fitly, 1. As that implies dignity of ſtation, ſuperiority of place, and preeminence over the reſt of the body; in which reſpect the Apoſtle ſeems to have intended that noble deſcription of Chriſt's excellencies, Col. i. 15, 18, 19. 2. In reſpect of the ſaving influences, and perpetual communications, deriv'd down from thence upon the body; according to the ſame deſcription, ch. ii. 19. and John i. 16. and xv. 4, 5. 3. With regard to Chriſt's right of directing and governing; according to Eph. v. 23, 24. And, 4. With regard to his care for, protection of, and inſeparable conjunction with, his members; on which account he is term'd, "the Saviour of the body," and "the nouriſher and cheriſher of the church," Eph. v. 23, 29. and thoſe who perſecute the church, are accuſed of perſecuting Him, Acts ix. 4. (Stanh.) The obligations ariſing from hence, upon the parties thus united and related, are briefly intimated here, on ver. 6. but may be learnt at large from the ſame Dr. Stanhope's Comment upon this text, (1 Sunday after Epiph.) to which I muſt refer the reader.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Having then gifts, differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether propheſy, let us propheſy according to the proportion of faith: Or miniſtry, let us wait on our miniſtring; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: He that giveth, let him do it with ſimplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that ſheweth mercy, with cheerfulneſs. Let love be without diſſimulation. Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another; with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another: Not ſlothful in buſineſs: Fervent in ſpirit; ſerving the Lord: Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing inſtant in prayer: Diſtributing to the neceſſity of ſaints; given to hoſpitality. Bleſs them which perſecute you: Bleſs, and curſe not. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. Be of the ſame mind one towards another. Mind not high things, but condeſcend to men of low eſtate. Be not wiſe in your own conceits.

Having then gifts, differing.] The various gifts here mention'd, are more fully reckon'd up, and the ſame matter more largely diſcourſed of, 1 Cor. xii. and xiv. that Epiſtle having been written not long before this. (Fell) As the former part of this chapter contains ſome of the obligations ariſing from the union there mention'd, (viz. The mortification of our ſenſual appetites, ver. 1. Newneſs of heart and life, ver. 2. And Humility, ver 3.) ſo this part contains a great many more; viz. 1. Contentedneſs in our ſtation: And, 2. Diligence in our proper buſineſs, ver. 6, 7, 8, 11. 3. Mutual love and reſpect, ver. 9, 10, 16. 4. A tender concern for the proſperous and adverſe fortunes of our Fellow-Chriſtians, ver. 13, 15. 5. Unity in matters of religion, ver. 15, 16. And, 6. Conſtancy and meekneſs under perſecutions and wrongs, ver. 12, and 14. As to the firſt of which it ſeems very probable, that the gifts, more directly aim'd at by the Apoſtle, are thoſe extraordinary aſſiſtances of the Holy Ghoſt, vouchſafed to Chriſtians in the infancy of the church, as at that time neceſſary evidences of the truth, and fitted for the more ſucceſsful propagation of the Goſpel: Yet are not thoſe arguments either in the Apoſtle's deſign, or in the nature of the thing, ſo confined to thoſe extraordinary gifts, as not, with great force and clearneſs of reaſon, to extend to all ages and conditions of Chriſtianity, when left to the ordinary methods of grace, by which it now ſubſiſts. (Stanh.) As if our Apoſtle had ſaid, Seeing it has pleaſed God to appoint diſtinct officers in his church, and to furniſh thoſe officers with various degrees of gifts, and not to make all equal either in gifts or office, let every one in general faithfully execute his office, and keep within the limits of his calling, neither neglecting his own duty, nor invading another's: In particular, Let him that propheſieth, that is, expoundeth the Scriptures in the church, do it "according to the proportion of faith," or according to what is taught plainly and uniformly in the whole Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament, as the rule of our faith: We muſt not wrack nor wreſt the Scriptures, to make them ſpeak what we pleaſe, but what the Prophets and Apoſtles taught, whom we interpret; otherwiſe we do not expound according to the analogy and proportion of faith. Let him that miniſtreth, teacheth, or exhorteth, attend upon that work with all diligence; and he that performs the office of a deacon, (who are called helps, 1 Cor. xii. 28.) and is employed to relieve the poor out of the church's ſtock, and to take care of ſtrangers, orphans, aged, ſick, and impotent perſons, "Let them do it with ſimplicity," that is, without partiality and reſpect of perſons; And "with chearfulneſs," that is, with alacrity of heart, with gentleneſs in words, with pleaſantneſs in countenance, bearing with the infirmities of the aged, with the loathſomeneſs of the ſick and diſeaſed, and adminiſtring with delight to the neceſſities of all that want. Now from the whole, note, 1. That God, of his free bounty, has beautified his church with divers offices and gifts. 2. That thoſe whom God has beſtowed miniſterial gifts upon, ought humbly and faithfully to improve them to the church's benefit and edification. (B.)

Whether propheſy, let us propheſy.] By prophecy, we are not here to underſtand the extraordinary gift of foretelling things future, but the gift of expounding the holy Scriptures, (as before is noted, and) as the Apoſtle himſelf declareth the meaning of the word, 1 Cor. xiv. 3. (Aſſ.) And hence "the gift of prophecy" is explain'd by "underſtanding all myſteries, and all knowledge," 1 Cor. xiii. 2. that is, the moſt dark and difficult places of Scripture, the types and figures, the ceremonies and prophecies of the Old Teſtament. And thus we are commonly to underſtand thoſe words, prophets, and propheſying, which ſo familiarly occur in the New Teſtament. (Cave)

According to the proportion of faith.] Some think, that "the meaſure of faith," ver. 3. and "the proportion of faith" here, are expreſſions of the ſame import, and ſignify the proportion or meaſure of ſpiritual gifts beſtow'd in the Apoſtles times upon men, upon their faith, or believing the Goſpel; which were more or fewer, according as they fitted and prepared themſelves for the receiving of them. There is another ſenſe of this place, which tho' it might not be intended by the Apoſtle; yet, becauſe it is in it ſelf an excellent rule for interpreting the Scriptures, I think it may be of uſe to mention it. It is that of thoſe, who by (analogia) "the proportion of faith," underſtand the analogy of faith; by which they mean the conſtant ſcope and tenour of the Scriptures, in the plain and neceſſary points of faith and practice: For we may be aſſured, that no ſenſe of Scripture can be a true or good ſenſe, which is contrary to the general deſign and tenour of the whole. Thus, for inſtance, we may conclude of the ſenſe which the Papiſts put upon the words, This is my body; (as is noted on Acts iii. 21.) And the like of the doctrine of God's eternal decrees of reprobation; (as is noted on Acts xiii. 48.) and ſeveral others. A man may be at a loſs, about the meaning of a difficult text of Scripture; but he can be certain, that that cannot be the ſenſe thereof which contradicts the general ſcope of the holy Scriptures. (Fox)

Let love be without diſſimulation] The foregoing exhortations reſpected church officers in particular: Theſe that now follow, concern all Chriſtians in general, and acquaint them with their duties in common converſation. He begins with the grace and duty of Love; that being a radical grace, the root from which all other graces and duties ſpring and flow. This love to one another, the Holy Ghoſt requires that it "be without diſſimulation;" that is, ſincere and unfeigned, not in word and in tongue only, but in deed and in truth: Alſo that it be an affectionate and tender, as well as an unfeigned and ſincere love; "Be kindly affectioned one to another." The word ſignifieth ſuch an affectionate tenderneſs as the mother bears to the fruit of her womb, and as creatures bear to their young; and no wonder that ſuch a fervent love is requir'd, when laying down our lives for the brethren is commanded, 1 John iii. 16. Likewiſe that our love to others do incline us to give preference unto others; really conceiving others to be more worthy of honour than our ſelves, and rejoicing to ſee them placed in a more uſeful and honourable poſt than our ſelves. Yet obſerve, Tho' our love muſt be hot towards our neighbour, it muſt not hinder us from abhorring that which is ſinful and evil in our neighbour: "Love without diſſimulation, and abhor that which is evil:" When we love the perſons, we muſt hate the vices of men: The love of our friends muſt not make us in love with their faults; nor muſt the hatred of mens vices draw us off from delighting in, and "cleaving to, that which is good" in any man. (B. Here, and in the following verſes of this chapter, we may obſerve the ſeveral qualities and effects of Chriſtian love, charity, or friendſhip, viz. 1. That it is ſincere; loving with the heart, at all times, without ſelf-intereſt, and without flattery. 2. That it abhors evil even in thoſe whom it loves; ſo far is it from juſtifying it in any. 3. That it cleaves to that only which is good in them, and loves it wherever it is found, ver. 9. 4. That it treats even the moſt unknown like brethren; as being children of the ſame heavenly Father, and members of the ſame body. 5. That it is full of reſpect towards others, and free from all mean and worldly levities and familiarities, becauſe it is holy. 6. That it prevents others, by giving the firſt teſtimony of honour and deference, becauſe it is humble, ver. 10. 7. That it has a holy ſolicitouſneſs, leſt it ſhould be wanting in the performance of its duty. 8. That it never is diſcourag'd or grows weary, but acts always with the ſame zeal. 9. That it conſiders none but Jeſus Chriſt in its neighbour, and keeps up its fervour by frequently reflecting upon what He is whom he ſerves, ver. 11. 10. That it places not its comfort in the ſweetneſs of friendſhip, or of the good things of this life, but in the hope of thoſe which are to come. 11. That it is proof againſt all toils, croſſes, and tribulations. 12. That it "continues inſtant in prayer," for the ſalvation of others, as much as for its own; becauſe it knows that this life is a ſtate of baniſhment, and an abyſs of miſery, ver. 12. 13. That it renders all the good things of this world common between the rich and the poor; becauſe the mind and heart are common, and the ſociety or fellowſhip of grace, join'd to that of nature, gives the Saints (that is, Chriſtians) a ſecond right to the goods of their brethren, whenever they are in want. 14. That it can neither look upon nor treat any perſon as an alien or ſtranger; becauſe it knows, that we are all ſuch, in reſpect of Heaven, and that no man is ſuch in reſpect of his brother, ver. 13. 15. So far is it from wiſhing ill to its enemies, that it has their welfare always at heart, and wiſhes them the greateſt good; becauſe it knows, that Jeſus Chriſt died, praying for his perſecutors, ver. 14. 16. That it cauſes a man to make the joy of his brethren, and likewiſe their afflictions and misfortunes, to become his own, ver. 15. 17. That it unites us in the ſame faith, and the ſame taſte and reliſh of heavenly things. 18. That it is humble; rendring us all equal, and making us condeſcend to the loweſt and meaneſt things, for the ſake of our brethren. 19. That it cauſes us willingly to renounce our own ſentiments, views, and lights, in order to follow thoſe of others; becauſe it places it ſelf below all, ver. 16. 20. That it knows not what it is to return "evil for evil;" becauſe it knows no other evil here below, but ſin. 21. That tho' it avoids all manner of oſtentation in the good which it does, yet it always ſeeks to edify its neighbour: Becauſe it knows, that it is a miſtaken humility to endeavour always to conceal all ſorts of good; that it ought to love its neighbour's perfection as its own; that nothing belongs to it ſelf, but what belongs to him; and that a good example is one of the debts of charity, ver. 17. 22. That it is peaceable it ſelf, and promotes peace amongſt others; eſpecially with Chriſtians, our brethren, and our fellow-members; and that, for the bleſſing of peace, it endures whatever is not inconſiſtent with truth or juſtice, ver. 18. 23. That, if it be accuſed, it leaves the care of its juſtification to God, and with faith and patience waits for his judgment; becauſe it makes little or no account of the judgment of men. 24. That it ſuppreſſes the motions of its own anger, bears that of men, and is far from endeavouring to excite and to anticipate that of God upon its enemies; becauſe it knows, that this is the ſureſt way to avaid itſelf, and to divert the effects of their enmity and ill will, ver. 19. 25. That it does not diſcover that it has enemies, any other way, than by doing more good to them than to others; and thinks it ſelf well avenged, when God ſhews them mercy; becauſe it is by this means that it is deſirous to be counted worthy thereof it ſelf, ver. 20. And, 26. That it is proof againſt all the malice of the moſt implacable enemies, and deſires to triumph over them by nothing but benefits; knowing that herein it imitates God, and is the daughter of him who is love or charity it ſelf, ver. 21. (Q.) See the notes on John xiii. 34, 35.

Serving the Lord.] To kyrio douleuontes. Some ancient copies, of great authority, read it kairo douleuontes, ſerving the time; the occaſion of which various reading was its being ſometimes written, with this abbreviation, KO; and therefore might be read either kyrio or kairo. One argument that the latter is here to be retain'd, is Ignatius's Epiſtle to Polycarp; where he joins two precepts together, Become more diligent than thou art; obſerve, or conſider, the ſeaſons, or times: That is, the times being times of great corruption firſt, and then of perſecution alſo (both mention'd there in the former part of the period, Let not the heterodox, or falſe teachers, move thee, or terrify thee; ſtand firm; and We muſt beyond all perſevere and endure all for God's ſake) he muſt not be ſlothful, but very diligent, to defend his flock againſt all falſe infuſions, and ſuſtain them conſtant in ſufferings And this is exactly agreeable and parallel to this exhortation here thus ſet, and may well ſeem an imitation of it: In reſpect of diligence, not ſlothful; zealous in ſpirit, ſerving the time, or ſeaſon; which was in like manner a ſeaſon of great corruption from the Gnoſticks, and of perſecution alſo from the Jews, with whom thoſe Gnoſticks complied, and ſtirr'd them up againſt the orthodox Chriſtians. (H) But yet, it was never meant, that we ſhould be time-ſervers, or men-pleaſures; but only that we ſhould apply our ſelves to the time, in the occurrents and occaſions thereof, neglecting no opportunity of doing good. (Leigh)

Rejoicing in hope.] One would have thought it a very unreaſonable exhortation, to bid thoſe Chriſtians rejoice, who had then ſo much cauſe to be ſorrowful, when they ſuffer'd ſo many reproaches, underwent ſo many hardſhips, and were in all reſpects ſo ſpitefully treated by their enemies. But, in the worſt of times and conditions, Chriſtianity has wherewithal to comfort its profeſſors, and make their hearts joyful: And this is one of thoſe ſpiritual comforts; viz. the hope of everlaſting happineſs. This outweighs the heavieſt burden of worldly calamities, and gives us a chearful ſpirit in the midſt of our greateſt ſufferings: For, when we have this hope, we conſider, not ſo much what we are at preſent, as what we ſhall be: We are the leſs concern'd at the evils we ſuffer in this world, becauſe we ſee beyond them, and do expect a bliſsful ſtate, where we ſhall ſuffer no more; where we ſhall have no more ſorrow, and where all tears ſhall be wiped off from our eyes. See the notes on ch. v. 3 and viii. 18. and Acts v. 41.

Diſtributing to the neceſſity.] See the notes on Acts xi. 29.

Given to hoſpitality.] The word diocontes, which we here render "given to," ſignifies, more ſtrongly, following after, or purſuing, hoſpitality. Imitate the Saviour of the world: "Go about doing good," and ſeeking out opportunities of obliging mankind: Stay not till occaſions of beneficence offer themſelves: Not only receive poor viſitants, and diſtreſs'd and fatigu'd travellers, with a flowing and generous hoſpitality; but purſue, and follow after thoſe who have paſs'd by your houſe; bring 'em back; ſurprize 'em with unexpected bounty; refreſh and furniſh 'em with ſuitable and ſeaſonable ſupplies. (Blackw.) They who cannot do us, muſt at leaſt wiſh they could; and never want the diſpoſition, when they have not the ability. (Stanh.) This word, dioco, being attributed to perſons, is evil, ſignifying to perſecute; as here in ver. 14. and elſewhere: But, if it be applied to things, then it is either good or evil, as the things which we purſue are good or evil; And it implies ſingular love to the thing, and great labour about it. (Leigh)

Bleſs them which perſecute you.] See the notes on Matth. v. 44.

Rejoice with them.] This verſe ſeems to refer to the two gates of the temple; one called the gate of the bridegroom, and the other of the mourners; into which two ſorts of men all kinds of perſons are divided: Under the firſt are contained all thoſe who continue unblemiſh'd members of the church, under no kind of cenſure; under the other are the excommunicate, of any the loweſt kind; thoſe under Nidui, who tho' they might come into the temple, yet were to come in at the door of mourners, with ſome difference upon them, and diſcrimination from other men, that they who ſaw them might pray for them in this form, He that dwells in this houſe comfort thee, and give thee a heart to obey. And accordingly, the exhortation here is to have affections chriſtianly diſpoſed toward all men, to be very much afflicted, which, 2 Cor. xii. 21. is called (penthein) mourning, or bewailing ſuch as are, for their faults, juſtly fallen under the cenſures of the church, and to do the utmoſt we can toward their recovery; and on the other ſide to rejoice at the ſpiritual good and proficiency of all others. (H.)

Not wiſe in your own conceits.] See the notes on ver. 3.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Recompenſe to no man evil for evil. Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men. If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not your ſelves, but rather give place unto wrath: For it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, ſaith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink: For in ſo doing thou ſhalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

Recompenſe to no man evil.] After thoſe duties which we are obliged to perform toward our common head, as myſtical members of Chriſt's body; after thoſe which more immediately concern our ſelves, with regard to the ſtation and office appointed us to hold in that body; after thoſe, to which our brethren have a right, who ſeem ſenſible of the near relation between us, and deſirous to diſcharge their part, The Apoſtle now proceeds to direct our behaviour toward ſuch, as either are not of that body, or carry themſelves to us as if they were not. So that what remains to be ſaid upon this chapter may not unfitly be reduced to the general topick of meekneſs and conſtancy under perſecutions and wrongs. In which the Scripture before us gives us a fair occaſion to obſerve, 1. The methods proper for preventing ſuch injuries; And, 2. The deportment which becomes Chriſtians, when they have the unhappineſs of ſuffering under them. The methods proper for preventing our falling under ſuch injuries and trials, are, 1. A moderate opinion of our ſelves and our abilities, expreſs'd, by "not being wiſe in our own conceits;" in the foregoing verſe 16. 2. To "provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men," ver. 17. By which we are to look upon our ſelves obliged, not only to all thoſe duties, which the laws of God or man have bound upon us; but to all that prudence and decency in our conduct, that may ſecure to us the character of diſcretion, as well as of virtue. For there are infinite occurrences in a man's life, wherein all that is lawful may be far from edifying, or being expedient, 1 Cor. x. 23. Many liberties no where forbidden, which yet are better not taken: Many actions no where expreſly commanded, which yet are very fit to be done. And again, when we do theſe, or abſtain from thoſe, the very manner and circumſtances of the thing may prove of great moment, either for adorning, or recommending, or for tarniſhing the luſtre, and taking off from the beauty and acceptableneſs, of ſuch reſtraints or actions: And, 3. A probable method for the prevention of outrage and injuries; "If it be poſſible, as much as in you lieth, live peaceably with all men," ver. 18. And, as to the deportment becoming Chriſtians, when they ſhall at any time happen to ſuffer, under perſecutions and wrongs of any kind, the rules are, 1. "Recompenſe to no man evil for evil," ver. 17. 2. "Avenge not your ſelves, but rather give place unto wrath," ver. 19. By which is meant, that we ſhould by no means take the cauſe into our own hands, and pretend to right our ſelves, by repaying injuries and affronts with the ſame or greater. 3. "Bleſs them which perſecute you; bleſs, and curſe not," ver. 14. And, 4. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink," ver. 20. To the due obſervation of which rules we have three motives or powerful arguments here ſubjoin'd; 1. Relating to Almighty God; "It is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, ſaith the Lord," ver. 19. 2. To our enemies; "For, in ſo doing, thou ſhalt heap coals of fire on his head," ver. 20. And, 3. To our ſelves, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," ver. 21. (Stanh.) See the notes on Matth. v. 39.

If it be poſſible.] St. Peter asks the queſtion, "Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" 1 Pet. iii. 13. And he had reaſon; for none, but ſuch as are monſtrouſly brutiſh, will. But yet, ſince ſuch monſters there are to be found in the world, (too many of thoſe, whom our Apoſtle elſewhere mentions under the character of "unreaſonable wicked men," 2 Theſſ. iii. 2.) the cautious manner of expreſſing this duty was no more than needful. For peace with all the world, tho' a moſt deſirable bleſſing, may yet be bought too dear; and therefore we are not left free to ſeek it, upon any terms, not conſiſtent with the reſt of our duty. When ſtedfaſtneſs to the faith which we ought to profeſs, when zeal for the truth and glory of God, when conſtancy and courage in virtue, are made grounds of a difference, and nothing leſs than our foregoing theſe will be accepted for an accommodation of it; in ſuch like caſes peace becomes impoſſible. All we have left to do then, is to convince the world, that we are not the aggreſſors; that we neither begun the quarrel, nor have a deſire to continue it; that, whatever can be reconciled with our higher obligations, we are ready to do; willing to depart from our own right, tho' we cannot give up God's; always diſpoſed to be reconciled, and to forgive the wrongs, for which we never gave any cauſe or provocation. This is "as much as in us lieth:" And this they who decline, are no longer true ſubjects of the Prince of peace; no diſciples of that maſter who at his death bequeathed peace to us, as the moſt valuable legacy he could leave; no living members of that head, who vouchſafed to become our peace-offering; no longer actual parts of one another, when they rend the body, diſquiet and devour their fellow-members; in ſhort, when they do not endeavour to procure and preſerve, as they ought to pray for, "peace always by all means," 2 Theſſ. iii. 16. (Idem)

Avenge not your ſelves.] Obſerve here, How the Apoſtle renews his exhortation to all Chriſtians, to watch againſt the ſin of private and perſonal revenge: He urg'd it before, ver. 17. he reinforces it here, ver. 19. thereby ſhewing, how prone our corrupt natures are to commit this ſin, and how hard the contrary duty is to fleſh and blood. The Heathens reckon'd revenge to be a part of juſtice, and rank'd it amongſt the number of their virtues: But the Scriptures require, that, inſtead of revenging an injury, we remit and forgive it; "Dearly beloved, avenge not your ſelves, but rather give place unto wrath:" What wrath? Or whoſe wrath? Anſ. Give place to your own wrath, ſay ſome interpreters; give way a little, and turn aſide from the perſon you are angry with, and do not ſuffer your anger to hurry you away to revenge: Give place to the wrath of thoſe that wrong you ſay others; decline their wrath, and give not word for word, which will but add fuel to the fire, and oil to the flame. But it ſeems beſt, to underſtand it of God's wrath: Leave the matter to God, he will right your cauſe; do not take God's work out of his hand, but ſuffer him to come in with his wrath upon your enemies, who wrong and injure you; rather give place to the wrath of God againſt them, for vengeance is his, and he will repay it. Learn hence, That ſuch, who, having ſuffered wrong, do ſeek to revenge themſelves, take revenging work out of God's hand; whereas, if they leave the matter with God, his juſtice will right them fully. (B.) See the notes on Matth v. 39. and Biſhop Wilkins's Sermon on this text. And, for that unchriſtian and unmanly practice of Duelling, ſee Biſhop Hall's Caſes of Conſcience, and Mr. Collier's Eſſays.

Feed him.] The Greek word, pſomize, here has a moſt beautiful alluſion, which is not fully expreſs'd by the bare word feed. It ſignifies not only to feed, but to do it liberally, and plentifully; to carve for, and help another; yea, to cut it ſmall, and even to put it in his mouth (if need be) as nurſes do to infants, or ſick perſons. (Leigh)

Heap coals of fire on his head.] How's that? Does the Apoſtle mean, Thou ſhalt thereby add to his guilt, kindle the fire of Hell againſt him, and increaſe his damnation? No! That indeed (as we are wont to ſpeak) would be malice with a vengeance! But, as I conceive, the meaning is, By doing good to thy enemy; by relieving his wants, if he ſtand in need of thy charity; by forgiving him the injuries he hath done unto thee, thou ſhalt kindle in him that flame of affections, that holy fire of love, which will gain him to thy friendſhip, bring him to repentance, and make him aſhamed of his wickedneſs. This I take to be the moſt Chriſtian ſenſe of "heaping coals of fire upon his head:" And it is confirm'd, by the following words, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Killingbeck)

Be not overcome of evil.] Learn hence, That every Chriſtian ſhould not only take heed that he "be not overcome of evil," but alſo labour and endeavour, what in him lieth, to "overcome evil with good." Queſtion, What are we to underſtand here by evil? Anſwer, Any unkind or injurious dealing from others, any miſchief or ill turn which our neighbour has done us. Queſt. What is it to "be overcome of evil?" Anſ. 1. When we dwell in our thoughts too much, too often, and too long, upon the injuries and unkindneſſes we have met with: This is, as if a man that was to take down a bitter pill, ſhould be continually champing of it, and rolling it under his tongue. 2. We are "overcome of evil," when we are brought over to commit the ſame evil; by ſtudying to make ſpiteful returns, in a way of revenge, for the injuries we have received. Queſt. Wherein conſiſts the duty and excellency of "overcoming of evil with good?" Anſ. It renders us like to God, who does good to us daily, tho' we do evil againſt him continually: Hereby we imitate God, in one of the choiceſt perfections of his divine nature: Hereby we overcome our ſelves: Hereby we overcome our enemies, and make them become our friends. Queſt. How ſhould we "overcome evil with good?" Anſ. By doing good for evil; by returning courteſies for injuries; ſpeaking well of others, altho' they ſpeak hardly, yea, very ill of us. (B.) See Dr. Moſs's Sermon on this text.

C H A P. XIII.

Soveraign authority by no means to be reſiſted. Every one to have his due. The love of our neighbour is the fulfilling of the law. All intemperance to be avoided.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. LET every ſoul be ſubject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: The powers that be, are ordained of God. Whoſoever therefore reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the ordinance of God: And they that reſiſt, ſhall receive to themſelves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou ſhalt have praiſe of the ſame: For he is the miniſter of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the ſword in vain: For he is the miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil. Wherefore ye muſt needs be ſubject, not only for wrath, but alſo for conſcience ſake. For, for this cauſe pay ye tribute alſo: For they are God's miniſters, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues: Tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtom to whom cuſtom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour.

Let every ſoul be ſubject.] From the ſeveral duties, obliging all Chriſtians, in their perſonal capacity, the Apoſtle here proceeds to ſuch as are political, and oblige us, as members of a civil body. And herein he declares, 1. The nature of the duty enjoin'd; 2. The univerſality of its obligation; 3. The reaſons upon which that obligation is founded; 4. The danger of refuſing to comply with it; 5. The equity of making it good; And, 6. The particular inſtances wherein it ought to be expreſſed: And all theſe he declares to be not meerly matters of ſecular convenience, or Chriſtian prudence; but a part of religion, and ſuch as directly bind the conſcience. (Stanh.) All which ſeveral particulars ſhall be diſtinctly explain'd in the notes here following: And the rather, becauſe there have been various arts uſed, to pervert every word of this text, and to make it ſpeak quite contrary to the deſign and intention of the Apoſtle in it. (Sherl.)

Every ſoul.] Paſa pſyche, by an ordinary figure, ſignifies every man: For man being a creature compounded of body and ſoul, either part of him is very often in Scripture put for the whole; ſometimes fleſh, and ſometimes ſoul, ſignifying the man. Thus "every ſoul" here muſt ſignify all men, of what rank, ſtation, or condition ſoever they be; high or low, rich or poor, noble or ignoble, clergy or laity. (Uſh. G. H. Bever. Stanh. Brett, B. Fleury, and Q.) Therefore, none being excepted out of this general precept, it follows, that neither the Pope nor the people, collectively or repreſentatively, commons or peers, Sanhedrim or ſtates, in parliament or out of parliament, are exempted from this obligation. (Calvin, Beza, Buckeridge, Moreton, Aſſ. Stillingfl. Stanh. and Sherl.)

Be ſubject.] Hypotaſſeſtho. The word, hypotaſſo, ſignifies an orderly ſubjection, and implies the reverence of the heart, reſpectful language and geſture, obedience without reſiſting, a ſubjection willing, and in due manner. Chryſoſtome noteth, that the Apoſtle ſaith not, Be obedient, but "Be ſubject;" which is a general word, comprehending all other duties and ſervices. (Leigh) But the principal thing he has regard to in the text, is non-reſiſtance; which is the only perfect and abſolute ſubjection we owe to princes. We are not always bound to do what they command, becauſe they may command what we ought not, what we muſt not do: But we are always bound to be ſubject; that is, never to reſiſt. Tho' a prince abuſe his power, and oppreſs his ſubjects, we muſt not take upon us to right our ſelves by force, but muſt leave our cauſe to God, who is the great protector of oppreſſed innocence. This is the doctrine the Apoſtle teaches, that "we muſt be ſubject to," that is, we muſt not reſiſt, nor rebel againſt ſoveraign princes. (Sherl.) According to that rule of our Saviour, "rendring unto Ceſar the things which are Ceſar's, and unto God the things that are God's," Matth. xxii. 21. Yielding our bodies (as St. Paul himſelf did) to Ceſar, but reſerving our ſouls for God; tendring to juſt laws our active; to unjuſt, our paſſive obedience. (Hall) The benefits of ſociety and civil rights are ſo many and ſo valuable, and do ſo entirely depend upon good government and order, and peaceable ſubmiſſion to thoſe in publick ſtations, that men will naturally be very jealous of, and very averſe to, any ſett of people or principles, which ſhall attempt to break in upon advantages ſo ſenſible and dear, as theſe may claim to be, to all mankind. The generality even of ſubjects would abhor a doctrine that ſhould ſow the ſeeds of diſcord and confuſion. But it is never to be conceived, how any one prince or ruler ſhould have been reconciled to the faith, upon the foot it then ſtood, had it propagated, juſtified, or in any degree countenanced, ſedition and licentiouſneſs, by undertaking to ſet men free from their civil obligations, and to diſſolve the power and authority, which governors were otherwiſe allow'd to have upon their people, when not Chriſtians. And therefore, in all the ancient apologies for our religion, we find the authors particularly careful to wipe off this calumny; to prove the Goſpel, as it really is, the greateſt ſecurity to all temporal juriſdiction; the ſureſt promoter, and beſt preſerver, of public order and quiet; the ſtrongeſt ſupport of kings, and the moſt effectual reſtraint upon ſubjects. Few arguments were urged more frequently; few, we have reaſon to believe, contributed more ſucceſsfully to recommend this religion to the general good acceptance of the world, than the manifeſt tendency it had to the ſafety and welfare of mankind; the particular inſtructions it gave; the weighty obligations and motives it enforced them with; and the unparallell'd examples it every day produced, for containing all ſorts of men within the bounds of their proper ſtation and duty, for rendring them uſeful and ſerviceable to ſociety and government, for a zealous and active obedience to their ſuperiors in all lawful inſtances, and for meek and patient ſuffering, under even unjuſt oppreſſions, rather than they would become inſtruments of diſturbing the peace of the publick, or that of their own conſciences. (Stanh.) See the notes on Tit. iii. 1. and 1 Pet. ii. 13.

To the higher powers.] Exouſiais hyperechouſais; To the ſupreme powers, rightly eſtabliſhed and conſtituted. (H.) That is, to the ſupreme authority. (W.) For this is laid down, as a fixed and undoubted principle, that the higher powers, here meant, are ſuch governors, or rulers, as are rightfully veſted with the ſupreme authority. (Atterb.) Only the lawful powers; not to be applied to uſurpers. (Burn.) This ſeems clear, even from the word here dictated by the Holy Ghoſt: Which is not dunamis, (from dunamai, poſſum,) ſignifying ſuch power as conſiſts in the natural faculty, that is, force, ſtrength, or ability; but exouſia (from exeſti, licet) which ſignifies the moral faculty; that is, ſuch a power (or rather authority) as is founded on right, intereſt, and property. (Biſhop Ward, Biſhop Hopkins, Gerh. Pleydell, and Foreneſs)

There is no power but of God.] Here follow the reaſons, whereby the Apoſtle proves and enforces this doctrine of ſubjection, or non-reſiſtance, to them who are thus veſted with the ſupreme authority; The firſt of which is this (Ou gar eſtin exouſia ei me apo Theou) "For there is no power but of God;" or (as the original ſeems more properly to be rendred) For it is not authority, if it is not from God; that is, derived from God. (Trem. and Beza) All juſt governments muſt be originally derived from God, and, ſome way or other, receive their ſanction from divine authority. This propoſition is ſo evident, to all who believe a God, a providence, and the truth of the Scriptures, that I ſhall not need to prove it in particular to them. And, as for thoſe who ſuppoſe government to have originally ſprang up from mere human compacts, and from the people, independently on God, and without any regard to his will or authority, they ſeem to me to ſuppoſe men to have ſprung out of the earth, and not to have had God for their creator; and alſo to ſuppoſe, that all government has no higher end to aim at, than the conveniencies of this preſent life; both which things are entirely contrary to religion, and utterly inconſiſtent with the ſacred Hiſtory of the origin and primitive exerciſe of government among men: So that this cannot deſerve a ſerious conſideration, but muſt be left to the irreligious ſchemes of the Atheiſts and unbelievers. (Biſhop Sanderſ. Pleydell, and Whiſt.) And that the authority, here ſpoken of, is not meant of that power which comes only by God's permiſſion, but by his commiſſion, is clear from the following words of the text;

The powers that be are ordained of God.] Where we muſt conſider, 1. What is meant by "the powers that be:" And, 2. What by their being "ordained of God." Now, hai ouſai exouſiai, muſt naturally and neceſſarily be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe with the clauſe foregoing: That is, Either, 1. In general, that thoſe who are exouſiai, "the higher powers," (or the ſupreme authority, rightly veſted therewith, according to the fundamental conſtitution of every country,) "are ordained of God:" Or, 2. More particularly, That thoſe who then were "the higher powers" (over the people at Rome, to whom this Epiſtle was written) were ſo ordained. Both which interpretations are well conſiſtent with the context. For if hai ouſai exouſiai be underſtood in general, of all thoſe powers (that is, perſons) who are rightfully veſted with the ſupreme authority, it gives us a clear diſtinction between lawful ſoveraigns, who are God's vicegerents, and therefore not to be reſiſted; and thoſe who poſſeſs themſelves of and continue in the power, contrary to right and juſtice, being only permitted (that is, not reſtrain'd) by God, like that of robbers and uſurpers, to whom, by the unanimous conſent of all caſuiſts, no obedience at all is due. Or if theſe words be applied to the particular powers then in being, even thoſe will be found to have been lawful powers, if we duly obſerve, 1. That the conſtitution of the Roman empire was not hereditary. 2. That the emperor then reigning, had no competitor for the throne, nor was there any other perſon who did, or could, pretend a better right to it. (Hickes's Jovian, ch. i.) And 3. That tho' poſſeſſion is in it ſelf no title at all againſt a known and apparent right; yet where there is not, nor can be, any better right prov'd, poſſeſſion ſuppoſes a right, and is to be regarded as ſuch, as well in relation to government as to private property. Thus then the Roman emperors were the (exouſiai) lawful powers; not becauſe they were in poſſeſſion of the throne, and thoroughly ſettled in it, nor becauſe they were acknowledg'd for ſuch by the Senate and People whom they were to govern; but becauſe they really had all the right and title to the ſoveraignty which the fundamental conſtitution of that country did require, and no perſon in the world either had, or pretended to have, a better right to the ſame. And therefore ſuch emperors might well be ſaid to be (hypo tou Theou tetagmenoi) "ordained of God," and (tou Theou diatage) "the ordinance of God," ſince not only the power, but the perſons themſelves, who are thus undiſputedly veſted with ſoveraignty, are appointed by God, to govern under him, as his Vicegerents or Deputies, and have authority put into their hands by his peculiar and ordering providence. In hereditary kingdoms indeed 'tis otherwiſe than it was in the Roman empire. For in ſuch, the king never dies; but the ſame minute that the natural perſon of one king dies, the crown deſcends upon the next of blood: And therefore, tho' a proſperous rebel may get the power into his hands by God's permiſſion, yet 'tis not by God's ordinance, and he who reſiſts ſuch a one, does not reſiſt the ordinance of God, but the uſurpations of men. (Biſhop Andr. Biſhop Buckeridge, Biſhop Moreton, Archbiſhop Uſher, Biſhop Hall, Biſhop Sanderſ. Biſhop Ward, Aſſ. G. H. Sherl. Du-Bourd. B. and Milb.)

Whoſoever therefore reſiſteth.] This is the neceſſary conſequence of the foregoing argument. Since the ſupreme Magiſtrate is "ordain'd by God," and "every ſoul" in his dominions, is commanded to "be ſubject," to him as ſuch, it follows therefore, That whoſoever reſiſteth him, "reſiſteth the ordinance of God:" And, conſequently, (as the Apoſtle himſelf concludes) "they that reſiſt, ſhall receive to themſelves damnation." For the clearer underſtanding of which doom, we are to obſerve, that the word (crima) here rendred damnation, according to its literal import, ſignifies judgment, and no more, and is ſometimes applied to human judgments; as, 1 Cor. vi. 7. to "going to law," and Luke xxiii. 40. and xxiv. 20. to temporal puniſhments and ſentences of death: But elſewhere it clearly ſignifies ſuch puniſhments as are divine and eternal; as Acts xxiv. 25. Rom. ii. 2, 3, 5. Hebr. vi. 2. and ſeveral other places. Three places there are, which belong certainly to this ſenſe; which yet have been queſtion'd by ſome men, and denied to do ſo. Firſt, This in this place, "They that reſiſt," that is, by force or violence oppoſe the ſupreme power, (heautois crima lepſontai,) "ſhall receive judgment to themſelves." That this ſignifies temporal puniſhment, which the Magiſtrate may inflict, and no more, they think appears by the following words, "for rulers are a terrour to evil works." But 1. If that argument were of force, it would conclude alſo, that no more but temporal puniſhment belonged to any other crime which was puniſhable by the magiſtrate: For of him it is ſaid, that he is, (Theou diaconos) "the miniſter," or officer of God; his executioner for wrath, that is, puniſhment temporal, to him indefinitely that doth evil, that is, every viſible malefactor. And ſo, if this would conclude for the reſiſter or rebel, it would alſo be a privilege or protection to all other ſins, which the magiſtrate is wont to puniſh, the thief, the murtherer, &c. and he that were hanged ſhould not for that be damned, whatever his crime were. And 2. If that reſiſter ſhould eſcape the hand of juſtice here, by flight, &c. or if he ſhould proſper in his rebellion, ſo that the magiſtrate ſhould not be able to puniſh him, or yet farther, ſo as to get into the throne, what judgment or puniſhment is that man likely to receive, if the crima or puniſhment here ſignify none but the magiſtrate's wrath or puniſhment? 3. 'Tis here, ver. 5. concluded from hence, "Wherefore ye muſt needs be ſubject, not only for wrath, but alſo for conſcience ſake:" Where wrath, ſignifying temporal puniſhment, ver. 4. if that were all that were meant by crima, then could it not be true, much leſs concluded from hence, that men "muſt be ſubject not only for wrath." Certainly he that reſiſts is not ſubject: For antiſtenai is all one with antitaſſeſthai, and both directly contrary to hypotaſſeſthai, being ſubject, ver. 3, 5. And therefore, if we "muſt be ſubject, not only for wrath," as that ſignifies temporal puniſhment, then "he that reſiſts ſhall receive" more than wrath, as that ſignifies temporal puniſhment; viz. (crima) eternal judgment, or condemnation; which muſt be the import of (alla kai dia ſyneideſin,) "but alſo for conſcience ſake," viz. that if he do it not, it will be ſin to him, and wound his conſcience, and ſo bind over to that puniſhment that belongs to an accuſing conſcience, or the breach of that divine law (which is the rule of conſcience) the command of obedience, ver. 1. to a damning ſin, if it be not timely repented of. The ſecond place thus doubted of is, 1 Cor. xi. 29. "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh (crima,) judgment to himſelf." That it doth not there ſignify damnation is attempted to be proved by three arguments: 1. By that which follows, ver. 30. "For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep;" which, belonging only to temporal puniſhment, is conceived to be the periphraſis of (crima) judgment precedent; and conſequently that that is ſo alſo. 2. Becauſe the Apoſtle ſpeaks there of any one ſingle act of this ſin, which, being not an habit or cuſtom, the objectors conceive not to be actually damning under the ſecond covenant. 3. Becauſe, ver. 32. 'tis ſaid, "When we are judged, we are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned," &c. To the firſt of theſe, the anſwer is clear, 1. That ſickneſs and death, tho' they be temporal puniſhments, are yet divine, inflicted by the hand of God, not of the magiſtrate: And 'tis acknowledged, that it doth ſeldom ſignify eternal puniſhment, excluſively to God's temporal puniſhments, but eternal, and ſometimes temporal too, (as 2 Pet. ii. 3.) or eternal if he repent not; and perhaps temporal if he do, or to bring him to repentance: 2. That theſe temporal, do not exclude eternal puniſhments: They may be ſick, and die, and be damned alſo, or elſe, ſome being reformed by theſe temporal chaſtiſements, others may be damn'd alſo that do not reform: And that this is juſt with God, and the meaning of crima there, appears ver. 27. which is parallel to ver. 29. "Whoſoever ſhall eat or drink unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord;" that is, ſhall be thought guilty of the greateſt violation of Chriſt, to profane and tread under feet his body and blood. To the ſecond, It need not here be diſputed, whether one act of mortal or wilful ſin brings damnation; it being as much to the preſent purpoſe, that cuſtomary or frequent ſinning doth: For, whatever mercy may belong to him that commits only one act, yet, if he that cuſtomarily or frequently doth it, incurr damnation, this will be the Apoſtle's meaning by crima there, who ſpeaks indefinitely of the ſin (as when he ſaith, the drunkard or adulterer ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God,) and deſcends not to that minuter conſideration, what 'tis that contracts the guilt of that ſin. As for the third objection, 'Tis an evident confirmation of this rendring: For, if thoſe that were ſick, &c. were "chaſtened of the Lord, that they ſhould not be condemned," then ſure, if they had not been ſo chaſtened, or not reformed by that chaſtening, they ſhould have been "condemned with the world;" which is no argument, that eternal judgments are not due to them on their impenitence, but an evident intimation that they are. The third place, thus doubted of (and brought to countenance the former interpretations of theſe two) is 1 Pet. iv. 17. (to crima apo tou oicou tou Theou,) "judgments beginning from the houſe of God;" where that which befalls "the houſe of God" cannot be condemnation. To which I anſwer, by granting the objection; and conſequently, that crima, in its latitude, muſt not there be applied to "the houſe of God," but only one part of it: For, of crima in that verſe, there are ſpecified two parts; (to proton, and to telos,) the firſt part, and the end, or laſt part of it. The firſt part of God's revenge on ſin, may be in this life, and befall the godly, who hath ſin to be puniſhed alſo, and ſo (molis ſozetai) hardly eſcapes, ver. 18. or (as that phraſe is in the original, Prov. xi. 31.) "is recompenſed on the earth: But the ſecond ſadder part, is (ton apeithounton) of the contumacious, that obey not the Goſpel of Chriſt; and it ſeizeth on them here, and ſweeps them away, and then continues to them eternally: And ſo ſtill, crima is (antapodoſis Theou) God's puniſhment and retribution to ſin, wherever it is, both here and in another world. (H.) They who deny the authority to them who are of right inveſted with it, and take it to themſelves, ſet themſelves againſt God, and go about to build another Babel; which is nothing but bringing in of anarchy and confuſion. This argues a giant-like nature; ſuch as was in them who would build a Tower, whoſe top might reach to Heaven. Such do bid defiance to God: And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith expreſly, that all ſuch as do reſiſt lawful powers, do "reſiſt the ordinance of God;" and ſo do fight againſt God himſelf, and thereby bring damnation upon themſelves. (Beza, Biſhop Andr. Biſhop Buckeridge, Arch biſhop Uſher, Biſhop Moreton, Biſhop Ward, Aſſ. H. Sherl B. Brookb. and Milb.)

Not a terrour to good works, but to the evil.] Here we have a further argument for Subjection. Certainly, if men have not ſome wicked purpoſes in their hearts, they will never be tempted to rebel againſt authority: For they that do not deſign any ill, have little reaſon to be afraid of magiſtrates; or conſequently to deſire to prevent their ill uſage of them by taking up arms againſt them. For tho' it be poſſible, governours may be Tyrants, yet this poſſible fear is not in any reaſon to move any to certain ſin: But, on the other ſide, every one is to look on the magiſtrate as God's officer, and to truſt himſelf in God's protection, and count, that princes do not uſe to puniſh men for doing well, but for doing ill; for ſeditions, conſpiracies, &c. And therefore, if thou wouldſt make a prudent proviſion for thy ſelf, if thou doſt deſire to be ſecure from being puniſhed by the magiſtrate, do not offend againſt his laws, and thou ſhalt, in all probability, receive nothing but reward for it from him. (H.) What the Apoſtle means here, by this exhortation to "do that which is good," is well expreſs'd by the Emperor Juſtinian, in the entrance to his laws; Honeſte vivere; alterum non lædere, ſuum cuique tribuere; To live honeſtly, to injure no-body, and to give every man what is his due. (Aſſ.)

He is the Miniſter of God.] That is, He acts by a divine commiſſion; and the power which he regularly exerciſes, is delegated to him by God. (Andr. and Blackall)

To thee for good.] This verſe, and the foregoing, are a clear intimation to the Supreme Ruler, of the duty incumbent upon him; viz. to puniſh vice, and to protect virtue, (Beza, Q. and B.) and in every thing to conſult the common good of that Body, of which God has made him the head. But neverthe leſs, tho' his laws ſhould in ſome inſtances, be contrary to that, yea, and even to the divine laws, (on which ſuppoſition the magiſtrate does certainly exceed the bounds of his commiſſion,) yet this does not void his authority: "He is the Miniſter of God," for all this; or elſe there was none that was ſo, none that could be called ſo, when the Apoſtle wrote this Epiſtle: And there is a duty lying on ſubjects, even in this caſe; viz. not to oppoſe, nor to reſiſt the power, but quietly and patiently to ſuffer the penalty of thoeſ laws, which they cannot, without ſinning againſt God, yield an active obedience to. (Sherl. and Blackall) For, Deputed powers are only accountable to thoſe from whom they derive their authority: And ſo, the higher powers, being deputed by God, muſt indeed render to him a ſevere account of their adminiſtration; but not to others. (Burnet) That which is commonly affirm'd, that the end of government is the good of the inferiors, muſt be underſtood cum grano ſalis: For from this principle, miſunderſtood, ſome have collected, that, becauſe the end is above the means, and more noble, therefore ſubjects are above their governors, and ſo may call them to account for their miſ-government, and judge, or puniſh them, and remove them, if they ſee cauſe; from which falſe collections, made by ſeditious and turbulent perſons, infinite troubles, confuſions, rebellions and deſolations have follow'd. We muſt know therefore, 1. That to procure the good of inferiors is indeed the duty of ſuperiors, and one end why God committed the people to them; but not the ſole or principal end of their authority. For princes receive their authority only from God, and are by him conſtituted and intruſted with government of others, chiefly for his own glory and honour, as his deputies and vicegerents upon earth; for they are his Miniſters: So that the principal end of their government is the advancement of God's honour, who is the ſupreme King and Lord of all the world; and therefore, if they fail in the performance of this truſt, they are accountable only to him, and not to the people, whom he hath put under them, and whom he never authorized to call them to account, but to appeal only to him. 2. That it is not generally true, that all government is only for the benefit of thoſe that are govern'd. For ſome government there is meerly for the benefit of the ſuperiour; As that of a Lord or Maſter over his ſervant; for the profit of the ſervant is herein meerly extrinſecal and adventitious: Some governments are for the mutual goodof both; As that of a husband over his wife: And ſo, ſome kingdoms may be for the benefit of Kings; as when they are obtain'd by a juſt conqueſt; which are not to be accounted tyrannical, becauſe they are juſt: For there may be a juſt title by conqueſt, when the war is upon juſt grounds. And, 3. That altho' it be true, that in ſome kingdoms, eſpecially elective, the benefit of the people is principally regarded; yet it follows not hence, that the people are above their King: For the tutor, or guardian, is for the good of the pupil, and yet the guardian, or tutor, hath authority over the pupil. If any ſay, that the guardian may be removed, if he fail in his truſt, and therefore the ſame may be done in princes, I anſwer, that this holds in guardians, becauſe they have ſome above them; but, in kingdoms, becauſe there cannot be a progreſs in infinitum, there muſt of neceſſity be a ſtop in ſome, who, becauſe they have no ſuperior, muſt, if they offend, be left only to God; who will either puniſh them, if he ſee it needful, or elſe ſuffer them for the puniſhment and trial of his people. (Andr.) For if our lawful ſoveraign be a good prince, he is the cauſe of our good, temporal and eternal: If an evil prince, he is an occaſion of our eternal good, by our temporal evil. (Bucker.) Many times the fault is in the people, if the King be bad. It is for their ſins, "that the Hypocrite reigns, and the people are enſnared," as Elihu ſpeaks, Job xxxiv. 30. And therefore, where people chuſe themſelves Kings or Rulers, rejecting the lawful governors, to whom the government rightly belongs, or, looking at their own benefit or liberty, riſe againſt their lawful princes, and change the government, not proceeding in the fear of God, nor looking at his glory, but at themſelves, God puniſhes people by thoſe very Rulers whom they have ſet up. (Andr.)

He beareth not the ſword in vain.] St. Auguſtine ſaith, The magiſtrate hath the ſword committed into his hand, that wicked men ſhould be diſabled of their power, if not of their will, to ſin. And St. Paul, here deſcribing a civil magiſtrate, ſaith, "He beareth not the ſword in vain;" and tells us the end for which he beareth it, as "a Revenger, to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil:" And elſewhere, (to ſet down a rule alſo for the eccleſiaſtical magiſtrate) he inveighs againſt thoſe of Corinth, for not executing an eccleſiaſtical cenſure upon an open offender, but ſuffering him to continue in the church, 1 Cor. v. Therefore St. Auguſtine ſaith very well: Be ſure thou do thy part, and perform that which thy place requires; elſe God will perform his, both upon thee and the offender: And it is better to feel the lenity of a Father, than the ſeverity of a judge. (Andr.) Note here alſo, The magiſtrate is not ſaid to ſnatch or take the ſword, but to "bear the ſword:" He doth not wreſt it out of the hand of another, but it is put into his hand by God himſelf; the commiſſion to bear the ſword being from God: The magiſtrate doth not hold his authority by virtue of the ſword, but he holds the ſword by virtue of his authority; and when he draws the ſword, it is not meerly back'd with an arm of fleſh, but with a warrant and commiſſion, ſign'd by God himſelf. (Beza, and B.) The infatuation of reſiſtance, and its perniciouſneſs, is viſible here by the word machaira with the article prefix'd, "the ſword;" to wit, one chief governor, but one ſword: For tho' there be governors under governors, more or fewer, yet, becauſe the ſubordinate are dependent, all upon the Chief One, and do execute capital puniſhment in the name and authority of the higheſt, all are accounted but one ſword; but when the people ſhall be making forcible reſiſtance, there muſt be claſhing of ſword againſt ſword: Nay, by this the ſword is wreſted out of the hand of the King, and put into the power of the people; that is, into the hands of madmen, as David himſelf ſtiles the tumultuous people, Pſa. lxv. 7. (Biſhop Moreton) No violent reſiſtance, or no reſiſtance of the Higher Powers by force, can be allow'd to any who have not the power of the ſword, and who are no avengers of wrath: For he who thus uſeth it, plainly "takes the ſword," without authority from him to whom belongeth vengeance, and the power of life and death, originally, and ſo without authority from him to whom this power of the ſword originally belongs; and therefore, by our Saviour's Aphoriſm, deſerves to "periſh by it," Matth. xxvi. 52. (W.)

Wherefore, ye muſt needs be ſubject.] Wherefore? 1. Becauſe all powers (as before defined) are from God. 2. Becauſe all (ſuch) powers bring with them the good of order. 3. Becauſe it is a ſin to diſobey. 4. Becauſe judgment and damnation, temporal and eternal, is the puniſhment of this ſin. 5. Becauſe government is the means to enjoy all the benefits of life. And, 6. Becauſe Kings have tribute and cuſtom for this cauſe. Therefore "ye muſt needs be ſubject." (Biſhop Buckeridge)

Not only for wrath, but for conſcience ſake.] That is, not only for fear of puniſhment; but much more, becauſe tho' the magiſtrate hath not authority abſolutely over conſcience, yet, as being "the Miniſter of God," he cannot with a good conſcience be reſiſted. (Beza) For tho' human laws are tied upon the conſcience, yet not by human power; the conſcience is God's ſervant, and he binds it: And this anſwers what St. Paul teaches in the text, viz .that we "muſt needs be ſubject," for fear of God's diſpleaſure, who has bound the conſcience to obedience. (Pomfr.) This obligation may not be avoided, by the pretext of any enſuing miſchief whatſoever: But it becomes us, in obedience, to perform our part; and to leave the ordering of events to God, whoſe part only that is. (Uſher) We muſt be ſubject, ſimply and without exception; obedient only in thoſe things that are good; Tit. iii 1. And we muſt not ourſelves be judges what is good; but ſubmit our own judgment to that of our governors, except we find that the things commanded be plainly and directly forbidden in God's word; in which caſe we muſt be ſubject ſtill, tho' not obedient. This was the doctrine of Chriſt. This was the doctrine of St. Peter and St. Paul. No other doctrine was taught, or thought of, in the Chriſtian world, for 600 years after Chriſt; as may appear, not only by the books and writings of all the Fathers of theſe ſeveral ages, but eſpecially by the practice and example of all thoſe noble and renown'd Martyrs, who liv'd in the very heat of the furnace, in thoſe long and bloody times, containing the ſucceſſion of ten ſeveral perſecutions, under the moſt cruel Heathen Emperors: Againſt whom they never offer'd to make head; never went about to practiſe treaſon, never attempted to take up arms; notwithſtanding they were (as Tertullian witneſſeth) both more in number, and greater in ſtrength, than any other nation or kingdom in the whole world; yet, becauſe they were otherwiſe inſtructed, where they could not yield obedience, they yielded their ſubjection; never drawing any other ſword againſt their enemies, but only the ſword of the ſpirit; never putting on any other armour for their defence, but only the armour of patience; never thinking of any other ſiege, but only how they might beſiege God with their tears and prayers. (Sam. Burton, Burnet, and Foreneſs) This is the doctrine of Non-reſiſtance and Paſſive-obedience, which is not to be confuted, but laught out of countenance! (Sherl.) This has, by plain and convincing proof, been demonſtrated to be the doctrine both of the Old and New Teſtament; againſt which therefore, tho' witty men may be able to ſtart ſome objections, yet wiſe and good men ſhould not regard them: For no objection is of any force againſt a plain and expreſs Law of God; and when men are forc'd to mince treaſon and rebellion, they always ſpeak nonſenſe! (Idem) Thus, How abſurd is it, 1. To pretend conſcience for reſiſtance, when the Apoſtle here teacheth the neceſſity of being ſubject even "for conſcience-ſake!" 2. To call that a zeal to God's glory, which the Apoſtle here declares to be a "reſiſting the ordinance of God!" And, 3. To ſay, they reſiſt for Religion ſake, when Religion conſiſts in adherence to the revealed will of God; and nothing can be more plainly reveal'd, than this Canon of general "ſubjection to the Higher Powers;" together with the reaſon againſt reſiſtance, in reſpect of the crime of reſiſting God's ordinance, and the judgment, which is damnation it ſelf! (Biſhop Moreton) In a word, However ſuch men may pleaſe themſelves with greater light than former ages had, in this matter, they are ſaid to be ſuch "for whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever," Jude 13. (Stillingf.) For they muſt either ſet up for another Goſpel, or utterly reject what is ſo formally condemn'd by the Author of this which they profeſs to believe. (Burn.) For the fuller proof of all the foregoing expoſitions, the Reader may at large conſult Biſhop Andrews on the fifth Commandment, Archbiſhop Uſher's Power of the Prince, &c. with Biſhop Sanderſon's Preface; Dr. Hickes's Jovian; Dr. Sherlock's Caſe of Reſiſtance; and the ſeveral Sermons of Biſhop Buckeridge in 1606; Dr. Sam. For this cauſe pay you tribute.] Hence it appears, that paying tribute to, is an acknowledgment of the right of government in, him to whom we pay it: It being payable only on this account, becauſe "he is the Miniſter of God;" and "render'd to Cæſar," becauſe it is Cæſar's; that is, becauſe it doth belong to him, as being Cæſar, or the power whom God hath ſet over us. (W.)

Render therefore to all their due.] 'Tis not yield, or give, as a work of ſupererogation, or a courteſy, of meer free-will or gratuity; but (apodote) render, give back again, reſtore, repay, as of debt and duty. (Brookb.)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: For he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, Thou ſhalt not kill, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs, Thou ſhalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this ſaying, namely, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: Therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of ſleep: For now is our ſalvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far ſpent, the day is at hand: Let us therefore caſt off the works of darkneſs, and let us put on the armour of light. Let us walk honeſtly as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in ſtrife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make not proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.

Owe no man any thing.] Moral duties are mutual debts which we owe one another: One of which, namely, that of Love, we can never fully diſcharge, but muſt be ever paying, yet always owing. The truth is, this debt of Love is ſo far from a poſſibility of being paid on earth, that it is due in Heaven, to God, Angels and Saints. All other debts may be paid while we live, but this of Love cannot. (B. and Q.) See the notes on John xiii. 34, 35. and more hereafter on 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c.

Love one another.] That which is here, (heteron) another, is, in ver. 10. rendred (pleſion) his neighbour; which ſhews, that every man is the Chriſtian's neighbour. (W.)

Love worketh no ill.] Obſerve here, 1. The propoſition aſſerted and maintain'd by the Apoſtle, ver. 8, and 10. that "Love is the fulfilling of the Law." But can the Law be ſaid to be fulfilled by us? If ſo, In what ſenſe? Anſ. By the Law here we are certainly to underſtand that branch of the Moral Law, which reſpects our duty to our neighbour. All our duty to men is virtually comprehended in loving them as our ſelves: As no man will hurt himſelf, ſo neither will he hurt his neighbour, if he loveth him as himſelf. Thus Love is the complement, or "fulfilling of the Law," relating to our neighbour. The church of Rome would infer from hence, that a perſon may keep the Law of God perfectly, and without the leaſt deficiency. But, obſerve, He that loveth, keepeth the Law: How keepeth? Even as he loveth: If he loveth perfectly, he keeping the Law perfectly; but if his love be imperfect, (as is the beſt on this ſide Heaven) then is his fulfilling of the Law imperfect alſo. Perfect fulfilling of the Law is what we ſhould labour after, but whilſt in an imperfect ſtate we cannot attain unto: Yet ſuch is the grace of God in the Goſpel, as to account ſincerity inſtead of perfection, and to eſteem unfeigned love to our neighbour the fulfilling of the Law, or all the duties of the ſecond table. Obſerve, 2. This propoſition is proved by an induction and enumeration of particular duties belonging to the ſecond table; "Thou ſhalt not commit adultery; thou ſhalt not ſteal; nor bear falſe witneſs; nor covet." Where all injury is forbidden to be done to our neighbour in his name, in his eſtate, marriage right, &c. And this is called "the fulfilling of the law." But how can that be? Is the Law fulfilled by mere negatives; by doing no hurt to our neighbours? Is not doing them all the good we can required alſo? Anſ. Yes, no doubt: When the Apoſtle ſays, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbour," it is implied, That love doth all poſſible good to his neighbour, as well as worketh no ill; tho' the negatives only are mentioned, yet the affirmatives alſo are included. (B.) For, in Chriſt's interpretation, the neglect of doing any good we are able, and have opportunity to do for him, is doing evil, Mark iii. 4. Here is therefore a Meioſis: For charity is alſo kind, 1 Cor. xiii. 4. and engageth us "by love to ſerve one another," Gal. v. 13. (W.)

To awake out of ſleep.] Here are ſeveral metaphors; This life is a Night; the reſurrection is the Day; the light of the Goſpel, the dawning to this day (as the ſame metaphors are alſo uſed, 2 Pet. i. 19.) We are to "awake out of ſleep," to riſe up, and throw away former clothes, fit only for darkneſs, that is, our Night-clothes, and to put on new, &c. And, being ſoldiers, to put on our armour, ready to fight, who are encompaſs'd with ſo many enemies. See alſo a parallel place to this, 1 Theſſ. v. 6, 7. (Fell) But, without the metaphor, this laſt part of the chapter treats of our duty towards our ſelves; namely, ſobriety, temperance, mortification of ſin, and all the works of darkneſs, ſuch, as "rioting and drunkenneſs, chambering and wantonneſs," and the like: And the argument, or motive, which the Apoſtle uſes in this verſe, to excite and quicken the converted Romans to the laſt mentioned duties, is drawn from the conſideration of their preſent ſtate and condition: They were believers, the Goſpel light was riſen upon them, and they were "nearer ſalvation now, than when they firſt believed." This, by the way, is a meditation full of comfort to a gracious perſon: Every breath he draws, draws him a degree nearer to perfect happineſs; he is nearer Heaven, nearer his reward, than when in the infancy of his faith; therefore let him gird up the loins of his mind, and be more chearful and more laborious in his Lord's work. Lord! how tranſporting is it to thy faithful Ones, to conſider how ſmall a matter is betwixt them and their compleat ſalvation! No ſooner is their breath gone, but the full deſire of their ſouls is come; their ſalvation is near, very near, much nearer than when they firſt believed. But oh! what a meditation of terror is it, to a wicked perſon! His damnation is nearer, and every hour nearer and nearer: There is but a puff of breath betwixt him and Hell; e're long his laſt breath and his laſt hope will expire together. Lord! give ſinners hearts to conſider, that a graceleſs man e're long will be a hopeleſs man: The ſtate he was born in was ſad, the ſtate he is now in is worſe, but the ſtate he will ſhortly be in, without converſion, will be unſpeakably worſt of all; his damnation is near, it ſlumbereth not (B.) For the other ſenſe of the word ſalvation here, as importing temporal deliverance, See Dr. Hammond, at large, upon the place.

The night is far ſpent.] Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle puts the Romans in mind of their former ſtate before converſion, when the Night of Heatheniſh ignorance and darkneſs was upon them; when they ſpent their time and ſtrength in rioting and drunkenneſs, in laſciviouſneſs and wantonneſs. Where note, The odious character wherewith ſin is branded: It is darkneſs, a "work of darkneſs;" ſo ſtiled, becauſe ſin originally ſprings from darkneſs; becauſe it naturally delights in darkneſs; becauſe it ultimately leads to eternal darkneſs. 2. How he puts them in mind of their preſent ſtate and condition, ſince the day-ſtar of the Goſpel did dawn upon them; "The night is far ſpent, and the day is at hand;" that is, the night of Heatheniſh ignorance, blindneſs and darkneſs, is in a great meaſure paſt over, and the day of grace and ſalvation is come unto you; Goſpel light is among you, illuminating grace and ſaving knowledge is now found with you. 3. The duties enjoined anſwerable to the privileges enjoyed; and that is, to walk as the children of day, "ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly;" abſtaining from all intemperance and exceſs in every kind, and being clothed with all Chriſtian virtues and graces, which are called "Armour of Light:" Armour, becauſe they defend us againſt the aſſaults of ſin, Satan, and the world, and all our ſpiritual enemies whatſoever; and Armour of light, becauſe ſuch Chriſtian graces are bright and ſhining in the eyes of the world. Learn hence, 1. That the enjoyment of Goſpel-light lays a perſon or a people under ſpecial obligations to caſt off the works of darkneſs. 2. That ſuch as enjoy the light and liberty of the Goſpel, ought to walk as becometh the Goſpel which they do enjoy; that is, according to the precepts and commands of the Goſpel, anſwerable to the privileges and prerogatives of the Goſpel; anſwerable to the helps and ſupplies of grace which the Goſpel affords, and to thoſe high and glorious hopes which the Goſpel raiſes the Chriſtian up to the expectation of; This is to "caſt off the works of darkneſs, and to put on the armour of light," &c. (B.)

Let us walk honeſtly.] See the notes on ch. vii. 4. and xii. 17.

Not in rioting.] What comos ſignifies, is not commonly obſerved. Theophylact defines it, Songs, with drunkenneſs and contumely. In which definition, as the word (hubris) contumely is oft uſed, in an impure ſenſe, to denote unlawful loves and purſuits, ſo in all probability doth it there; for the night-amorous revels are they that are peculiarly ſignified by comoi. So Wiſd. xiv. 23, 24. where, ſpeaking of the Heathens ſecret myſteries, he joins with them mad revels; and as the effects thereof adds, "They keep neither lives nor marriages pure. So 2 Mac. vi. 4. when he ſaith "The temple was filled with riot and revelling," he adds, "dallying with harlots:" And he that doth this, is in Theocritus comaſtes. So ſay the Scholiaſts on that poet, The word is uſed for thoſe that go by night to their ſweethearts. This they uſed to do with torches and fiddles, ſinging amorous ballads at the doors of their beloved, from thence called crouſithyra, and thyrocopica; a pattern of which is ſet down in Plautus, Curcul. Act. 1. Scen. 2.

Quid ſi adeam ad fores, atque occentem?
Peſſuli, heus peſſuli, vos ſaluto lubens. ———

To this belongs that of Ariſtophanes in Pluto, He looks as if he were going to a revel, having his crown and his torch; and more fully, in the right reading of the verſe, in Plautus,

Tute tibi praeis lotis, luces cereum.

You go before your ſelf with the fiddle; you are your own torch-bearer. Some body elſe, it ſeems, they were wont to have, to perform theſe offices for them: So ſaith the Commentator of Hermogenes, Pythagoras, ſtudying the ſtars at midnight, ſaw a young man with a fidler, revelling with a torch. Agreeably, the word is here to be interpreted, the night-revels, or purſuits of their unclean deſigns: And ſo it is, Gal. v. 21. and 1 Pet. iv. 3. comiſſationes, which ſome have miſtaken for comeſſationes, as if it were from comedo, and ſo render it ſurfeitings; whereas the Latin word is but a light derivation from the Greek comos, and comazein. (H.) Now, the vicious practices mentioned here, are all of 'em ſuch as tend to the diſhonour and detriment of men, and are utterly inconſiſtent with the dignity and character of Chriſtians. Such are the revellings and exceſſes, the "rioting and drunkenneſs;" of which this Apoſtle ſays, 1 Theſſ. v. 7, 8. "They that be drunken are drunken in the night; but let us, "who are of the day, be ſober:" Such the "chambering and wantonneſs;" the lewdneſs and beſtialities of the Heathen, ſo far ſelf-condemn'd, even among them, as to endeavour their own concealment. But, for Chriſtians, "it is a ſhame (he ſays, for ſuch,) even to ſpeak of thoſe things, which were done of them in ſecret," Eph. v. 12. Such again the "ſtriſe and envying," ſo directly oppoſite to that univerſal kindneſs and peace, which our bleſſed Maſter hath made the badge and livery, as it were, of all who retain to him, John xiii. 35. And accordingly we are told, "He that hateth his brother is in darkneſs, and walketh in darkneſs," 1 John ii. 11. And we cannot wonder, that theſe ſins of bitterneſs and diſorder, are here added to thoſe of luxury and lewdneſs; when it is conſider'd how naturally hatred and contention ſpring from the heats of exceſs; and that the moderating mens ſenſual appetites and paſſions, were certainly the moſt effectual courſe to preſerve amity and good order in the world: The moſt furious quarrels and heart burnings, whether publick or private, are not about the neceſſary ſupports of life, but for thoſe ſuperfluities, which feed our luſt and our pride, and miniſter to pomp and extravagance. (Stanh.)

Put ye on the Lord.] Obſerve here, The Apoſtle doth not ſay as a moral philoſopher would have ſaid, Inſtead of rioting and drunkenneſs, chambering and wantonneſs, put on temperance, put on ſobriety, put on chaſtity, and ſo ſet a ſingle virtue againſt a ſingle vice: Bnt "put on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt;" ſeek by faith union with him, that ſo ye may derive virtue from him, to enable you unto holy walking before him: Set the doctrine and life of Chriſt continually before you; follow every inſtruction, and imitate all the parts of his holy converſation: Even as the garment is commenſurate to the body, put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. May not the expreſſion imply, 1. That the ſoul of man, ſince the fall, is in a naked ſtate, deſtitute of thoſe divine graces of the Holy Spirit, which were its original clothing in the day of undefiled innocency. 2. That Jeſus Chriſt is our ſpiritual clothing. viz. 1. In his righteouſneſs, to pardon and juſtify us: He is our clothing to cover the guilt of ſin out of God's ſight. 2. In his graces, to ſanctify us, by which he cleanſes us from our ſins, pollution, and filthineſs. 3. That Jeſus Chriſt, in order to our ſpiritual clothing, muſt be put on by faith; an unapplied Chriſt juſtifies none, ſaves none. It was not ſufficient under the law, that the blood of the ſacrifice was ſhed, but it was alſo to be ſprinkled in order to the expiation of guilt. The perſonal application of Chriſt's blood by faith on our part is as abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation, as is the ſhedding of his blood on his part, in order to our remiſſion and ſalvation. (B.) Whether this metaphor, of "putting on Chriſt," allude to our cloathing in general; or, whether, more particularly, to that emblem of innocence, the white robe, formerly us'd to be put on at baptiſm (Gal. iii. 27.) is no very material inquiry. The deſign of it is manifeſtly thus: Inſtead of thoſe vicious habits, which are a deformity to Chriſtians, and a diſhonour to their profeſſion, to recommend ſuch ornaments as ſuit with our conditions, and will not fail to procure us reſpect from thoſe with whom we converſe: And the expreſſion imports, That Chriſt ſhould be our pattern; that his ſobriety, and gravity, his meekneſs, and moderation, and great charity, and all the virtues and graces, ſo conſpicuous in him, ſhould be (if I may ſo ſay) the things in faſhion with all his followers; that they who are out of this mode, make a very aukward and ridiculous figure, ſuch as derives diſgrace and contempt upon them; and that theſe excellencies in Chriſt ſhould be as familiar to us, as inſeparable from us, as evident a diſtinction of our quality, as the apparel we conſtantly wear is to our bodies. (Stanh.) St. Chryſoſtome ſaith, it was a common phraſe, Such a one hath put on ſuch a one; that is, he is an imitator of him: So, to "put on the new man," is to walk as new men, "in righteouſneſs, and true holineſs, after the image of him that created us a new," Eph. iv. 24. and Col. iii. 10. (W.)

Make not proviſion.] The Apoſtle doth not ſay, "make no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil" the neceſſities, and the neceſſary deſires thereof; but to fulfil the luſts," or inordinate deſires thereof. Then only is the proviſion for the fleſh ſinful and unlawful, when it is ſought, more to ſatisfy its appetite, and to gratify inordinate deſires, than to ſtrengthen and fit us for our duty to God and man. In this latter ſenſe, to "make proviſion for the fleſh," is to furniſh our enemy with arms and ammunition to fight againſt our ſelves. Interpretatively, he makes proviſion for his luſts, that doth not provide againſt them; he feeds his luſts, that doth not ſtarve them; he nouriſhes and ſtrengthens his luſts, that doth not mortify and kill them: Explicitely and directly, men provide for their luſts, by entertaining ſuch thoughts in their minds, as do kindle, excite, and ſtir up luſt; and when thoſe thoughts are gratified with deſires, and thoſe deſires accompanied with endeavours; but worſt and ſaddeſt of all it is, when mens deſires to gratify their luſts are turned into prayers unto God Almighty in order to that end. Thus the Apoſtle James iv. 3. "Ye ask, and receive not, becauſe ye ask amiſs, that ye may conſume it upon your luſts." Learn hence, 1. That a ſober and moderate uſe of the creatures which God has given us, not barely for neceſſity, but delight, is allowable, and a commanded duty. 2. That to make uſe of the comforts of life, not to ſatisfy our natures, but to gratify our luſts and inordinate deſires, is a perverting of God's intention, in beſtowing the ſupports of life upon us, and a very heinous ſin. Make we then "no proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts thereof." (B.) This is a caution highly ſeaſonable, and pertinent to the Apoſtle's deſign; in regard that all the vices mention'd before, and whatſoever elſe is either a blemiſh or an obſtruction to the ſpiritual and divine life, proceed from an undue preference of the bodily and fleſhly part, and making the gratifications of, and care for that, the main end and meaſure of our actions. (Stanh.) See the notes on chap. vi. 12.

CHAP. XIV.

We muſt not deſpiſe thoſe who are weak in the faith; neither muſt They condemn thoſe who are ſtronger. We muſt give no cauſe of offence, in reſpect of things indifferent. Chriſtian liberty to be kept within the limits of edification and charity.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. HIM that is weak in the faith, receive ye, but not to doubtful diſputations. For one believeth that he may eat all things: Another who is weak, eateth herbs. Let not him that eateth, deſpiſe him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not, judge him that eateth; for God hath received him. Who art thou that judgeſt another man's ſervant? To his own maſter he ſtandeth or falleth: Yea, he ſhall be holden up; for God is able to make him ſtand. One man eſteemeth one day above another; another eſteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully perſuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks. For none of us liveth to himſelf, and no man dieth to himſelf. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: Whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Chriſt both died, and roſe, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living. But why doſt thou judge thy brother? Or why doſt thou ſet at nought thy brother? For we ſhall all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt. For it is written, As I live, ſaith the Lord, every knee ſhall bow to me, and every tongue ſhall confeſs to God. So then every one of us ſhall give account of himſelf to God.

Him that is weak in the faith.] Among thoſe who had been newly converted from Judaiſm, there were many weak brethren, who retain'd a reverence for the ceremonial law, as ſuppoſing it ſtill in force, and accordingly obſerv'd days and meats preſcribed by it: Whereas thoſe, who, being more confirm'd in the knowledge of their religion, were fully ſatisfied, that Chriſt had deliver'd them from their bondage to that law, intirely neglected the obſervation of days injoin'd by it, and eat promiſcuouſly of any kind of meats. Theſe different opinions and practices had occaſion'd ſome diſturbance in the church: For the former were ſcandalized at the liberty taken by the latter, and paſs'd unjuſt cenſures upon it; and the latter deſpiſed the weakneſs and ignorance of the former. To remedy this inconvenience, the Apoſtle adviſes the one to lay aſide raſh judgments, aud the other to uſe their Chriſtian liberty more cautiouſly, ſo as not to give any offence, or occaſion of ſin. (Ruſſel) Note, The Apoſtle doth not ſpeak here of the weakneſs of a brother, in doing any thing which is unlawful, or that it ſhould be tolerated by the ſtronger: But of ſuch a weakneſs as conſiſts in a vain fear, that ſomething is unlawful which indeed is not ſo; and in forbearing it as ſuch, and perhaps in proceeding further to cenſure others whom he ſeeth doing it. Yet, while he hath ſuch fear, himſelf ought not to do it; for, if he doth it, he ſins: And ſo alſo may another ſin in doing it, tho' knowing it lawful, if hereby he either ſees a likelihood of inducing the weak alſo to do it againſt his conſcience, or ſees his weakneſs ſuch, as that his own doing this, in the other's preſence, may make him deſert the religion; the preſerving a brother, in ſuch a caſe, being to be preferr'd before the content of a little food, or ſuch like ſmaller ſatisfactions of our own. (Fell) The perſon here recommended to their charity and forbearance, is "him that is weak in the faith:" Not him who is ſick unto death, thro' fundamental error, but one that is ſound in the faith, tho' weak in judgment; men of honeſt hearts but weak heads. (B.)

Receive ye.] Proſlambaneſthe ſignifieth, 1. To receive, or take a weak one unto them, and not to caſt him off: 2. Patiently to bear with him: And 3. By further inſtruction to ſeek to reſtore him. The ſame word is uſed by St. Paul, when he entreats Philemon to receive Oneſimus, "as his own Bowels," Philem. 12. And ſo the ſtrong muſt receive the weak; that is, with a charitable affection. (Leigh) Receive him to your communion; yet not ſo, that he thereby think himſelf encourag'd or authoriz'd to quarrel with other Mens reſolutions for the directing their own lives, and to condemn them. (H.)

But not to doubtful diſputations.] Dialogiſmos here ſeems to ſignify the arguings or reaſonings, and conſequent reſolutions of men, concerning themſelves, and the managing their whole courſe of life, what is lawful or unlawful for them; and particularly here, (as the context enforceth it) the reaſonings and reſolutions of thoſe who, from the liberty, of diſuſing the Moſaical law, given by Chriſt, conclude the lawfulneſs of eating any thing, ver. 2. A fuller inſtance or example of this notion of the word, I have not met with, than in Epicurus's Epiſtle to Idomeneus; where, ſpeaking of the torments he was then under, (ready to die,) as great as were imaginable, he ſays, The joy which he had in his mind, upon the remembrance of the (dialogiſmoi) reaſonings, which he had in his life-time, ſtood in battle-array againſt all thoſe torments of the ſtrangury, &c. What thoſe dialogiſmoi, or reaſonings, of Epicurus were, appears in his Epiſtle to Menæceus, in Diogenes Laertius; wherein, as in an apology for himſelf, and a declaration of the truth of his opinions, he confeſſes, 'Tis not eating or drinking, or any other of the ſenſualities of the world put together, that beget a pleaſant life: But (nephon logiſmos) a ſober diſcourſe, or reaſoning, and ſuch as ſearches out the cauſes of all choice or averſation, and drives away thoſe falſe opinions, from which the greateſt perturbation that ſeizeth on our mind, doth proceed. This ſober reaſoning what are the true cauſes of choice and averſation, that is, what is to be choſen or rejected upon true rational grounds, done or not done, was Epicurus's dialogiſmos; the remembrance of which brought him ſo much inward pleaſure in the midſt of his torments. This St. Ambroſe, reciting part of that Epiſtle of his, renders a ſober diſputing, a continent life, and ſobriety of Mind. And Cicero (Tuſc. Quæſt. l. 5.) mentioning his chearfulneſs at his death, tranſlates this, The remembrance of the moral rules which he invented. So that the logiſmos and dialogiſmos ſignifies there, (and ſo moſt probably here alſo) that reaſoning of mens hearts, by which they reſolve and determine what they may and may not do, and accordingly regulate the actions of their lives; that ſpecial act of their judicium practicum, which hath the governing of their practice, and conſequently diakriſis dialogiſmon is, the judging, or condemning, of other mens courſes. Which practice was not to be approved of, or encouraged, in the Judaizer on one ſide, as on the other ſide he that made uſe of his Chriſtian liberty was not to reject, but receive him to his communion, tho' he were erroneouſly and unneceſſarily ſcrupulous in point of the Moſaical obſervances. And ſo this firſt verſe is the breviate of the whole chapter; which is all on theſe two heads, that the Jewiſh Chriſtian, that underſtood his own liberty, muſt not deſpiſe and reject the Judaizing ſcrupulous believer; and that the Judaizer muſt not judge or condemn the other. (H.)

One believeth that he may eat.] Here the Apoſtle propoſeth, for example, the caſe of eating, or refuſing to eat of certain ſorts of meat: Which was ſolemnly conſider'd in the Apoſtolical ſynod at Jeruſalem. See the notes on Acts xv.

Let not him that eateth deſpiſe.] Obſerve well the Apoſtle's exhortation here to the two contending parties, not to villify or ſet at naught one another, condemning each other as humorous and ſcrupulous, much leſs as obſtinate and wilful; but eſpecially not to ſeparate from, or break communion with, each other, on this occaſion. As if he had ſaid, While there is error in our underſtandings, weakneſs in our judgments, and narrowneſs in our faculties, (that is, indeed, while we are men) differences will ariſe in the Church of God: But take care, that where there is not compliance, yet there may be peace; deſpiſe not, judge not, one another. What jars and ſtirs were there, between the eaſtern and weſtern churches, about the time of obſerving Eaſter? About celebrating the Lord's Supper, with leavened or unleavened bread? And verily, the fatal evils which our hot contentions have occaſion'd amongſt ourſelves, only about indifferent rites and ceremonies, tears of blood are not ſufficient to bewail! (B.)

For God hath received him.] God doth indifferently accept both of him that eateth, and of him that eateth not. (Hall)

Who art thou that judgeſt?] See the notes on Matth. vii. 1.

Eſteemeth one day above another.] The Apoſtle does not here ſpeak of thoſe, who, after an Heatheniſh manner, accounted ſome days good and fortunate, and others evil and unlucky; for ſuch are not at all to be borne with among Chriſtians: But he ſpeaks of ſuch converted Jews, who, tho' they believed in Chriſt, yet thought ſuch days as were appointed by the law, for faſting, or feaſting, to be more apt and fit than others, for the worſhip of God. (Aſſ.)

Be fully perſuaded.] He who acts what he thinks, or fears to be a ſin, be it really a ſin or not, ſinneth in ſo doing: But yet, he may ſin alſo in acting that, wherein he is "fully perſuaded" that he ſinneth not; for, tho' a full perſuaſion muſt be had, yet that is not ſufficient to make our actions lawful. (Fell) See the notes on Luke xvii. 5.

He that regardeth.] He that regardeth, and obſerveth one day above another, regardeth it out of reſpect to the Lord, whoſe law (as he ſuppoſeth) requires and injoins this difference: And he that regardeth not one day more than another, doth this out of reſpect to the ſame Lord, who, by the liberty of the Goſpel, hath freed us from thoſe Jewiſh obſervations. (Hall)

We live unto the Lord.] We may be ſaid to "live unto the Lord," and to "die unto the Lord," 1. When we do not frame our lives after our own wills, but according to the word and will of God; making that the rule and ground of all our actions. 2. When the great end, why we deſire life, is to do ſervice for Chriſt on earth, and to be fitted by him for the fruition of him in Heaven: And, 3. when we are willing to be at the diſpoſal of God, both for life and death; and that as to time, manner, and means, and all the other circumſtances of it: When a man is willing to lay down his life for the Lord, or at the call of the Lord, it is a certain evidence that he liveth and dieth unto the Lord (B.)

To this end.] Three things are here obſervable: 1. That Jeſus Chriſt, by virtue of his meritorious paſſion, and glorious reſurrection, was conſtituted Lord of all things, and has power to judge all perſons: "To this end Chriſt dy'd, roſe again, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living;" that is, be the judge and rewarder of all mankind. 2. That to this ſupreme and abſolute Lord every one of us muſt give an account of our actions, and from him receive our final doom: "We ſhall all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt." 3. The argument which the Apoſtle draws from hence, to diſſuade us from cenſuring and judging one another; and that is drawn from the conſideration of the laſt and final judgment, which we are all haſtning apace unto: "Why doſt thou judge thy brother? We ſhall all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt." As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Let there be a mutual forbearance among Chriſtians: Do not raſhly judge, and uncharitably cenſure, one another, becauſe in ſome little things ye differ from each other. What tho' your brother cannot in conſcience comply with your opinion or practice, muſt you preſently accuſe him of ſtomach, and condemn him for ſtubbornneſs, calling his non-compliance obſtinacy and humour, pride and ſingularity, which he calls conſcience towards God? Remember, the judge ſtandeth at the door, and you muſt ſuddenly ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt; where "every one of us muſt give an account of himſelf to God." Where note, The univerſality of the ſubject rendering this account; "Every one of us:" The ſubject-matter of which the account muſt be render'd; and that is, "of ourſelves:" As alſo the deſignation and deſcription of the perſon unto whom this account muſt be render'd; and that is, To the all-ſeeing and heart-ſearching God; to God the creator, but eſpecially to Chriſt the Lord, the redeemer; who is ſuch a judge as the power of the mightieſt cannot daunt; ſuch a judge as the riches of the wealthieſt cannot bribe; ſuch a judge as the ſubtilty of the wiſeſt cannot delude; ſuch a judge as there is no appealing from, no repealing of his ſentence: "Therefore, judge nothing before the time, till the Lord cometh." (B.) See Mr. Sim. Patrick's ſerm. 1707. againſt judging and cenſuring.

Shall give account of himſelf to God.] To Theo. Here Oecumenius notes, That it is ſaid of God the Father, that he "judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son," John v. 22. And therefore what the Apoſtle here ſaith, viz. that "every tongue ſhall confeſs to God," and bow the knee to him, ver. 11. and "every one of us ſhall give account of himſelf to God," ver. 12. is manifeſtly ſpoken of Chriſt as judge, and therefore Chriſt is God. And this argument was uſed before the Nicene council, by Novatian and others. It is a wonder, that Socinus ſhould deny, that the Apoſtle ſays, Every knee ſhall bow to Chriſt, when, citing the ſame place, Phil. ii. 10, 11. the Apoſtle ſo expreſly declares, "that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhall bow, and every tongue confeſs that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord;" and here from this place proves, that Chriſt is "Lord both of the dead and living," before whoſe tribunal they muſt all ſtand; and ſo muſt own his power and authority over them, which is the thing expreſs'd metaphorically, by bending of the knee, and confeſſion of the tongue. And if theſe words, which the Prophet certainly ſpake of Jehovah, the God of the Jews, be well applied by the Apoſtle to Chriſt, Chriſt muſt be alſo the Perſon intended by them: For how could the Apoſtle prove, that every knee muſt bow to Chriſt, from the words of God, ſaying, to me every knee ſhall bow, if Chriſt were, in his whole nature and eſſence, as different from that God who ſpake thoſe words of himſelf, as is a creature from his great Creator? Crellius here ſays, St. Paul accommodates this paſſage to Chriſt, not that he is God, but becauſe what is contain'd in it, ſhall, by Chriſt, as ſubordinate to God, be exhibited and perform'd to God himſelf. But this ſubterfuge is confuted by the words of the Apoſtle, who ſays expreſly, that to the name of Jeſus every knee ſhall bow, and every tongue confeſs that Jeſus is the Lord; and ſo declares, theſe words are fulfill'd by the honour exhibited, not to God the Father, but to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And ſeeing he is Lord over the dead, by the power by which he is "able to ſubdue all things to himſelf," Phil. iii. 21. which doubtleſs is the power of God; And ſince, having raiſed all men, he "will bring to light the hidden things" which they have done, "and manifeſt the counſels of their hearts," 1 Cor. iv. 5. and ſo muſt be omniſcient, and have the knowledge of the ſecrets of the heart; and 'tis the property of God alone to raiſe the dead by his power, and be the ſearcher of all hearts; theſe properties aſcribed to Chriſt, here and elſewhere, muſt ſhew that he is truly God. (W.) See the notes on John v. 23. and Phil. ii. 10, 11.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. Let us not therefore judge one another any more: But judge this rather, that no man put a ſtumbling-block, or an occaſion to fall in his brother's way. I know, and am perſwaded by the Lord Jeſus, that there is nothing unclean of it ſelf: But to him that eſteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean. But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkeſt thou not charitably. Deſtroy not him with thy meat, for whom Chriſt died. Let not then your good be evil ſpoken of. For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt. For he that in theſe things ſerveth Chriſt, is acceptable to God, and approved of men. Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another. For meat deſtroy not the work of God. All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence. It is good neither to eat fleſh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother ſtumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak. Haſt thou faith? Have it to thy ſelf before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himſelf in that thing which he alloweth. And he that doubteth, is damned if he eat, becauſe he eateth not of faith: For whatſoever is not of faith, is ſin.

But judge this rather.] The Apoſtle having, in the former part, declar'd what things were to be avoided, he proceeds here to ſhew what we are to do; viz. To take care, leſt, by a prepoſterous uſe of our Chriſtian liberty, we give occaſion to our weak Brother to fall. (Beza)

That no man put a ſtumbling-block.] There are ſeven ways, whereby we become acceſſary to, and partakers of, other mens ſins; the two firſt of which concern magiſtrates and other ſuperiors, and the reſt, all men alike. 1. Jubendo, by commanding: If they "decree unrighteous decrees," Iſa. x. 1. and command any thing, by way of law, which is unlawful in it ſelf to be done, like Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iii. 4, &c. 2. Permittendo, by Toleration; that is, by permiſſion or connivance at another man's ſin; when he hath the power to reſtrain him from it, but doth not exerciſe it, like Eli, 1 Sam. iii. 13, 14. 3. Provocando, by provocation; which is either, by urging, like Job's wife, Job ii. 9. or alluring, like Sampſon's wife, Judg. xiv. 15, &c. 4. Suadendo, by perſwading, or giving evil counſel and advice; like that of Achitophel, 2 Sam. xvi. 21. 5. Conſentiendo, by conſenting to other mens ſins; which may be incurr'd, either, directly, 1 Tim. v. 22. interpretatively, 2 Sam. xi. 16. by participation, Pſa. l. 18. by approbation, Acts viii. 1. by union, Prov. i. 14. or by ſilence, and not diſcloſing it; Lev. v. 1. 6. Defendendo, by maintaining it, Prov. xxiv. 24. Iſa. v. 20. And, 7. Ratione ſcandali; by giving of ſcandal, or doing ſome act whereby another may fall into ſin. Thus, by accident, a man may partake of another's ſin; and that not only in actions ſinful, by giving evil example, but ſometimes in things lawful and indifferent, clothed with ſuch circumſtances, whereby the weak (that is, the ignorant may be drawn to ſome unlawful act: As when ſome did eat of things ſacrificed to idols, no way in it ſelf unlawful, others were thereby occaſion'd to commit idolatry. Yet here, we muſt conſider, that if the thing we do be indifferent in itſelf, yet if commanded by lawful authority, we muſt not forbear it: Potius ſcandalum admittatur, quam veritas amittatur, as St. Auguſtine faith; Rather let offence come, than the truth be loſt; I may add, Rather than any act, which is neceſſary in virtue of the command, be omitted, and ſo a ſin of omiſſion follow. For this is ſcandalum acceptum, non datum, a ſcandal taken, and not given: And in this caſe we may ſay, as Chriſt ſaid of the Phariſees, If they will be offended, let them be offended. But if the thing be not enforc'd by command, but wholly in our own power, and no way neceſſary, we ought to forbear, till the weak brother may be inform'd or rectified: 'Tis not weakneſs, but wilfulneſs in him, after ſufficient means of information; and no man need to abridge himſelf in his liberty, for the pleaſing of ſuch perſons. (Andr.) 'Tis impoſſible to avoid all things which may adminiſter to others an occaſion of falling; but thoſe we muſt avoid, to which we are not neceſſarily induced. (G.) See the notes on Luke xvii. 1. and 1 Cor. x. 32.

Nothing unclean of it ſelf.] It is a principle of the Chriſtian faith, that all the creatures of God are good. None can be hurtful to any, but to thoſe who uſe them againſt their conſcience, or contrary to the divine appointment, and the prohibition of the church. (Q.) Now, Here is a plain demonſtration, that the perſon mention'd as weak in faith, was alſo weak in underſtanding; i. e. One who underſtood not that meat to be free from uncleanneſs, which indeed was ſo; and that was therefore weak in faith, becauſe he was ſo in his underſtanding; and ſo alſo it is plainly, 1 Cor. viii 7, 10. 'Tis therefore without ground affirm'd, that thoſe two ſorts of weak perſons muſt be us'd very differently; you muſt have a care of offending thoſe who are weak in faith, but you muſt inſtruct and govern thoſe who are weak in underſtanding. 2. Here alſo is a plain evidence that the weak Jew had no juſt matter of offence given him by the Gentiles eating, or that they did not take offence at the open violation of an expreſs Law of God by the Gentiles eating; nor were they thus weak out of reverence to any expreſs poſitive Law (which all men agreed was given by God to them) at whoſe eating they were ſcandaliz'd. To make this very clear, conſider that the weakneſs of the Jews conſiſted in two things: 1. That they were not convinced that the Law of Moſes was out of date, and therefore durſt not do any thing which was forbidden by that Law, nor omit doing what the Law commanded: And, as to this it is true, they were weak out of reverence to an expreſs poſitive Law, which, through the weakneſs of their underſtanding, they thought to be ſtill binding; but the Apoſtle here declares to be, by Chriſt, taken away. 2. That they could not endure to ſee others do what they themſelves durſt not do; i. e. they could not endure to ſee the Gentile converts eat thoſe meats, which the Law of Moſes forbad the Jews to eat. Now here, I ſay, they were not weak out of reverence to any expreſs poſitive Law; nor could they take offence at the open violation of any expreſs Law of God: For there was no ſuch Law given to the Gentiles, to abſtain from ſuch meats as unclean, nor to the Gentile converts to Chriſtianity, to obſerve any ſuch Law; they therefore, by eating of theſe meats, did violate no Law, given by God to them, and ſo the Jews could take no offence at the violation of any ſuch Law. And ſo much ſtronger is the caſe of eating things offer'd to Idols, in which yet the Apoſtle requires this abſtinence, with regard to the conſcience of the weak Jew, 1 Cor. viii. 7, 10. and x. 28, 29. For the eating of things offer'd to Idols (unleſs it were done in the Idol Temple, the place appointed for his worſhip,) was againſt no Law of God, but only againſt the canons of the Jews; and ſo here the Jews could not be offended with that action out of reverence to any Law which God had made againſt it, but only from the Jewiſh canons, and interpretations of the Law, touching abſtaining from Idolatry: The imagination of the Jew, that ſuch meats bought in the ſhambles, or ſet before Chriſtians at a friendly entertainment, were unlawful, was a vain imagination, and ſo they had only an imaginary Law which occaſion'd their offence. Nor does the Apoſtolical canon concern any other meats offer'd to Idols, than thoſe which were eaten in the Idol Temple: For ſure the Apoſtle, who was a part of that council, would not here freely allow what the whole college of Apoſtles thought neceſſary, even for the Gentile-converts, to abſtain from. This ſcandal therefore of the weak Jews, was plainly Scandalum acceptum, non datum, receiv'd, but not given; for they had no reaſon at all to believe that the Law of Moſes was ever given to, or was in force among the Gentiles, and much leſs that their Jewiſh canons could be ſo. (W.) See the notes on Acts x. 15. and xv. 29.

If thy brother be grieved.] Lupeiſthai here ſignifies to be grieved, as that notes being wounded or gall'd in his courſe, and by that means driven off from the profeſſion of Chriſtianity. That it ſignifies ſo, appears by the context, comparing this verſe with ver. 13. where the brother's having a ſcandal, that is, gall-trap (ſee note on Mat. xi. 6.) put in his way, is all one with the lupeitai, being grieved here, anſwerable to both which together is, (ſcandalizetai kai aſthenei) is ſcandalized (or galled) and made weak, or ſick, or faint, or wounded, ver. 21. For it is to be obſerved, that lupe, grief or ſorrow, is oft taken for the cauſe of ſorrow, diſeaſe, or wound, or gall, as odyne pſyches, Ecclus xxx. 12. is one that cauſeth grief to the ſoul; and as penthos, mourning, is by Heſychius rendred ſymphora, calamity, which is the cauſe of mourning; and as phobos, fear, ſignifies (the cauſe of fear) danger; according to an Hebraiſm, obſervable in theſe writers, where for want of the conjugation Hiphil, which in Hebrew ſignifies to cauſe to do any thing, the Greek language is fain to uſe the active to do. So the Hebrew which ſignifies infirm or ſick, Lam. i. 22. is by the Greek rendred lupeitai, where we read, is faint, as Iſa. i. 15. (paſa cardia pros lupen) the whole heart is faint, that is, very ſick, which is the cauſe of grief; and therefore the ſame word is in other places render'd odyne and noſos, Deut. vii. 15. pain or diſeaſe. So that which ſignifies deſtruction, and is frequently rendred apoleia, is Prov. xxxi. 6. render'd lupe, (hoi en lupais) men in ſorrow, for which our Engliſh have, ready to periſh, agreeably to which St. Paul here joins (as the interpretation of grieving the brother) deſtroying him. This is far diſtant from that notion which is ordinarily had of this phraſe, as if it ſignified ſorrow, or trouble, or grief, for the other man, or rather anger or diſpleaſure againſt him; which being (in this matter) without cauſe (for 'tis ſaid ver. 14. that that which the brother eats is not unclean in its ſelf, and therefore he may lawfully eat it in that reſpect) is wholly to be charged on him that is ſo cauſleſly diſpleaſed or angry, and would not devolve that guilt of ſcandal on him that eats, that here lies on him by the brothers being grieved or wounded. (H.)

The Kingdom of God.] By "the kingdom of God," ſometimes is underſtood. 1. The miniſtry of the Goſpel, becauſe the elect are admitted into the kingdom of God by the miniſtry of the Goſpel, and God reigns in their hearts by the ſame: Thus it is taken, Mat. xi. 11. "He that is leaſt in the kingdom of heaven is greater than John;" that is, the leaſt miniſter of the Goſpel of Chriſt can give a greater report of Chriſt than John: We (the miniſters of the Goſpel) are ſaid to be greater than John, not propter gratiam, ſed propter teſtimonium Chriſti, not for grace, but for the teſtimony of the Lord Jeſus. John indeed pointed out Chriſt to the people, John i. 29. Ecce agnus Dei. "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſins of the world:" But he could not ſay (as we can ſay) that Chriſt died, roſe again, aſcended, and took poſſeſſion of heaven for his elect: For John's head was taken from him before our head, the Lord Jeſus, ſuffer'd. 2. By the kingdom of God, is underſtood the ſtate of grace in this life, whereby an entry is made into the kingdom of God. Thus it is taken, Luke xi. 20. "The kingdom of God is within you." 3. By the kingdom of God is meant the ſtate of glory in the life to come, where God reigns more perfectly in his Saints, and more fully, and therefore chiefly call'd the kingdom of God. And ſo it is, John iii. 3. "Except a man be born again, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." All theſe, in my judgment, may ſafely ſtand with the words of the text: For the miniſtry of the Goſpel ſtands not upon things indifferent, but of more ſubſtantial matters; as "righteouſneſs, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt:" And for grace and glory, it is not meats, and matters of indifferency that bring us to God's favour, or the kingdom of Heaven, therefore no ſuch ſtrife ought to be about them. (Greenwood.)

It is not meat and drink.] By meats and drinks are underſtood all matters of a middle nature: As bread at the ſacrament, whether leaven'd or unleaven'd; geſtures, and ſuch like. There was a time when certain meats were not of an indifferent nature, for they were peremptorily prohibited by God, Lev. xi. 4. as that which chewed the cud, and divided not the hoof, (as the coney, the camel, the hare) and that which divided the hoof, but chewed not the cud (as the ſwine.) But now, by Chriſt our liberty is enlarg'd, and we may, without breach of the law, eat coney, hare, hog; as that voice from Heaven (when the ſheet was let down to St. Peter in a trance) plainly ſheweth, Acts x. 15. 'What God hath cleans'd that call not thou common." Now they are made indifferent; "for the kingdom of God is not meat and drink." &c. (Idem) It conſiſteth not in this, whether ſuch and ſuch meats may be eaten or not: "For neither if we eat, nor if we eat not, are we much either the better or the worſe" for that, 1 Cor. viii. 8. But the kingdom of God is "righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt." It conſiſteth in the exerciſe of holy graces, and the conſcionable performance of unqueſtion'd duties. Sincere confeſſion of ſin, proceeding from an humble and contrite heart; conſtancy in profeſſing the true faith of Chriſt; patience in ſuffering adverſity; exemplary obedience to the holy laws of God, fruitfulneſs in good works; theſe are the things wherein God expecteth to be glorify'd by us. But as for meats and drinks, and all other indifferent things, in as much as they have no intrinſical moral either good or evil in them, but are good or evil only according as they are us'd well or ill, the glory of God is not at all concern'd in the uſing or not uſing of them, otherwiſe than as our faith, or temperance, or obedience, or charity, or other like chriſtian grace or virtue is exercis'd, or evidenced thereby. (Sanderſ. and Sharp) See the notes on ver. 23.

Joy in the Holy Ghoſt.] That (chara) joy, Gal. v. 22. ſignifies not the natural paſſion, but the Chriſtian virtue, and that again moſt probably that which is exerciſed toward our brethren, appears by the (agape) charity before, and (eirene) peace, &c. after it; and therefore it muſt be underſtood, in that notion which ſhall be agreeable thereto, either to ſignify the rejoycing at any good that befalls another, but eſpecially at the virtuous actions performed by him (which, 1 Cor. xiii. 6. is "rejoycing in the truth," that is, integrity and ſincerity of another, oppoſite to his (adikia) doing amiſs precedent) or elſe the deſire or delight of doing good to others, which, as a thing very pleaſant to him that hath it, and as the cauſe of joy to them that receive benefit from it, may perhaps be called joy. And tho' the former of theſe notions is the more eaſy and prompt, yet that this latter is the more proper to that place, may appear probable, by comparing it with the like phraſe here, (chara en pneumati haio) "joy in the holy Ghoſt," which is here alſo joined with "righteouſneſs and peace," (and all of them, by the matter in hand, the care of not offending the weak brother, appear to be branches of duty to the neighbour) and ſeems contrary to the grieving and wounding the brother, ver. 15. that is, the betraying him to any ſin; and is expounded, ver. 19. by purſuing theſe things that belong to edification toward one another; that is, building up in piety, bettering one another, which is here joined with purſuing "the things that belong to peace" (as there the joy is with peace itſelf) and chap. 15. 2. by pleaſing the neighbour to his good for edification; that is, gratifying, or cauſing joy and pleaſure to him in improving his ſpiritual weal: And ſo, 1 Cor. x. 32. the not giving ſcandal to others, is exemplified by his "pleaſing all men in all things, not ſeeking his own profit, but the profit of many," ver. 33. And ſo "not to ſeek his own, but that which is anothers," ver. 24. as it is ſaid of charity, that it "ſeeketh not her own," 1 Cor. xiii. 5. that is, takes care of others ſafety, not only of her own; doth nothing that may ſcandalize another; and rather than do ſo, abſtains from that which the man himſelf approves of. By all which it ſeems probable, that (chara) joy, and "joy in the holy Ghoſt," that grace of the Chriſtian, flowing from the ſanctifying ſpirit of God, or which is according to the will of God, a holy Chriſtian joy (as "rejoycing in the Lord," Phil. iv. 4. is rejoycing in thoſe things, afflictions there, which God would have us rejoice in) is the ſeeking and advancing the ſpiritual weal and good of others; as the grieving of them is the contrary, the wounding of their conſciences, and occaſioning their ſin. 'Tis true, "the joy of the holy Ghoſt," 1 Theſſ. i. 6. is the rejoycing in afflictions, contrary to the joy of the world; and ſo "rejoycing in hope," Rom. xii. 12. But that hinders not, but theſe phraſes, being otherwiſe inclined by the context, may ſignify otherwiſe. (H.)

Acceptable to God, and approved.] As, in the foregoing verſe, religion is deſcribed by its principle or end, ſo here 'tis deſcrib'd by its fruits and effects; viz. that it renders a man "acceptable to God, and approved of men." 1. Accepted of God (Euareſtos to Theo) well pleaſing to God. 'Tis the ſame with that word, Acts x. 35. "in every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs is accepted with him." 2. "approv'd of men." (dokimos) 'Tis an expreſſion frequently applied to gold, to ſignify its purity, and excellency; and to money in general, to expreſs its currentneſs. So the Septuagint, Gen. xxiii. 16. argurion dokimon, "current money." And from thence 'tis tranſlated to ſignify the integrity of perſons; ſuch as paſs for current, and approv'd among all ſorts of men. Which words, thus explain'd, may very properly afford theſe three obſervations. 1. That there are ſome things in religion, wherein a man may be forward and zealous, and yet fall ſhort of the kingdom of God; which "is not meat and drink." 2. there are other things in religion, wherein, if a man be faithful, and ſincere, he ſhall be accepted by God, tho' he ſhould miſtake and fall ſhort of his duty in other things. "But righteouſneſs, peace," &c. 3. The reaſon why Chriſtians of ſeveral perſuaſions are leſs approv'd to one another, is becauſe they lay out more of their zeal and ſtrength in thoſe leſſer things, "meat and drink" than in thoſe of greater conſequence. (Wilkins) See Biſhop Wilkins's ſermons on this text.

The things which make for peace.] This duty, of "following after the things which make for peace," hath a two-fold object, according to the two different relations and capacities, in which we are to be conſider'd, viz. the Church our Mother, and particular Chriſtians our brethren: In the firſt relation, we are conſider'd as Subjects; in the ſecond, as Fellow-Chriſtians. With reſpect to the former, the peace we are to purſue implies obedience, and preſervation of communion, in oppoſition to ſchiſm and ſeparation: With reſpect to the latter, it implies mutual love and charity, in oppoſition to quarrels and contentions. For the right underſtanding of this, in order to cure our diviſions, let it be conſider'd, 1. That every Chriſtian, upon the very account of his being ſo, is a member of the Church of Chriſt, and is bound to join in external communion with it, where it can be had. The primary deſign of our Saviour, in his undertaking for us, was not to ſave particular perſons, without reſpect to a ſociety, but to gather to himſelf a church out of mankind, to erect and form a body politic, of which himſelf was the head, and particular Chriſtians the members; and, in this method, through obedience to his laws and government, to bring men to ſalvation. This is no more than what is the ſenſe and language of the holy Scriptures; wherein whatever Chriſt is ſaid to have done and ſuffer'd for mankind, he is ſaid to have done for them, not as ſcatter'd individuals, but as incorporated into a church. Thus "Chriſt loved the church, and gave himſelf for it," Eph. v. 25. Chriſt redeemed "the church with his own blood," Acts xx. 28. "Chriſt is the Saviour of his body," Eph. v. 23. that is, the church: And many other paſſages of like importance. The plain conſequence from hence is, that every perſon, ſo far as he is a Chriſtian, is a member of the church, and by virtue of that relation to the church it is, that he has any relation to Chriſt, or any title to the privileges of the Goſpel. And if ſo, then every ſuch perſon is obliged to external communion; for the very nature of church memberſhip implies it: Nor can either the ends of church-ſociety, nor the benefits of it, be attain'd without it. For, without joining in external communion, neither can the worſhip of God, the publick profeſſion of our religion, nor the mutual edification of one another (the great ends of church-ſociety) be attain'd. And the pardon of ſin, and the graces of the ſpirit being generally and ordinarily convey'd, not immediately, but by the miniſtry of men, to whom the miniſtry of reconciliation is committed, the method of obtaining theſe benefits is by external communion, to ſuch as are fitted for it. And altho' God is not tyed to thoſe means, but may convey thoſe benefits without them, where they cannot be had; yet we are. From hence it appears, that there is a greater obligation to church-ſociety, than our voluntary acceſſion to this or that congregation; and likewiſe that a man cannot be a Chriſtian, but as he is a member in communion with the church. 2. That every one is bound to join in communion with the national church, to which he belongs, ſuppoſing there be nothing in the terms of its communion that makes it unlawful for him ſo to do. That which lays an obligation upon us to join in communion with the church, (to wit, our being members of that one body of Chriſt) doth alſo lay an obligation upon us, as much as in us lies, to preſerve the unity of that body; for this, both the fundamental laws of ſociety, and the expreſs precepts of Chriſtianity, do require of every member: But now, to make a rent in, or ſeparate from, any part of the body of Chriſt, with which we may lawfully communicate, is directly contrary to the preſerving the unity of that body; and therefore certainly, ſuch a rent or ſeparation muſt be unlawful: And, if ſo, then it muſt be unlawful alſo to join with any congregation of men among us who have made ſuch a rent or ſeparation. So that, ſo long as the fixed regular aſſemblies of the nation wherein we live, do truly belong to the Catholic church, and we can lawfully join with them, it is certain, we are bound ſo to do, and not to join with thoſe congregations who have withdrawn themſelves from them: For, to do this, would be to join in ſociety with Separatiſts; would be a partaking with their ſin, and a breach of the Apoſtle's precept, of "avoiding thoſe who cauſe diviſions," ch. xvi. 17. 3. That the being a member of any church, doth oblige a man to ſubmit to all the laws and conſtitutions of that church. But here, the power which we aſcribe to the church, doth not imply any authority over our judgments, or that, in virtue thereof, ſhe can oblige us to give an inward aſſent to her determinations, any further than ſhe gives us evidence for the truth of them; but only an authority over our practice, that ſhe can oblige us to ſubmit ſo far to her definitions, as not to act any thing contrary to them. And, 4. That we can have no juſt cauſe, to withdraw our communion from the church, whereof we are members, but when we cannot communicate with it without the commiſſion of a ſin. So that there are but two caſes, wherein it can be lawful to withdraw our communion from a church, becauſe there are but two caſes wherein communion with her can be ſinful; viz. When the church requires of us, as a condition of her communion, Either, 1. An acknowledgment and profeſſion of that for a truth, which we know to be an error; Or, 2. The joining with her in ſome practices which we know to be againſt the laws of God. In theſe two caſes, to withdraw our obedience to the church is ſo far from being a ſin, that it is a neceſſary duty: Becauſe we have an obligation to the laws of God, antecedent to that we have to the laws of the church; and we are bound to obey theſe no farther than they are conſonant or agreeable to thoſe. And as peace ſignifies mutual love and charity, in oppoſition to ſtrife and bitterneſs and contentions, "the things which make for peace" are more eſpecially to be reduced under theſe rules; 1. To diſtinguiſh carefully between matters of faith, and matters of opinion; and as to the latter, to be willing that every one ſhould enjoy the liberty of judging for himſelf. 2. To have a great ſimplicity and purity of intention in the purſuit of truth; and at no hand to let paſſion or intereſt, or any ſelf-end be ingredient into our religion. 3. Never to quarrel about words or phraſes; but ſo long as other men mean much the ſame as we do, let us be content, tho' they have not the luck to expreſs themſelves ſo well. 4. Never to charge upon men the conſequences of their opinions, when they expreſly diſown them. 5. To abſtract mens perſons from their opinions; and, in examining or oppoſing theſe, never to make any reflections upon thoſe. And, 6. To ſet our ſelves ſeriouſly upon a vigorous purſuit of holineſs. (Sharpe) See his ſermon at large upon this text.

And things wherewith one may edify another.] For the true notion of the Scripture ſenſe of edification, ſee the notes on ch. xv. 2. The Apoſtle well underſtood what he ſaid, when he join'd peace and edification together. For, where the hearts and tongues of builders are divided, the building will either come to nothing, or prove but a Babel of confuſion. "For where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work," Jam. iii. 16. Strife makes ill work: It builds up nothing, except it be the walls of Babel. It is peace and concord that build up the walls of Jeruſalem; which, as it has its name from peace, ſo has it its beauty and perfection from peace: And then, but not before, ſhall "Jeruſalem be built as a city that is at unity in itſelf," Pſa. cxxii. 3. when they that build it are at unity at firſt among themſelves. (Sanderſ.)

All things indeed are pure.] See the notes on Luke xi. 21. and Acts x. 15.

Or is offended.] Scandalizetai. To offend or ſcandalize a weak brother, is alſo to be an occaſion of his ruin, by cauſing him to fall off from the faith, or to be prejudiced againſt it; as will appear from a brief view of the places where the phraſe is us'd. So Mat. v. 29, 30. "If thy right eye, or hand (ſcandalizei ſe) offend thee (i. e. if it leads thee to hell, and to perdition) cut it off." So, ch. xi. 6. "Bleſſed is he who is not offended in me;" i. e. who is not, by the meanneſs of my preſent circumſtances, or by the doctrine I am ſent to preach, diverted from believing in me. So, ch. xiii. 21. "When perſecution comes, he (the ſtony ground) (ſcandalizetai) is offended." So, ver. 57. and ch. xv. 11. Mark vi. 3. Luke vii. 23. the Jews were ſcandaliz'd at Chriſt; i. e. they were diverted from owning him as the Meſſiah, either by reaſon of his words, or the meanneſs of his original, and his appearance in the world: So were the multitude and ſome of his diſciples ſcandaliz'd at his diſcourſe about eating his fleſh. Jo. vi. 60, 61. So does our Lord admoniſh his diſciples, not to be ſcandaliz'd at the perſecutions they ſhould ſuffer, Jo. xvi 1. So he foretells, that many who had once believ'd in him, would be ſcandaliz'd when tribulations would abound, Mat. xxiv. 10. So he tells his own diſciples, that they would be ſcandaliz'd at his ſufferings, Mat. xxvi. 31. And ſo both Peter and the reſt of them were offended, or ſcandaliz'd, their faith in him failing for a ſeaſon, Luke xxiv. 21. So are we to underſtand thoſe words, Wo to him that offends, or ſcandalizes, "one of theſe little ones," Mat. xvii. 10. as appears from the reaſon following, ver. 14. "It is not the will of your heavenly father that one of theſe little ones ſhould periſh." So the word is us'd, 1 Cor. viii. 13. And ſo it may be well interpreted when the Apoſtle ſays 2 Cor. xi. 29. "Who is offended, (i. e. in danger to fall off from the Chriſtian faith) and I burn not," with a fervent zeal for his recovery? (W.) See the notes on Matth. v. 29. and xi. 6.

He that doubteth.] Ho diakrinomenos. The word ſignifies to diſcern ſometime, and to put a difference; as a weak Chriſtian, holding this meat lawful, and that unlawful. This is more than to doubt; and is, a minore, here included. But here it is better render'd, doubteth; as it is alſo us'd, Matth. xxi. 21. Acts x. 20. Rom. iv. 20. Jam. i. 6. And it is expounded, by Budæus, alternantibus ſententiis ſecum diſceptare, when a man is at no certainty with himſelf, but at variance, ſometime being of one mind, and ſometime of another. Calvin and Aretius, with others, render it dijudicat: So Eraſmus; which is, when the judgment is carried into diverſe parts: And ſo alſo dubius ſignifies ſuch doubting, as when of two ways a man knows not which to take. (Leigh)

Whatſoever is not of faith, is ſin.] The word faith being us'd in ſeveral ſenſes in the New Teſtament, it may be proper to take notice of ſome of the chief. In general, Divine Faith is a firm aſſent, or full perſuaſion of mind, concerning what is teſtify'd, reveal'd, or made known by God himſelf, or perſons commiſſion'd by him, Jo. xx. 29. Faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is a full perſuaſion of the truth of what is reveal'd concerning him in the New Teſtament: That he is the Perſon ſpoken of by the Prophets, who was to come into the world, the Meſſiah, the Chriſt, the Son of God; that he ſuffered for our ſins, roſe again from the dead, &c. Math. xvi. 16. Other ſenſes of the word faith are theſe. 1. The doctrine of faith, or things to be believed. Gal. i. 23. 1 Tim. i. 19. Jude 3. 2. A perſuaſion that this or the other thing is, or is not, lawful to be done; which is the ſenſe here. 3. Fidelity or faithfulneſs, Mat. xxiii. 23. 4. The Chriſtian Covenant, or the Chriſtian religion, in oppoſition to the Moſaical covenant or religion, Rom. iii. 27. xix. 32. Gal. iii. 2, 7, 9, 14. &c. Eph. ii. 8. iv. 5. 5. The outward profeſſion of the Chriſtian religion, without good works, Jam. ii. 14, 17, 18. 6. That extraordinary faith, which was requiſite in the perſon who wrought a miraculous cure, Mat. xvii. 20. and in the perſon upon whom the cure was wrought, Luke vii. 50. Acts xiv. 9. And, 7. Truſt and dependence on the goodneſs and providence of God. (Fox.) By the word faith in this text is plainly meant, a rational perſuaſion concerning the lawfulneſs of any action. Not a full perſuaſion, ariſing from infallible proof and demonſtration, which, in moſt caſes, is not to be attain'd: But ſuch a perſuaſion only, as is grounded upon probable and moral certainty, where the arguments for the lawfulneſs of a thing are more or ſtronger than thoſe againſt it; in which ſenſe it is taken three times in this and the foregoing verſe. And this is exactly agreeable to the original word, Piſtis; which, in its primary and native ſignification, denotes a perſuaſion of mind, in which all kinds of faith whatſoever do conſiſt, and without which there can be no ſuch thing. The doctrine here laid down by the Apoſtle is this; that either a real opinion that a thing is unlawful, or the bare doubtfulneſs or ſuſpenſion of a man's judgment about it, is alone ſufficient to render it unlawful to them: Which he proves in the following method. Whatſoever a man really thinks unlawful, or concerning the lawfulneſs of which he is in doubt, he ought not to do, and is ſelf condemned if he venture upon it: Becauſe, whatſoever is done under ſuch opinion or doubtfulneſs, does not proceed from a perſuaſion that it is lawful: And whatſoever a man does, without being perſuaded of its lawfulneſs, is a ſin. (Ruſſel.) Being now upon this ſubject, it will not be improper to take notice of an objection againſt conformity, founded as is pretended upon this text. Some people may ask, Do you perſuade us to conform to the orders of the church, tho' we are not ſatisfy'd in our minds concerning them? I anſwer, That I think this is the beſt advice that can be given to ſuch ſcrupulous perſons. It would be an endleſs, infinite thing, and communion with any church would be impracticable, if every private Chriſtian was oblig'd to ſuſpend joining himſelf to it, till he was perfectly ſatiſfy'd about the reaſonableneſs and expediency of all that was requir'd, or was in uſe in that church: For indeed private perſons are, by no means, proper judges of what is fit and convenient in the adminiſtration of church government, diſcipline, or publick worſhip, no more than they are of matters of ſtate, or the reaſonableneſs of all civil laws: Common people have, generally, neither patience to conſider, nor judgment to weigh all circumſtances, nor wiſdom to chuſe that which is beſt. Theſe things of a publick nature belong only to our ſuperiors and governors; and if they appoint what is unfit, indecent, or inconvenient, they only are accountable for it: It is not the fault of thoſe who join with ſuch worſhip, or yield to injunctions (not plainly ſinful) for the ſake of peace and order. I know, therefore, no better rule for the directing and quieting, mens conſciences than this; that, as to all ſuch matters as relate to publick order, and decent adminiſtration of God's worſhip, they ſhould, without any ſuperſtitious fearfulneſs, comply with the cuſtoms of the church they live in, never troubling themſelves nor curiouſly examining what is beſt and fitteſt, ſo long as nothing is injoin'd, or, done, which (after true enquiry) appears to us contrary to any law of God. Thus St. Auguſtine directs us; where he ſays, he knew no better courſe for a ſerious prudent Chriſtian to take, in matters of rites and cuſtoms, than to follow the church's example where he is: For, whatever is preſcribed, neither againſt faith or manners, is a matter of itſelf indifferent, and to be obſerv'd according to the cuſtom of thoſe he lives among. This was agreeable to the counſel which St. Ambroſe, Biſhop of Milan, gave him, when he was ſent, by his mother, to enquire his judgment about the Saturday Faſt. When I am at Rome, (ſays the Biſhop) I faſt on the Sabbath; but at Milan I do not: So thou likewiſe, when thou comeſt to any church, obſerve its cuſtom, if thou wouldſt neither be an offence to them, nor have them be ſo to thee. Which St. Auguſtine ever after obſerv'd. (Dr. Ben. Calamy.) See the notes on ver 19. And a Farewel Sermon, January 22d, 1715. on this text. And Dr. Ben. Calamy's Sermon on Luke xi. 31. Note here, to conclude; 4. That in this place, 'tis certain the ancient copies generally added that benediction which we now find, ch. xvi. 25. "Now to him that is able to ſtabliſh you according to my Goſpel," and ſo on, to the end. Thus we find it in St. Chryſoſtome and Theophylact, &c. And from thence the Poſthumous notes under Grotius's name infer, that the Apoſtle firſt deſigned to end his Epiſtle there. But there is no good ground for ſuch conjectural inference. 'Tis certain, Doxologies may be ſeaſonable in other places; and not only by way of concluſion: And ſo we find, in the like ſtile, "Now to him that is able," &c. Eph. iii. 20, 21. in the middle of the Epiſtle: And ſo incidentally, "To whom be glory," &c. Gal. i. 5. And, more ſolemnly, "Now to the King" &c. 1 Tim. i. 17. almoſt in the beginning. And it is St. Chryſoſtome's note, That it is cuſtomary with St. Paul, to conclude an exhortation with prayers and praiſes: And Theophylact's, That after an exhortation he always uſeth to pray. The petitory part of this Doxology is contain'd in the dunamenee humas ſterixai, which is a praying, that God, who alone is able, will ſtabliſh them: And this is ſo proper to the whole buſineſs of the precedent chapter, that it cannot without great injuſtice be taken from it: And therefore, without examining the reaſon of its removal (for which we have only probable conjecture) it is all reaſon that it ſhould be fetch'd back from ch. xvi. 25. and placed here, as it ought to be. (H.)

CHAP. XV.

The ſtronger ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, after the example of Chriſt; and to receive one another, as Chriſt did us all, both Jews, and Gentiles. St. Paul gives the reaſon of his writing to them with the more authority, as being the Apoſtle of the Gentiles; promiſes to come to them; and deſires their prayers.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. WE then that are ſtrong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe our ſelves. Let every one of us pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification. For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf; but as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me. For whatſoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we through patience and comfort of the ſcriptures might have hope. Now the God of patience and conſolation, grant you to be like-minded one towards another, according to Jeſus Chriſt: That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore receive ye one another, as Chriſt alſo received us, to the glory of God.

We then that are ſtrong.] Here the Apoſtle proſecutes the ſame argument, treated of in the former chapter: "We then (ſays he) that are ſtrong," (that is, ſtrong in faith, ſtrong in knowledge, ſtrong in grace) "ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." We that have received a greater meaſure of grace, ought to exerciſe more charity towards our Chriſtian brethren than others. If they be haſty, or froward, or peeviſh, or vexatious, let us uſe indulgence towards them, bear with them, help and relieve them; becauſe they are not ſo well grounded and inſtructed as we are. Let us not, therefore, judge, cenſure, diſdain or ſcorn them: If ſuch be overtaken in a fault, we that are ſpiritual ſhould endeavour to reſtore them with the ſpirit of meekneſs. If they be impatient, yet in your Chriſtian patience poſſeſs ye your ſouls. (R. Henchm.) The caſe is the ſame, with reſpect to theſe things, as with reſpect to riches, and other talents: We muſt communicate a part to our neighbour, who ſtands in need thereof; as being truſtees for the ſhare which he has in a common patrimony. (Q.)

Bear the infirmities of the weak.] Baſtazein is not only to tolerate and ſupport their infirmities, ſed in ſe ſuſcipere ut curent, but to take them in hand and cure them. (Gloſs. interlin.) It is a metaphor taken from the faſhion of building, where the pillars carry the weight and burden of the houſe. (Leigh.) Or, It is a ſimilitude taken from companions in a journey, where the ſtronger carry the luggage of the weaker; ſo that the ſenſe is, that we ought to bear with meekneſs the miſtakes of others. (G.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 1.

Not to pleaſe our ſelves.] All men ſtrive to pleaſe; but ſome to pleaſe themſelves, ſome to pleaſe other men, and ſome few to pleaſe the Lord. There be that regard not either the diſpleaſure of God or man, ſo they may but pleaſe themſelves. Authadeis is St. Peter's word: It ſignifies as much as ſelf-pleaſers: Tranſlators have well render'd it ſelf-willed: Men that will have their own way in every thing; that will ſpeak their pleaſure of every man; that will ſay what they liſt, and do what they liſt, let who will take offence at it. St. Peter, in the ſame place where he has given us the name, has alſo given us part of their character. "Preſumptuous are they, (ſays he) and they are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities ſelf-willed". 2 Pet. ii. 10. For commonly, you may obſerve it, They that love to pleaſe themſelves, ſeldom do it better, than when they have with moſt petulancy of ſpleen vented their diſaffection towards them that are in authority. Which, for the moſt part proceeds from an overweening conceit they have of their own, either wiſdom, or wit, altho', in St. Auſtin's judgment, they are void of both, whoſe cenſure of them is ſharp; Stulto homini placet qui ſibi placet; He that ſtrives to pleaſe himſelf, ſtrives to pleaſe a fool. Nor are they only void of wiſdom in his judgment, but in St. Paul's of Chriſtianity too, and he vouches, againſt them, Chriſt's example: "For, even Chriſt pleas'd not himſelf." (Sanderſ.)

For his good to edification.] Eis to agathon. In the Greek, there is an article put before the adjective good, which imports the chief good, tending to the eternal ſalvation, as is expreſs'd in the next word edification: Signifying their profit and increaſe in godlineſs, which has the promiſe of this life and the life to come. (Aſſ.) It is not ſimply and abſolutely ſaid, "Let every one pleaſe his neighbour:" The Heretick, drunkard, and others would like that well, to have every one ſpeak and act as they do: But the rule is, to "pleaſe every man for his good to edification;" thus far we may pleaſe them, but no farther. Edification is the rule, the ſcope, and boundary of all our complacency in compliance with others. (B.) Edification, in the ſcripture, ſometimes ſignifies our increaſe in the knowledge of our Chriſtian duty: In which ſenſe it is uſed, 1 Cor. xiv. 3, 4, 5, 12, 16, 26, 29. Eph. iv. 29. Eſpecially in that knowledge which tends to our advancement in piety; and therefore is call'd oikodome Theou, the edification of God. 1 Tim. i. 4. Sometimes our growth and confirmation in the faith, Jude 20. Sometimes it refers to the whole body, which is call'd Theou Oikodome, the building of God, 1 Cor. iii. 9. Eph. ii. 21. and iv. 12. And then the body is edify'd, 1. By the mutual love of its members; in which ſenſe, ſays the Apoſtle, "charity edifieth," 1 Cor. viii. 1. And this Oikodome en agape, edification in love, Eph. iv. 16. 2. By the ſtrict union of the members to, and their peaceable converſation with one another: And this is ſtiled (Oikodome eis ton ena) edifying the church into one, 1 Theſſ. v. 11. And thus we are bid to "follow after the things which make for peace," and (Ta tes oikodomes tes eis allelous,) the edification of one of us unto another, ch. xiv. 19. Now the edification which conſiſts in the knowledge of our Chriſtian duty, cannot be here underſtood; becauſe our forbearance of that which ſcandalizes our brother, tends not to the information of his underſtanding; but as it is an act of charity, it tends to the edification of the body in love; as it is the avoiding of that which may ſcandalize the weak, and ſo induce him to ſtumble at, and fall off from Chriſtianity, it tends to his edification in the faith; and as it is receiving the weak unto fellowſhip and communion, notwithſtanding his different conceptions from us, it tends to the edifying the body in union and peace. (W.)

Even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf.] Obſerve, How the Apoſtle urges, and enforces this duty, from the example of Jeſus Chriſt: He "pleaſed not himſelf;" therefore ſuch as profeſs faith in him muſt ſtudy to be as he was; nothing was more remote from Chriſt, when here on earth, than ſelf-ſeeking and ſelf-pleaſing: He did not conſult his own eaſe and ſatisfaction, but rather reſpected the benefit of others than his own; yea he was ſo far from pleaſing himſelf, that he willingly expoſed himſelf to all the reproaches of men, in obedience to his father's will; and was ſo tender of God the Father's honour, that all the reproaches that fell upon the one affected and afflicted the other; "The reproaches of them that reproach'd thee fell on me." (B.) The original word is ouck eriſen. i. e. Indulged not ſo to his own pleaſure, eaſe, and quiet, as to neglect the glory of God, and the good of others, but willingly bore with the infirmities, and ſuſtain'd the reproaches of men. (Beza, D. Heinſ. Fell, and W.)

Written for our learning.] The Apoſtle here informs us what was the general uſe of the Holy Scriptures, and what is the particular reaſon for which they were written; namely, 1. For inſtruction; they "were written for our learning:" All the precepts, promiſes, threatnings, rewards and puniſhments, recorded in ſcripture, are for our information, conviction and direction. 2. They were written for our comfort and conſolation alſo, "that we thro' patience and comfort might have hope;" that is, that we, thro' patience in bearing the like cenſures and reproaches, which we find the Scripture-Saints have borne before us, might have hope of being rewarded for it, as they were. Learn hence, That the great end for which the Scriptures were written, was the informing of our judgments, and the directing of our practice, that by the examples which we find there of the patience of holy men under ſufferings, and of God's relieving and comforting them in their diſtreſſes, we "might have hope," yea confidence and aſſurance, that God will alſo comfort and relieve us under the like preſſures and burdens. (B.) In the Apoſtle's times, there were ſome who "wreſted the Scriptures to their own deſtruction;" and yet the Apoſtle St. Peter thought of no other expedient, than to give Chriſtians a caution, that they were "not alſo led away by the errors of the wicked," and to adviſe them that they ſhould "grow in knowledge," 2 Pet. iii. 16. &c. The way to prevent this therefore is not, to keep the Scriptures from the people, which "were written for our learning," as here, and "that we might believe," as John xx. 31. but to exhort them to a diligent peruſal of them, Mat. xxii. 29. "Ye do err not knowing the Scriptures." (Williams)

Might have hope.] That is, that thro' the comfort which they miniſter to us, we may be encourag'd to a patient continuance in well doing, in hope of a full and liberal recompence of a bleſſed eternity. (Lukin) But hope, in this place, will bear a very large interpretation: Hope, that the perſons, thus charitable to their weaker brethren, will not fail of a reward, proportionable to that of Chriſt, and other holy patterns, whoſe condeſcentinos they are thus careful to copy after: Hope, that the weak may be gain'd by ſuch forbearance and tenderneſs in the ſtrong; rigour, and ſtiffneſs and contempt being like to exaſparate and harden them the more in their errors: Hope, that the ſubſtantial parts may be better eſtabliſh'd, and all believers improve in faith and a good life; when all lend their helping hand to truth and virtue, without ſuffering their different apprehenſions, what may be fitteſt for the ornament, to divide their endeavours for the ſtrength and ſecurity, of the ſpiritual houſe: Hope, that this building may be ſtill enlarg'd, and take in thoſe who as yet are ſtrangers and enemies to Chriſt, when they obſerve how powerful his religion is, to beat down pride and envy, and every narrow ſelfiſh paſſion, and to inſpire men with a godly zeal of "not pleaſing themſelves, but their neighbours for their good to edification:" Laſtly, Hope, that they who maintain this concord upon earth, ſhall not fail to be join'd hereafter in that perfect love, that unanimous giving glory to God, which is the conſtant imployment, the unſpeakable bliſs, of bleſſed ſpirits in Heaven; a bliſs, of which this unity in the preſent life is not only an emblem, but a preparatory and indiſpenſable condition. And this hope is, by the Apoſtle, aſcrib'd to the power of the Holy Ghoſt, and begg'd of God as his peculiar gift. (Stanh.)

Like minded one towards another.] To auto phronein. Altho' this is a phraſe not us'd by any other ſacred penman, yet it is frequently made uſe of by St. Paul; not only here, but to the Corinthians, and more than once to the Philippians. St. Peter's compound word comes neareſt to it; Homophrones, "Of one mind," 1 Pet. iii. 8. The noun phren or phrenes, the mind, and the verb, phronein, to mind this or that, or to be thus or ſo minded, altho' often us'd with ſpecial reference, ſometimes to the underſtanding or judgment, ſometimes to the inward diſpoſition of the heart, the will and affections, and ſometimes to the manifeſting that inward diſpoſition by the outward carriage and behaviour; yet they are alſo, not ſeldom, taken at large for the whole ſoul and all the powers of it, together with all the motions and operations of any or each of them, whether in the apprehenſive, appetitive, or executive part: And there ſeems to be nothing to hinder its being taken in that largeſt ſenſe in this place. And then the thing ſo earneſtly begg'd of God, is, that he would ſo frame the hearts of the Romans one towards another, as there might be an univerſal accord among them, as far as was poſſible, both in their opinions, affections, and converſations. 1. In their opinions, That all that confeſs the name of Chriſt might agree in the truth of his holy word, that "there might be no diviſions among them." 1 Cor. i. 10. 2. In their heart and affections. So as Tully ſays he remain'd with Cato, altho' they differ'd in opinion. Ita diſſenſi ab illo (ſays Tully) ut in disjunctione ſententiæ, conjuncti tamen amicitia maneremus; And as the whole multitude of believers were, Acts iv. 32. who altho' poſſibly not all of one opinion in every point, yet were all "of one heart." And, 3. In a fair and peaceable outward converſation. For albeit, through human frailty, and amid ſo many ſcandals as are, and muſt be, in the world, Luke xvii. 1. there be not evermore that hearty entire affection that ought to be between Chriſtian men, eſpecially when they ſtand divided one from another in opinion; yet ſhould they all bear this mind, and ſo be at leaſt thus far like-minded, as to reſolve to forbear all ſcornful and inſolent ſpeeches and behaviour, of and towards one another; without jeering, without cenſuring, without provoking, without cauſeleſs vexing one another, or diſturbing the public peace of the Church: For "the ſervant of God muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle unto all men, and patient," 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25. So gentle and patient, that he muſt ſtudy to win "thoſe that oppoſe themſelves;" not by reviling, but inſtructing them: And that, not in a loud and lofty ſtrain, (unleſs when there is left no other remedy;) but firſt, and if that will ſerve the turn, only, in love and with meekneſs: Our converſation, where it cannot be all out ſo free and familiar, ſhould yet be fair and amiable. God's holy truth we muſt ſtand for, I grant, if it be oppoſed, to the utmoſt of our ſtrength; neither may we betray any part thereof by our ſilence or ſoftneſs, for any man's pleaſure or diſpleaſure, where we may help it, and where the defence of it appeareth to be prudentially neceſſary: Yet, even in that caſe, ought we ſo to maintain the truth of God, as not to deſpiſe the perſons of men. We are to follow "the truth in love," Eph. iv. 15. Which is then beſt done, when, holding us cloſe to the truth, we are ready yet, in love to our brethren, to do them all the right, and to perform unto them all thoſe reſpects, which without confirming them in their errors, may any way fall due unto them. It is a perfect and a bleſſed unity, when all theſe three meet together; and this perfection ought to be both in our aims, and in our endeavours: But if, through our own weakneſs, or the waywardneſs of others, we cannot attain to the full perfection of the whole, having faithfully endeavour'd it, it will be ſome commendation and comfort to us, to have attained ſo much as we could; "nevertheleſs whereunto we have attained, let us mind the ſame thing," Phil. iii. 16. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 19.

According to Chriſt Jeſus.] Kata Chriſton. This is capable of a double interpretation; both pertinent to the text, and uſeful in practice, and therefore neither of them to be rejected. 1. Some underſtand it, as a limitation of that unity which was pray'd for in the former words; and that not unfitly. For the Apoſtle might intend, by the addition of this clauſe, to ſhew, that it was not ſuch an unity as he deſired, unleſs it were according to truth and goodneſs in Chriſt Jeſus. There may be an agreement in falſo, when men held together for the maintenance of one and the ſame common error: Such as the agreement of Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, and Sectaries among themſelves: And there may be an agreement in malo; when men combine together in a confederacy for the compaſſing ſome miſchievous deſign, as did thoſe forty and odd, that bound themſelves with a curſe to deſtroy Paul, Acts xxiii. 13. Such is the agreement of thieves, cheats, and rebels among themſelves. Such agreements as theſe no man ought to pray for. But the unity that is to be pray'd for, and to be labour'd for, in the Chriſtian Church, is a Chriſtian unity; that is to ſay, a happy concord, in walking lovingly together in the ſame path of truth and godlineſs. The word of Chriſt is the word of truth, and the myſtery of Chriſt is the myſtery of godlineſs. Whatſoever, therefore, is contrary to either of theſe, truth or godlineſs, cannot be (kata Chriſton) "according to Chriſt," but rather againſt them. But, 2. Many expoſitors rather underſtand the phraſe in another ſenſe: "According to Chriſt," that is, according to the example of Chriſt; which ſeems to have been the judgment of our laſt tranſlators, who have therefore ſo put it, in the margin of our own Bibles. His example the Apoſtle had reſerv'd unto the laſt place, as one of the weightieſt and moſt effectual arguments in this buſineſs; producing it a little before the text, and repeating it again a little after the text. So as this prayer may ſeem (according to this interpretation) to be an illuſtration of that argument, which was drawn from Chriſt's example: As if he had ſaid, Chriſt ſought not himſelf, but us: He laid aſide his own glory, diveſted himſelf of majeſty and excellency, that he might condeſcend to our baſeneſs, and bear our infirmities: He did not deſpiſe us, but receiv'd us with all meekneſs and compaſſion. Let us not therefore ſeek every man to pleaſe himſelf, in going his own way, and ſetting up his own will; neither let us deſpiſe any man's weakneſs; but rather, treading in the ſteps of our bleſſed Lord, let every one of us ſtrive to "pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification;" bearing with the infirmities of our weak brethren, and receiving one another in our moſt inward boſoms and bowels, even "as Chriſt alſo receiv'd us to the glory of God." (Idem.)

With one mind, and one mouth.] The Apoſtle having in the 5th verſe prayed for unity and agreement among the Romans, now comes to ſhew the end of it; viz. the glory of God; the manner of which he treats of in theſe words, "That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God." The inſtruments wherewith God is to be glorified here, are two; inward, the mind; outward, the mouth. The inward muſt be firſt, the mind before the mouth, elſe we ſhall incur the prophet Eſay's reproof, as well as the Phariſees did, Matth. xv. 8. "This people draweth near to me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips, but their hearts are removed far from me:" And that of Jeremy xii. 2. "Thou art near in their mouth, but far from their reins." David calls his tongue his glory, Pſa. cviii. 1. for this reaſon, among others, becauſe the chief employment he had for it was to glorify God. But if, when his tongue was ſo employ'd, his heart had not gone with it; if he had not rouzed up himſelf, that is, his heart and mind (for the mind is the man) as well as his tongue, the beſt muſick of his tongue, with lute and harp to boot, had been no better than ſounding braſs, and a tinkling cymbal. God is an exact critic in ſpelling and examining the thoughts of our hearts moſt accurately: He mindeth us how we mind him in all our ſervices; and will no more think himſelf honour'd by us when we cry Lord, Lord, or, as the Phariſee, God I thank thee, if our minds, the while, be aloof off, hankering after the world, or our luſts, than Chriſt took himſelf to be honour'd by the ſoldiers, who put a reed in his hand inſtead of a ſcepter, and bow'd the knee before him, ſaying, Hail, king of the Jews, and then ſpit upon him, and ſmote him on the head. Let us then, if we mean to give glory to God in our addreſſes and ſervices, take our minds along with us. But altho' the mind is to go firſt, yet the mouth muſt bear a part too. We do not glorify God ſufficiently, if with the heart we believe in him; unleſs, with the mouth, we be ready to confeſs him. David therefore profeſſes very often, that he would perform his ſervices to God with his lips and mouth; "Open thou my lips, and my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe," Pſa. li. 15, &c. Nor can it be otherwiſe. For, if the inward parts be right ſet, the outward will follow of themſelves. A full heart cannot but overflow, when time ſerves, out of its own abundance; and if there be much heat there, it will break out at the lips, Pſal. xxxix. 3. and xlv. 1.

Heart and tongue, mind and mouth, muſt join together: And if there be any thing elſe in us beſides, that can contribute to the work, it muſt be in too, and all little enough to glorify our maker. But it is not ſufficient that we ſhould join mind and mouth together to glorify God ſingly by our ſelves: The Romans are here to do it "with one mind and one mouth." And indeed the ſtreſs of the ſenſe lies in this. God muſt be glorified by unity, peace, and concord: As the variety of inſtruments and voices is ſo far from hindring the muſick, that it rather makes the harmony the greater by that variety; ſo the union of Chriſtians in mind and tongue, in glorifying God, adds to his glory. But, as in muſick, the inſtruments muſt be well in tune, and they muſt all play one piece of muſick; ſo Chriſtians muſt be of "one mind and one mouth," in the ſervice of God: No jarring ſtring, or diſſonant note, ought to diſturb the church's ſervice. If any one ſtring, or any ſingle inſtrument, is out of tune, the whole conſort would be ſpoil'd: Or, ſuppoſing them all in tune, yet if the performers ſhould play different pieces, there would be nothing but confuſion. No leſs odious to God, and equally grievous to good men, is the hearing ſuch voices in the church; "I am of Paul, I am of Apollos, and I of Cephas;" when every little ſcribler muſt have the ſervice of the church modell'd in his faſhion: Like Spencer's deſcription of Error's Children, a numerous brood, but not one like another, except in their being all deform'd. (Idem) The actions of men, in holy aſſemblies, are not like their private actions at other times; for all the actions here, are not the actions of ſeveral men, but to be accounted as one action of the whole body; which makes St. Paul uſe the phraſe, when ye come together, epi to auto, to be (as it were) one and the ſame. Every prayer here, is not many prayers of many, but one prayer of all, as one. Whether we ſay I, in the ſingular, or we in the plural, all is one; for I here expreſſes one made of many; and we, many made of one. Whatſoever worſhip therefore God requires of any one alone, the ſame he requires of all met together as one. (Mede and Nelſon) See the notes on Acts ii. 1. and the Sermons of Biſhop Sanderſon, and Mr. Richard Henchman, on the text here before us.

Wherefore receive ye one another.] Here our Apoſtle concludes the argument which he had hitherto inſiſted upon in this and the former chapter; namely, That all Chriſtians, both ſtrong and weak, ſhould mutually forbear one another, and that both Jew and Gentile ſhould receive each other into fellowſhip and communion, without contention about things of an indifferent nature: "Wherefore receive ye one another." And, to enforce his exhortation, he propounds the example of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: "Receive one another, as Chriſt alſo received us;" that is, after the example of Chriſt, who puts no difference betwixt Jew and Gentile, but receives both, and bears with the infirmities of both: Which action in Chriſt, and the imitation of it in us, will much redound "to the glory of God;" his declarative and manifeſtative glory being much promoted by his concord and union with and among all his members, of what denomination ſoever they are, whether believing Jews or Gentiles. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jeſus Chriſt has given full and ample demonſtration of his great and wonderful love unto his church and people. 2. That this love of Chriſt towards all his children and people, ought to be improved by them, as an argument to love one another; "Receive one another, as Chriſt received us." 3. That Chriſtians, receiving, embracing, and loving one another, and bearing with one another's weakneſſes and infirmities, according to Chriſt's example and command, will contribute exceedingly to the honour and glory of Almighty God, and to the abundant conſolation and ſatisfaction of each other. "Wherefore receive ye one another, as Chriſt alſo received us to the glory of God." (B.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 1, &c.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Now I ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt was a miniſter of the circumciſion for the truth of God, to confirm the promiſes made unto the fathers: And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cauſe I will confeſs to thee among the Gentiles, and ſing unto thy name. And again he ſaith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people. And again, Praiſe the Lord, all ye Gentiles, and laud him, all ye people. And again Eſaias ſaith, There ſhall be a root of Jeſſe, and he that ſhall riſe to reign over the Gentiles; in him ſhall the Gentiles truſt. Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the holy Ghoſt.

Now, I ſay.] The Apoſtle had, in the foregoing verſe, propounded the example of Chriſt, in receiving both Jew and Gentile to his grace and favour, as an argument to perſuade all Chriſtians to receive one another: Now, in the verſes before us, he declares how, and after what manner, Chriſt received both Jews and Gentiles. As for the Jews firſt, whom he calls the circumciſion, the Apoſtle telleth us, that Jeſus was their miniſter; that is, he was circumciſed like them, converſed generally with them, and exerciſed his miniſtry among them, according to the many promiſes which God had made to the Jewiſh patriarchs; and thus he ſhewed his love and mercy towards the Jews in the day of his fleſh. Then ſecondly, As to the Gentiles; he affirms, that, according to the ſeveral prophecies and promiſes in the Old Teſtament, they were called and received to mercy, by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the partition-wall being by him broken down, and Jew and Gentile become one ſheepfold under one ſhepherd. Now, from the truth and faithfulneſs of Chriſt towards the Jews, and from his love and tenderneſs, mercy and compaſſion, towards the Gentiles, and from his divine indulgence towards both, the Apoſtle very fitly draws this inference and concluſion; That all Chriſtians, how differing ſoever from one another, in their judgments and opinions as to leſſer things, ought to receive one another into fellowſhip and Chriſtian communion; and inſtead of biting and devouring one another, be once at length ſo wiſe and happy, as to hold the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace. (B.)

Miniſter of the circumciſion.] See the notes on Acts iii. 25, 26.

For the truth of God.] There is this difference in the reception of the Jews and Gentiles, viz. That, in that of the Jews, God did, in a ſingular manner, manifeſt his truth, that is, his faithfulneſs in performing his promiſes made unto them; but in that of the Gentiles, he did more eſpecially ſhew forth the greatneſs of his mercy to his uttter enemies; namely to a people that ſtood in oppoſition againſt him: And therefore there is no reaſon, why the Jews, being honour'd by Chriſt's own miniſtry, and by the old promiſes and covenant of God, ſhould be deſpis'd and vilify'd by the Gentiles: Nor, on the other ſide, that the Gentiles, to whom God had ſhew'd mercy, ſhould be condemn'd by the Jews. (Aſſ.)

As it is written.] See the notes on ver. 4.

To reign over the Gentiles.] That which is out of the Hebrew rightly rendred, for an Enſign, is by the Greek Tranſlators rendred (archein) to bear rule, or dominion; becauſe it being the office of the king to defend, and by arms to protect the people, and the power of war being, as the power of the ſword, a branch of imperial authority, and that no way compatible to any, but either to the ſupreme (exouſia, or archon, ch. xiii. 1, 2.) power or prince, or to him that is ſent by him, that is, hath commiſſion from him, this being for an enſign is all one in effect with ruling, and one is but a phraſe to expreſs the other, and the Apoſtle, according to his manner, maketh uſe of the Greek Tranſlation, not of the original. (H.)

Now the God of hope.] Obſerve here, 1. How the Apoſtle cloſes his exhortation to brotherly concord and unity, with a pithy and pathetick prayer: His example herein is inſtructive. 2. The title or appellation which he gives unto God in prayer, "The God of hope;" ſometimes he ſtiles him the God of grace, ſometimes the God of peace, ſometimes the God of patience, here "the God of hope," he being ſo objectively, the only object of our common hope, and alſo effectively, as he is the author and producer of hope in us. 3. The mercies he prays for, 1. That they may "be fulfilled with all joy and peace in believing," that their hearts may overflow with peace from God, and one towards another, and with all that joy which reſults from both. 2. That "they may abound in hope thro' the power of the Holy Ghoſt;" whereby hope underſtand, the good hoped for, namely, Heaven and eternal life, a firm expectation of which is wrought in us by the Holy Spirit. Learn, 1. That God is the object of a Chriſtian's hope; and if ſo, the ſin of deſpair is a moſt unreaſonable ſin: For why ſhould any deſpair of his mercy, who is "the God of hope," who commands us to hope in his mercy, and takes pleaſure in them that will do ſo? Pſa. cxlvii. 11. 2. That the grace of hope, together with joy and peace in believing, are wrought in the Chriſtian's heart thro' the power of the Holy Ghoſt; that is, thro' the ſanctifying influences of the Holy Ghoſt, enlightning the underſtanding, inclining the will, rectifying the affections, and reducing all the rebellious powers and faculties of the ſoul, in concurrence with our endeavours, under the government and dominion of reaſon and religion. (B.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And I my ſelf alſo am perſwaded of you, my brethren, that ye alſo are full of goodneſs, filled with all knowledge, able alſo to admoniſh one another. Nevertheleſs, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you, in ſome ſort, as putting you in mind, becauſe of the grace that is given to me of God, that I ſhould be the miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt to the Gentiles, miniſtring the goſpel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being ſanctify'd by the Holy Ghoſt. I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jeſus Chriſt, in thoſe things which pertain to God. For I will not dare to ſpeak of any of thoſe things which Chriſt hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed, through mighty ſigns and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; ſo that from Jeruſalem and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the goſpel of Chriſt: Yea, ſo have I ſtrived to preach the goſpel, not where Chriſt was named, leſt I ſhould build upon another man's foundation: But as it is written, To whom he was not ſpoken of, they ſhall ſee; and they that have not heard, ſhall underſtand.

Filled with all knowledge.] That is, knowledge of all things that appertain to the doctrine of ſalvation, or perfect knowledge, ſo far as it may be attain'd of us in this life; wherein the beſt and moſt learn'd know but in part, and ſee but as thro' a glaſs darkly, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. (Aſſ.)

Written the more boldly.] Tolmeroteron. That is, in the beſt ſenſe of the word, viz. more freely, and openly; as it is well render'd by Grammarians. (Leigh.)

The grace that is given to me.] That is, The apoſtleſhip. See the notes on ch. i. 5. and xii. 3.

To the Gentiles.] See the notes on Acts ix. 15.

Miniſtring the Goſpel.] Here obſerve, 1. How the Apoſtle, in preparing the Gentiles for the obedience of the Goſpel, compares himſelf to a Levitical Prieſt, fitting his ſacrifice to be offer'd to God. 2. That the Gentiles dedicated to God by the Apoſtle's miniſtry, were his ſacrifice and oblation. 3. That the Holy Spirit was the Libamen pour'd upon this ſacrifice, by which it is ſanctify'd, and render'd acceptable to God. 4. That ſuch an oblation, or offering up of a people to God, in this manner, is matter of rejoicing, and glorying, to the miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt; as ver. 17. (W. and B.) See the notes on ch. xii. 1.

I will not dare to ſpeak.] Ou gar tolmeſo lalein. The criticks here tell us, that thoſe who render it "I dare not," do take off the force of the Apoſtle's words; becauſe that intimates that the Apoſtle had a mind to do ſo, but fear with-held him: They therefore would have the words here, and Jude 9. rendred, non ſuſtineo, I ſuffer not my ſelf, and he ſuffer'd not himſelf. But our tranſlation may be juſtified, by a like expreſſion of the Apoſtle, in the ſame caſe, 2 Cor. x. 12. (Ou gar tolmomen) "We dare not make our ſelves" &c. And this, doubtleſs, he ſaith, not to intimate that he and Timothy had a mind to do that themſelves, which he there repreſents as folly in others; but only to intimate that he did not think it fit and prudent ſo to do, and therefore durſt not do it: And this ſenſe the word well bears alſo, Jude 9. (W.)

Through mighty ſigns and wonders.] See the notes on Mark xvi. 17, 18. and Acts xix. 11.

Round about unto Illyricum.] That is, to the furtheſt part towards the north of Macedonia, now call'd Sclavonia; having paſt thro' Arabia, Damaſcus, Antiochia, Seleucia, Cyprus, Pamphilia, Piſidia, Licaonia, Syria, Cilicia, Phrygia, Galatia, Myſia, Troas, Achaior, Epirus, Crete, &c. (Fell) In this may be obſerv'd, 1. The indefatigable induſtry and pains of the holy Apoſtle, in order to the converſion of the Gentiles "from Jeruſalem, round about unto Illyricum, he fully preached the Goſpel of Chriſt." This, according to Pareus's computation was little leſs than a thouſand miles. The induſtry of the Apoſtles, in planting and propagating the Goſpel, was almoſt incredible. What pains did they take! what hazards did they run! what difficulties did they contend with in that great work! 2. Altho' their induſtry was great, yet the ſucceſs was greater, even beyond all human expectation. This appears by the vaſt ſpreading of the Goſpel in ſo ſhort a time: "From Jeruſalem round about unto Illyricum." Within thirty years after our Saviour's death, the Goſpel was not only diffus'd thro' the greateſt part of the Roman empire, but had reach'd as far as Parthia and India. 3. The Goſpel, or doctrine of Chriſt, had likewiſe a wonderful power and efficacy over the lives and manners of men: The apoſtle ſays, the Gentiles who were converted to Chriſtianity, were obedient by word and deed. Upon the change of their religion follow'd a change in their converſation, and whole courſe of life. 4. Obſerve the reaſon of this wonderful ſucceſs, viz. the extraordinary power of the Holy Ghoſt, in enabling them to work miracles, for the confirmation of the Goſpel: "Thro' mighty ſigns and wonders by the power of the Spirit of God." Such was the miraculous power of curing diſeaſes, caſting out devils, of inflicting corporal puniſhments upon ſcandalous perſons: All which did ſerve in general for the confirmation of the Goſpel, and in particular, to ſupport the honour and authority of the Apoſtles; and ſupply'd the want of the magiſtrate's power, which Chriſtians could not expect whilſt the Roman emperors continu'd heathens: Not that all miraculous powers were given to all the Apoſtles, or that they who had them could exerciſe them at all times, or when they pleas'd; but only as was moſt expedient for the uſe and benefit of the Church. 5. The Apoſtle, in preaching the Goſpel, choſe to go to ſuch dark and blind places as had never heard of it before, rather than among thoſe where Chriſt had been nam'd, that ſo he might lay the foundation of Chriſtianity himſelf, and not build upon another man's foundation: And likewiſe that in his miniſtry, the prophecy of Iſaias might be fulfill'd. "To whom he was not ſpoken of, they ſhall ſee, and they that have not heard ſhall underſtand." Iſa. lii. 15. (B.)

I ſtrived to preach the Goſpel.] Philotimonmenon; Having an ambition to do it; as the word is us'd, 1 Theſs. iv. 11. To be ambiticus of peace; to contend for it, as an honour. The ſame word is us'd, 2 Cor. v. 9. where it is tranſlated, we endeavour, but it implies an earneſt endeavour, an ambitious deſire. (Leigh.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. For which cauſe alſo I have been much hinder'd from coming to you. But now having no more place in theſe parts, and having a great deſire theſe many years to come unto you; Whenſoever I take my Journey into Spain, I will come to you; for I truſt to ſee you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if firſt I be ſomewhat filled with your company. But now I go unto Jeruſalem, to miniſter unto the ſaints. For it hath pleaſed them of Macedonia and Achaia, to make a certain contribution for the poor ſaints which are at Jeruſalem. It hath pleaſed them verily, and their debters they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their ſpiritual things, their duty is alſo to miniſter unto them in carnal things. When therefore I have performed this, and have ſealed to them this fruit, I will come by you into Spain. And I am ſure, that when I come unto you, I ſhall come in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the Goſpel of Chriſt.

Much hinder'd from coming to you.] Here obſerve, 1. That this Epiſtle was written about the 20th year after Chriſt's aſcenſion: But he had a deſire of ſeeing the Romans many years before; and therefore, they had been converted long before. 2. We ſee that our journeying from one place to another is not always at our own diſpoſal, but God's. The Apoſtle, no doubt, intended to go into Spain when he wrote this Epiſtle; but God over-rul'd the matter beyond his expectation. The travels of the Apoſtles, in order to plant the Chriſtian faith, were under the ſpecial influence and direction of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts xvi. 7. "they aſſay'd to go into Bithynia; but the Spirit ſuffer'd them not." 3. The great end why the Apoſtle was ſo deſirous to ſee the Chriſtians at Rome, was that he might be refreſh'd, nay, fill'd with their Company. How deſirable is the communion of Saints! and how beneficial the ſociety of ſincere Chriſtians! Their company is not empty, vain, and frothy, but fills thoſe who enjoy it, by adminiſtring both grace and comfort. I deſire, ſays the Apoſtle, to ſee you in my journey, that I may be "fill'd with your company." (B.) See the notes on chap. i. 13, 15.

Having no more place in theſe parts.] That is, no place where the Goſpel hath not now been preach'd.

Whenſoever I take my journey into Spain.] Becauſe he had reſolv'd to paſs from Greece, thro' Italy, into Spain, and to viſit Rome in his way. (G.) It is evident, from chap. i. 10, 11. and from this, as alſo from verſe 28. that St. Paul wrote this Epiſtle while he was at liberty, and before Chriſt had told him that he "muſt teſtify of him at home," Acts xxiii. 11. And before he was conſtrain'd to appeal to cæſar, chap. xxv. 11. For, in this Epiſtle, he ſpeaks ſtill of his journey to Rome, and from thence to Spain, as of a voluntary undertaking, hoping then, that the unbelieving Jews would not have given him that diſturbance, when he went up to Jeruſalem with his alms gather'd for his nation, which afterwards he found they did. (W.) But that St. Paul actually made good his purpoſe of going to Spain is atteſted by many ancient writers; nor is there any thing in Scripture to contradict it. For, St. Paul was ſent to Rome when Feſtus ſucceeded Fælix in the government of Judea, which according to Euſebius and St. Jerom fell in the ſecond of Nero. After his arrival at Rome, St Luke informs us, he ſtaid two years, ſo that he had not his full liberty till the 5th of Nero. But Euſebius, St. Jerom and others of the ancients tell us, that St. Paul did not ſuffer martyrdom till the 14th of Nero. So that, from his being ſet at liberty in the 3d year, to his ſecond coming to Rome, he went up and down preaching the Goſpel, which is allow'd to have been above eight years. during which time, St. Clemens Romanus, Theodoret, St. Jerom, Athanaſius, Epiphanius, and others ſay, he viſited the weſtern parts. Nor is there any likelihood of his returning into the eaſt; for he ſpeaks very poſitively to the elders at Myletus, Acts xx. 38. that they "ſhould ſee his face no more." Nor is it a ſufficient objection againſt his preaching in Spain, (and even in Britain) that there are no certain monuments of churches planted there by him. For it is not to be imagin'd that he was idle all that time, and ſince there are no monuments nor accounts of churches planted by him in the eaſt, after his firſt journey to Rome, nor any tradition of his having been there after, the teſtimony of the ancients for his preaching in Spain, Gaul and Britain, ought to be of force. (Collier, and Cave.) See pref. to the Acts of the Apoſtles.

Filled with your company.] See the notes on chap. i. 11, 12.

Now I go unto Jeruſalem.] Here the Apoſtle acquaints them with his preſent intended journey to Jeruſalem, as alſo with the occaſion; namely, to carry the charitable contribution of the Greek churches of Macedonia and Achaia, into Judea, and up to the poor Saints at Jeruſalem, whoſe neceſſities requir'd it, and unto whom they were, in a ſort, indebted for it; "the Gentiles having been made partakers of their ſpiritual things;" (receiving the Goſpel from Judea) they are oblig'd in gratitude to "miniſter to them in carnal things." He farther aſſures them, that, as ſoon as he had finiſh'd his journey, and perform'd this charitable office, he would come to them, and that "in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the Goſpel" of peace. Note here, 1. The title given to the poor Chriſtians at Jeruſalem: They are called Saints; "I go to Jeruſalem to adminiſter to the Saints" neceſſities: Saints they were by baptiſmal dedication, by viſible profeſſion; and many, yea moſt of them, it is to be hoped, by inward ſanctification alſo. 2. That poverty and ſanctity are not inconſiſtent: The Saints at Jeruſalem are poor, but God provided a purveyor for them; he ſtirs up the Apoſtle, and the hearts of the Macedonians, to adminiſter to the neceſſities of theſe poor Saints. 3. How the Saints in one church did ſuccour and relieve the poor Chriſtians in another: Thoſe in Macedonia and Achaia ſend relief into Judea, and to the poor Saints which were at Jeruſalem; teaching us, that it is our obliged duty to extend our charity to the churches abroad and beyond the ſeas, when their wants and neceſſities require it, and our capacities enable us unto it. 4. The nature of this charity declared: It was a free and chearful contribution performed with much pleaſure: "it pleaſed them" to make a contribution; it was not extorted or ſqueezed from them, but given with chearfulneſs by them: Contributions muſt not be compulſions, but voluntary oblations. 5. How this charity is called fruit; "when I have ſealed this fruit:" Becauſe it was the fruit of their faith, liberty, and love; becauſe, as Fruit, it would redound both to the benefit of the giver and receiver: Charity and alms are fruit redounding to account in the great day of account. 6. The great integrity and fidelity of the Apoſtle in ſecuring of this charity; "when I have ſealed (or ſecured) unto them this fruit." The church's charity is a ſealed treaſure, not to be diminiſhed and imbezled, but applied to the uſes to which it is devoted. Laſtly, The aſſurance which he gives them, that when he comes among them, he "ſhall come in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the Goſpel of peace unto them; that is, with a full impartment of ſpiritual gifts and Goſpel-bleſſings, much knowledge, grace and comfort. (B.) See the preface to this Epiſtle.

To miniſter unto the Saints.] That is, to perform this office and ſervice for the Saints, to carry them that money which was gather'd for their uſe; for otherwiſe, if the word miniſter be taken for the exerciſing the miniſterial function, St. Peter, to whom the miniſtry of the circumciſion was ſpecially commended, Gal ii. 7. was properly the miniſter of the Jews, where God ſpecially bleſs'd his labours; tho' as St. Ambroſe rightly obſerves, St. Peter's miniſtry was not ſo confin'd to the Jews, but that he might, and did ſometimes preach to the Gentiles, as St. Paul did to the Jews. (Aſs.) See the notes on Luke viii. 3.

It hath pleaſed them.] Eudokein is an emphatical word, implying an infinite affection to any thing men delight in. The moſt precious thing which St. Paul ever deſir'd to receive, he expreſſes by this word, 2 Cor. v. 8. and the moſt precious thing he ever deſir'd to give, he expreſſes by the ſame word, 1 Theſſ. ii. 8. So here when he would extol to the heavens, the heavenly affection of the Macedonians to relieve the poor, he doubled this word "it pleaſed them," ver. 26. which he repeats, ver. 27. to ſhew, That they delighted in charity. When God would expreſs his inexpreſſible love to his Son, and in him to man, he does it by this word, Matt. iii. 17. The word ſignifies a willing, pleaſing, ſelf-propenſion, not without much contentment. (Leigh.) Alms indeed are voluntary, which, notwithſtanding, are juſt debts by the law of charity. (Beza.) For alms are a debt, which the rich owe to the miniſters of the church, and to the poor, becauſe God ſanctifies the rich by the miniſtry of the prieſts, and frequently enriches them, or at leaſt bears with them, only for the ſake of the poor. That God vouchſafes to accept, by the hands of his miniſters, of his ſervants, and of the poor, this ſmall acknowledgment of the great favours and graces he has conferr'd upon the rich by their miniſtry; this is itſelf a new favour for which they are indebted to him. (Q.)

In the fulneſs of the bleſſing.] See the notes on chap. i. 11.

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33. Now I beſeech you, brethren, for the Lord Jeſus Chriſt's ſake, and for the love of the ſpirit, that ye ſtrive together with me in your prayers to God for me; that I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judea; and that my ſervice which I have for Jeruſalem, may be accepted of the ſaints: That I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreſhed. Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen.

Strive together with me.] Synagoniſaſthai moi. The original word ſignifies to ſtrive together, as wreſtlers do, who exert all their power and might in that bodily exerciſe. (B.) Or rather, being a military word, it denoteth ſuch fervency, as is for life and death. (Leigh.) And, at the ſame time, ſuch an unity, as there is in a well-diſciplin'd army; where every man ſtrives, not ſingly, but ſo as to ſtrive together with the reſt, in their reſpective rank and order. In alluſion to which metaphor, Tertullion, ſpeaking of the Common-prayer, ſays, when we come to the public ſervice of God, we come, as in a formidable body, to ſtorm Heaven by the force of prayer; and ſuch a force is a violence moſt grateful to God. But then the prayers, by which they ſtorm'd Heaven, muſt have been united prayers: For they could not ſtorm it without unanimity, as well as fervency, in their devotions: Nor can we imagine, that God would have heard a congregation, divided in heart, and mind, and affection; where ſome had aſſented, and ſome diſſented, where ſome had ſaid Amen, and others, at the ſame time ſaid, in heart, if not vocally, Not Amen! See the notes on ver. 6.

In your prayers to God for me. If Paul (ſays Eſthius) might deſire the prayers of the Romans, why might not the Romans deſire the prayers of Paul? I anſwer, they might deſire his prayers, by an Epiſtle directed to him, as he did theirs. He adds, if they might deſire his prayers when living, why not, when dead, reigning with Chriſt? I anſwer, becauſe, then, they could not direct any Epiſtle to him, nor any other way acquaint him with their mind. Hence Elijah, being to be taken up into Heaven, ſpeaks to Eliſhah thus, "Ask what I ſhall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee," 2 Kings ii. 9. note alſo, that we ſay not only, that ſuch deſiring the prayers of the ſaints departed, are injurious to the interceſſion of Chriſt, but that they are idolatrous; implying that creatures are omniſcient, omnipreſent, and have the knowledge of the heart. (W.)

That I may be delivered.] Obſerve the particulars concerning which he deſires their ſupplications: 1. For preſervation in his journey to Judea; that the unbelieving Jews, which were prejudiced againſt him, might have no power to hurt him. 2. That his perſon, and his performance for the poor Saints at Jeruſalem, might find acceptance with the Chriſtian Jews, to whom he was not over acceptable; he therefore begs their prayers, that the believing Jews at Jeruſalem might be reconciled, both to the believing Gentiles that ſent this alms, and alſo to himſelf that brought it; "that my ſervice for Jeruſalem may be accepted of the Saints." 3. That he might have a proſperous journey to them by the will of God. Where note, how much it is our duty always, and in all things, to refer ourſelves, our intentions and actions, to the wiſdom and will of God. (B.)

The God of peace.] The Apoſtle had deſir'd their prayers for him; here he concludes with a fervent prayer for them: In which obſerve the title or attribute given unto God, the God of peace; the lover, the author, and giver of peace. The Apoſtle having exhorted the believing Romans to be at peace among themſelves, and not to contend about indifferent things, implores the diſpenſer of this grace to be with them, to dwell among them, and to pour out the great and invaluable bleſſings of peace and unity, of love and concord upon them; "The God of peace be with you all, Amen." As we honour the God of peace whom we ſerve; as we love the prince of peace in whom we believe; as we hope for the comfort of the ſpirit of peace; and as we tender the ſucceſs of the Goſpel of peace; let us preſerve it where it is, and purſue it where it flies from us. (Idem.)

CHAP. XVI.

The Apoſtle recommendeth Phebe to them: Sendeth ſalutations to divers of the faithful: Cautioneth them againſt Schiſmaticks and falſe teachers: Exhorteth to godly wiſdom and Chriſtian ſimplicity; And concludeth with praiſe to God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. I Commend unto you Phebe our ſiſter, which is a ſervant of the church which is at Cenchrea: That ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh ſaints, and that ye aſſiſt her in whatſoever buſineſs ſhe hath need of you: For ſhe hath been a ſuccourer of many, and of my ſelf alſo. Greet Priſcilla and Aquila my helpers in Chriſt Jeſus: (Who have for my life laid down their necks: Unto whom not only I give thanks, but alſo all the churches of the Gentiles) Likewiſe greet the church that is in their houſe. Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the firſt-fruits of Achaia unto Chriſt. Greet Mary, who beſtowed much labour upon us. Salute Andronicus and Junia my kinſmen and my fellow-priſoners, who are of note among the Apoſtles, who were in Chriſt before me. Greet Amplias my beloved in the Lord. Salute Urbane our helper in Chriſt, and Stachys my beloved. Salute Apelles approved in Chriſt. Salute them which are of Ariſtobulus houſhold. Salute Herodion my kinſman. Greet them that be of the houſhold of Narciſſus, which are in the Lord. Salute Tryphena and Tryphoſa, who labour in the Lord. Salute the beloved Perſis, which laboured much in the Lord. Salute Rufus choſen in the Lord, and his mother and mine. Salute Aſyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them. Salute Philologus, and Julia, Nereus, and his ſiſter, and Olympas, and all the ſaints which are with them. Salute one another with an holy kiſs. The churches of Chriſt ſalute you.

I commend unto you.] The Apoſtle, having made an end of his argument, cometh now to familiar recommendations and ſalutations: And this, to good purpoſe, viz. That the Romans might know, who were moſt to be honour'd, and made account of among them, and alſo whom they ought to ſet before them, as examples, to follow; and therefore he attributeth unto every one of them ſome peculiar and ſingular teſtimonies: Wherein he is the more affectionate, that he might not only recommend them for their piety, and propoſe them to others for imitation; but alſo the more endear their affections to him, and ſhew his gratitude to them, and the honourable eſteem he had of them. (Beza, Aſſ. and Fell)

Phebe, our ſiſter.] Who, going upon ſome occaſion to Rome, St. Paul is ſuppoſed to have ſent this Epiſtle to the Romans by her. I commend (ſays he,) to your care and affectionate regard, "Phebe, our ſiſter" in the faith, who ſerved the church at Cenchrea; in the quality of a deaconneſs, as ſome think, or, as others, who ſpent her time in receiving and harbouring poor Chriſtians that were driven out of their country; and who had been a ſuccourer and ſupporter of the Apoſtle himſelf. He exhorts them to "receive her in the Lord;" that is, with Chriſtian love for the Lord's ſake, and to be aſſiſtant and helpful to her outward affairs and buſineſs. Learn hence, What honour God puts upon the female ſex, in making uſe of ſome of them to be aſſiſtants to the Apoſtles, and taking care that their offices of love and ſervice for and towards the miniſters and members of Chriſt, ſhould not be forgotten, but had and kept in everlaſting remembrance. The ſervices which Phebe did, are here recorded, to poſterity tranſmitted, and to our imitation recommended. (B.) What diaconein, to miniſter, ſignifies in the New Teſtament, hath formerly been noted at large (ſee on Luke viii. 3.) viz. to relieve the poor, either out of the ſtock of the church, as adminiſtrators and diſpenſers of others liberality and alms, or, as hoſpitable charitable perſons, out of their own ſubſtance. So the women that adminiſtred to Chriſt, "out of their own eſtates," and ſo Phebe here, who is therefore called a reliever, or patroneſs, of many, and even of Paul himſelf, ver. 2. and in all probability is the (gyne adelphe) 1 Cor. ix. 5. the ſiſter, or believing Chriſtian woman, which either did, or, if Paul would have accepted it, would have helped him and Barnabas "to eat and drink," ver. 4. without labouring with their hands, ver. 6. Such as ſhe accompanying the Apoſtles in their journeys to preach the Goſpel (as of her it appears by St. Paul's ſending this Epiſtle from Corinth to Rome by her, as 'tis in the ſubſcription) and furniſhing them with all things which they wanted, from whence they are ſaid to "labour in the Lord," ver. 6, and 12. Whereupon, ſaith the Scholiaſt, The Apoſtles carried about with them ſome matrons of good report, that made proviſion for their neceſſary uſes, that the Apoſtles, being free from theſe cares, might be at leiſure for preaching only: And Theophylact, that rich women followed the Apoſtles, and provided them neceſſaries, and eaſed them of all that care &c. (H.) But this Phebe was (according to Origen and Chryſoſtome) actually a Deaconneſs, choſen to that office, according to the Apoſtolical preſcription, 1 Tim. v. 10. (W.) The churches appointing theſe Deaconneſſes, (amongſt other things) to miniſter to, or take care of, poor and ſtrange women, which men might not do. (Fell)

Aſſiſt her.] There are ſeveral powerful motives which engage us to aſſiſt our brethren, viz. 1. The merit and even the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, who is in them. 2 The dignity and holineſs of the Chriſtian profeſſion. 3. The ſervices they have done the church. 4. Their perſonal piety. And, 5. Our own particular gratitude. (Q.)

Greet Priſcilla and Aquila.] The firſt perſons at Rome, whom St. Paul ſaluteth by name, are Priſcilla and Aquila: Where we may obſerve, 1. That the woman is named before her husband, to ſhew that they were both one in Chriſt Jeſus; in whom is neither male nor female. And here, by the way, it appears, how weakly the Papiſts argue for St. Peter's primacy, becauſe placed firſt in the catalogue of the Apoſtles: For, by the ſame argument, the woman is the head of the man, becauſe here named before the man. 2. The honourable title which St. Paul puts upon theſe two perſons, Aquila and Priſcilla, he calls them his "Helpers in Chriſt Jeſus." They were his aſſiſtants in propagating the Goſpel, by private inſtruction, tho' not by publick preaching; See the notes on Acts xviii. 26. 3. The Chriſtian courage found in this woman Priſcilla, and her husband Aquila, They "laid down their own necks" for the Apoſtle; that is, they expoſed themſelves to the hazard of their lives for his preſervation. 4. The thankful reſentment which the Apoſtle, and "All the churches of the Gentiles" had of this their great, and noble ſervice, in hazarding their own lives for his; "To whom I gave thanks and all the churches of the Gentiles." Becauſe St. Paul was the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and his preſervation was a common benefit to them all, therefore were the churches of the Gentiles ſenſible of, and thankful for, the Apoſtle's preſervation. Laſtly, We have the ſalutation ſent to "the church that was in their houſe:" By which ſome underſtand their houſhold, their Chriſtian family; which they call a church, becauſe of the pious order, and religious worſhip obſerv'd in it. Happy houſes! And thrice happy houſholders! Whoſe families are little churches for piety and devotion. Others underſtand, by "the church in their houſe," the number of Chriſtians which us'd to aſſemble there for religious worſhip. Be it the one or the other, the Apoſtle forgets not to ſend a kind and Chriſtian ſalutation to them. (B.) Aquila was a Jew by birth, and a Tent-maker by occupation. He and his wife had been baniſh'd from Rome by Claudius, and liv'd at Corinth, where they had entertain'd St. Paul, who was of the ſame trade, Acts xviii. 2, 3. Afterwards removing from Corinth, they dwelt at Epheſus, where they entertain'd Apollos, ver. 18, 19, 26. Thence, in the beginning of Nero's reign, they remov'd again to Rome, as appears in this verſe; and afterwards to Epheſus, 2 Tim. iv. 19. Wherever they were, it ſeems they kept a great family, and that the Chriſtians aſſembled at their houſe, 1 Cor. xvi. 19. And of their venturing their lives to preſerve the Apoſtle both at Epheſus and Corinth, See Acts xviii. 12, &c. (Fell) Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle ſalutes the Chriſtians at Rome, not in general, but particularly, and by name, that they might be convinc'd how particularly mindful he was of them. A ſpiritual father can never be forgetful of his ſpiritual children. 2. The perſons ſaluted by the Apoſtle, are not men of fame in Rome, noted for their dignity and greatneſs, or for their wealth and riches, but for their piety and godlineſs, for labouring in the Lord, and labouring much in the Lord, for being in Chriſt, approv'd of Chriſt, and helpers in Chriſt, and ſerviceable to thoſe whoſe work and office it was to be ſo. It is religion that renders perſons renown'd, and none deſerve more to be remembred by us, than thoſe who are moſt laborious in the ſervice of God. 3. Here are ſeveral women as well as men remembred, and their ſervices recorded. God will have none of his faithful ſervants forgotten, nor their good actions bury'd in oblivion. Laſtly, In all this roll of ſalutations, there is no mention of St. Peter; a ſhrewd argument that he was not at Rome. (B.) See the preface to this Epiſtle.

Laid down their own necks.] The hazards to which they expos'd themſelves were probably at Epheſus, or Corinth, where was the ordinary abode of Aquila. Acts xviii. 2, 1, 19. and 2. Tim. iv. 19. (Fell) The faithful ought to enter into the obligations and duties of their paſtors, as the paſtors ought to eſpouſe the intereſts of the faithful. Perſecution is not able to ſeparate thoſe whom the ſame faith, the hierarchical order, and the love of the church have united in charity. To preſerve an holy Biſhop for the good of the church, at the peril of a man's own life, is one of the greateſt and moſt uſeful works, which one can poſſibly perform. (Q)

The church that is in their houſe.] The judicious and learn'd Mr. Joſeph Mede, in his diſcourſe, on 1 Cor. xi. 22. interprets this phraſe to ſignify, (not the houſhold or family of the perſons ſaluted, but) the aſſembly or congregation of Chriſtians who met there publickly to worſhip God. In this diſcourſe, he makes it highly probable, that the perſons here ſaluted, had, in their reſpective cities and places of abode, dedicated ſome part or place, in their houſes, to be an oratory, or place of publick worſhip, for Chriſtians to aſſemble in, for the performance of religious duties. Such a place, it is probable, was the Upper Room, mention'd Acts i. 13. (Fox) The church, taken at large, or as it is commonly call'd the Catholick Church, is only one ſociety, united by the ſtricteſt bonds of communion, however diſperſed over the world. That it is ſo, is plain, 1. From the ſacrament of Baptiſm. For, by being baptized in the name of the Trinity, we are not only made members of that particular church wherein we live, but obtain a right to the communion of the whole Catholick Church: But this could not be, unleſs all particular churches did conſtitute one and the ſame ſociety. 2. This appears from the notion of excommunication, as adminiſter'd in the primitive church. Nothing is more evident in Church-Hiſtory, than this, That one who was excommunicated from any particular church, was thereby thrown out of the whole Catholick Church. This the xiiith Apoſtolick canon directs. And a famous inſtance is given of the practice of it, in the caſe of Andronicus and Thoas, excommunicated by Sineſius, Biſhop of Ptolomais; Let no Temple of God be open to Andronicus, &c. Another inſtance is in the caſe of Marcion; whom the church of Rome refus'd to receive to communion, becauſe he was excommunicated by his own father in another church. 3. The ſame appears from the article of the Creed, I believe the holy Catholick Church. And the Scriptures agree to this ſenſe. It is true, that the word church is taken in different ſenſes. Sometimes it ſignifies the place of worſhip, as 1 Cor. xi. 18. But in the text before us, it ſignifies the multitude of the faithful; as alſo 1 Cor. i. 2. &c. In which ſenſe, as Biſhop Pearſon well obſerves, when the Scripture ſpeaks of any country or people converted to the faith, the word churches, in the plural number, is made uſe of, as, 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 19. &c. But in ſpeaking of a ſingle city, how large ſoever, or howſoever many congregations were in it, the word church, in the ſingular, is made uſe of, as 1 Cor. i. 2. 2 Theſſ. i. 1. &c. But, both from Scripture, and primitive antiquity, it appears, that all thoſe churches were only look'd upon as parts of the whole one Catholick Church. And this was not only eſtabliſh'd by human prudence, and the canons of ſubſequent councils; but in conſequence of our Saviour's command of unity and avoiding diviſions; which it is impoſſible to do, unleſs every church has a principle of unity, and that all particular churches under their own Biſhops have agreed upon certain doctrines, and under ſuch rules; thoſe Biſhops again united to their Arch-biſhops, and ſo to a general council. (Hughes) See the notes on ver. 3. Acts i. 13. 1 Cor. xvi. 19. And An original draught of the primitive Church, (by Mr. Sclater) 1717.

The firſt-fruits of Achaia.] St. Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, and the Syriac and Arabic verſions, read Achaia, as it is here: But the Alexandrian copy, the Ethiopian, the Vulgar, and almoſt all the Latin commentators read (tees Aſias) of Aſia. So does Origen, Hom. xi. on Numbers, and St. Jerom, on Ezek. liii. And this reading is to be prefer'd before the other: Becauſe our Apoſtle ſays expreſly, 1 Cor. xvi. 15. That Stephanus was "the firſt-fruits of Achaia;" and therefore Epenetus was the firſt-fruits of Aſia Minor. (G. W. Fleury and Fox)

My fellow priſoners.] Before St. Paul went to Rome, he was "in priſons often," 2 Cor. xi. 23. as St. Clement ſays, bearing his chain ſeven times; and ſo may be ſaid to have many fellow-priſoners. (W.)

Of note among the Apoſtles.] Men highly eſteemed by them. Men eminent, ſay St. Chryſoſtome and Theodoret, not only among the teachers but the Apoſtles of the churches. For, they who were co-workers with the Apoſtles in planting churches are ſtiled "Apoſtles of the churches," 2 Cor. viii. 23. Phil. ii. 25. Thus Philip the deacon is call'd an Apoſtle by the ancients. (W.) The word Apoſtle may be taken in three different ſenſes. 1. As being ſent by Chriſt himſelf; as were the firſt Apoſtles, and St. Paul and Barnabas. 2. When one does the work of an Apoſtle, altho' not immediately ſent by expreſs divine commiſſion given to him particularly. Thus the firſt converters of Heathens and unbelievers to Chriſtianity; ſuch as St. Philip and St. Mark, Epaphroditus, and others, in the Apoſtles days, may be, and were called Apoſtles, as having laid the foundation of the Goſpel in places where it was not before. 3. One who is neither ſo immediately ſent, nor yet was the firſt founder of Chriſtianity, if he converts many to the faith, and reaps a plentiful harveſt to Chriſt, may be called an Apoſtle. In this ſenſe any one who would convert any country in the Eaſt or Weſt Indies, where the Goſpel has been receiv'd, but many are yet Heathens, may be ſtiled the Apoſtles of ſuch a place. (Maſon) But whether this laſt ſenſe do belong to the word in this place it will be yet uncertain: Becauſe, tho' it be granted, that in thoſe other places, theſe ſecondary Apoſtles were certainly meant; yet 'tis poſſible, theſe here named, Andronicus and Junias, may not be called Apoſtles, but only (epiſemoi) noted, known men (en Apoſtolois) "among the Apoſtles;" that is, among the Twelve Apoſtles; as well they might be, having been Chriſtians more anciently than St. Paul, and ſo converted either by the Apoſtles probably, or by Chriſt himſelf. 'Tis true, after all this, that, in the conſtitutions of the emperors, we find Apoſtoloi ſynagogarum, Apoſtles of the ſynagogues; whoſe office it was, among the Jews, to gather up the dues of the Patriarch who lived in Paleſtine: And, proportionably to thoſe, the word Apoſtles might ſignify no more than meſſengers of the churches, ſent about eccleſiaſtical affairs; ſuch as are, in Ignatius's Epiſtles, call'd Theodromoi, or Theopresbeutai, ſacred or divine officers or meſſengers: But it appears not, that, in any place of the New Teſtament, the word is uſed in this ſenſe. See the notes on Luke vi. 13. and John xx. 21. (H.) From all which 'tis manifeſt, how unwarily Grotius concludes this Junia to have been the wife of Andronicus; ſince, in either ſenſe of the word, Junia, if ſuch, could not have been reckon'd as one of the Apoſtles, if her husband had been ſo. But indeed, the very name in the original ſeems more properly Junias, with a maſculine termination, than Junia, with a feminine; and accordingly it is well rendred, Junias, both by Dr. Hammond, and Biſhop Fell, as alſo I find it in ſome editions of our own tranſlation of the Bible.

Helpers in Chriſt.] That is, in the Goſpel, or doctrine of Chriſt; by a common metonymy of the cauſe for the effect.

Approved in Chriſt.] Dokimon, by ſuffering patiently great tribulations, ſaith Origen: For "tribulation worketh patience, and patience (dokimen) experience," of our affection to him, for whoſe ſake we ſuffer them, chap. v. 3, 4.

Of Ariſtobulus houſhold.] See the notes on 2 Tim. i. 16.

Of Narciſſus.] He was the famous freed-man of the emperor Claudius; whom Agrippina cauſed to be put to death, in the beginning of the reign of Nero. (Fleury)

Laboured much in the Lord.] Ekopiaſe, ſignifies not ſimply to labour, but to labour with much travel and toil. So Mr. Mede expounds it, 1 Tim. v. 17. Such elders as take more than ordinary pains in the word and doctrine. It is a metaphor taken from rowers in the Galleys. (Leigh) Reſt is ſeldom or never prais'd in the miniſters of the Goſpel. It is for them to labour during this life, and to expect reſt from God, only in Heaven. (Q.)

Choſen in the Lord.] See the notes on 1 Pet. ii. 6.

His mother and mine.] Rufus's mother by nature, St. Paul's by affection. Thus the bleſſed Virgin is call'd St. John's mother. (G.) See note on John xix. 27.

Hermas.] Origen conceives that this is the author of the book, entitled Paſtor, becauſe the angel therein is ſaid to appear in the likeneſs of a Shepherd: And he ſuppoſes it to be divinely inſpir'd. But St. Jerom, in his Prologus Galeatus, calls it apocryphal. And Euſebius, in his Eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, ſays, that many, in his time, took exceptions at it, altho' it was eſteem'd by others to have been written by the Hermas whom St. Paul ſalutes. (Aſs.) N. B. the names of moſt of theſe, here mention'd, being Greek, ſhews that the greateſt part of them came from Greece or the parts near it. See the preface to this Epiſtle.

Salute one another with an holy kiſs.] Here, the Apoſtle proceeds from greeting the Saints at Rome himſelf, to perſuade them to ſalute one another. There had been much diſſention among them about meats and days; he therefore begs of them, for the future, to embrace each other with cordial love, and affection; and, as a token of it, to ſalute one another with an holy kiſs, the uſual expreſſion of friendſhip in thoſe days. The primitive Chriſtians, at the end of their prayers, before the celebration of the ſacrament, ſaluted one another with a kiſs, and then the bread and cup were brought forth: And ſome obſerve, that it was done by the men apart, and the women apart. But this cuſtom being afterwards abus'd, it was gradually laid aſide. (B.) The cloſe of all Chriſtian prayers was wont to be in the form of a benediction, wiſhing all charity and unity among them; and it being a common cuſtom, after that, to uſe the kiſs of peace, as it was then call'd, St. Paul's bidding them ſalute one another with the holy kiſs ſeems to be equivalent with his pronouncing his uſual benediction. "The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," &c. which was wont to be attended with it. (H.) This cuſtom, mention'd both by St. Peter, 1 Pet. v. 14. and St. Paul in this place was uſed in the primitive church for many ages.

It began to be laid aſide in the weſtern church in the IXth century: Whether it ceas'd before, or continu'd longer in the Greek church is uncertain; but in the XIIth Century, it was not us'd except between biſhops only (Johnſ.) By this ſymbol, they ſhew'd that all Chriſtians were equal. For among the Perſians and other eaſtern nations, equals kiſs'd one another's cheeks, but inferiors only kiſs'd the hand of a ſuperior. (G.)

The churches of Chriſt] See the notes on ver. 5.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20. Now I beſeech you, brethren, mark them which cauſe diviſions and offences, contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are ſuch, ſerve not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own belly; and by good words and fair ſpeeches deceive the hearts of the ſimple. For your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf: But yet I would have you wiſe unto that which is good, and ſimple concerning evil. And the God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you. Amen.

Mark them which cauſe.] Here obſerve, 1. How our Apoſtle takes his leave of theſe Romans, with an admonition to them, to take heed of perſons that were erroneous in doctrine, and ſcandalous in practice. It is probable, he means thoſe Jews, who pleaded the neceſſity of circumciſion, and the obſervation of the Moſaic rites, as neceſſary to the ſalvation of the Gentiles; or the Gnoſticks, to whom the following characters do well agree. Whoever they were, they were dangerous ſeducers, and to be avoided. 2. The character he gives of theſe perſons, "They ſerve not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own bellies." Seducers are always ſelf-ſeekers; deſigning men, aiming at themſelves under pretence of acting for Chriſt, and his glory. 3. The arts and methods which they uſe to deceive: "By good words and fair ſpeeches, they deceive the hearts of the ſimple." Seducers have ſmooth tongues, and innocent men are miſled by their fair pretences. 4. The double advice, which the Apoſtle gives, in order to preſerve and ſecure them from the poiſon of theſe ſeducers, viz. To mark, and avoid them: 1. To mark them. The word ſignifies ſuch a marking, as a watchman uſes, from a watch-tower, to deſcry an enemy; which is perform'd with great accuracy. 2. To avoid them; as a man would ſhun him who has the plague. (B. and Q.) Thoſe diviſions are made either by hereſy or ſchiſm. Hereſy is only applicable to one who profeſſes the name of Chriſt, but obſtinately maintains one or more opinions repugnant to the grounds of the Chriſtian faith. 1. He muſt be a profeſt Chriſtian: And ſo a Heathen, Jew, &c. are Infidels, but not Hereticks. 2. Every error in fundamentals is not hereſy, unleſs it be perſiſted in, and obſtinately maintain'd. 3. Every error obſtinately perſiſted in is not hereſy, but ſuch as ſap the Foundation. Schiſm muſt likewiſe be in a profeſſor of Chriſtianity; but one who ſeparates from the church in ſome matters not fundamental; ſuch as ſmaller matters of doctrine, or modes of worſhip, or rites and ceremonies. The difference between theſe two, are ſaid by St. Auſtin to be, That thoſe corrupt the ſincerity of the faith by falſe doctrine; but theſe, ſometimes in the ſemblance of believers, break aſunder the bond of charity. Diviſions, come from dichoſtaſia, diſcord or dividing. Offences, ſcandala. (See the notes on Luke xvii. 1.) Offences proceed from diviſions, as fruit from a tree. Diviſions and offences are only on their ſide who teach or practice contrary to the doctrine we have receiv'd. Therefore if any one ſeparates from thoſe who teach falſe doctrine, the hereſy on ſchiſm is of their ſide not his. By marking ſuch, (ſcopein) is underſtood the watching carefully againſt them, and warning others of them: But they muſt not only be mark'd, but avoided. (Brookes) See the notes on chap. xiv. 13. and Matth. xviii. 17.

Contrary to the doctrine.] This is the touchſtone, by which all diviſions and offences are to be tried: By this we muſt "try the ſpirits whether they be of God." He had taught them the high and profound myſtery of Chriſtianity by authority of ſcripture: Now he condemns not ſimply all diviſions, but ſuch as are contrary to God's word, and the proportion of faith and manners, which was that doctrine they had learn'd from him. (Brookes) Eſthins here notes, 1. That unwritten traditions may be hence prov'd, becauſe the Apoſtle ſays, mark them that cauſe offences contrary (not to the ſcriptures, but) to the doctrines, they had receiv'd. But to make this argument of any force, he muſt prove, that the doctrine they had receiv'd, was not contain'd in the ſcriptures, either then, or after-written. 2. The Apoſtle plainly ſpeaks here of doctrines receiv'd from the mouths of the Apoſtles, by thoſe very men to whom he writ. When he has once prov'd the unwritten traditions of the church of Rome to be ſuch, we ſhall be ready to receive them. 3. He ſays, This makes place for a diligent inquiſition after Hereticks; as if St. Paul was ſetting up an inquiſition here! Whereas the word ſcopein (as before is noted) only ſignifies to mark, or look to them; as Luke xi. 35. 2 Cor. iv. 18. Gal. vi. 1. Philip ii. 4. Nor does he exhort the Romans to obſerve them in order to the apprehending or puniſhing them, but, as he himſelf notes, that they might avoid them. 4. He obſerves truly, that the Apoſtle here inſinuates, that even the vulgar people may, from ſome general principles, diſcern the true doctrine, and that which was deliver'd by the Apoſtles, from that which was falſe, and not ſo deliver'd: But this was only then to be done, by comparing what was thus deliver'd from the mouths of the Apoſtles, who preach'd by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, and confirm'd their doctrine by miracles, with that which was deliver'd beſides, or in oppoſition to it, and was not ſo confirm'd: And this can only now be done by comparing all pretenders to the Apoſtles doctrine, with thoſe ſcriptures which they endited, by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, and confirm'd by miracles. (W.)

They that are ſuch.] That is, the Gnoſticks, according to Dr. Hammond; to whom indeed theſe characters do well agree. But Theodoret ſays, by theſe words he ſtrikes at the evil defenders of the law; or thoſe who preach'd up circumciſion and the obſervance of the law, as neceſſary to the ſalvation of the Gentiles. St. Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius and Theophylact ſay, he meant the Jews, whom he ſtill taxes with loving their bellies. And it is certain, that theſe men caus'd diviſions and ſeparations from others, as unclean, and not to be convers'd or eaten with, Acts xi. 3. Gal. ii. 12, 13. and ſcandals ſubverting the ſouls of the Gentiles, Acts xv. 24. fruſtrating the Goſpel of Chriſt, Gal. ii. 21. and cauſing men to fall from grace, chap. v. 2, 4. That they did this by flattering words, 1 Theſſ. ii. 5. and that in this, they "ſerv'd not Chriſt, but their own bellies," Phil. iii. 19. doing theſe things "for filthy lucre's ſake," Tit. i. 10, 11. Whence it appears, there is no neceſſity of referring theſe words to the Gnoſticks. (W.)

But their own belly.] Flattering the Jews; avoiding perſecution, which attended Chriſtianity both from the Jews and Gentiles; which Gentiles, mean-while tolerated Judaiſm. (Fell)

With good words and fair ſpeeches.] By their hypocriſy ſtealing away the hearts of well-meaning people from their obedience, to their ſuperiors, and gaining reputation to themſelves and their party by ſpecious pretences; ſuch as the glory of God, the propagation of the Goſpel, the reformation of abuſes, and the like. (Sanderſ.)

Deceive the hearts of the ſimple.] Akakos, in the Septuagint, anſwers to the Hebrew word for upright, Prov. xiii. 6. and akakia to that for integrity, Pſal. vii. 8. and elſewhere: And ſo here it ſeems to ſignify men of upright and honeſt hearts. But becauſe all the Greek ſcholiaſts ſay it ſignifies men ſimple, fooliſh, and ſlow of underſtanding; and becauſe the word often bears this ſenſe in the Proverbs, as chap. xiv. 15. "The ſimple believeth every word;" this expoſition, being more pertinent to the words, may be preferr'd before the other. (W.)

Yet I would have you wiſe. Becauſe "your faith is ſpoken of throughout the world," therefore many have recourſe to you from all parts, that they may make their own market in your rich city. The Apoſtle congratulates the Chriſtians in general, that they did not ſuffer themſelves ſo fall into their traps. But, becauſe what has been the caſe of one may happen to any other, I would have you ſo wiſe that ye may not be deceiv'd, and ſo good that ye do not deceive others. (G.) The holieſt, beſt, and wiſeſt Chriſtians are not ſecure from the ſnares of ſeducers; but ſtand in need of all the cautions and warnings, of the advice and counſel, of their ſpiritual guides, in order to preſerve them from the poiſon of their principles, and the contagion of their example. (B.) See the notes on chap. i 8.

The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan.] Theſe words may be conſidered either relatively, or abſolutely. If relatively, or with relation to the context, then by Satan is to be underſtood ſeducers and falſe teachers; whom he had warn'd the Romans of in the preceding verſes: "Mark them which cauſe diviſions," &c. Learn hence, 1. That all corrupters of divine truths, and troublers of the church's peace, are Satan's inſtruments: "God ſhall bruiſe Satan, (that is, Satan in his inſtruments,) under your feet." Learn, 2. That divine evangelical truth ſhall be finally victorious: "No weapon form'd againſt it ſhall proſper;" the head of error ſhall fall low at laſt at the feet of truth. Seducers may bluſter for a time, but ſhall be bruiſed at laſt; "The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan ſhortly." Conſider the words abſolutely, and we have a victory proclaimed; the author of that victory declared, "the God of peace;" the enemy conquered, Satan; the conqueſt, or manner of conquering, by bruiſing; the time of the conqueſt, not preſently, but ſhortly; "The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly." Learn, 1. That the reconciler of the world ſhall be the ſubduer of Satan; and in ſubduing Satan he conquers all his inſtruments: He ſaith not, God ſhall bruiſe ſeducers and Hereticks under your feet; but Satan, and in him all that belong unto him; as the fall of the General puts the whole army to rout. 2. That Almighty God, in his own time, will make believers compleat conquerors over Satan, and all their ſpiritual ritual enemies. 3. That it is by virtue of Chriſt's conqueſt over Satan, that believers become conquerors; for the promiſe here refers to the original promiſe, Gen. iii. 15. That Chriſt, "the ſeed of the woman, ſhall break the ſerpent's head:" So then, it is by virtue of that act of Jeſus Chriſt, bruiſing the ſerpent's head, yea, breaking it, that Satan is bruiſed under our feet: As Chriſt bruiſed him under his own feet, ſo in his own time will he bruiſe him under our feet: The perſonal, as well as the repreſentative ſeed of the woman, ſhall break the ſerpent's head. (B.) By Satan we may underſtand thoſe perſecuting Jews, and Judaizers, who are ſtil'd "the meſſengers of Satan," 2 Cor. xi. 15. and ch. xii. 7. their perſecutions being aſcrib'd to Satan, who animates and provokes them to do ſo, 1 Theſſ. iii. 5. and Rev. ii. 9, 10. And then, God's bruiſing him under their feet, muſt ſignify his taking away the power of ſuch, thus to deceive and perſecute, by the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and of thoſe impoſtors with it. (W.) See ch. xv. 33.

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24. Timotheus my work-fellow, and Lucius, and Jaſon, and Soſipater, my kinſmen, ſalute you. I Tertius, who wrote this epiſtle, ſalute you in the Lord. Gaius mine hoſt, and of the whole church, ſaluteth you. Eraſtus the chamberlain of the city ſaluteth you, and Quartus a brother. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

Timotheus, my work-fellow.] The Apoſtle had, in the former part of the chapter, ſaluted divers perſons himſelf: Here he ſends the ſalutations of thoſe who were with him, to the Saints, or Chriſtians, then at Rome; hereby ſhewing that mutual love and amity, which is, and ought to be, between all the ſincere diſciples and followers of Jeſus, when, tho' not in body, yet in mind, they ſhould be preſent with one another; tho' diſtant in place, yet undivided in affection. Among the perſons thus ſending their ſalutations, he dignifies Timothy with the character of (ſynergos) his working-fellow: And what can be a greater dignity, than to be a fellow-worker with the Apoſtle, in planting and propagating the Goſpel of Chriſt? (B.) See ſome account of this Timothy, in the notes on Acts xvi. 1. and ſomewhat more hereafter, in the preface to St. Paul's Epiſtles to him.

And Lucius.] This Lucius was probably St. Luke, the evangeliſt: For he was then with St. Paul, as is obſerv'd in the notes on Acts xx. 4, 5. Of whom ſome account is given, in the preface to his Goſpel, as well as in that to the Acts of the Apoſtles.

And Jaſon.] Doubtleſs the ſame, whom the envious Jews aſſaulted, in a tumultuous manner, at Theſſalonica; accuſing him of having receiv'd, and entertain'd Paul and Silas, in his houſe there, Acts xvii. 5. &c.

I Tertius, who wrote this Epiſtle.] Not, as pretending to be the author of it, or penman of the Holy Ghoſt: But only as St. Paul's ſcribe, or Amanuenſis, writing down what the Apoſtle dictated to him; as Baruch did from the mouth of Jeremiah, Jerem. xxxvi. 18. (Aſſ. and Fell) Or elſe perhaps tranſcribing this Epiſtle from the Apoſtle's own copy. (Fell) This latter ſeems more probable to Grotius; who ſuppoſes, that the tranſcriber added this ſalutation in his own name, upon the margin.

Gaius, mine hoſt, and of the whole church.] The ſame who was ſeized at Epheſus, in the tumult rais'd there by Demetrius, Acts xix. 29. and afterwards accompanied St. Paul, Acts xx. 4. and is mention'd by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. i. 14. as one of thoſe whom he had baptized. See the notes there. And the reaſon why he is here call'd the "hoſt of the whole church," is not ſo much his having been a perſon imploy'd by the church of Corinth to entertain ſtrangers, (as Mr. Burkitt ſuppoſes;) but becauſe, in thoſe times of perſecution, before they were allow'd the liberty of publick churches, the Chriſtians of that city where he dwelled had the convenience of joining together in religious worſhip in his houſe; as Grotius and Fleury do reaſonably conclude.

Eraſtus the chamberlain.] Or rather the ſteward of the city; to wit of Corinth: For there he abode, 2 Tim. iv. 20. and from thence this Epiſtle was written, as is noted in the preface to it.

The grace of our Lord. Here, at his taking leave of them again, he repeats his prayer for them, which he had made before, ver. 20. viz. for "the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," upon which depends the efficacy of all his foregoing doctrine. (Beza) See the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

Ver. 25, 26, 27. Now to him that is of power to ſtabliſh you, according to my goſpel, and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt (according to the revelation of the myſtery, which was kept ſecret ſince the world began, but now is made manifeſt, and by the ſcriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlaſting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith) To God only wiſe, be glory through Jeſus Chriſt for ever. Amen.

¶ Written to the Romans from Corinthus, and ſent by Phebe ſervant of the church at Cenchrea.

Now to him.] Our Apoſtle here concludes his excellent Epiſtle with a ſolemn doxology or thankſgiving to God; in which he firſt deſcribes God, and then aſcribes eternal glory to him. He deſcribes him both by his power, and by his wiſdom: By his power firſt; "To him that is able to ſtabliſh you according to my Goſpel:" that is, to ſtabliſh you in grace and truth, in faith and holineſs, and to keep you from falling into ſin, and error. Such is our weakneſs, and Satan's power, that unleſs God confirm and eſtabliſh us, we ſhall ſoon run into ſin and danger. Obſerve farther, the inſtrumental means, which God makes uſe of for his people's eſtabliſhment; and that is the Goſpel, and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt, the doctrine of the Goſpel which Chriſt and his Apoſtles taught and delivered. This is called a "myſtery, kept ſecret ſince the world began, and now made manifeſt for the obedience of the faith;" that it, that it may be believed and obeyed. The ſecond atribute in the deſcription of God, is, his wiſdom: He is called the wiſe, "the only wiſe God;" not to exclude the Son and Holy Ghoſt, but the wiſdom of the creature only: He is only wiſe originally, his wiſdom is of himſelf; yea, his wiſdom is himſelf: The wiſdom of God is not a quality ſeparable from himſelf, but is his very eſſence and nature. He is only wiſe, becauſe he is incomparably wiſe; there is none that for wiſdom can compare with him. He has wiſdom in ſuch a degree and eminency, that the very angels are chargeable with folly before him: In a word, he is only wiſe, becauſe all wiſdom is deriv'd from him; all the wiſdom of angels and men is but a ray from his light, a drop from his ocean. And if ſo, then let the wiſdom of God, in all his dealings with us and ours, be admired and adored by us; for all his works of providence are as orderly and perfect, as his works of creation, tho' we perceive it not (B.) See the notes on chap. xiv. 23.

According to my Goſpel.] See the notes on chap. ii. 16.

And the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt.] Both this, and the foregoing expreſſion, ſay the fathers, are of the ſame import; the Goſpel which the Apoſtle preached being the ſame with that which Chriſt preached while he was on earth: And the Apoſtles, after his aſcenſion, preaching in his name, and by his authority, and by the aſſiſtance of his ſpirit, deliver'd his laws and doctrine, not their own. (W.)

The myſtery.] viz. The coming of the Meſſiah, the abrogating the law of Moſes, and the call of the Gentiles. (Fell.)

Since the world began.] The Greek may be render'd, from the beginning of ages, the promiſe of the Meſſiah being obſcurely reveal'd, or rather hinted to Adam from the beginning; tho' the Fathers render theſe words only (anothen) before, as Theodoret; or (palai) of old, as Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact. See the notes on 2 Tim. i. 9. Tit. ii. 2. (W.)

Now is made manifeſt.] That doctrine is made evident to many nations by the ſcriptures of the prophets, viz. by the event anſwering the prophecies. (G.) They of old foretold of the Meſſiah, and of the calling of the Gentiles: But yet, as to many circumſtances, this was ſtill a myſtery, till thoſe prophetick ſayings were more clearly reveal'd, by the ſpirit given to the Apoſtles and prophets, and by the actual accompliſhment of what had been foretold. See the notes on Eph. iii. 6. (W.)

To God only wiſe.] Mono ſopho Theo. This, as the fathers note, can not exclude the divine nature of Jeſus Chriſt, who is the wiſdom of the Father, from this title; any more than thoſe words, "who only has immortality," 1 Tim. vi. 16. exclude Chriſt from being immortal. (W.)

Written, &c.] N. B. This, and ſuch like notes, added to the end of St. Paul's Epiſtles, are of no great authority. (G.)

The END of the Epiſtle to the ROMANS.

ANNOTATIONS

UPON THE

Firſt EPISTLE of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,

CORINTHIANS.

HAVING already ſaid ſomewhat, by way of preface, to all St. Paul's Epiſtles in general, that which is here proper to be added, particularly, concerning this now before us, may be briefly reduced to theſe few obſervations, viz.

I. That this Epiſtle was written by the Apoſtle St. Paul, we need not labour to prove, becauſe it does not appear to have been ever doubted. But whether or no this was indeed his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, has been a matter of ſome diſpute; and that occaſion'd by an expreſſion in it, chap. v. 9. which ſhall be more particularly conſider'd in its proper place. All I ſhall ſay of it here is, That none of the fathers ever aſcrib'd to St. Paul more than fourteen Epiſtles, (including that to the Hebrews) nor in that number any more than two to the Corinthians; of which two this is evidently the former.

II. That the place where he wrote it was Epheſus, appears plainly from his own words, chap. xvi. 8, 19. compar'd with the other texts there, to be more largely treated of. And accordingly (as Bp. Fell obſerves) the ſubſcription at the end of it, in ſome copies, is not from Philippi, but from Epheſus; which verifies the remark, at the cloſe of the foregoing Epiſtle, that ſuch ſubſcriptions are only the notes of ſome tranſcribers; and therefore of no authority.

III. That the time of his writing it, was before he went from thence to Macedonia, appears as plain, from the like words, chap. xvi. 5. But, as to the preciſe year, the Holy Scriptures are ſilent, as not being a matter very material, much leſs neceſſary, for us to be ſollicitous about; and therefore it affords an handle to ſome controverſy among thoſe who are more curious in chronology than this our undertaking requires of us to be. By what we have obſerv'd, prefatory to all theſe Epiſtles, the diſpute is not very conſiderable; ſo that we ſhall content ourſelves with the account already given of the time, unleſs we ſhall happen to find ſomething material in that reſpect, to be taken notice of in the courſe of our Annotations.

IV. That the perſons to whom this Epiſtle was addreſs'd, were chiefly Gentiles, is evident from chap. xii. 2. And that the inhabitants of Corinth and Achaia were generally ſuch, is not to be doubted; tho' we read alſo of a ſynagogue of Jews there, Acts xviii. 8. many of whom reſorted to thoſe parts, and (as Philo ſays) inhabited Corinth, and the chief and beſt parts of Peloponneſus. For this was a principal city of Achaia or Greece; anciently called Epyre (as Pliny tells us) and afterwards Corinth, from one Corinthus, who took and rebuilt it. It was ſituate in the Streights, between the Ionian and Egean ſeas, and famous, among Heathen writers, for its citadel Acro-Corinthus; but eſpecially for its oppoſition to the Romans, which cauſed L. Mummius thence ſtiled Achaiacus) to deſtroy it: In the conflagration of which city, ſo many ſtatues, of different metals, were melted down, that the remains of them made that famous compound, call'd Corinthian Braſs, which was eſteem'd above ſilver or gold, and of which (Joſephus ſays) the beautiful gate of the Temple of Jeruſalem was made, as is noted on Acts iii. 2. The Corinthians were eminent for their wiſdom, inſomuch that they are ſtiled by Cicero The light of all Greece, and by L. Florus, The glory of Greece, as well as for their riches; for which, according to Strabo, they were always remarkable. For this city was not only moſt advantageouſly ſituate for trade and merchandizes, but full of orators and philoſophers, from whom (the Fathers obſerve) thoſe contentions and falſe doctrines ſprang up; which gave occaſion to that ſarcaſtical reprehenſion of their pride and conceitedneſs, chap. iv. 6, &c. They had alſo a Temple of Venus, to whom, ſaith Strabo, 1000 whores were dedicated; on which account they became infamous even to a proverb for all manner of wantonneſs; which cauſed our Apoſtle to ſpeak ſo particularly to them againſt it. And as it was the place where the Roman proconſul of Achaia had fixed his ſeat; ſo, when converted to the Chriſtian faith, it became the Metropolis, or mother-city of all Achaia. So that the inſcription of this Epiſtle, chap. i. 2. is not to be underſtood as addreſs'd to the Chriſtians in that one city only, but as it contain'd under its juriſdiction thoſe of all Achaia: For theſe having been firſt converted by St. Paul, he therefore directs his Epiſtles to them all, under their eccleſiaſtical governors, or Biſhops, throughout that whole region. As to the time and manner of their converſion, the hiſtory of it may be found, Acts xviii. to which I refer the reader.

V. That the occaſion of St. Paul's writing this Epiſtle to them was taken from certain queries, or queſtions, which had been ſent to him from thence; particularly concerning marriage and virginity, the nature of the reſurrection, &c. as we may gather from chap. vii. 1, &c. and xv. 1, &c. And having a full account of the ſtate of their church, from their meſſengers, Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaius, he return'd this anſwer to them; wherein he enlarges not only upon the points by them inquired of, but upon divers other doctrines, neceſſary for them to be inſtructed in. And therefore we may obſerve,

VI. That the drift of the Apoſtle in this Epiſtle, is, to beat down carnal wiſdom, and affected ſtrains of eloquence, and to ſet up among the Corinthians the powerful preaching of Chriſt crucified; and further to inſtruct them (and in them all Chriſtians) in the doctrines of Chriſtian liberty; of the ſacraments of the old and new law; of the nature and difference of ſpiritual gifts; and of the reſurrection of the dead. In a word, being ſenſible that there were many ſound and ſober Chriſtians, intermix'd among thoſe who were corrupted and irregular, he ſo wiſely tempers his reproofs of the one with the praiſes of the other, as to leave it to every ones own conſcience to make the application of either. And,

VII. That the method here taken may be more clearly underſtood, by analyſing the whole Epiſtle into theſe four principal parts, viz. I. A reproof of divers ſcandals and abuſes crept in among the Corinthians; ſuch as, 1. Their diſſentions and factions, ſchiſms and diviſions, and their partial adherence to ambitious teachers, chap i. ii. iii. iv. 2. Their toleration of inceſt, and practice of fornication, ch. v. 3. Their perplexing one another with vexatious lawſuits; and that too before the heathen judges, chap. vi. 4. Their abuſe of their Chriſtian liberty, chap. viii. and x. and, 5. Their irregularities and diſorders in their religious aſſemblies, chap. xi. II. A Reſolution of doubts propounded to him; ſuch as, 1. Concerning marriage and ſingle life, chap. vii. And, 2. Concerning the nature and condition of glorified bodies, at, and after the reſurrection, chap. xv. III. Directions concerning, 1. Their carriage towards their weak brethren, chap. ix. 2. Their preparation to the holy communion, chap. xi. 23, &c. 3. The uſe of ſpiritual gifts in general; and the exerciſe of the gift of Tongues, and prophecy, in particular, chap. xii. and xiv. And, iv. An exhortation to unity and charity, and a liberal contribution to the poor ſaints at Jeruſalem, chap. xiii. and xvi.

CHAP. I.

After his uſual ſalutation, and thankſgiving, the Apoſtle exhorteth them to unity, and reproveth their diſſenſions. God confuteth the wiſdom of the worldly wiſe, by the preaching of the Goſpel, which they eſteem fooliſhneſs. The prejudices both of Jews and Gentiles, againſt the doctrine of the Croſs. God maketh uſe of mean inſtruments, to propagate the Goſpel, that no man ſhould glory before him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. PAUL, called to be an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, through the will of God, and Soſthenes our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus, called to be ſaints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, both theirs and ours. Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jeſus Chriſt; that in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge: Even as the teſtimony of Chriſt was confirmed in you. So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Who ſhall alſo confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameleſs in the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowſhip of his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Paul called.] Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle's aſſerting his commiſſion for the work of the miniſtry, to be from God: He was "call'd to be an Apoſtle by the will of God:" He did not thruſt himſelf into that high and honourable employment; but was choſen, call'd, and ſent of God. Such as enterprize the ſacred function, without a regular call and commiſſion, may expect a blaſt inſtead of a bleſſing. 2. The double object of St. Paul's ſalutation in this Epiſtle. He firſt ſalutes the church of Corinth in particular; and then all the churches of Chriſt in general; "To all that in every place call upon the name of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord;" Where note, That they were not real Saints, no, nor all viſible Saints, (but "called to be" both) whom he calls the church. Many, ſecretly vile, and ſcandalouſly profane, perſons were found among them; yet the Apoſtle ſalutes them as the Church of God; "To the Church of God, which is at Corinth." Learn hence, That there may be a mixture of prophane and ſcandalous perſons with real Saints in the Church of God here on earth: There may be, I ſay; I mean de facto, there have been, and there will be; not de jure, that there ought to be ſuch a mixture: Yet, if ſo, this doth not unchurch the aſſembly in which they are: They are the diſeaſe of the church, but not its death. Such corruptions and blemiſhes cannot conſiſt with the well-being, but may conſiſt with the being of particular churches. 3. The ſalutation itſelf: "Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt." Where note, 1. A double bleſſing deſired; grace and peace: Grace, of all bleſſings the richeſt, and peace, of all comforts the ſweeteſt. 2. A double ſpring diſcover'd, from whence this double bleſſing flows; God, and Chriſt: God, as the original ſource and fountain of all good in himſelf; and Chriſt, as the donor and diſpenſer of all good to us. 3. The order of the words: Firſt grace, then peace. There can be no peace without grace, and no grace, but there will be peace: There can be no peace but from God; no peace from God, but as a Father; no peace from God, as a Father, but as our Father; and he cannot comfortably be ſaid to be our Father, but through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Learn hence, That all that grace and peace, which believers ſhare in, and are made partakers of, is derived from God the Father, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. (B.) See the notes on Matth. xx. 16. and Rom. i. 1.

Soſthenes, our brother.] That is, one of the ſame Apoſtolical, or Epiſcopal Order. See the notes on Acts xv. 32. and xviii. 17.

The Church of God.] "The Church of God," "The ſanctified in Chriſt," and "The called Saints," ſeem here to be words of the ſame import; denoting ſuch as are called out of the world, and ſeparated from others, through faith in Chriſt, to be a peculiar people to God, as the Jews were before: All Chriſtians being, by virtue of this calling, "a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, a holy nation, and peculiar people," 1 Pet. ii. 9. So that the word Saints, in many places of The Acts, and The Epiſtles, is as large as the word Chriſtians; and ſtands oppoſed, not to the unſound Chriſtians, but to the Heathen world. (W.) See the notes on Acts ix. 13. and Rom. xvi. 5.

In every place.] Hence it appears, that St. Paul's Epiſtles, tho' occaſionally written and directed to particular Churches, were deſign'd for the uſe of all Chriſtians. (Idem)

Call upon the name.] See the notes on John xvi. 23. and Acts ii. 21. and ix. 14.

Both theirs and ours.] All the Greek Interpreters, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, obſerve, that the words "theirs and ours" are to be connected to the word Lord: And ſo the ſenſe is this, The Lord both of me who write, and of you to whom I write (W.)

Grace be unto you, and peace.] 'Tis unadviſedly ſaid by ſome, that this is a wiſh, and not a prayer. The full import of the phraſe is, as St. Peter (2 Pet. i. 2.) and St. Jude (ver. 2.) and Polycarp do cite it, "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt." Now, is not this to deſire for them grace and peace from God the Father, and conſequently to pray for it? Why therefore is it not alſo to deſire the ſame bleſſings from God the Son? Are they not both the givers of grace and peace to the church? Doth not Chriſt know all the neceſſities of his church in this kind? Doth not he, "who ſearcheth the reins and hearts," Rev. ii. 23. know the deſires of his ſervants? And why then ſhould they only wiſh theſe things from I know not whom, and not pray to him who is the giver of grace and peace for them? Eſpecially, when they have St. Paul's example for it, in theſe words, "For this thing I beſought the Lord (Chriſt) thrice; and he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee," 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9. And again, "Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and God even our Father, who hath loved us, and hath given us everlaſting conſolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and ſtabliſh you in every good word and work," 2 Theſſ. ii. 16. (Idem.) See the notes on Rom. i. 7.

I thank my God.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, I am very thankful to God for his grace and favour beſtowed upon you, thro' Jeſus Chriſt, in and by the preaching of the Goſpel; and particularly for the gift of tongues, and other miraculous gifts of the holy Spirit vouchſafed to you, whereby the divinity of the Goſpel (called here "the teſtimony of Chriſt," becauſe it teſtifies of Chriſt) was atteſted and confirmed. He farther tells them, that he was firmly perſuaded that God would "confirm them unto the end," cauſing them to perſevere unblameable in holineſs till the coming of Chriſt to deliver his faithful ſervants, and remarkably to deſtroy his crucifiers; becauſe of the faithfulneſs of God, who having "called them to the fellowſhip of his Son," and to partake of his invaluable benefits, will never leave them, but accompliſh the whole pleaſure of his will in them. Obſerve here, 1. That the Apoſtle, in the third verſe, prayed affectionately for the grace of God to be beſtowed upon the Corinthians; in the fourth verſe, he thanks God abundantly for the grace they had already received: And no man has ſuch ſupplies of grace, but he ſtands in need of farther influences; and there is no ſuch way to attain more grace as to be thankful for what we have already received. 2. To whom the Apoſtle returns his thanks for all that grace the Corinthians had received; even to the God of all grace; "I thank my God, for the grace which is given you:" All grace depends upon God, as to its being and production, as to its exerciſe and operation, as to its growth and augmentation, as to its evidence and manifeſtation, as to its perſeverance and preſervation; he is both the author and finiſher of our faith: Both ſeed, increment, and perfection, the beginnings, increaſings, and finiſhings of grace, are all from God the Father, but by and thro' our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who by his blood purchaſed grace for us, and by his ſpirit produceth it in us. 3. That believers, in the firſt ages of the Chriſtian church, received not only ſanctifying graces, but the miraculous gifts of the holy Spirit, particularly the gift of tongues and miracles. 4. That they obtained theſe gifts by Jeſus Chriſt, and thro' faith in him. 5. That by theſe gifts "the teſtimony of Chriſt was confirmed;" that is, the doctrine of the Goſpel, teſtifying that Jeſus was the true Meſſias, by his being raiſed from the dead. 6. That by theſe gifts, and by this earneſt of the ſpirit, they had encouragement to expect and wait for the approach and coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; ver. 7. "Ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." (B.) See the notes on Rom. i. 8.

Enriched by him in all utterance.] En panti logo. The notion of logos, in this place, is ſomewhat uncertain; both becauſe this, and the (gnoſis) knowledge following, may either be the matter, wherein the Corinthians are ſaid to be enriched, or elſe ſomewhat in the Apoſtles, the means by which they were enriched in Chriſt. If it be taken the firſt way, then it will denote ſpeech or utterance, ability in inſtructing others; and muſt be applied only to them who had ſuch gifts in the church, and not to the whole church of Corinth: And thus it ſeems to be uſed, 2 Cor. viii. 7. "As ye abound in every thing, in faith, and word, and knowledge:" Where, as faith, ſo the other two are gifts and graces in them, ſuch are (ſpoude and agape) diligence and love, that are after mention'd. And the other parts of that verſe (en panti periſſeuete) "ye abound in every thing," agreeing ſo well with en panti eploutisthete, here, ye were enriched in all; 'tis moſt reaſonable to determine, that this ſame is the meaning of en logo, in word or ſpeech, here alſo. But becauſe there is ſome difference betwixt abounding and being made rich, and the latter of them refers peculiarly to the gaining of the riches; and ſo to the means of acquiring them, it is therefore poſſible, that it may there be that which, as a gift, was inherent in them, and ſo be agreeable to the reſt of the graces mention'd there, and yet here be the means by which they were enriched: And if ſo, then it will ſignify the preaching of the word, the doctrine of the Goſpel, as it is firſt preach'd and made known to men who had not before receiv'd it; as when we read of preaching the word, that notes the doctrine of Chriſt, as it was taught by him, or the articles which were to be believ'd of him, his death and reſurrection, &c. This is wont to be ſet in oppoſition to (didaſcalia) doctrine, 1 Tim. v. 17. which is the further inſtructing them who have formerly receiv'd the faith: And accordingly it may be ſo taken here; where 'tis ſet oppoſite to (gnoſis) knowledge, which is the explication and unfolding of the myſteries of religion, and may well be here the "watering of Apollos," which was ſuperadded to the "planting of Paul;" and both of them make up that which follows, ver. 6. "the teſtimony of Chriſt confirmed in you:" The teſtimony of Chriſt, being the goſpel, chap. ii. 1. as 'tis firſt preach'd; as John xxi. 24. where 'tis diſtinguiſh'd from the very writing it, and ſo, 1 John i. 2. but eſpecially Revel. i. 2. And the confirming it, is the farther declaring, and proving, and explaining it; the firſt being pre-requir'd to the baptizing of any; the ſecond uſeful to the fitting them for that impoſition of hands, which we ordinarily call Confirmation. (H.) Eſthius ſays, This ought not to be interpreted of the gift of tongues, becauſe logos in ſcripture never bears that ſenſe. But, 1. It is certain, from ver. 7. that it is (chariſma) a gift: And it is join'd with "faith and knowledge," which are gifts, 2 Cor. viii. 7. and cannot well be referr'd to any other gift vouchſafed then to the church. And, 2. The word gnoſis, relating to prophecy, or the knowledge of myſteries, was uſually attended with the gift of tongues, as Acts xix. 6. And tho' we find not the word logos abſolutely put in this ſenſe: Yet (logos ſophias) "the word of wiſdom," and (logos gnoſeos) "the word of knowledge," are reckon'd among ſpiritual gifts, 1 Cor. xii. 8. All this indeed, with Mr. Le Clerc, paſſes for meer niceties: And he ſays, it is more natural to underſtand, by logos, the knowledge of religion; tho' that, as he confeſſes, is the import of the following word gnoſis: So that, according to this expoſition, the Apoſtle thanks God here, and 2 Cor. viii. 7. commends them, for abounding in the knowledge, and in the knowledge of religion! Beſides, the knowledge of religion cannot be called grace, in the ſenſe given of that phraſe, ver. 4. nor was "the teſtimony of Chriſt confirm'd" to the Corinthians, ver. 6. by that, but by the gifts of the holy Spirit. (W.)

And in all knowledge.] Kai paſe gnoſei. That the word gnoſis here ſignifies the farther explication of the Chriſtian doctrine, may appear, not only by the uſe of it in other places, chap. xii. 8. 2 Pet. i. 5. i. e. being able to explain myſteries; but eſpecially by the circumſtances of the context here, the Goſpel's being "confirm'd in them," ver. 6. and this of gnoſis being ſet down as a chariſma, or ſpecial gift, and the being " made rich in every thing," being all one with being behind, or wanting in no gift. ver. 7. Thus 2 Cor. xi. 6. he prefers his knowledge above his ſpeech, by which he underſtands his knowledge in explaining the myſteries of the ſcripture; which was ſhown in his Epiſtles more than by word of mouth. Thus Anagnoſis, 1 Tim. iv. 13. ſeems to be expounding, not ſimply reading, the Scriptures, to which is join'd " exhortation and doctrine." And the ſame word gnoſis is uſ'd in this Epiſtle, chap. viii. 1. as the gift of explaining myſteries, apt to puff men up: As ſome Hereticks, at that time were ſo exalted with taking upon them to know ſomewhat, that is ſome extraordinary matter, above other men, that they call'd themſelves (Gnoſtikoi) knowing men, from this word gnoſis; and ſo ſet up for explaining the moſt difficult matters: And as ſuch are referr'd to in that chapter, ver. 10, 11. (H.) But we muſt obſerve, that things ſpoken indefinitely of a number of men, are not always to be underſtood univerſally of all that number but only of ſome among them. So the Apoſtle ſays, of the Corinthians, that he " thank'd God on their behalf," that they were " enrich'd in all knowledge:" Yet " ſome of them had not the knowledge of God," chap. xv. 34. And there were many corruptions and abuſes among them. (Lukin)

The teſtimony of Chriſt was confirmed.] The word Bebaioun, to confirm, or eſtabliſh, applied to (Martyrion) teſtimony, may perhaps refer literally to the forenſick cuſtoms among the Jews; where there were three parts of their judicial proceſs; 1. The entring of the cauſe; 2. The eſtabliſhment of the matter in diſpute; 3. The ſearching into the cauſe. The ſecond of theſe may be here literally render'd (Bebaioſis) confirmation: For it conſiſted in the interpoſing of an oath on one ſide, which is therefore call'd " the end of ſtrife," Heb vi. 16. And that is ſaid to be the Bebaioſis, in that place, for the ſettling or eſtabliſhing the cauſe, in that ſenſe where the Roman law ſays, an oath takes off the judge from that dubiouſneſs which he was in before, one affirming, and the other denying the ſame thing. By analogy to this, the preaching of the Goſpel by the Apoſtles, being call'd a teſtimony or witneſs, viz. that which they gave (as eye witneſſes) to the truth of the Goſpel, this teſtimony may be ſaid to be eſtabliſh'd or confirm'd, when, beſides the firſt preaching of it, more light, knowledge and evidence had been afforded, to remove all ignorance or doubt from mens minds. And ſo the meaning of the phraſe here will be clearly this, That the teſtimony which we have given of Chriſt has by ſufficient probation, ſince we firſt preach'd the Goſpel, been made good among you, to incline you to conſent to the truth of it. (H.)

Come behind in no gift.] See the notes on chap. xii. 8.

Who ſhall alſo confirm you.] Theſe words are, by the ancients, thus interpreted, viz. who in that day of the Lord Jeſus, which ye expect, will confirm you for ever blameleſs. And this is ſuitable to his prayer, that Chriſtians may be unblameable in the day of the Lord, Phil. i. 9, 10. For, ſay they, " God is faithful," who promis'd to them that obey the Goſpel hyiotheſian, the adoption, that is, " the redemption of the body," Rom. viii 23. Or that they ſhall be partakers of that kingdom of glory to which he has call'd them, 1 Theſſ. ii. 12. Others thus: He will do all that is requiſite on his part, to render you unblameable to the end, ſo that ye ſhall not fail of it thro' any want of divine grace neceſſary to that end, or any unfaithfulneſs on God's part to his promiſe, who has already reconciled you to himſelf by the death of Chriſt, " to preſent you holy and unblameable, and unreproveable in his ſight, if ye continue in the faith, grounded and ſettled, and be not moved away from the hope of the Goſpel, Col. i. 21, &c. That the Apoſtle does not, here, ſpeak of any promiſe of perſeverance made to the elect only among the Corinthians, is evident, 1. Becauſe he ſpeaks plainly to the whole body of the church, " to the church of God which is at Corinth, to all that call upon the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." 2. He ſpeaks not only of their being preſerv'd from falling away finally, but of their being preſerv'd unblameable, whereas it is certain, the elect are not ſo preſerv'd. (W.) This Scripture ſets us a precedent, for a moſt comfortable inference to be drawn from the paſt liberality of God to us, who begins with grace, that he may end with glory. But then, this muſt be ſo underſtood, as to imply all thoſe conditions, which the new covenant hath interpoſed, to qualify us for additions of ſpiritual ſtrength here, and for a reward, upon the improvement of it, hereafter. We may ſafely promiſe ourſelves, that God will not be wanting on his part: But we have no warrant to preſume upon being either confirm'd here, or found blameleſs at the day of Chriſt, if there be no care taken, not to be wanting on our part. Something is expected from every one: More from each, as each has receiv'd more abilities: And the conſequence of our neglect to imploy theſe, to the profit of the public, and the honour of our maſter, is, not to be confirmed, but deſerted and confounded; the talent, inſtead of being doubled, ſhall be taken quite away, and the ſlothful " unprofitable ſervant caſt into outer darkneſs," Matth. xxv. 30. All this is much more juſt in God, than any parable can poſſibly repreſent; becauſe not only our talents, but our power to imploy them rightly, are his gift: And both are like ſeed ſown in the ground; which, only provided we take good heed to cultivate it diligently, will bleſs us with a large increaſe. And when this care is taken, tho' the beſt we do, or can do, will be allay'd with infirmities and ſins; yet we ſhall be blameleſs, i. e. ſuch as, according to the allowances of the Goſpel, no reproach or fault ſhall be charg'd upon, " in the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 6. Acts xxiv. 16. and Rom. xvi. 25.

God is faithful.] The faithfulneſs of God in his promiſes, is the fountain of the calling of the Saints, and the foundation of all our hopes. Let us but be ſo faithful, as to continue in the fellowſhip of the body, ſpirit, life, virtues, and ſufferings of Jeſus Chriſt; and then God will certainly be faithful, to receive us with him into his own boſom, and admit us to the fellowſhip and participation of his glory. (Q.) See the notes on chap. x. 13. and John xiv. 23.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Now I beſeech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye all ſpeak the ſame thing, and that there be no diviſions among you; but that ye be perfectly joyned together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment. For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the houſe of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I ſay, that every one of you ſaith, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Chriſt. Is Chriſt divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? I thank God, that I baptized none of you, but Criſpus and Gaius: Leſt any ſhould ſay, that I had baptized in mine own name. And I baptized alſo the houſhold of Stephanas: Beſides, I know not whether I baptized any other.

Now, I beſeech you.] Theſe words are a pathetical exhortation to a moſt important duty. In which obſerve, 1. The duty itſelf directed and exhorted to; and that is, unity and unanimity amongſt Chriſtians. This is threefold, the unity of the head, and of the heart, and of the tongue: The unity of the head, is an unity in judgment and opinion; the unity of the heart is an unity in love and affection; and the unity of the tongue is an unity in language and expreſſion, when we " all ſpeak the ſame things, and with one mouth as well as with one mind glorify God." 2. The powerful arguments here enforcing this duty. The firſt is an apoſtolical obſecration; " I beſeech you:" He that had authority to command has the meekneſs to entreat, and in a ſupplicatory way to beſeech. The ſecond is, the nearneſs of the relation, " I beſeech you, brethren;" an endearing expreſſion, and full of affection: They were brethren by place of nature, and brethren by faith and profeſſion; owning the ſame God, profeſſing the ſame religion, animated by the ſame ſpirit, encouraged by the ſame promiſes, partakers of the ſame hope, and heirs of the ſame glory. The third argument is, the name he beſeeches in; and that is Chriſt's, " I beſeech you by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt;" that is, I adjure you for his ſake, and by his authority, by all that he has done, ſuffered and purchaſed for you. If ye have any reverence for his authority, as a ſovereign; if ye have any regard for his undertaking, as a Saviour, look " that there be no diviſions amongſt you, but that ye be perfectly joined together, in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment." 3. That ſo exceedingly was the Apoſtle's heart ſet upon this duty, that in both his Epiſtles to the Corinthians he preſſes them very earneſtly to the love and practice of it; here in his firſt Epiſtle and firſt chapter, and in his ſecond Epiſtle and laſt chapter, " be of one mind, live in peace," &c. From whence note, That the Apoſtle makes this exhortation to unity among Chriſtians the Alpha of his firſt Epiſtle, and the Omega of his laſt: 'Tis the firſt duty which he commends to their conſideration in the former Epiſtle, and the laſt which he recommends to their care and practice in the latter Epiſtle; intimating thereby unto us, that this unity in judgment and affection is the firſt and laſt thing to be reſpected among Chriſtians, as being both the beginning and perfection of Chriſtianity. (B.) See the notes on Jo. xvii. 11. and Rom. xvi. 5.

No diviſions among you.] Schiſmata, ſchiſms, that is church diviſions, which, if they be in doctrine, are properly hereſies; if in practice, ſchiſms, which may be without ſeparation, or with it. The former are ſects and factions; the latter more properly ſchiſm: Which conſiſts in an unwarrantable ſeparating, and withdrawing from church communion; whether from the whole church, or from one particular part of it. This may be carried on in a private way, by a ſimple withdrawing, and ſeceſſion; or in an open public manner, by ſetting up a church againſt a church. The former is a negative, the latter is a poſitive ſchiſm. (Brindſly.)

Be perfectly joined together.] This can be no farther the matter of an exhortation, than it is in our power to obey it: And ſince it is not in any man's power to change his ſettled judgment, or to think otherwiſe upon our entreaty, becauſe our exhortation gives no conviction to the underſtanding, it follows, that this exhortation muſt only be, to do what was in the power of the Corinthians, viz. 1. To prevail with them to lay aſide their ſtrife, envy and diviſion, 1 Cor. iii. 3. And the ſad conſequences of them, debate, wrath, backbiting, whiſpering, tumult, ſwelling, 2 Cor. xii. 20. And to this the reaſon of this exhortation leads. "Be of one mind, or judgment, for I hear there be contentions among you," ver. 11. And, 2. To engage them unanimouſly to own the doctrine they had receiv'd, and he had preach'd to them, 1 Cor. xv. 1. which, if they were ſo minded, might eaſily be done, ſince they ſo lately had receiv'd it, the heads of it were ſo few, ver. 3. And it was ſo eaſy for them to conſult the Apoſtle, in any doubts about the ſenſe of what he had deliver'd. (W.) The word katartizo ſignifies, 1. To reſtore, and ſet things in their proper place, as Gal. vi. 1. The phraſe is borrow'd from ſurgery, from handling tenderly a broken joint; to ſet or reſtore a broken bone to its former place. 2. To be more and more perfected, and eſtabliſh'd in the ſame ſtate to which they were reſtor'd, as here; which is therefore render'd by different authors, fitted, made up, finiſh'd. (Leigh.) See the notes on Jo. x. 16. and Eph. iv. 2, 3.

Hath been declared unto me.] Edelothe, The word (deloo) to declare, ſignifies ſomething more than ſemaino, to ſignify. Thus Cicero makes a difference between them, when he tells Lucretius, that he thought proper, not only to ſignify, but likewiſe to declare to him, how acceptable his letters were to him. The meaning of the Apoſtle's expreſſion here depends upon the weight of the declaration, leſt he ſhould be thought to have taken up his opinion of them upon ſlight information. (Idem.)

There are contentions among you.] Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle declares a reaſon why in the foregoing verſe he preſſed his exhortation to love and unity with ſo much fervor and vehemency; namely, becauſe he had received information, that there were contentions and ſidings, diviſions and parties amongſt them, to the great ſcandal of Chriſtianity, which was ſo newly planted among them. Whence learn, That diviſions and factions do quickly creep into the beſt and pureſt churches: This church of Corinth was a garden newly planted by St. Paul; yet notwithſtanding all his care and perſonal inſpection, theſe ill weeds of diviſion and diſſenſion grew apace; it was not while men ſlept that theſe tares were ſown, but while the officers of the church were both awake and watchful. Obſerve, 2. What was the cauſe of theſe diviſions and diſſenſions that were found among them: It was having mens perſons in admiration, factiouſly crying up one miniſter above another, naming themſelves the followers of this and that man, ſetting up teachers one againſt another, and even Chriſt againſt his miniſters. Learn hence, That altho' it is the people's duty to have a great and high eſteem of the miniſters of Chriſt, yet muſt not their reſpect degenerate into a ſinful admiration of their perſons: For the factious affecting of one miniſter above another, is both ſinful and dangerous, it occaſions enmity and diſſenſion among miniſters themſelves, and their people alſo, when the gifts and abilities of one are cried up in contempt of others. Obſerve, 3. That theſe Corinthians did not only ſinfully admire the perſons of their teachers, but alſo ſet up their teachers, as heads of ſeveral parties; ſinfully reſting upon them, and glorying in them. Learn thence, That it is not barely unlawful, but very dangerous and exceeding ſinful, for perſons to call themſelves by the name of any men, tho' never ſo eminent, ſo as to build or pin their faith upon them: We are not believers in Paul or Peter, but in Chriſt; there is but one head of the church, and that is Chriſt, and he is not divided: His diſciples we are in whoſe name we are baptized; and that is not in the name of any man, but in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: To build therefore our faith upon any man is to make him our Saviour, and to put him in Chriſt's room and place. (B.) The Corinthians, as if, they had learn'd a new religion from every teacher, began to diſtinguiſh themſelves into ſects and parties, and made uſe of their teachers names as the heads of their ſeveral ſects. One ſaid I am of Paul, another, I am of Apollos, &c. As if Chriſt had been divided, or elſe were to ſtand with the reſt, as the name of a diſtinct religion. Not that the Apoſtles gave any occaſion to this diviſion, or encourag'd the Corinthians in their fond humour of preferring one before another: But from the diverſity of their own minds and opinions this diverſity of names flow'd. When the unlearned, wreſting the ſenſe of what they had heard preach'd, would impoſe that ſenſe upon others, who thinking that, as perhaps it was, contrary to what they had been taught by another Apoſtle, they ſet up the one in oppoſition to the other. Thus congregation cenſur'd congregation, and quoted St. Paul againſt St. Peter, Apollos againſt both, and Chriſt againſt all three. This, by a natural tranſition, grew to diſagreement in ſociety and common life. They were no longer neighbours to one another, and he was moſt acceptable to his party, who ſhew'd himſelf moſt irreconcileable to thoſe of another. To reconcile theſe differences, and to make the reconciliation firm and laſting, St. Paul preſcribes a ſeveral remedy for every different branch of the evil. 1. To remove the diſcord ariſen among them, by calling themſelves by different names, he perſuades them to unity of ſpeech. "I beſeech you, brethren, that ye all ſpeak the ſame things." 2. To remove their difference in communion, he perſuades them to unity in their aſſembling together in one place, "That there be no diviſions among you," that is, that there be no ſeparate conventicles or places of worſhip. 3. To remove the root and ſpring of their diviſions, he exhorts them to unity in mind and judgment; "that ye be perfectly join'd together in the ſame mind and in the ſame judgment." And that he might the more effectually prevail with them in all theſe, he lays aſide, for awhile, the authority of an Apoſtle, and mingles requeſt and conjuration, with exhortation and advice: He acts the part of the Apoſtle in the form of a petitioner, "I beſeech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." (Mayne) This diverſity of chief paſtors in the church of Corinth, ſeems to have proceeded from the different ſort of Chriſtians of which that church was compos'd. One part of the Gentile believers preferr'd St. Paul, as their ſpiritual father, becauſe, in Chriſt Jeſus, he had begotten them through the Goſpel, 1 Cor. iv. 15. Others of them preferr'd Apollos, as being an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, Acts xviii. 24. But the Jewiſh Chriſtians adher'd to St. Peter, as the Apoſtle of the circumciſion. Nor does the Apoſtle here make uſe of theſe names fictitiouſly, under that vail to expoſe the diviſions in the church of Corinth; for it appears that they really were divided upon their account. And therefore he thanks God that he had baptiz'd ſo few of them, leſt they ſhould have occaſion to ſay he had baptiz'd in his own name, and ſo made diſciples to himſelf. Again he ſays, "Let no man glory in men, for all are yours, whether Paul or Apollos, or Cephas," chap. iii. 21, 22. (G. and W.)

I am of Paul.] See the notes on chap. iii. 6. and John i. 42. Acts xviii. 24. and Gal. ii. 7, 8.

And I of Chriſt.] Epiphanius obſerves of the Ebionites, that they pleaded for the circumciſion of the Gentile converts from the example of Chriſt who was circumcis'd; and the diſciple muſt be like his maſter: And ſo the import of the words may be, Others ſay, I am for the circumciſing of the Gentiles, that they may be like Chriſt. (W.)

Is Chriſt divided?] The chief reaſon why ſchiſms ought to be avoided is, becauſe Chriſt ſeems to be divided and torn in pieces by them; who being but one, cannot be the head of two diſtinct diſagreeing bodies. (Beza and Aſſ.) See the notes on Jo. xvii. 21.

Was Paul crucified for you?] Another reaſon for avoiding diviſions is, becauſe men cannot, without injury to God, depend upon men as their Saviours, which they do when they allow what they ſay even for the ſake of their perſons: As theſe Corinthians receiv'd the ſame Goſpel as utter'd by one man, and rejected it when deliver'd by another; calling their factions by the name of their teachers. St. Paul here ſets down his own name to ſhew, that he pleaded not his own cauſe. (Idem)

Were ye baptiz'd in the name of Paul?] The third reaſon is taken from the form and end of baptiſm, wherein we make over ourſelves, and give up our names to Chriſt, together with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt. Therefore, altho' a man do not fall from the doctrine of Chriſt, yet if he give himſelf up to ſome certain teachers, and deſpiſe others, he forſakes Chriſt; for if he held Chriſt only for his maſter, he would hear his doctrine by whomſoever it were preach'd. (Idem)

Criſpus and Gaius.] See the notes on Acts xviii. 8. and Rom. xvi. 22.

The houſhold of Stephanas.] See the notes on Acts xvi. 33.

I know not whether I baptized any other.] In order to aſſert the inſpiration and authority of the New Teſtament, it is not needful to ſuppoſe, that the Apoſtles were continually under the inſpiration of the holy Spirit, or that they were inſpir'd to write every word and ſyllable in it; for the contrary is evident. It is ſufficient to ſuppoſe that they were inſpir'd to write and teach all ſuch matters and truths as were neceſſary to the ſalvation of mankind: That they were ſo aſſiſted by the Spirit in preaching and writing, as to be preſerv'd from error and corruption. That this was the caſe, may be inferr'd from what the Apoſtle here ſays concerning the perſons he had baptiz'd: As firſt, that he baptiz'd none but Criſpus and Gaius. Then, upon recollection, he ſays, he baptiz'd the houſhold of Stephanas: Beſides, ſays he, I know not whether I baptized any other. Had the Apoſtle, in writing this, been under the immediate inſpiration of the Holy Spirit, ſo as to have the very words dictated to him, he, probably, would have expreſs'd himſelf more abſolutely, and not ſo doubtfully as he does. It is, moreover obſervable, that in the vii chap. of this Epiſtle, ver. 15. he diſtinguiſhes between what he receiv'd of the Lord, and what he only gave his own judgment about, as any other wiſe and experienc'd man might have done. (Fox)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. For Chriſt ſent me not to baptize, but to preach the Goſpel: Not with wiſdom of words, leſt the croſs of Chriſt ſhould be made of none effect. For the preaching of the croſs is to them that periſh, fooliſhneſs: But unto us which are ſaved, it is the power of God. For it is written, I will deſtroy the wiſdom of the wiſe, and will bring to nothing the underſtanding of the prudent. Where is the wiſe? where is the ſcribe? where is the diſputer of this world? hath not God made fooliſh the wiſdom of this world? For after that, in the wiſdom of God, the world by wiſdom knew not God, it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe. For the Jews require a ſign, and the Greeks ſeek after wiſdom: But we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs, But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt, the power of God, and the wiſdom of God. Becauſe the fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than men; and the weakneſs of God is ſtronger than men. For ye ſee your calling, brethren, how that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. But God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, to confound the wiſe; and God hath choſen the weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty; and baſe things of the world, and things which are deſpiſed, hath God choſen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: That no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence. But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us wiſdom and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption: That according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

Not to baptize, but to preach.] In theſe words, he takes away an objection that might have been made againſt him, for not baptizing many among the Corinthians; the reaſon of which was not out of any contempt of baptiſm, or ſlighting the adminiſtration of it, but becauſe he was chiefly occupied in delivering the doctrine to them, committing ſuch as he converted, to other perſons, duly authoriz'd, to be baptiz'd. (Beza and Aſſ.) Here the Apoſtle ſpeaks comparatively, as if he had ſaid, I was not ſent ſo much to baptize the converts, as to make them ſo. For altho' baptizing was undoubtedly within his commiſſion, yet it was not his principal buſineſs. It is neither wiſe nor ſafe to cry up one ordinance of God above another, but to have them all in eſtimation, and none more than the preaching the Goſpel. (B. and Fox) Here the Apoſtle refers to the commiſſion he receiv'd from Chriſt's own mouth at his firſt converſion, where he is expreſly ſent to preach the Goſpel without any mention made of baptizing, Acts xxii. 21. Nor was it needful, after the general commiſſion given to the Apoſtles, Matth. xxviii. 19. To baptize was not his chief work, becauſe that was eaſy to be perform'd by any lawful miniſter; but to preach the Goſpel requir'd a divine revelation, and great aſſiſtance of the power of God. Hence St. Peter himſelf preach'd to Cornelius and his friends, but employ'd others to baptize them. (W.) See the notes on Acts x. 48. and Rom. x. 14, &c.

Not with wiſdom of words.] The manner after which Chriſt ſent St. Paul to preach the Goſpel was, not by attracting men to his doctrine by the power of human eloquence, leſt the doctrine of Chriſt ſhould be ſuſpected by a pompous way of preaching. Plain truths, without art and varniſh, may be convey'd with more warmth and vigour to the conſcience, than by all the charms of human eloquence from the moſt fluent tongue. The way and manner of St. Paul's preaching was grave and ſerious, pious and ardent, pious and profitable; with brevity without obſcurity, gravity without affectation, eloquence without ornament; ſolidly inſtructing men in the great and neceſſary duties of the Goſpel, and furniſhing them with arguments for a good life, and this in ſuch a plain familiar manner, that the ſucceſs of his preaching plainly appear'd to be from God, and not from men. (B.) The Goſpel, both for the matter and manner of it, was oppoſite to worldly wiſdom. As to the matter of it, it was the doctrine of the croſs, the wonderful humility and ignominious ſufferings of the Son of God, which was a ſtumbling block to the Jews, and fooliſhneſs to the Greeks. And as to the manner of it, it was oppoſite to worldly wiſdom, as being void of enticing expreſſions, not perſuading men by curious language, and ſtudied rules of art; but by the inward dictates and demonſtration of the Spirit; the power of God, being more manifeſt in the greater ſimplicity and weakneſs of the means by which Faith was eſtabliſh'd. (Fell) See the notes on Rom. xvi. 18.

For the preaching of the croſs.] Here obſerve, 1. The preaching of the Goſpel is expreſs'd by the Apoſtle by the phraſe of the croſs, becauſe the foundation of Chriſtianity is the doctrine of Chriſt's ſatisfaction, and as ſuch repreſented as the object of our faith, hope, and truth. 2. The low eſteem which the philoſophers and wiſe men among the heathen had of the doctrine of the croſs; they thought it fooliſhneſs: And that, 1 Becauſe of the ſubject of it, viz. A crucify'd Saviour; God, being made man; bleſſing being made ſubject to a curſe; which are all contradictions to carnal reaſon; and therefore was made a jeſt of by thoſe mighty men of reaſon. 2. It was fooliſhneſs to the men of the world for the manner in which it was preach'd; viz. The barely propounding ſome doctrines, and requiring aſſent to them from the evidence of the things themſelves, which (altho' not contrary to reaſon, yet) above the comprehenſion of the greateſt philoſophers; and this aſſent was requir'd from the authority of God's revelation, which the wiſe men would not own, without ſeeing ſuch demonſtration for them, as they us'd to give for their philoſophy. Obſerve, 3. The power and efficacy of the Goſpel to believers: "To them that are ſav'd, the power of God;" i. e. the powerful inſtrument in God's hand, of ſalvation to thoſe who embrace the Goſpel, however it may be deſpis'd by thoſe who think themſelves wiſe. (B.) See the notes on John iii. 18. Acts xvii. 18. and Rom. i. 16.

Will bring to nothing.] Atheteſo. This word atheteo is frequently uſed among the Greek interpreters; yet ſo, as not always to anſwer to the ſame Hebrew word. Thus, Exod. xxi. 8. and Judg. ix. 23. it is uſed for a Hebrew word, which ſignifies prevarication, join'd with the injury and diſgrace of ſome body; as in the caſe of Abimelech, and the Hebrew captive maid, Deut. xxi. 14. Afterwards, 1 Sam. ii. 17. it is uſed, concerning the ſons of Eli, anſwerable to an Hebrew word, which ſignifieth ſuch a contempt as raiſeth abhorrence. Again, 1 Kings viii. 50. it ſignifies ſuch a defection, or rebellion, as ſeditious people are charg'd with: And ſo 'tis alſo uſed, 2 Kings i. 1. iii. 7. and viii. 20. where it anſwers to a Hebrew word which importeth an open caſting off and renunciation of all authority, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13. In ſhort, this word ſignifieth, 1. To deſpiſe; as Hebr. x. 28. 2. To reject, as John xii. 48. And, 3. To diſanul, or abrogate, as Gal. iii. 15. It is a general word, uſed to note the utter undoing of any thing that is eſtabliſhed. (Leigh.)

Where is the wiſe?] Obſerve here, how the Apoſtle, in his turn, ridicules the pride and folly of thoſe reputed wiſe men, who altho' they excell'd in philoſophy, deſpis'd evangelical truths: "Where is the wiſe? where is the Scribe?" &c. That is, let thoſe boaſters of learning and wiſdom come forth, and compare their wiſdom with ours, which they call folly. Can they ſhew ſo many Proſelytes to their doctrine with all their learning and wiſdom, as we can, with our fooliſhneſs, even the preaching of the croſs? (B.) By the wiſe here the Apoſtle ſeems to underſtand the heathen philoſophers, not the doctors of the Jews, as appears from the 21ſt verſe, "The world thro' wiſdom knew not God;" which is true only of the Gentile world, but not of the Jews: And ſo the word wiſe, Rom. i. 14. is applied to the Greeks. (G. and W.) But ſee more at large the note here following.

Where is the diſputer?] What is the meaning of ſyzetetes in this place, is not eaſy to determine, becauſe, as the word itſelf, ſo the adjunct, aionos toutou, is very capable of a double notion: For if aionos toutou be render'd, "of this world," then it will ſeem to ſignify the heathen world; and ſo ſophos and grammateus, and ſyzetetes all be interpreted accordingly; ſophos, the wiſe moraliſt, as the ſeven wiſe men of Greece, and Socrates after, who for his moral learning, was by the oracle proclaimed The wiſeſt man in the world; and grammateus, the learned philologer, literator, as Tertullian renders it; and ſyzetetes, the ſearcher, or indagator, into the nature of things, which the Hebrews call this world, the philoſopher, or natural magician. And ſo the next words would incline one to underſtand the place, "the wiſdom of the world," and "the world which by wiſdom knew not God," ver. 21 looking moſt directly upon the heathen philoſophers, who are by Baruch deſcribed, in theſe words, chap iii. 23. "They that ſeek out, (or ſearch) wiſdom on the earth." But then, if aionos toutou be render'd, of this age, then it may more probably refer to the Jews; as archontes tou aionos toutou, chap. ii. 6. muſt ſignify the chief of the Jews of that age, which crucified Chriſt, ver. 8. that is, cauſed him to be crucified, and there is mention of thoſe, here, ver. 22, and 23. And then ſophos may belong to the Jew, and denote their naturaliſts, that undertook to know every work of the creation: And ſo likewiſe, grammateus will belong to the Jew, and ſignify him that is ſkill'd in their laws, and who interpreted them to the people according to the literal ſenſe; their doctors: And then ſyzetetes will have a peculiar notion among them alſo. For it was the cuſtom of the Jews, for many of the learned among them to ſit in the ſynagogue, and to ſpeak all of them, by way of diſcuſſion, or debate to the ſame matter, (as to find out the true ſenſe of a piece of Scripture;) and to that cuſtom, 1 Cor. xiv. 29. ſeems to refer, "Let the prophets ſpeak, two or three," &c. Whence it is, that this ſynagogue, where they did this, is called the houſe of ſearching, or inquiſition: And to that cuſtom perhaps refers that which is ſaid of Chriſt, Luke ii. 46. that "in the midſt of the doctors he heard and asked queſtians." So he that interprets the Scripture myſtically and allegorically is called The maſter of inquiry, or myſtical diſquiſition; and abſolutely A ſearcher, or inquirer; that is literally ſyzetetes, and that myſtical or allegorical ſenſe The way of inquiry, and ſyzeteſis; and (inquiſitio Pſalmorum) the ſearching of the Pſalms, according to Elias Levita. And then the ſyzetetai aionos toutou will be the Jewiſh doctors, who among themſelves inquired into the truth of Scriptures, which Chriſt ſeems to call "ſearching the Scriptures," Joh. v. 39. but found not Chriſt there, as they might have done, that is, believed him not. Thus is the word uſed, Acts vi. 9. where ſeveral men are ſaid to "riſe up diſputing with Stephen;" as the Jewiſh doctors uſe to do one with another about the ſenſe of Scripture; and Acts ix. 29. 'tis ſaid of Paul, that he talked and debated with them, about the ſenſe of Scriptures concerning the Meſſias. This cuſtom of the Jews ſeems to be referred to by this word: But yet, whether the other circumſtances of the place, which refer it rather to the Heathens, may not ſo far prevail, as that it may be fit to pitch upon a middle interpretation of the word, and to apply this cuſtom of the Jews to ſecular inquiries in the heathen ſchools, I ſhall leave to be conſidered; and only add, that the making of this place to agree with that of the prophet, Iſa. xxxiii. 18. ſeems to be a matter of ſome difficulty; the text there looking another way, viz. by way of admiration, how the taxes, that were exacted in the time of the ſiege, were ſo ſuddenly ceaſed. For that is the meaning of, "Where is the grammateus?" that is, he that, even now, kept the book of taxes; for ſo grammateus was the name of them that ſet down the public acts, as alſo the cuſtoms, and taxes, and revenues of the kings: And ſo, where is the weigher? that is, the receiver of money; for ſo they received it by weight: And laſtly, "Where is the numberer of towers?" he that reckons and aſſeſſes the ſeveral houſes of the city, every one according to their bigneſs; which was in order again to the exacting of taxes. From this matter that of this text is diſtant enough; and yet may that be ſo far here accommodated, as to expreſs an admiration here, as it was there, at a ſtrange ſudden change wrought among them, altho' the matter of the change was very different. And yet for the words alſo they thus far agree, that as there was, "Where is the Scribe?" ſo here, in another ſenſe, "Where is the Scribe?" that is, doctor or learned man: There the Scribe to regiſter the taxes, the notary; here the learned man, or doctor of the law: As there the weigher, ſo here, with the change but of a letter, without any of the ſound, the intelligent, or wiſe: And laſtly, as there the number of towers, ſo here the enquirer, diſquiſitor of this world, that ſpeaks his ſenſe among others, by way of debate or diſcuſſion, to find out the truth; as there in the making an aſſeſment they debated the rate or value of every houſe, to proportion it accordingly. And ſuch applications as theſe, by way of accommodating places to very diſtant ſenſes (eſpecially when the words in the Greek tranſlation will bear them, though the Hebrew will not ſo well) is no extraordinary or ſtrange thing in the New Teſtament: That of Chriſt's going with his parents to Nazareth, Matth. ii. 23. "that the ſaying might be fulfilled, He ſhall be called a Nazarite, that is, the title of a branch belongs to him, will appear to any as ſtrange and far off as this. (H.)

For after that, in the wiſdom.] Here are two things to be learnt, 1. That, from the creation, beauty, order and grandeur of the world, and the direction of all things in it to an end, and the fitting them with parts and inſtruments adapted beſt to the obtaining that end, it might be known, that the creator of the world was God alone, and ſo was only to be glorified as God, Rom. i. 19. and elſewhere. And, 2. That the Goſpel was ſent into the world, that they who did not know the true God acceptably by the light of nature, might do it by the light of that revelation, which made ſuch a bright and glorious manifeſtation of the power, wiſdom, juſtice and goodneſs of God, which they whom Satan had not blinded muſt diſcern, 2 Cor. iv. 4. The argument here ſeems to lie thus, The wiſe men, among the Greeks, the Scribe, or interpreter of Scripture among the Jews, are by this diſpenſation convinc'd of folly, and inſufficiency to give men the knowledge of ſaving truth. Epeide gar; for ſince the world, by all its wiſdom, could not obtain the right knowledge of God, he by this diſpenſation hath given this ſaving knowledge to believers: And epeide kai, ſeeing alſo the unbelieving Jews, for confirmation of this doctrine, "require a ſign, and the Greeks ſeek after (humane) wiſdom in it, and we preach a crucified Chriſt," who is, on that account, a ſcandal to thoſe Jews, and in the eſtimation of the unbelieving Greeks is fooliſhneſs; yet is he, and his doctrine, to the believing Greeks, "Chriſt, the wiſdom of God;" they ſeeing in it wiſdom ſufficient to engage them to believe this doctrine; and to the believing Jews, "the power of God;" they being convinc'd of its truth by the ſigns wrought in confirmation of it, and with great reaſon do they ſo eſteem it: For what the unbelieving Greeks deem fooliſhneſs, hath more of ſound reaſon in it, than all the wiſdom of the Greeks, or thoſe who are accounted wiſe men by the Jews have ſhewn; they, who by them are deemed fools, having diſcover'd that wiſdom of God in a myſtery, which they, with all their wiſdom, never knew; and that which they ſtile weakneſs, is attended with ſuch a viſible power of God, as enables it, without humane power or wiſdom, to prevail over all the ſtrength and wiſdom, which Jew or Gentile can oppoſe againſt it. (W.) Thoſe who were converted, were not wrought upon with the wiſdom of words; that is, not by ſuch rhetorical diſcourſes, as the Heathen philoſophers and wiſe men are wont to uſe, in order to gain over people to their opinions; but the Apoſtles made uſe of ſuch arguments as were proper to prove the truth of the religion they preach'd; namely, the ſupernatural gifts beſtow'd at that time on believers, and the public miracles wrought by Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles. (Fox)

The fooliſhneſs of preaching.] Not that it is ſo in itſelf; but becauſe it is reputed ſo to be, by many of the worldly wiſe. (G.) But this wiſe contrivance of God's, which they accounted fooliſhneſs, contributed more to the ſalvation of men, than any methods, tho' invented by the wiſeſt men, could have done. (Fox)

For the Jews require a ſign.] Obſerve here, 1. How both Jews and Gentiles conſpired together, in their contempt and rejection of the Goſpel. "The Jews require a ſign;" that is, beſides all the miracles and reſurrection of Chriſt, the Jews require ſome ſign from Heaven, to prove that Chriſt was ſent from God. So unreaſonable and obſtinate was their infidelity, that all the miracles of our Saviour's life, death, and reſurrection, could not remove it: "And the Greeks ſeek after wiſdom;" that is, they look for profound wiſdom, eminent learning, and deep philoſophy in the Goſpel, and ſcorn it becauſe they find not there what they expected. 2. The Apoſtle's peremptory reſolution to preach Chriſt crucified, tho' he "were to the Jews a Stumbling-block, and to the Greeks fooliſhneſs." But how was Chriſt a ſtumbling block to the Jews? Anſwer, in regard of his poverty and ſufferings; the meanneſs and miſery of his condition in the world: They expected, that their Meſſias ſhould be a victorious prince, one that ſhould reſcue them from their enemies: Inſtead of which they find this Jeſus to be overcome by his enemies; that he had no power to defend himſelf, much leſs to deliver them; that he was deſerted by God, whom he called his Father, forſaken by his followers, whom he ſtiled diſciples, ſcourged with rods, crowned with thorns, ignominiouſly treated, ſhamefully crucified: This was to the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and continues ſo to be. But how was Chriſt to the Greeks fooliſhneſs? Anſwer, The Gentiles deſpiſed the Goſpel of Chriſt; as an abſurd, ridiculous, and ill-contrived fable: For what in appearance could be more unbecoming God, and injurious to his perfections, than to take the frail garment of fleſh, to be torn and trampled upon? They concluded the incarnation impoſſible, that a being infinitely perfect ſhould unite with a nature ſo inferior to itſelf; and the doctrine of our Saviour's death rejected, as an impiety contumelious to God: They could not reconcile ſervitude with ſovereignty, puniſhment with innocence; the loweſt of human miſeries with the higheſt of divine honours; and accordingly they eſteemed it fooliſhneſs to expect eternal life from him that was put to death, and that he ſhould bring them to the higheſt glory, who ſuffered himſelf in the loweſt weakneſs. Thus was the preaching of Chriſt crucified to the generality of the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and to the Greeks fooliſhneſs. But obſerve, 3. It was not thus unto all: There was a number of both, converted and ſaved by the doctrine of the croſs, unto whom "Chriſt was the power of God, and the wiſdom of God." Here note, 1. That Chriſt was "the power of God:" Iſaiah ſtiles him "the mighty God," chap. ix 6. Works of mighty power were performed by him; as the works of creation, Coloſ. i. 16. "By him were all things created in Heaven and in the earth:" The works of providence, Heb. i. 3. "He upholdeth all things by the word of his power:" The work of redemption, Gal. iii. 13. "Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law; being made a curſe for us:" The curſe and wrath of God was a burden that would have broke the back of Angels; none could ſtand under it but Chriſt; and not he neither, as mere man, but as ſupported by the infinite power of his Godhead. Note, 2. Chriſt is "the wiſdom of God" alſo; His divine nature had a fullneſs of infinite and uncreated wiſdom found with it; his human nature had a fullneſs of infuſed and created wiſdom found in it: And the redemption of man by Jeſus Chriſt was a deſign of admirable wiſdom: He that turns his back upon Chriſt, rejects the wiſdom of God, and renders his ruin both dreadful and certain; they muſt periſh eternally by the hand of ſtrict juſtice, who will not be ſaved according to the methods of divine wiſdom, which are to ſave us from Hell by ſaving us from our ſins. 4. The reaſon aſſigned, why the preaching of Chriſt crucified became the power of God unto ſalvation, becauſe "the weakneſs of God is ſtronger than men;" that is, the ordinances and inſtitutions of God, tho' they ſeem weak and fooliſh in the eye of the world, yet are more efficacious and powerful than all the wiſdom of worldly men. Learn hence, That the ordinances and inſtitutions of God, and particularly the preaching of the Goſpel, tho' deſpiſed by the men of the world, yet by the power of God have glorious operations, and produce wonderful effects: "The weakneſs of God is ſtronger than men;" that is, the weakeſt inſtruments which God uſes are ſtronger in their effects than the ſtrongeſt which men can uſe; "And the fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than men;" not that there is either fooliſhneſs or weakneſs in God; but that which men account fooliſhneſs and weakneſs, and deride as ſuch, doth yet overcome all their admired wiſdom and ſtrength: And if the wiſdom of man cannot match the fooliſhneſs of God, how ſhall it vie and contend with the wiſdom of God? No wiſdom or power of man can ſtand before the fooliſhneſs and weakneſs, much leſs before the wiſdom and power of God. "The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than men, and the weakneſs of God is ſtronger than men." (B.) See the notes on Matth. xii. 38. and xvi. 1. and John iv. 48. vi. 66. and Rom. i. 16. And Dean Stanhope's ſermons on this text, at Boyle's lectures.

Ye ſee your calling.] Obſerve here, 1. That ſingular favour which our Apoſtle calls upon the Corinthians to eye and view; namely, their effectual vocation and calling out of Heatheniſm to the profeſſion of Chriſtianity; "ye ſee your calling, brethren." Such as are exalted by God in any kind, ought to call to mind their former meanneſs; but thoſe that are perſuaſively called by God out of a ſtate of nature, ought frequently to obſerve and conſider the worth and weight of that mercy, and the freeneſs of that divine favour; brethren, ſee, and take notice of your calling. 2. That God has in all ages called ſome of all ranks and degrees of men, of the wiſe and great, the rich and noble, to the knowledge of himſelf, and his Son: "Not many wiſe, not many mighty, not many noble, are called;" he doth not ſay not any, but not many, leſt the world ſhould think that Chriſtians were deceived thro' their ſimplicity and weakneſs: One rich Joſeph of Arimathea, one honourable Nicodemus, one Criſpus, a ruler of the ſynagogue; but not many men of might and power. Men of ſtrong reaſon and ſharpneſs of wit are too proud and ſtout, to ſtoop to the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, and the humbling ſelf-denying terms of it: Yet ſome of the wiſe and mighty are called, leſt any thing in man ſhould ſeem too hard for the grace of God; but not many, leſt worth and worthineſs in us ſhould be thought the motive that rules God. Men of greateſt fame and renown in the world have been the fierceſt enemies againſt Chriſt and Chriſtianity: Galen, the chief phyſician; Porphyry, a chief philoſopher; Lucian, a chief orator, with many others, were all profeſſed enemies of the Chriſtian religion. Wherefore obſerve, 3. That altho' God called ſome of the wiſe, rich and noble, amongſt the Jews and Gentiles, to eſpouſe Chriſtianity, yet the far greater number of thoſe which hear his voice and obey his call, are poor and mean, and in the world's eſteem weak and fooliſh, baſe and deſpicable; "God hath choſen fooliſh things to confound the wiſe, and weak things to confound the mighty." This was verified in the choice which God made of the Apoſtles, who firſt planted Chriſtianity in the world; and tho' illiterate fiſhermen, confuted and confounded the wiſeſt among the philoſophers: And alſo in the choice God made of the primitive Chriſtians, who firſt entertained the Goſpel; who were a poor deſpiſed company, James ii. 5. "Hath not God choſen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom?" This choice Chriſt thanks his Father for, Matth. xi. 25. And the wiſdom of God therein deſerves our higheſt Admiration; becauſe hereby, 1. God plainly ſhewed that Chriſtianity needed not worldly props to ſupport it: As it was firſt planted and propagated by weak and contemptible means and inſtruments, ſo is it ſtill upheld and ſupported without human policy or riches: God can out-wit wiſe men by fools, and over-power mighty men by thoſe that are weak; witneſs the Apoſtles and primitive Chriſtians. 2. God, by this choice of the weak and fooliſh, of the baſe and deſpiſed, does pour contempt upon thoſe things which are moſt admired among men; namely, the internal endowments of the mind, ſtrong reaſon, and ſharpneſs of wit; and the external gifts of providence, nobility of birth, riches and honours. Lord! What ſhame and confuſion of face will cover the noble and honourable, the great and mighty, the rich and wealthy, in the coming world, when they ſhall ſee thoſe poor Chriſtians, whom they deſpiſed for their poverty, ſcorned for their meanneſs of parts, as unworthy to come into their preſence, highly exalted in the favour of God, and proclaim'd the heirs of his kingdom! For as here God has more rent, and better paid him (as the great landlord of the world) from many ſmoaky cottages, than from divers great palaces, where perſons wallow in plenty, and forget God; ſo will God own his faithful, tho' deſpiſed ſervants, at the great day, and make it evident to angels and men, that "he accepteth not the perſon of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor;" but every one that here feared him, and wrought righteouſneſs, ſhall be accepted of him, and rewarded by him. (B.)

Not many wiſe.] This ſeems to be ſpoken in a direct oppoſition to that celebrated maxim of the Jews, That prophecy reſides not, but upon a wiſe, a ſtrong, and a rich man. (W.) Or perhaps immediately applied to the Corinthians; among whom it was common for ſome to exalt themſelves before the reſt, on account of their learning; and others on account of their riches. (G.) Since therefore, few ſuch, comparatively ſpeaking, embraced the Goſpel, we are not at a loſs for a reaſon, why ſo few of that condition were made choice of, to be preachers of it to the world; which I take to be the ſenſe in which we are here to underſtand the word called: For people of all conditions and circumſtances, high and low, rich and poor, were called to receive and believe the Goſpel, and to reform and amend their lives that they might be ſaved. (Fox)

Baſe things of the world.] Agene; ignoble: Such whoſe genealogy is not expreſs'd or mention'd. (Leigh) Intimating the mean condition of the Apoſtles, and of many of their converts. (Fell) See the notes on John i. 46.

Things which are not] Things of ſmall eſteem; as if they were not at all. 1 Cor. iii. 5. What is Paul? &c. Thus the nothingneſs of man is decypher'd, as he ſtandeth before God without any worth, merit ſtrength or virtue. (Aſſ.) Or the words may be taken to reſpect ſuch as are of no eſteem in the eyes of men. As the Gentiles were eſteem'd as nothing by the Jews. The Apoſtle has thro' his whole chapter join'd the Gentiles with the Jews, as ver. 20, and 22. and has interwoven them in his diſcourſe, ſhewing that the Goſpel of the croſs was equally rejected by both, as a ſtumbling-block to the one, and fooliſhneſs to the other. And ſo here he ſeems to ſpeak of the Goſpel (preach'd by the Apoſtles in a familiar plain way, and by them deem'd weakneſs, and fooliſhneſs) as confounding the wiſdom and the power of the Greeks, ver. 27. and here, of the Gentile church ſucceeding, and aboliſhing that of the Jews: But more eſpecially theſe words ta me onta, ſeem to refer to the Gentiles, becauſe of the application of it to them, in the common way of ſpeaking among the Jews. For they ſtil'd themſelves, as being the legitimate offspring of Abraham, to be the only noble race of mankind, and all others nothing, ouk ethnos, not a nation. Nothing, and accounted as nothing, Pſal. xxii. 31. Hoſ. i. 10. Iſa. xl. 17. And in this ſenſe, the Apoſtle calls Abraham the Father of the Gentiles before that God who calls all things which are not, as if they were, Rom. iv. 17. And thus St. Clemens Rom. ſpeaking of the Gentiles, ſays he call'd us who were not, and would that of no being we ſhould have a being. Thus are the Gentiles, repreſented by ta me onta; ta agene; ta exouthenemena; things that are not; things baſe, and accounted as nothing. So Origen expounding the calling the Gentiles and rejecting the Jews, and God's provoking the Jews to jealouſy by a people who were not a nation, adds God has choſen the baſe things of the world, and the things which are not, that he might aboliſh the things which were before, that Iſrael, according to the fleſh, might not glory before God. (W.)

That no fleſh ſhould glory.] Here men are denominated from the baſer part of them, the fleſh, to humble their pride. (G.) See the notes on Rom. ii. 17.

Of him are ye.] The Apoſtle had in the preceding verſes acquainted the Corinthians how low and deſpicable their condition was in the world; that they were eſteem'd weak and fooliſh, and therefore were deſpis'd; but as an ample recompence for the meanneſs of their outward condition, he tells them what they are in Chriſt. That Chriſt is made to them wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification and redemption. Obſerve here, 1. An enumeration of the Chriſtian's privileges, receiv'd by virtue of his union with Chriſt, to relieve us againſt ignorance and blindneſs; he is our wiſdom, the fountain of divine illumination: To diſcharge us from the burden of ſin, he is our righteouſneſs, the author of our juſtification; to free us from the pollution and power of ſin, he is our ſanctification, purging us by his ſpirit as well as pardoning us by his blood. And to ſet us at liberty from the ſlavery and bondage of ſin, he is our redemption, from the wrath of God, from the curſe of the law, from the dread of death, temporal and eternal; ſo that Chriſt is all in all to us. 2. Obſerve how Chriſtians come to be inveſted with, and made partakers of theſe glorious privileges, viz of God, he is made ſo to us. This denotes, 1. That Chriſt, with all his benefits is made ours by a ſpecial and effectual application: "He is made unto us." 2. That this application is the work of God: "Of God is made unto us." 3. Obſerve the reaſon here aſſign'd, why Chriſt and all his benefits are ſo made over to Chriſtians, viz. That they may glory in him and not in themſelves. "Let him that glorieth glory in the Lord." In him all fulneſs dwells, and the deſign of it was, that it ſhould be diſpenſed to Chriſtians, according as their wants require, and their faith deſerves. (B)

Made unto us.] As being the author of that evangelical wiſdom, which exceeds the wiſdom of the philoſopher or Scribe, and even above that legal conſtitution, which is call'd the wiſdom of the Jews, Deut. iv. 6. The author of juſtification, as procuring for us that remiſſion of ſins, which the law could not give, Gal. ii. 21. and iii. 21. The author of ſanctification, as procuring for, and working in us, not only an external and relative holineſs like that of the Jews, but true internal holineſs, Eph. iv. 24. by his holy ſpirit. The author of redemption, not from the Egyptian bondage, or Babyloniſh captivity, but from the ſervitude of Satan, and the dominion of ſin and death; and from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, ---- the redemption of the body. Rom. viii. 21, 23. (W.)

CHAP. II.

He declareth, for example, that his preaching, tho' it was in the excellency of ſpeech or human wiſdom, yet abounded in the power of God; and ſo far excelleth the wiſdom of this world, and all humane ſenſe, as that the carnal man cannot underſtand it.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of ſpeech, or of wiſdom, declaring unto you the teſtimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakneſs, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my ſpeech, and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wiſdom, but in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power: That your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God.

And I, brethren.] Our Apoſtle, in the foregoing chapter, ver. 17. having declar'd, how Chriſt ſent him "to preach the Goſpel, not with the wiſdom of words," proceeds here to tell them, that when, purſuant to that commiſſion, he came and preach'd to them at Corinth, he "came not with excellency of ſpeech:" That is, he ſtudied not to gratify their curioſity with rhetorical ſtrains or philoſophical niceties, to pleaſe their wanton wits; but ſolidly to inform their judgments with the great and neceſſary duties of the Goſpel, and to furniſh them with the ſtrongeſt arguments and motives to a good life. This is preaching. But, had he come with human wiſdom, that wou'd have detracted, 1. From the excellency of the Goſpel; which, like the ſun, ſhines out with its own beams: Scripture eloquence is moſt piercing and demonſtrative, and convinceth a man by its own evidence; human wiſdom charms the ear, but this ſtrikes the conſcience. And, 2. From the glory of God; which is more honour'd by the plainneſs and ſimplicity of the Goſpel, than by the luxuriances of wit, or the moſt admired oratory in the world: All human wiſdom muſt be denied, when it comes in competition with, or ſtands in oppoſition to, the doctrine of the Goſpel. (B.) Tho' eloquence may be uſed in the Goſpel; yet the Goſpel never hath its efficacy from it; and many times more without it; God ſhewing more his divine power in human weakneſs. (Fell) But that St. Paul was not wanting in any of the excellencies of ſpeech, whether of grammar, logic, or rhetoric, may appear, not only from his ſeveral incomparable ſermons and ſpeeches, recorded in the Acts, but from divers paſſages of his Epiſtle to the Romans (already remark'd upon) as particularly, chap. viii. 10, &c. Yea, and from the like even in this, and the following Epiſtles; ſome of which ſhall be taken notice of in their order. And this I think the more proper to obſerve here, becauſe from the paſſage now before us, occaſion is taken (among others, by Mr. Fleury, Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. ſect. xlv.) to affirm, that St. Paul neither uſed ſtudied diſcourſes, nor regular ſyllogiſms, and did not tie down the Goſpel to the rules of grammar, or of logic; and that amidſt the affairs which continually took him up, he had not leiſure to chuſe or range his words, &c. See the notes on chap. i. 17. And the preface to the Epiſtle to the Romans.

The teſtimony of God.] Martyrion. This is the reading of Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, and Theophylact; who intimate not in the leaſt, that they knew any copies which read it Myſterion. The teſtimony of the Apoſtles, concerning the Meſſias, or the Son of God, his death, his reſurrection and exaltation to be a prince and Saviour, is called Martyria, "the witneſs of God," 1 John v. 9. becauſe God teſtified to the truth of theſe doctrines by "ſigns and wonders, and divers miracles, and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt," Hebr. ii. 4. (W. and B.) See the notes on chap. i. 6.

I determined not to know.] That is, to act as one who knew nothing of the eloquence and wiſdom of the Greeks, but only to give them the knowledge of a crucified Saviour; which was to them fooliſhneſs, chap. i. 23. (W.) Theſe words muſt not be underſtood abſolutely, but comparatively: Not as if the Apoſtle did abſolutely deſpiſe all other ſtudy and knowledge; much leſs vilify true philoſophy, logic, or oratory: For all knowledge is uſeful to him who knows how to refer it to right ends; and God has made nothing to be known in vain: But all other knowledge without that of Jeſus Chriſt, is inſignificant and ineffectual. Note here, 1. The ſubject matter of St. Paul's ſtudy and preaching. It was "Jeſus Chriſt:" Not Jewiſh traditions, nor the Gentiles philoſophy, but him, "in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge," Col ii. 3. And, 2. The ſpecial relation, in which our Apoſtle choſe to ſtudy and preach Jeſus Chriſt; and that was as crucified; Chriſt above all other ſubjects, and Chriſt crucified, above all other conſiderations; becauſe "Chriſt crucified was to the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and to the Greeks fooliſhneſs:" Human wiſdom deſpiſed the ſufferings of Jeſus Chriſt, but the Apoſtle made them the ſubject of his ſtudy, and the ſcope of his preaching. Learn hence, 1. That as all of Chriſt, ſo more eſpecially his death, in all the myſteries of it, ought to be the principal ſubject of a Chriſtian's ſtudy and knowledge: And, 2. That as there is no doctrine more excellent in itſelf, ſo none more neceſſary to be preach'd than that of "Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified." (B.) See the notes on chap. i. 23. And Dr. Mark Frank's, and Bp. Beveridge's ſermons on this text.

I was with you in weakneſs.] Obſerve here, 1. How the Apoſtle declares, that his perſon was ſuitable to his preaching; both plain, neither pompous; as he himſelf tells us, 2 Cor. x. 10. that "his bodily preſence was weak, and his ſpeech contemptible." Tradition tells us alſo, that St. Paul (as his Latin name ſignifies) was a man of a very little ſtature, his voice ſmall, and wanting that preſence which ſome others had. 2. Some pain, that the Apoſtle was in; fearing leſt the infirmity of his fleſh ſhould render him, as a miniſter, deſpicable in the eyes of any, or the courſe of the Goſpel be obſtructed by his bodily infirmities; and for this was he with them "in fear, and much trembling." Nothing doth ſo much affect and afflict the miniſters of Chriſt, as an apprehenſion and fear, leſt any thing in and from themſelves ſhould obſtruct the ſucceſs of the Goſpel which they preach. It is ſad, when our people take occaſion, either from our poverty, or mean appearance, or from any natural imperfections found in us, to deſpiſe our meſſage: But much ſadder, when ſuch moral blemiſhes are found with us, as do render us the occaſion of our own contempt, and the cauſe of our miniſtry being unſucceſsful. (B.) See the notes on 2 Cor. x. 10.

My ſpeech, and my preaching.] Here our Apoſtle goes on, declaring after what manner he did, and did not, preach the Goſpel of Chriſt to the Corinthians. Note, 1. How he did not preach unto them: He tells us, that his "preaching was not with enticing words of man's wiſdom;" that is, not garniſhed with human eloquence; it did not conſiſt in rhetorical proofs, was not accompanied with the witty inſinuations of artificial learning, which pleaſes the ear, but affects not the heart: Therefore the Apoſtles did not, like rhetoricians and orators, poliſh their diſcourſes with an affected curioſity and exactneſs of language, but altho' they come in plainneſs, yet not in rudeneſs of ſpeech: Our Apoſtle's preaching at Corinth was grave and ſerious, pious and ardent, plain and profitable: With what brevity, without darkneſs? With what gravity without affectation? With what natural eloquence, without affected ornament, were St. Paul's diſcourſes? A miniſter's words ought not to be inflantia, but inflammantia; not high-ſwelling, but heart-inflaming words. 2. How the Apoſtle did preach unto the Corinthians, namely, "in the demonſtration of the ſpirit, and of power;" that is, the doctrine which he preached was accompanied with, and confirmed by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, to convince them that Jeſus was riſen from the dead, and was made Lord of all: whom therefore they ought to believe and obey: He did not go about to bewitch men with eloquence, nor to entangle their minds by ſubtle reaſonings; but he offer'd to men a ſenſible proof and demonſtration of the truth of what he deliver'd in thoſe ſtrange and miraculous operations, to which he was enabled by the Holy Ghoſt. This "demonſtration of the Spirit," accompanying the preaching of the word, we are not now to expect; but the miniſtry of the word is ſtill attended with a divine power of the ſpirit, enlightning the underſtanding, and perſuading the conſcience; which may be called a "demonſtration of the ſpirit," becauſe the evidence of truth is no longer diſputed or contradicted, but the underſtanding aſſents to the word as true, and the will embraces it as good. 3. The reaſon aſſigned by the Apoſtle, why he preached the Goſpel in and after this plain and inartificial manner; namely, "That their faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God;" that is, that your faith or belief of the Goſpel ſhould not ſeem to be obtained by human wiſdom and eloquence, but be aſcribed to a divine power, influencing ſuch weak means as my plain preaching was among you. It is the praiſe of omnipotency to work by improbabilities: God delights to do great things by weak and unlikely means; knowing that the weakneſs of the inſtrument redounds to the greater honour of himſelf, the principal agent. Human faith is an aſſent to any thing credible, as credible upon the fallible teſtimony of the man it is founded upon, and reſolved into the authority of the ſpeaker: But divine faith is an aſſent to any thing credible, as credible upon the infallible teſtimony of God, and is grounded on, and reſolved into, the evidence of divine revelation. Upon this foot ſtood the Corinthians faith; "not in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God." (B.) That (pneuma ki dunamis) ſpirit and power may here ſignify the ſame thing (as 'tis ordinary for two words or phraſes to be conjoin'd, the one only to explain the other) may ſeem probable from the next verſe; where one only of them is mention'd, (dunamis Theou) "the power of God." But there is no neceſſity that we ſhould ſo interpret it, becauſe "the power of God," in the fifth verſe, being ſet oppoſite to "the wiſdom of men" (that is, the human ways of perſuaſion or eloquence) muſt ſignify God's powerful ways of perſuading the belief of the Goſpel, and ſignifying ſo, will contain under it the ſpirit and power with the ſeveral notions that may well belong to them: As firſt, taking the ſpirit for the prophecies of the old Bible, inſpired by the ſpirit of God, and power for the miracles done by Chriſt. Thus hath Origen expreſs'd the meaning of them; "The demonſtration of the ſpirit;" that is, ſaith he, the prophecies which were ſufficient to give the reader aſſurance of the truth of the things that belong to Chriſt: "And of power;" that is, the miraculous ſtupendous actions, of which the footſteps yet remain (Cont. Celſ. p. 5.) But, beſide this notion of the ſpirit, ſome others it is very capable of: As 1. That it ſignifies the deſcent of the ſpirit of God on Chriſt, joined with that voice from Heaven, Matth. iii. 17. "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed;" and after, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." This may here fitly be called "the demonſtration of the ſpirit;" an evidence afforded by God, immediately from Heaven, of the truth of the Goſpel; which being joined with the power of Chriſt, both in reſpect of his doctrine and his miracles, were two heads moſt fit to be inſiſted on by St. Paul, for the confirming the truth of the Goſpel. But it may yet farther be applied, not to Chriſt perſonally, but to the Apoſtles after him: And then the ſpirit will be the deſcent of the ſpirit upon them, and by their impoſition of hands, the Holy Ghoſt's coming down upon others alſo, Acts viii. 18. And this, together with their power, doing miracles, may well be their demonſtration of the truth of the Goſpel, and be the thing that is meant here. (H.) Only it muſt be noted, againſt Mr. Le Clerc, That neither the word (pneuma) ſpirit is to be reſtrain'd to the gift of tongues, but comprehends all the internal gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; nor muſt the word (dunamis) power, be reſtrain'd to healing diſeaſes, but comprehend all the external gifts ſhew'd upon others; as caſting out devils, raiſing the dead, &c. (W.) See the notes on Acts xix. 11.

That your faith ſhould not ſtand.] He yieldeth here a reaſon, why he conceal'd all art and eloquence, and uſed ſuch plainneſs of ſpeech in his preaching, viz. that it was for their great profit: Not only that they might better underſtand him, and more fully comprehend the myſteries he taught; but that they might thereby know manifeſtly, that the Goſpel was from Heaven. Therefore he privily rebuketh them; becauſe, in ſeeking vain oſtentation, and ſhew, of human wiſdom and eloquence, they willingly depriv'd themſelves of the greateſt help of their faith, the plain evidence of the ſpirit. (Beza, and Aſſ.) See the notes on chap. i. 17.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Howbeit we ſpeak wiſdom among them that are perfect: Yet not the wiſdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought. But we ſpeak the wiſdom of God in a myſtery; even the hidden wiſdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory. Which none of the princes of this world knew: For had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. But as it is written, eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his ſpirit; for the ſpirit ſearcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of man which is in him? Even ſo the things of God knoweth no man, but the ſpirit of God. Now we have received, not the ſpirit of the world, but the ſpirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things alſo we ſpeak, not in the words which man's wiſdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghoſt teacheth; comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the ſpirit of God: For they are fooliſhneſs unto him; neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. But he that is ſpiritual, judgeth all things, yet he himſelf is judged of no man. For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may inſtruct him? But we have the mind of Chriſt.

We ſpeak wiſdom] Our Apoſtle here proceeds, in diſcourſing to the Corinthians, of the excellency of his miniſtry among them, to obviate the contempt which ſome might caſt upon it, for want of human eloquence, ſublimity of learning, and accurateneſs of ſpeech: As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Tho' the wiſe men of the world account me a fool, and my preaching fooliſhneſs, yet I ſpeak the higheſt "wiſdom among them that are perfect," or fully inſtructed in the principles of the Chriſtian faith." Altho' the diſcourſes of the ableſt miniſters of the Goſpel ſeem jejune and dry to carnal hearts, yet they have an excellency of wiſdom and depth of judgment in them, which ſpiritual and judicious Chriſtians do own and acknowledge. Here obſerve, 1. The title which the Apoſtle gives to the Goſpel of Chriſt, which he preached: He ſtiles it "The wiſdom of God: The wiſdom of God in a Myſtery; The hidden wiſdom which God ordained before the world was:" The wiſdom of God, becauſe it makes men truly wiſe; wiſe to ſalvation, directing us to uſe the beſt means in order to the beſt and higheſt end: And the hidden myſterious wiſdom of God, becauſe it lay hid in the ſecret counſels of God from all eternity, and afterwards lay hid under Jewiſh types; but is now revealed, by the miniſtry of Chriſt and his holy Apoſtles; revealed in due time "to our glory," that is, to be the means of our happineſs and glory. The gracious purpoſe and deſign of God, in the recovery of a loſt world to happineſs and glory, by the death and ſufferings of his dear and only Son, was ſo myſterious and ſurprizing, that it could never have enter'd the thoughts of men or angels, had not God himſelf diſcover'd it by the revelation of the Goſpel. 2. The compariſon which the Apoſtle makes, betwixt the wiſdom of the Goſpel and the wiſdom of this world: "The wiſdom of this world, and of the princes of this world comes to nought." By the wiſdom of the world underſtand the wiſdom of the Heathen Gentile world, the learning of their admired philoſophers; all which "comes to nought;" that is, it is of no ſignificancy at all in order to the beſt and higheſt end, the ſalvation of the ſoul. Chriſtianity or the knowledge of the Goſpel, is the beſt knowledge, the trueſt and higheſt wiſdom: 'Tis the beſt knowledge, becauſe it contains the knowledge of God and our duty; which is the moſt excellent, the moſt neceſſary, and the moſt uſeful knowledge: And it is the trueſt wiſdom, becauſe it is to be wiſe for ourſelves, and to be wiſe as to our chief intereſt; it propounds to us the nobleſt end, to wit, the glory of God, and our ſouls ſalvation; and it directs us to uſe the beſt, the ſureſt and wiſeſt means for the certain obtaining of that end. (B.) See the notes on chap. i. 20.

That come to nought.] Many ways, in reſpect both of their temporal and ſpiritual condition; not having grace to ſubmit to the Goſpel, nor power to ſuppreſs it, chap. i. 26, &c. (Fell)

Ordained before the world unto our glory.] Hence it ſeems plain, that God hath appointed his Goſpel for the ſalvation of all to whom it is revealed. For, tho' the Apoſtle chargeth many of the church of Corinth with thoſe things that would exclude them, without repentance, from this glory, yet he excludes none of them from being by God ordained, or appointed, to receive this glory. (W.)

Which none of the princes.] That is, Which divine wiſdom, neither Caiaphas, nor Herod, nor Pontius Pilate, nor any of the Jewiſh or Gentile rulers, did underſtand. Where note, The Apoſtle calls the learned Rabbies, the admired philoſophers among the Heathen, the celebrated doctors among the Jews, princes; but preſently adds a diminutive term, which darkens all their glory, he ſtyles them "the princes of this world," utterly unacquainted with the wiſdom of the other world. Obſerve farther, What a clear and full proof the Apoſtle gives of their ignorance of this divine wiſdom which the Goſpel reveals; "Had they known it," that is, practically known it, ſo as to believe it, to be influenced and perſuaded by it, "they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Note here, 1. A royal title given to Chriſt, "The Lord of glory." There belongs to him, 1. An eſſential glory, as God, which is unſpeakable, yea inconceivable, Phil. ii. 6. "He thought it no robbery to be equal with God;" that is, to have a peerage or equality with his Father in glory. 2. A mediatorial glory, as head of the church; which conſiſts in that fulneſs of grace which is inherent in him, and in that dignity and authority which is put upon him. 3. A glory, which ſhall to all eternity be given to him by his redeemed ones, by Saints and angels, upon the account of his mediatorial work, Rev. v. 12. "Worthy is the Lamb to receive glory and honour, and worſhip," for he hath redeemed us, &c. Note, 2. The indignity offered to this glorious perſon; "They crucified him," they nailed him to an ignominious croſs, and put him to death, as the vileſt criminal, as the greateſt malefactor. 3. The cauſe of this indignity, and that was ignorance: "Had they known, they would not have crucified;" that is, had the princes of this world known, either who Chriſt was, or the work which he came about, they would not have crucified him, but adored him. But was their ignorance of Chriſt a ſufficient excuſe for crucifying of him? In no wiſe, becauſe it was not an invincible, but a wilful ignorance: They had ſufficient means of inſtruction, by which they might have come to the knowledge of him, and of their duty to him; but they cloſed their eyes, and would not ſee. (B.) They are call'd princes here becauſe they excell'd others in power, rule, and dignity; as Pilate, Herod, Annas, and Caiaphas, and with them the Scribes, Phariſees, and Elders of the Jews; who are often in Scripture call'd princes of the people, princes of the tribes, princes of the congregation, princes of Judah: Becauſe being chief heads of their families, they were above others in dignity and power; and it is common in Scripture to give the title of princes to ſuch as are in authority. But they are not here call'd princes ſimply, but princes of this world, becauſe they were wicked princes; they are call'd princes of this world, as the devil is called the God of it, 2 Cor. iv. 4. and the prince of this world, Jo. xii. 31. Thus wicked men are term'd men of the world, children of this world, Luke xvi. 8. In theſe and many other places, the world is taken in a bad ſenſe, as our Saviour ſays, I pray not for the world, Jo. xv. 8. and more eſpecially when it is call'd this world, in oppoſition to that which is to come. The ignorance here charg'd upon them, is the wiſdom ſpoken of in the preceding verſe; or the glory conſequent upon it: Both which our Apoſtle ſhews they were ignorant of, ver. 9. and ver. 11, 12, 14. This wiſdom is a myſtery, ver. 7. not knowable by nature, Matth. xvi. 16. So that one may be learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians; and in all the philoſophy of the Greeks, and yet be ignorant of this wiſdom, Matth. xi. 25. yea he may be learned in the Scriptures and yet ignorant of this wiſdom. The Scribes and Phariſees were doctors of the law, and yet knew it not. The effect of their ignorance was, their crucifying the Lord of glory. He is Lord by right of creation, Jo. i. 3. by right of inheritance, Heb. i. 2. by donation, Pſal. ii. 8. Matth. xxviii. 18. by right of redemption, 1 Pet. i. 18. He is alſo Lord of glory as he is ſo in himſelf, and as he is the author of it to his followers. If it be objected, how this Lord of glory could be crucify'd? the anſwer is eaſy, viz. That there is ſo ſtrait a connection and union between the two natures in Chriſt, that that which is proper only to the one nature, is vouch'd (not, as ſome fooliſhly imagine, of the other nature, but) of the perſon denominated by the other nature. This is call'd, by the Fathers, koinonia idiomaton, a communication of properties, and is no other than a common figure in ſpeech, whereby that which is proper only to a part, is predicated of the whole, Acts iii. 15. "Ye killed the prince of life." Chriſt was only kill'd as man; but becauſe the ſame perſon was alſo God, he ſays ye kill'd the prince of life. Thus his blood is call'd the blood of God, Acts xx. 28. becauſe, altho' as God he has not blood, yet being likewiſe man, his blood is attributed to him as God-man. And ſo here Chriſt was only crucify'd as man; but becauſe the ſame man was alſo God, he is call'd the Lord of glory. (Bp of down) See the notes on chap. i. 26. Jo. xviii. 31. Acts ii. 36.

Had they known it.] See the notes on Jo. xvi. 3. and Acts iii. 17.

Eye hath not ſeen.] Theſe words do not immediately reſpect the happineſs of Heaven, and a future State, altho' they are often ſo apply'd; but they are primarily ſpoken of the Goſpel ſtate, and of the bleſſings to be enjoy'd by them that love God here; from whence may be drawn a good argument to prove the inconceivable happineſs of the Saints hereafter. Tho' they have felt and taſted joys unſpeakable and full of glory in the actings of their faith and love of God at preſent, yet all that they have ſeen and heard, all that they have taſted and felt in their way to Heaven falls infinitely ſhort of the perfection and bleſſedneſs of that place and ſtate. How will the immediate preſence of God, when we come into it, be a ſurprize to thoſe who have now the greateſt acquaintance, with it! But ſuch is the care and kindneſs of God to his ſervants, that he has reveal'd, by his ſpirit, thoſe great things prepar'd for them, which paſs man's underſtanding. There is a twofold revelation of a future ſtate: A revelation by faith, and by viſion. The firſt, while we are in the body, by the aſſiſtance of the holy Spirit; the latter can only be enjoy'd in Heaven, when we ſhall ſee as we are ſeen, and know as we are known. (B.) St. John ſays, "It does not yet appear what we ſhall be," 1 Jo. iii. 2. And the words of Iſaiah lxiv. 4. in their primary ſenſe may only intimate, that no man, by his own ſenſe or reaſon, or by inſtruction from others, can diſcern what kindneſs God will afford to thoſe who wait upon him, except from the true God himſelf. And both the context and appoſition of theſe words to the revelation of theſe things by the ſpirit, ſhew the primary intent of the Apoſtle to be this, that no human wiſdom, by any thing that may be ſeen, heard of, or conceiv'd by us, can acquaint us with the things taught by the ſpirit, without a revelation. See the notes on Matth. xiii. 11. Jo. i. 18. and xvi. 13. Rom. i. 4. and xvi. 25.

The ſpirit ſearcheth all things.] By theſe words it is plain, that the holy Spirit is omniſcient and conſequently is God. He is not only acquainted with the ſurface and outſide of things, but ſearches them to the bottom: And that not only the deep things of men, but thoſe of God alſo, as in the verſe following. Agreeable to this is that of Wiſd. ix. 17. Thy counſels who has known, except thou giveſt wiſdom, and ſend thy ſpirit from above, which knoweth and underſtandeth all things. And chap. i. 7: "The ſpirit of the Lord filleth the world." (B. and W.) See the notes on Acts v. 3, 4.

Not the Spirit of the world.] Here the Apoſtle declares, 1. What ſpirit they had not receiv'd, viz. "the ſpirit of the world;" that is the ſpirit that ſuggeſts worldly wiſdom and favours only worldly men. There is one and the ſame ſpirit in all wordly men; that is, an earthly, low, narrow ſpirit, graſping at earthly things; but they neither believe nor purſue future inviſible things. 2. He ſhews what ſpirit they had receiv'd, viz. that of God; and likewiſe, of what uſe it was to them; that is, to teach them "the things that are freely given them of God." We are inlighten'd by the ſpirit; by the grace of God communicated to us to know both the divine myſteries and the divine mercies; both what God has done for us, and wrought in us, which are the things that are freely given us of God. 3. The Apoſtle declares how he preach'd thoſe ſpiritual things after a ſpiritual manner: "Not in the words which man's wiſdom teaches, but which the holy Ghoſt teacheth: That is, not in the words and after the manner, now counted by the Gentile philoſophers to be learned and wiſe; but in the words, and after the manner which the Spirit of God teacheth." By this it appears, that the Apoſtle ſpoke and wrote by the immediate inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt (which is to be underſtood of doctrines neceſſary to ſalvation) as well as the prophets of old, and deliver'd nothing as from God, but what God hath reveal'd to him by his holy Spirit: And accordingly, ſome interpret thoſe words, "comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual;" that is, ſay they, comparing what was written by the ſpirit, under the Old Teſtament, with what is now reveal'd to us under the new. (B.) Mr. Le Clerc expounds theſe words, "comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual," by ſpeaking ſpiritual things to ſpiritual men. But where does ſyncrino ſignify to ſpeak, or why does he limit what is ſpoken to the ſpiritual man, ſince the Apoſtles ſpake as well to the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles as to the ſpiritual man? And how does it appear that (anthropos) man, is here to be underſtood, becauſe it follows in the next verſe, rather than (pragmata) things, which immediately goes before? The interpretation of the Fathers is much more probable, viz. comparing the things written by the ſpirit in the Old Teſtament with what is now reveal'd to us by the ſame ſpirit, and confirming our doctrines from them. (W.)

The natural man.] The perſons to whom the Apoſtle wrote this Epiſtle were ſuch as had the advantage of divine revelation. We may therefore here learn, That a man of the fineſt wit, and of the brighteſt natural parts, improv'd by ſtudy and all the embelliſhments of human learning, is, notwithſtanding, unable to make a ſound judgment of ſpiritual things, without the aid and operation of the holy Spirit; which aid he is ready to beſtow on all who do not reſiſt and grieve him, but are willing to receive and improve them. The natural man here is oppos'd, not to one who is regenerate, and ſanctify'd, but to one who believes, or is enlighten'd by the holy Spirit; which illumination a man may have, without and before his regeneration, as one who is unregenerate may have ſome gifts of the Spirit which a regenerate perſon has not; witneſs the miracles wrought by ſome in the name of Chriſt, which implies their believing in him. It does not appear to me, that we are requir'd to lay aſide the uſe of our reaſon in matters of religion; for, reaſon is an excellent gift, a light beſtow'd upon man by God, as well as revelation, and is of ſingular uſe to preſerve us from being impos'd upon by falſe pretenders to immediate revelation. Accordingly, we may obſerve that God has made it our duty to exerciſe our reaſon in matters of religion. Hence thoſe many cautions not to ſuffer ourſelves to be deceiv'd; hence the holy Scriptures appeal to the reaſon and underſtanding of men. As there are ſome who ſet too high a value upon human reaſon, ſo there are others who decry it too much: Both (tho' it may be without intending it) do great hurt to the intereſt of true religion. Dr. Claget, in his diſcourſe of the operations of the holy Spirit, (introd. ſect. 5.) thinks, that by the natural man is meant one who either rejects divine revelation, or, at leaſt, has not the benefit of it: Such were the Heathen philoſophers, who argu'd on ſuch natural principles as they underſtood; which, tho' they might let them into the knowledge of many uſeful truths, yet could they not, from them, infer, that the Son of God took upon him the nature of man, nor thoſe other neceſſary and divine truths depending upon it, which only revelation could diſcover to men. (Fox) The natural man here is not ſarkikos, the carnal man, but pſychikos, the animal man, who acts only by the principles of human reaſon, and worldly wiſdom: Who, altho' well furniſh'd with intellectual and moral improvements, is yet deſtitute of the enlightning ſpirit, and the renewing grace of God. What is here affirm'd of the natural man, with reference to ſpiritual things, is, 1. That he "receives not the things of the Spirit of God." 2. That "he cannot know them." Where note, It is not ſaid, That he knows not the things of God, but "the things of the Spirit of God:" For, there are ſome things of God which a natural man may know; but the things of the ſpirit, truths purely evangelical, thoſe he receives not, neither in his underſtanding nor will. Beſides, it is not ſaid only, that he does not, but that he can not know them. Natural reaſon, by what helps ſoever aſſiſted and improv'd, is altogether inſufficient, without ſpiritual illumination, to apprehend ſupernatural and evangelical truths: Not but that the Spirit of God makes uſe of our reaſon in the work of illumination and converſion;

Chriſtianity does not oblige us to throw away our reaſon but to ſubjugate it; not to deny it, but to captivate it to the faith. So that the Apoſtle's meaning here, is, That a perſon of the moſt exquiſite natural accompliſhments, one who has improv'd his reaſon to the higheſt pitch, can not behold evangelical myſteries in their true light, or embrace them in their proper beauty, without the ſuperadded aids and aſſiſtances of the holy Spirit. The reaſons given here by the Apoſtie, why he does not, can not receive them, are, 1. Becauſe "they are fooliſhneſs to him;" that is, they appear ſo to him, becauſe they are not prov'd from principles of natural reaſon, and by philoſophical deductions, which is the only wiſdom he ſeeks after. 2. Becauſe "they are ſpiritually diſcern'd;" that is, myſteries are not knowable by the ways which the natural man uſes to attain knowledge, but are only to be known by revelation. (B.) Le Clerc ſays, By natural man is not here meant the man who makes uſe of nothing but reaſon; but the man who is wholly devoted and enſlav'd to earthly things, and entirely taken up with things of this life, like a brute creature: The oppoſition made here between ſpiritual and animal things, ſays he, plainly proves this. But the contrary is evident from hence, That there is not a word ſpoken, in the whole chapter, of (pſychica) animal things, but only an oppoſition between (pſychicos) the natural, or animal perſon, and the (pneumaticos) the ſpiritual perſon. That the natural man here, is he who rejects revelation, and admits of no higher principle to judge of things by, but philoſophy, and demonſtration from the principles of natural reaſon, is the concurring opinion of Theodoret, St. Chryſoſtome, Photius, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, upon this text: And it is evident by the chain of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe, from chap. i. 17. to the end of this chapter, that this muſt be the ſenſe of it. For chap. i. 17. he begins to declare that he preach'd the Goſpel "not in wiſdom of words," or human wiſdom; and chap. ii. 1. "not with excellency of ſpeech" or human wiſdom. The perſons who reject the Goſpel, are the wiſe men of the world, chap. i. 20. Wiſe men according to the fleſh: The Greeks, who ſeek for wiſdom; and they who eſteem'd it fooliſhneſs are the ſame Greeks. And here it is the pſychicos, the natural man who receives it not, and to whom it is fooliſhneſs. It is therefore plain that the natural man is the ſame with the wiſe man, the diſputer, the philoſopher, the Greek mention'd before. In the former verſes the Goſpel, rejected by them for want of this wiſdom, and accounted fooliſhneſs, is "the power of God and the wiſdom of God," chap. i. 24. And here it is "the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, reveal'd to the Apoſtles by the ſpirit," ver. 7, 10. that is, the ſpirit not of the world, or human wiſdom, but the Spirit of God, ver. 12. And therefore they deliver'd it, not in the words of that wiſdom in which the Greeks gloried, but in words taught them by the holy Ghoſt, ver. 13. When therefore it follows, "But the natural man receives not the things of the ſpirit," it is plain that he muſt be the man who receives not the things taught by the revelation of the holy Ghoſt The oppoſition put between him and the ſpiritual man, who has this wiſdom reveal'd to him by the ſpirit, demonſtrates this to be the ſenſe. The Apoſtle does not here ſpeak of the inability of an Heathen to underſtand the ſenſe of any revelation when diſcover'd to him; but of his inability to find out, or come to the knowledge of them by the mere light of reaſon: From whence he infers the neceſſity of a ſupernatural revelation. Nor does he ſay that he can not underſtand revelation, becauſe he wants farther means to do it, but that he cannot know them before they are diſcover'd by the Spirit; and that he will not then receive them becauſe they are not taught him in his own way, as the wiſdom of the world is. (W.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 7.

Who hath known.] That this is a citation from Iſa. xl. 13. there is no queſtion; as alſo that the words, "Who hath known the mind of the Lord?" are ſet down after this Apoſtle's manner, out of the Septuagint. Now the ſame Apoſtle citeth that place again, Rom. xi. 34. and there, in the latter part alſo ſets down the Septuagints words, And "who hath been his counſellor?" Which laſt words being not here read, but theſe other immediately ſubjoined, "Who ſhall inſtruct him?" there will be no reaſon to think theſe latter words to be another rendring of that ſecond part of the verſe in Iſaiah. For when the Septuagint had tranſlated it truly out of the Hebrew, why ſhould the Apoſtle, who conſtantly uſeth the Septuagints tranſlation, and that ſometimes when that varies from the Hebrew, here uſe a new rendring of his own, and for "Who hath been his counſellor?" ſet only "Who ſhall inſtruct him?" For this there is no probable reaſon to be given; and therefore it muſt be reſolved, that no more than the firſt words are taken out of that place of Iſaiah; and that the latter words are the Apoſtle's own, to bring them to his preſent purpoſe, "Who hath known the mind of the Lord, which ſhall inſtruct him?" that is, who doth know the Lord's mind ſo well as to be fit to inform and inſtruct the ſpiritual man? ver. 15. For that (auton) him ſhould ſignify the Lord (as they conclude, who make theſe words all one with the latter part of the verſe in Iſaiah) would be very ſtrange; not only becauſe it would be far different from ver. 15. of which it is brought for a proof; but alſo becauſe "knowing the mind of God," altho' it be a fit preparative to inſtructing of others, yet is not ſo for the inſtructing of God himſelf. (H.)

CHAP. III.

Carnal men not capable of underſtanding ſpiritual doctrines. Their contentions and diviſions ſhew that they are carnal. The miniſters plant, but God gives the increaſe. Chriſt the only foundation. Chriſtians the temple of God; which muſt therefore be kept holy. The wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God. Through Chriſt all things are ours.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AND I, brethren, could not ſpeak unto you as unto ſpiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Chriſt. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: For hitherto ye were not able to bear it; neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal: For whereas there is among you envying, and ſtriſe, and diviſions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? For while one ſaith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal? Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but miniſters by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered: But God gave the increaſe. So then, neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increaſe. Now he that planteth, and he that watereth, are one: And every man ſhall receive his own reward, according to his own labour. For we are labourers together with God: Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.

And I, brethren, could not.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, My brethren, altho' I ſpeak the higheſt wiſdom among them that are perfect, yet "could not I ſpeak to you as unto ſpiritual perſons, but as unto carnal," becauſe the works of the fleſh are found with you, and at the beſt ye are but babes in Chriſt. Learn hence, That even among thoſe who are the true and real members of the viſible church, ſome are ſpiritual, ſome are carnal; ſome are men, ſome are babes. The Apoſtle doth not call them abſolutely carnal, as if they were wholly given up to the works of the fleſh; but comparatively ſo, having too much carnality and corruption in them, and ſavouring too much of the fleſh, tho' for the main truly pious; and therefore he uſes the word as for mitigation ſake; I could not ſpeak unto you "but as unto carnal." (B.) He calls them carnal, who yet had receiv'd the firſt fruits of the ſpirit. 1. Becauſe the fleſh in them luſted againſt the ſpirit: 2. Becauſe in many things they follow'd the deſires of the fleſh: And, 3. Becauſe they ſavoured the things of the fleſh, not perceiving, or at leaſt not reliſhing, many things of the ſpirit, as being but novices in the ſchool of Chriſt. (Aſſ.)

Fed you with milk.] That is, I have catechized you in Chriſt with ſimple, true and nouriſhing food, wholeſome and eaſy of digeſtion; for ſuch is milk to children. (Ibid.) With eaſy and common truths; not with the myſterious parts of Goſpel knowledge: with the firſt principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, and not with the higher doctrines of Chriſtianity, which neither then nor now are ye able to bear. Learn hence, That it is great prudence and wiſdom in the miniſters of Chriſt to inſtruct people in the firſt principles of religion, in order to their regular advancing higher in Chriſtianity: Miniſters are ſpiritual nurſes; they muſt firſt feed with milk, then with meat, otherwiſe they will not nouriſh but deſtroy. (B.)

For hitherto ye were not [illegible] Oupo gar edunaſthe. For as yet ye could not; that is, ye [illegible]ld not, or were not able to bear it: For tho' bear it is not in the text, it is neceſſarily underſtood; and ſo is well ſupplied by our tranſlators. So, in the Old Teſtament, lo ochal is often uſed; i. e. I cannot, or I would not; where endure, or bear it, is underſtood. Thus, Job xxxi. 23. "By reaſon of his highneſs I could not:" Pſal. ci. 5. "Him that hath an high look, and a proud heart, will not I:" Iſa. i. 13. "The calling of aſſemblies I cannot." In all which places the text expreſſes no more; tho' the ſenſe requires the neceſſary ſupplements there made, viz. I could not endure; I will not ſuffer; I cannot away with. (W.)

Ye are yet carnal.] That is, ye are in a great meaſure carnal; for your envy, ſtrife, and diviſions, prove you to be ſo, and that ye live according to the corrupt nature of man: They had the ſeed and root of grace abiding, and yet the relicks of corruption remaining in them. There is a vaſt difference between weak grace and no grace; between the preſence of ſin and the power of ſin. But how could the Apoſtle here call the Corinthians carnal, and babes in Chriſt, when chap. i. 5. he affirmed that they were "enriched with all knowledge and utterance?" Anſwer, That might be true as to ſome particular perſons amongſt them, who had thoſe extraordinary gifts of tongues and miracles given them for the confirmation of the Goſpel; and yet what is here ſaid be true, as to the generality of them, that they had too much carnality and unmortified corruption remaining in them: "Ye are yet carnal." Obſerve next, what proof he gives of it; namely, ocular demonſtration; for, ſays he, there are among you "envying, ſtrife, and diviſions." Envy, as the root, bears ſtrife, and ſtrife breeds diviſions and factions: Envy is a peſtilent luſt, yea a deviliſh luſt; it makes another's good our grief. The devil envies God and man their happineſs: He rejoices at the deſtruction of ſinners, tho' he has no advantage by it; nay, tho' it increaſeth his torment, becauſe they were tempted by him to ſin: There is nothing ſo like the devil as an envious man, with his cloven foot, to make diviſion wherever he comes. Learn hence, 1. That envy is the cauſe and companion of ſtrife. 2. That ſtrife and contention, differences and diviſions are often found in the churches of Chriſt, and among particular Chriſtians. 3. That ſo far as theſe prevail in and amongſt any, it evidences that they "are carnal, and walk as men." (B.) The word carnal being here applied to the works of the fleſh, ſeems to imply; that the ſpiritual man oppos'd to him, ſhould ſignify the man endow'd with the fruits of the good Spirit, or who walketh in the Spirit, not fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh, Rom. viii. 1, 4. Gal. v. 16. And thus the Greek interpreters underſtand the words, hence noting, That it is poſſible for men to have great gifts, as the Corinthians had, and yet be carnal. Yet Irenæus interprets the words thus, that they were carnal, becauſe the ſpirit of the Father did not reſt upon them, i. e. becauſe he being the ſpirit of love and union, would not abide with them, when they indulg'd themſelves in envy and diviſions, or be unto them a ſpirit of inſtruction. And according to this interpretation, he muſt deny them to be ſpiritual, as the word ſignifies one who enjoys ſome ſpiritual gift, and receives ſome illumination from him; or as one that is not purely govern'd by the revelation made by the ſpirit, but rather walks kat' anthropon, as a man attending, not the dictates of the Spirit, but of human reaſon, or of his own inclinations; for ſo is the import of that phraſe, to walk as men. See Rom. iii. 5. 1 Cor. ix. 8. Whatever be the ſenſe, it muſt be noted, That the Apoſtle does not here call them carnal, in that worſt ſenſe in which the carnal perſon is repreſented as one who "is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be," Rom. viii. 7, 8. and therefore can do nothing pleaſing to God; and as it wholly excludes us from any intereſt in Chriſt: But as it imports men, ſtill ſubject, (thro' the too great prevalency of their carnal appetites) to ſuch things as ſhew'd ſome ſtrong remainders of a carnal mind. Crellius takes notice of a difficulty, viz. How the ſame Corinthians could be ſuch babes in Chriſt, and carnal as here; and yet be enrich'd in all utterance and knowledge? chap. i. 5. and 2 Cor. viii. 7. I anſwer, that theſe encomiums muſt be reſtrain'd to ſome few of them, who were their extraordinary church officers, and enjoy'd this faith and knowledge for the inſtruction of the reſt. And then, notwithſtanding this, it may be true that the Apoſtle could not write to the generality of them, as ſuch, but rather as to babes in Chriſt. Or this faith, utterance, and knowledge, muſt be reſtrain'd to the gifts of miracles, of tongues, and the interpretation of them, which might be given (for the confirmation of the Goſpel, and the good of others) to ſuch as were not ſpiritual in the beſt ſenſe, but of ſmall proficiency in the ſaving fruits of the good ſpirit. Hence we find them puffed up, upon the account of gifts, envying others who had them in a higher meaſure, and abuſing them to vain oſtentation, and confuſion in the church, and not to edification; which ſhews that they were no more than babes in Chriſt. (W.) Man never ſhews himſelf more plainly to be man, than by envy, ſtrife, and diviſions; on the contrary, the moſt viſible character of the ſpirit of God is unity, love, and peace. In vain does any one imagine that he is ſpiritual, becauſe he has forſaken the groſſer ſins; he is ſtill carnal, ſo long as he is proud, as he loves vain-glory, and is addicted to other ſpiritual vices. (Q.) See the notes on chap. i. 5, 11, 12. Rom. xiii. 13. and Mr. Rennell's ſermon at Oxford on this text.

While one ſaith, I am of Paul.] That is, One ſaith, in oppoſition to another, I am the diſciple of Paul; and another, I follow Apollos: And thus, probably, they called themſelves after the names of their admired preachers, factiouſly crying up one miniſter above another. Hence learn, That altho' it be a people's duty to have a great and high eſteem of the miniſters of Chriſt, yet muſt not their reſpect degenerate into a ſinful admiration of their perſons; for the factious affecting one miniſter above another, is both ſinful and dangerous. When the gifts and abilities of one miniſter are cried up to the contempt of others, it occaſions enmity and diſſenſion among miniſters themſelves, and their people alſo. "Are ye not carnal, when one ſaith I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos?" It is added, chap. i. 12. "And I of Chriſt:" That is, they factiouſly ſaid they were of, or for Chriſt, in oppoſition to his miniſters. They pretended to the immediate teachings of Chriſt, and had no need of the miniſtry either of Paul or Apollos. Learn hence, That altho' Chriſt only is to be relied upon as head of his Church, yet it is not his will we ſhould deſpiſe his miniſtry, or contemn his miniſters, under that pretence. (B.) See the notes on chap. i. 12. and Rom. xvi. 17.

Who then is Paul?] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, neither Paul nor Apollos were the authors of your faith; but only miniſters and helpers of it, as God is pleaſed to furniſh them with gifts, and to give a bleſſing to their miniſterial endeavours; Your miniſters give out to you as God gives in to them; and therefore ye ought not factiouſly to boaſt of their gifts, nor to make parties on that account. Learn hence, 1. That the miniſtry of the word is the inſtituted means and inſtrumental cauſe which God has appointed for working faith in the hearts of men. 2. That God has furniſhed his miniſters with variety of gifts and abilities; all which he makes uſe of in order to that end. 3. That therefore the miniſters of Chriſt ought neither to be deified nor nullified; neither to be cried up, nor trodden down; we are not efficient cauſes, but only inſtrumental means of faith. Render therefore unto God the glory of the author, and unto miniſters the honour of the inſtrument. "Who is Paul, and who is Apollos, but miniſters? (Idem) What extraordinary talent ſoever a paſtor has, let us always remember that he is only the miniſter, not the author of the faith; the conduit, not the fountain: It is from God that he has receiv'd both his miniſtry, and the gift to diſcharge it, as he ought. (Q.)

I have planted.] That is, I firſt preached the Goſpel among you, and firſt inſtructed you in the principles of Chriſt: I converted you to Chriſt: After me came Apollos and water'd the ſeed which I had ſown; but God it was, and God alone, that cauſed the ſeed which I ſowed, and Apollos water'd, to fructify and increaſe. Learn, 1. That it is an act of diſcriminating grace and favour in God, to ſend out his miniſters to plant the Goſpel amongſt a people that never before heard of it. 2. That is an act of farther favour and grace in God, to follow a people with a ſucceſſion of miniſters, in order to the watering of the ſeed formerly ſown among them. 3. That all that miniſters can do, is but to plant and water; they cannot give increaſe, nor produce the ſucceſs of their miniſterial endeavours. Bleſſed be God, that he doth not require the ſucceſs of our labours at our hands: Wo unto us, ſhould he ſay, Either reconcile my people to me, or I will never be reconciled unto you. Diligence and endeavour is ours, the bleſſing and ſucceſs is God's: He will never blame us for doing his work. (B.) The Church and every particular ſoul is the field of God. The Apoſtles planted the faith therein by the authority of Jeſus Chriſt; the paſtors water it with the word, the ſacraments, and prayer; but God makes it grow, and bring forth fruit, by the internal operation of his grace, and by giving the increaſe itſelf. This he does alone and by himſelf, but it is he likewiſe who plants with Paul, and waters with Apollos. (Q.)

Neither is he that planteth any thing.] The labour of the huſbandman will not be effectual to produce the fruits of the earth, without the bleſſing of God; neither will the preaching of the Goſpel be effectual for the converſion and ſalvation of men without the ſame bleſſing. But this notwithſtanding, the labour of the huſbandman, and of the preacher and hearers too, is neceſſary, otherwiſe there will be no increaſe. Such expreſſions therefore are not to be underſtood, as if God was to do all, and we to do nothing; but they are to be taken in a comparative ſenſe; that is, what we do is nothing compar'd to what God does, who bleſſes our labours, making the plants to grow, and the earth to yield her increaſe. If we uſe our own ſincere and honeſt endeavours, we may be aſſur'd that God will not be wanting on his part; but if we neglect this, we ſhall undoubtedly miſs of his bleſſing. (Fox.)

He that planteth and he that watereth are one.] That is, in their ſcope and deſign, in the aim and end of their miniſtry; therefore they ſhould not be factiouſly divided either among themſelves or by their hearers. Altho' there is variety and diverſity in the gifts of God's miniſters, yet the intent of their miniſtry being one, they ought to agree in one: One in doctrine, one in affection, aiming at one and the ſame mark, the glory of God, and the ſalvation of men; as they are one in office, inſtitution and end. (B.) One, according to Clemens Alex. as to their miniſtry, being God's miniſters in this diſpenſation: Or one, as having receiv'd different gifts from the Spirit, 1 Cor. xii 12. (W.) But the chief matter of their unity depends upon their being one in commiſſion. It is very evident, that it was not only our Saviour's intention, but his moſt paſſionate deſire, that, as all his Apoſtles receiv'd their commiſſion from him; ſo they might execute it with ſuch a harmony and conſent of mind, that there might not be the leaſt jarring between them; for thus he prays in their behalf "That they may be one, as we are one." He had committed the ſame treaſure of divine truth which the Father had before committed to him; for he tells them with great ſolemnity, "As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you," Jo. xx. 21. From which words it is evident, that the commiſſion of all the

Apoſtles was the ſame; that it was ſuch a one as Chriſt in his human nature had receiv'd from God. And even they who were not of the ſame order with the Apoſtles, but only inferior preſbyters under them; yet by deriving their authority from the ſame fountain head, and exerciſing it in conformity to the inſtructions which they receiv'd from them, they ſtill kept the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace. Therefore the Apoſtle ſays here, that he himſelf who planted the Goſpel among the Corinthians, and Apollos who water'd it are one. Apollos was but a bare prieſt, but was one with St. Paul, as having part of the ſame commiſſion and acting by the ſame ſpirit. Hence St. Ignatius, St. Cyprian, and others of the ancient Fathers repreſent the whole college of Biſhops throughout the whole world as one perſon, ſitting in one chair, attending one altar. And therefore when a new altar is erected, a new Biſhop ordain'd in oppoſition to the former, then there is juſt occaſion to ask that queſtion, Is Chriſt divided? When two ſeveral paſtors aſſume to themſelves the privilege of offering and conſecrating the ſacrament, not only in two diſtinct places, but in contradiction to each other, and by two ſeveral inconſiſtent claims; then it is evident that one of them acts by no commiſſion; for if the true Euchariſt can be had in two oppoſite aſſemblies, Chriſt's fleſh ceaſes to be one. This is as abſurd as to ſay, that a prince can have two chancellors, and two broad ſeals, in the ſame principality, two ſubordinate magiſtrates in the ſame city, or diſtrict, acting againſt each other. For if it could be imagin'd that Chriſt deſign'd his Church to be one, and yet has commiſſion'd two contrary ſets of officers to act in his name, he has evidently defeated his own deſign. His Church was intended, by him, to be more perfectly one, than any temporal kingdom ever was, and eſpecially, that his officers ſhould be one, even as he and his Father are one. But if two diſtinct, and directly oppoſite bodies of men aſſume to themſelves his authority, and under this pretence divide his flock: In this caſe, he that ſhall affirm that both theſe bodies of men are commiſſion'd by our Saviour, and that it is ſafe and lawful to communicate with both, muſt ſuppoſe that Chriſt's Church was no more intended to be one than two ſeveral neighbouring nations that are at perpetual war with each other. But if never ſo great a number of men claim this privilege of celebrating, and conſecrating the Euchariſt, within the ſame city or country, all acting in concert, and in ſubordination to one Biſhop, and uſe the ſame neceſſary rites and modes, then the Euchariſt is ſtill one. If Cornelius's 46 prieſts, in the IIId Century, did adminiſter and conſecrate the ſacrament every Lord's day, in as many ſeveral congregations, within the city of Rome, or in the neighbouring country; yet ſtill it was but the ſame Euchariſt, that Bp. Cornelius himſelf celebrated in his own church; for they all acted by one commiſſion, and walked by the ſame ſpirit, as St. Paul, Apollos, and other planters and waterers of the church of Corinth are ſaid to have done. But Novatian ſetting himſelf up, in oppoſition to Cornelius, and acting by a contrary ſpirit, was univerſally condemn'd as an intruder, uſurper, invader; his altar and ſacrifice were deem'd only prophanations; his bread and wine to be no true Euchariſt, but a counterfeit, and forgery; as any one may ſee in St. Cyprian. (Johnſ.)

Every man ſhall receive his own reward.] Hence we learn, 1. That every man, eſpecially every miniſter, ſhall receive a proportionable reward hereafter according to his labour and working for God here. 2. We have the appropriation and diſtinction of the reward, viz. his own reward; implying that there are degrees of reward and glory in heaven, according as men have labour'd more or leſs for God here on earth. According to this gradual diverſity ſhall be gradual degrees of glory. 3. We have the meaſure and rule of this reward; according to his labour, not the ſucceſs of it; according to his induſtry, not according to the fruit of his miniſtry: If he labours faithfully, God will reward him proportionably, tho' few or none have believ'd his report. (B.) The word (miſthos) reward, often ſignifies a reward of mere grace, as well as hire or wages. Rom. iv. 4. And ſo it is always taken when apply'd to the joys of Heaven. If I give one as much for a ſmall work, as he would have deſerv'd for a much greater, yet it may be properly call'd his reward, and in this ſenſe it is us'd, St. Matth. xx. 8. in the parable of the vine dreſſers, where the penny given to thoſe who labour'd but one hour, and that in the cool of the day, is call'd by the ſame word miſthos, as that given to thoſe who had wrought the whole day. In this ſenſe Theophilact and Grotius take the word, S. Matth. vi. 2. (Leigh.) See the notes on Matth. v. 12. and Rom. ii. 6. and iv. 4.

Labourers together with God.] Here obſerve the honourable title given the miniſters of God: They are labourers and workers together with God. But in what ſenſe? Not by any power of their own to produce any ſpiritual effect, as if they could, without God, work faith and repentance in the hearts of ſinners: But they work only by an external application of the miniſtry of the word, and the means of grace to the ſouls of men. They are under-labourers to God, and he honours them by working by, and with them for the converſion of men. (B.) Men take in fellow-labourers to carry on their work, thro' indigence and weakneſs, God does it thro' power and goodneſs. Every one ought to take that part only upon himſelf which the maſter of the work is pleas'd to aſſign him. (Q.)

Ye are God's husbandry.] Here obſerve the honourable relation in which the church ſtands to God. It is his husbandry, his building; which phraſes imply, 1. Power and goodneſs in making them ſo. A Field is not cloath'd with corn of itſelf, nor does a building riſe of itſelf. 2. They imply dominion and ſovereignty. The maſter is the orderer of his houſe, and the husbandman the diſpoſer of his ground. 3. Propriety and intereſt, that we are not our own but God's. (B.) Here is another figure of the church. The church and the ſoul are a building, of which God is the maſter and chief architect; Jeſus Chriſt the main foundation; the Apoſtles the ſubordinate architects; the Biſhops the workmen; the prieſts, the helpers; good works, the main body of the building; faith, the ſecond foundation; and charity, the top and perfection. Happy he who is a living ſtone in this building! (Q.) But the word husbandry is better render'd by St. Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, God's field. They infer from hence, That the field is God's, and the Apoſtles are his labourers, ſent and enabled by him for that work, and that they ought, as a field, to be fenced with the hedge of concord, and not be divided into parties. Thus the word Georgion is render'd, Prov. xxiv. 30. and xxxi. 16. (W.) See the notes on ver 10, 11.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wiſe maſter-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay, then that is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt. Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, wood, hay, ſtubble: Every man's work ſhall be made manifeſt. For the day ſhall declare it, becauſe it ſhall be revealed by fire; and the fire ſhall try every man's work, of what ſort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he ſhall receive a reward. If any man's work ſhall be burnt, he ſhall ſuffer loſs: But he himſelf ſhall be ſaved; yet ſo, as by fire.

As a wiſe maſter builder.] Here we ſee, 1. The character the Apoſtle aſſumes, viz. not only of a maſter-builder, but of a wiſe one. Nor is it vain-glory in him, altho' Chriſt is the great and wiſe maſter-builder of his church. For the Apoſtles were inſtruments in his hand, and honour'd by him with ſucceſs. From hence we may learn, That it is not vain-glory, in ſome caſes, but a duty for the miniſters of the church to magnify their work and office. 2. We have the ſpecial work perform'd by St. Paul, the wiſe maſter-builder; he laid the foundation; that is, he firſt acquainted them with the rudiments and principles of Chriſtianity, which they had never heard of before. It is a ſpecial part of divine wiſdom in a miniſter to lay at firſt a good foundation of ſcripture knowledge in the minds and underſtanding of his people. For ignorance is a great enemy to a miniſter's building. 3. We may obſerve, how very careful the Apoſtle is, to aſcribe all his ſtrength, his aſſiſtance and ſucceſs, as a maſter builder, to the grace of God; "According to the grace of God which is given unto me." Learn thence, That it is the property of every godly man, much more of every gracious miniſter, to attribute all that good, which is either receiv'd or done by him, to the grace of God. What man ever receiv'd more grace from God, or did more ſervice for God, than St. Paul? And ſo enlarg'd is he, on all occaſions, in magnifying the grace of God, that he is never ſatisfy'd in exalting of it; "Not I, but the grace which was with me." And, 4. The cautionary direction given by St. Paul, to all ſucceeding miniſters of Chriſt, to take heed, that they lay no other foundation than what was laid by him; and that they build ſuitably upon that foundation; "Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." Learn hence, That the miniſters of Chriſt are to take ſpecial care, that they preach no other doctrine than what Chriſt and his Apoſtles preach'd and laid as the foundation of Chriſtianity; and that they do not build upon that foundation any doctrine which may endanger their own or their people's ſalvation; "I have laid the foundation; but let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." (B.) See the notes on Rom. i. 5. xii. 3. and xv. 15, 16, 20.

Other foundation can no man lay.] That is, no other true foundation can any man lay, than that which is already laid by me; namely, the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, and faith in him. The miniſters of Chriſt ought to lay no other foundation than Chriſt: They are to lead their people to, and build them upon no other rock but Chriſt. All threatnings, promiſes, commands, duties, and privileges, are to be preach'd and preſs'd with reſpect to Jeſus Chriſt: He is to be laid as the only foundation, in reſpect of knowledge, faith, juſtification, interceſſion, and acceptance with God.

The miniſter's great work is to ſet Chriſt forth in all his glorious fulneſs, to repreſent him in all his offices as a glorious object for the eye of our faith to look unto, and fix upon. (Idem.) See the notes on Matth. xvi. 18.

Now if any man build.] In theſe words the Apoſtle ſpeaks of two ſorts of preachers under the metaphor of builders. 1. Some that are ſound and orthodox, who hold the foundation, and build upon it "gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones;" that is, ſuch ſincere and wholeſome doctrine as will bear the touchſtone and trial: 2. Others that are unſound and erroneous, who hold indeed the foundation of Chriſtianity, but build upon it ſuch doctrines as will not bear the trial, expreſs'd by "wood, hay, and ſtubble," which are not proof againſt the fire. Learn hence, 1. That the doctrine of Chriſt, and the truths of the Goſpel, are very excellent, and exceeding precious; compar'd to "gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones," for their uſefulneſs and precioulneſs. 2. That all errors and falſhoods in religion, all erroneous and falſe doctrines, tho' not fundamental, are yet no better than hay or ſtubble, vain and unprofitable, vile and contemptible. Obſerve, 2. As a two-fold builder deſcribed, ſo a two-fold event declared: Some mens works (that is, their doctrines and practices) will abide the fire, others will be burnt up, and ſuffer loſs: Where, by the fire, underſtand the word and ſpirit of God: A probatory, not a purgatory fire, is here intended, becauſe it is ſaid to burn, not the perſon but the action, and every action too of every man. Now the popiſh purgatory-fire tries not all perſons; ſome are exempted as martyrs; and not all actions neither, but wicked ones only; whereas this "fire ſhall try every man's work:" The meaning is, that the light of God's word and Spirit will manifeſt the verity or vanity, the ſoundneſs or falſeneſs, of doctrines deliver'd by all preachers. Sound doctrines, that, like good metal, will endure the furnace, ſhall be rewarded: But ſuch doctrines as will not endure the trial, ſhall miſs of the reward. Learn hence, 1 That all the ways and works of wickedneſs in general, and all hidden and ſecret ways of falſe doctrine in particular, God will one day reveal and make manifeſt; "Every man's work ſhall be made manifeſt; for the day ſhall declare it." 2. That the true and ſincere doctrine of the Goſpel is firm and durable, and ſuch as will abide the cloſeſt trials; yea, and will grow more illuſtrious and glorious thereby. 3. That men may hold the foundation, and maintain the fundamentals of Chriſtianity, and yet may ſo ſuperſtruct upon it, and ſuperadd ſo many things unto it, whereby they may greatly endanger their own and others ſalvation: They "ſhall be ſaved, yet ſo as by fire;" that is, with great difficulty, having expos'd themſelves to the utmoſt hazard and danger. The ſpeech is proverbial, and ſignifies both the greatneſs of the danger, and the difficulty of eſcaping it; intimating, that errors in judgment endanger a perſon's ſalvation as well as ungodlineſs in practice. He that has a due care of his ſoul's ſalvation, will be as well afraid of erroneous principles, as he is of debauch'd practices: For error is as damnable as vice; the one is an open road, the other a by-path, to hell and deſtruction. (Idem) See more in the other notes here immediately following.

He ſhall receive a reward.] See the notes on ver. 8.

Shall ſuffer loſs.] Of the word Zemiotheſetai here, it may be firſt inquir'd, whether it belongs to the man, or to his work, both immediately preceding, (ei tinos to ergon) "if any man's work." That which inclines it to ſignify the work, is the autos de which follows, "but himſelf ſhall be ſaved;" which ſeems to oppoſe himſelf to his work; that the one ſhall be loſt, but the other ſaved. But this is well enough avoided, by ſetting the oppoſition betwixt the ſaving of him and the burning of his work, precedent here to the zemiotheſetai: And then the conſideration of that, as it anſwers the former probability, ſo it inclines more ſtrongly to render it the other way, that the man, not the work (zemiotheſetai) ſhall be mulcted: For ſo this word ſignifies not to be loſt, but to ſuffer loſs, Matth. xvi. 26. Which cannot be here ſaid of the work, of which it had before been ſaid, it "ſhall be burnt:" For what is ſo, doth not ſuffer a mulct, or fine, or loſs, (which according to all laws muſt be, ſalvo contenemento, without utter ruin) but is loſt, and utterly deſtroyed. It remains then, that it be ſpoken of the man, whether falſe teacher, or any follower of ſuch, that takes up any ſuch falſe doctrine from him, and ſo upon the doctrine of Chriſt, profeſſing ſtill, or not denying of Chriſt, (epoikodomei) ſuperſtructs ſome falſe doctrines, and erroneous practices. And of him it is here ſaid, that "he ſhall ſuffer loſs," ſo as the metal that goes into the fire with droſs or embaſement mix'd with it, is ſeparated from all that mixture, and comes out a great deal leſs than it went in, loſeth all that droſs in that trial of fire. Now, how this is to be particularly underſtood of this ſuperſtructure of hay or ſtubble here, muſt be collected from the conſideration of "the day" which is here mention'd, ver. 13. that it ſhall declare, or reveal. The word day in all languages ſignifies judgment; and that "The day" emphatically, or The day of Chriſt, The day of the Lord, ſignified an approaching ſeaſon of judgment then expected on believers and miſbelievers, Jews and Gnoſticks all the world over, in the Chriſtian plantations. And that this is "the day," or judgement, that is here referred to, may appear, 1. By the excluſion of all other days. The only two ſenſes that can come in competition are either 1. That it ſignify the final day of judgment: Or, 2. The audience, and judicature, and ſentence of the Apoſtle, when he comes to examine this doctrine. For the firſt, That cannot be underſtood here, becauſe the office of the day here, is to make manifeſt, and to reveal, ver. 13. And therefore, ſuppoſing there were ſuch a day of conflagration, which they that maintain look on as a purging fire to burn up all the ill works of the Chriſtian, and fit him for Heaven; yet the circumſtances of the text here do not belong to that, but to another quality of the fire, the trying, revealing, and diſcriminating one from another; as appears by all the phraſes here uſed, "Every man's work ſhall be manifeſt; The day ſhall declare; It ſhall be revealed by the fire; The fire ſhall try what kind of work every man is; and if any man's work remain, (that is, abides the trial) he ſhall be rewarded." As for that of the Apoſtle's coming to judge and cenſure, it is not probably here meant: Becauſe theſe hereticks and their followers did not acknowledge the Apoſtle's power, but reſiſted and rejected them, as appears in divers other places, and oft lays a neceſſity on the Apoſtles to vindicate their authority. And 2dly, There is no reaſon to conceive, that the Apoſtle ſhould call his own ſentence by the name of the fire, or ſpeak of giving men rewards, ver. 14. which are to be expected from God. But then, 2dly, That it be applied to this of the puniſhment of God, now approaching the Gnoſticks, will appear not only by the mention of the "wood, hay, ſtubble," built on the foundation, which evidently denotes heretical ſuperſtructures, (and it is known that theſe were the great hereticks of thoſe times) and ſuch as will be ſure to periſh when fire comes; but alſo by the conſequents here, to the end of the chapter, which make up the known character of the Gnoſticks: For that conſiſted ſpecially of two things; 1. Their doctrines of uncleanneſs; 2dly, Their arts of worldly wiſdom, to ſecure themſelves from perſecutions, by complying with the perſecutors. And both theſe are here noted; that of uncleanneſs, ver. 16, 17. by the "defiling the temple of God," that is, themſelves; who, as Chriſtians, are obliged to be holy, but by the Gnoſtick infuſions were in danger of all pollutions; and thoſe that were immers'd in them, the Apoſtle foretells that they ſhall be deſtroyed by this day; "him ſhall God deſtroy," ver. 17. And ſo that of worldly wiſdom, ver. 18. "If any man among you ſeemeth to be wiſe in this world;" that is, prudent for the ſaving or ſecuring himſelf from perſecutions and dangers here: And of this the Apoſtle gives warning that this wiſdom is the greateſt folly; and that the contrary thereto is the only wiſdom even for this life: The conſtant adhering to Chriſt, the ſureſt means to deliver him from the dangers which here he fears; whereas theſe wiſe and prudential worldlings are likely to be "taken in their own craft," ver. 19. by their arts of ſecuring, to deſtroy themſelves, and ſo will appear vain and ridiculous in all their wiſe contrivances, ver. 20. according to that of Chriſt, Matth. xvi. 25. "he that will ſave his life ſhall loſe it." And therefore the form of advice here uſed is, "Let no man deceive himſelf." This practice of the Gnoſticks, in order to the ſecuring themſelves, was a great miſtake, the way to bring all deſtruction upon them, when the day of the Lord, the vengeance of Chriſt upon the crucifiers and perſecutors of Chriſtians, ſhall come ſuddenly upon them, and ſweep away the Gnoſticks among them. And ſo, the whole paſſage belonging clearly to theſe, the full importance of the zemiotheſetai will be, that they which being not ſo high in that hereſy as to deny the foundation, the faith of Chriſt, (which many did, and are elſewhere call'd Apoſtates and Antichriſts, and they that denied Chriſt to be come in the fleſh) and yet had received ſome of theſe Gnoſtick infuſions, that particularly of worldly prudence and compliance with the Jews, ſhould (contrary to their expectation of gaining by this means) ſuffer loſs, be in great hazard to be deſtroyed among them; and if they eſcaped, it ſhould be very narrowly; the conſtant, faithful, orthodox Chriſtian being the only one that ſhould be perfectly ſafe when that fiery day came, when the unfaithful and the cowardly ſhould either utterly periſh, or run an horrible hazard in that day. And to this purpoſe is it, that the doctrines of theſe Gnoſticks are expreſs'd by "wood, hay, ſtubble," earthly materials (and ſo notes of falſe doctrines, unfit to be built on this divine foundation) and thoſe, of all things, the moſt combuſtible and ſure to be deſtroyed, when a fiery trial comes; and that in two reſpects; 1. That when perſecution for Chriſt comes, ſuch a kind of Chriſtianity as this, is ſure to be burnt up; the Gnoſticks will not then hold out, and confeſs Chriſt: And, 2. In reſpect of Chriſt's coming to viſit and judge, to reward the conſtant, and deſtroy the unfaithful, then theſe prudential ways of theirs will be ſure to ſtand them in no ſtead, but bring them into greater danger, as he that means to ſecure himſelf againſt fire by "wood, hay, ſtubble," ſhall be ſure to have all burnt, and to increaſe, not leſſen the flame: Whereas the truly wiſe way (and that which Chriſt counſels the Church of Laodicea to, in oppoſition to theſe Gnoſticks, Rev. iii. 18. is to build gold, ſilver, &c. which having been tried in the fire (and ſo denoting conſtancy in perſecutions) are ſure to hold out, and endure the teſt, whatſoever the day of viſitation be; be the fire never ſo ſcorching, theſe will be the likelieſt to be preſerved in it. (H.)

Saved, yet ſo as by fire.] That ſozeſthai ſignifies to eſcape, hath been often noted: But what ſozeſthai dia, to eſcape by here ſignifies, is the only difficulty; and that will be beſt explained, by comparing it with other places of the ſame kind. Thus, 1 Pet. iii. 20. (dieſotheſan di hydatos) they were ſaved out of, or through, the water; the præpoſition dia being taken for ek or apo, out or from; or elſe, as the neceſſity of the matter imports, an eſcaping through water; implying conſquently an eſcaping out of it alſo: And ſo the ſenſe there will be, that tho' there were a great flood ready to drown all the earth, yet for all this, by the help of the ark they did eſcape that danger. And ſo here (ſoſetaithe hos dia pyros) he ſhall eſcape as one eſcapes out of the fire; that is, as St. Chryſoſtome expreſſes it, as one that, when in the midnight his houſe is ſet on fire, wakes and leaps out of the bed, and runs naked out of doors, taking nothing that is within along with him, taking care only (as he adds) that he may ſnatch his own body out of the flame. And it is a common obſervation, that hos dia pyros ſozeſthai, is a proverbial ſpeech for thoſe that get hardly out of a great danger; as Amos iv. 11. and Jude 23. By this means that of 1 Pet. iv. 18. will be explain'd alſo; for this will be the meaning of molis ſozetai (for which the Hebrew, Prov. xi. 31. reads "ſhall be recompenſed") he ſhall not eſcape without many loſſes and afflictions in that combuſtion. So as in Julian The night did hardly, or with great difficulty, reſcue a few; and in Agathias, who having ſpoken of ſome that were ready to be fired and burnt, adds, They hardly eſcape out of it. (Idem.) See Dr. Tillotſon's ſermon on this text.

Ver. 16, 17. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy: For the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

If any man defile.] Our Apoſtle here, in the judgment of ſome interpreters, makes uſe of a farther argument to convince the Corinthians of the evil of their diviſions. They are the church and temple of God, therefore not to be profan'd by diviſion: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?" As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Ye Corinthians, by being converted to Chriſtianity, are become a Chriſtian church, an holy temple, in which the Spirit of God doth dwell, and where the Spirit of diviſion ought not to dwell: For "if any man defile the temple of God (by dividing the church into factions and parties) him will God deſtroy; for the temple of the Lord is holy, (and not to be profaned by luſts) which temple ye are." Learn hence, 1. That the people of God, met together to worſhip him, are the church or ſpiritual temple of God 2. That the Spirit of God dwells in the church, or temple of God; and this dwelling implies property, familiarity, authority, reſidency, and fixedneſs of abode. 3. That ſuch as defile the holy temple of God either by factious diviſions, or erroneous doctrines, do provoke God to deſtroy them; that is, to puniſh them with temporal deſtruction, and without repentance, with eternal damnation. (B.) But the uſe of theſe words, chap. vi. 15, &c. as a dehortation from fornication; and 2 Cor vi. 16. from communion with Heathens, in their idolatrous rites, and evil practices; and there again, chap. vii. 1. by way of inducement to "cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and Spirit;" more naturally incline us to refer theſe verſes to the corrupting the temple of God, by filthineſs of the fleſh, uncleanneſs and fornication, or by filthineſs of the Spirit, i. e. idolatrous practices; both which the Corinthians did. And then the connexion will run thus, I have declared you to be "God's building," ver. 9. as being "built together for an habitation of God through the Spirit," Eph. ii. 22. If therefore ye do not keep this temple of God holy, but corrupt it by joining "the temple of God with Idols," 2 Cor vi. 16. or prophane and defile it by uncleanneſs and fornication, ye may expect that theſe ſins, by which God's temple is deſtroy'd, ſhould end in your own ruin and deſtruction. (W.) The Greek word here uſed, which we render both to defile, and to deſtroy, is but one and the ſame, tho' in different tenſes. It ſignifieth both to defile and deſtroy, to corrupt and violate. And therefore, as in the Greek, 'tis phtheirei phtheirei, ſo the tranſlation would render the original more naturally, if we alſo retain'd one Engliſh word; either thus, "If any man defile the temple of God, him ſhall God defile;" or thus, (as 'tis in our margin) "If any man deſtroy the temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy." For it is not only an elegancy, but pregnant alſo in inſtruction; viz. teaching us, That the puniſhment of ſuch offenders ſhall be in juſtice proportion'd to their offence; defiling for defiling, violence for violence, degree for degree: If they will be dilapidating and corrupting God's houſe, they ſhall have enough of it; for God will dilapidate and corrupt them: Ei tis, "if any man" do the one, touton, "him," that ſame man, ſhall God puniſh with the other: Whoever he be, teacher or hearer, of high eſteem either for place, or for gifts and graces, this man will God certainly meet withal; this his ſin will find him out. (R. Byfield) See the notes on Rom. viii. 9.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. Let no man deceive himſelf: If any man among you ſeemeth to be wiſe in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wiſe. For the wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God: For it is written, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wiſe, that they are vain. Therefore let no man glory in men: For all things are yours: Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things preſent, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Chriſt's; and Chriſt is God's.

Let no man deceive himſelf.] A neceſſary caution. For ſelf-deceit is the ground of all other deceit. Whatever deceit is abroad, it begins at home. A deceitful heart will not ſo much as ſpare it ſelf; tho' this ſelf-deceit be moſt unnatural and monſtrous, moſt fatal and pernicious. (B.) If men were true to their own intereſts, they would never be falſe to others: If they were faithful in what belongs to themſelves, they might be truſted with their neighbours. But now, when they firſt try concluſions upon their own hearts, for the deceiving of them, they do more readily practiſe it upon their brethren, for the deceiving of them with them. (Horton) The word (exapatato) ſignifies ſuch a deceit, as a ſubtle thief uſeth to a traveller, offering himſelf a guide, to direct him a better way to his journey's end, and ſo leading him to ſome diſmal place that he may rob him. (Leigh)

If any man among you.] See the notes on chap. i. 17, &c. ii. 1, &c. and Rom. xii. 3.

Is fooliſhneſs with God.] See the notes on chap. i. 19, &c.

Let no man glory.] See the notes on chap. i. 29, &c.

For all things are yours.] Here the Apoſtle cloſes his diſcourſe, with an inference not to glory in any teacher whatſoever; either in "Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas," ſeeing they were all theirs: That is, all the Apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt, from the higheſt to the loweſt, from the greateſt to the leaſt, and all their miniſterial gifts and labours, are all ordained and appointed by God for their uſe and ſervice: "All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas." Learn hence, That all miniſters and miniſterial abilities, are wholly for the church's ſervice, and ſpiritual advantage: All their power is for the church's preſervation, all their gifts are for the church's edification: Their meſſage is for the church's comfort and conſolation: Thus all things, in and belonging to the church, are ours. Next he mentions the things of the world as ours: "Or the world;" that is, all the good things in the world are ours, houſes, lands, honours, friends, relations, ſo far as God ſees them good for us. But are there not many that are Chriſt's, who want houſes and friends, and other comforts, how then can they be ſaid to have them? Anſw. 1. They have all things eminently and tranſcendently in God and Chriſt, by whom they have a title to all things, Rev. xxi. 7. 2. They have all things eventually: They have the good of all things, when they have not the actual poſſeſſion of all things; their very wants in the event work for good. "Or life:" This is ours two ways; The comfort of life is ours, and the end of life is ours, with the true uſe of it; for the ſincere Chriſtian only lives to purpoſe, by anſwering the great end of life, which is the promoting God's glory, and ſecuring his own ſalvation. "Or death:" That which is in itſelf ſo terrible, is for the believer's advantage, their friend, their privilege, their paſſage to heaven, their deliverer from ſin, the perfecter of their grace; when we come at heaven, and not till then, we ſhall fully underſtand what this meaneth. "Nor things preſent:" That is, all the events of providence which befal us, whether proſperity or adverſity, health or ſickneſs, riches or poverty, they are all ſanctified to us, and are inſtrumental for the ſanctifying of us: They are covenant bleſſings, and diſpenſed in love to us. "Or things to come;" That is, all future things that may befal us in this world, and in the world to come, ſhall be to our abundant advantage; whether they be merciful and good things, or grievous and ſad things; particularly, death is to come, but to die is Gain: Chriſt's death was the death of death; he has diſarm'd death of its ſting; the believer fears not its dart; it is not a hurting, but a healing ſerpent: There is no venom or malignity in it; but that which was before in the number of threatnings, is now brought within the compaſs of the Goſpel promiſes; all things are ours, life or death, things preſent, and things to come. "And ye are Chriſt's;" That is, not Paul's or Apollos's diſciples or ſervants, but only Chriſt's, therefore glory only in him: Conſecrate all to the ſervice of Chriſt, and reſign up all to the will of Chriſt; ye are Chriſt's by donation, ye are Chriſt's by redemption, ye are Chriſt's by conqueſt; ye are therefore to glory in him, and in him only. "And Chriſt God's;" that is, as ye are Chriſt's, and for his glory; ſo Chriſt, as mediator, is God's, and for his glory. He is God's ſervant, to do his will, to execute his pleaſure. He was begotten of his Father before all time. He received his doctrine from the Father in the fulneſs of time. He ſought not his own, but his Father's glory, in the doctrine which he preached, in the miracles which he wrought; but living in an entire reſignation to his Father's pleaſure. Lord! How will it ſhame us, thy ſervants, to follow Chriſt, and to be call'd by his name, if we ſeek not his glory, and exalt not his will, and live not to his praiſe, who died for us, and roſe again. (B.) How magnificently are the happy privileges of Chriſtians, thro' Jeſus, ſet forth, in this noble exaltation! Firſt, here is a full and vehement enumeration of particulars; and then a noble gradation, which riſes up to the heaven of heavens, and terminates in the bleſſed God himſelf. (Blackw.) But whereas the Socinians cry out here, of a difference or diſtinction between God and Chriſt, and that it appears hence (ſaith Crellius) that Chriſt is in no wiſe God moſt high, as having another above him, as his head, on whom he depends, and from whom he is here manifeſtly diſtinguiſh'd; 'tis certain, the Fathers thought not ſo, who ſay, Chriſt is of God, as being begotten by him before all ages, and having him for his Father, as receiving the divine nature from him: Others grant this of Chriſt, as mediator betwixt us and God; in which ſenſe he performing that office as Man, or by virtue of his human nature, in which alone he could be a Prophet ſent from God, or offer up himſelf to the death for us, or intercede in our behalf, or be exalted to the right hand of God to be a prince and a Saviour: He therefore was exalted thus to the glory of God the Father; and ſo depended on him in the exerciſe of that office. See the notes on chap xi. 3. (W.)

CHAP. IV.

What regard is juſtly due to the Miniſters of Chriſt, viz. Neither to be idolized on the one hand, nor vilified on the other. The ſufferings and patience of the Apoſtles. St. Paul's fatherly authority aſſerted.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. LET a man ſo account of us, as of the miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God. Moreover it is required in ſtewards, that a man be found faithful. But with me it is a very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of you, or of mans judgment: Yea, I judge not mine own ſelf. For I know nothing by my ſelf, yet am I not hereby juſtified: But he that judgeth me is the Lord. Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts; and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God. And theſe things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to my ſelf, and to Apollos, for your ſakes: That ye might learn in us not to think of men, above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one againſt another. For who maketh thee to differ from another? And what haſt thou that thou didſt not receive? Now if thou didſt receive it, why doſt thou glory as if thou hadſt not received it? Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have reigned as kings without us: And I would to God ye did reign, that we alſo might reign with you. For I think that God hath ſet forth the Apoſtles laſt, as it were appointed to death. For we are made a ſpectacle unto the world, and to Angels, and to men. We are fools for Chriſt's ſake, but ye are wiſe in Chriſt: We are weak, but ye are ſtrong: Ye are honourable, but we are deſpiſed. Even unto this preſent hour, we both hunger and thirſt, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place; And labour, working with our own hands: Being reviled, we bleſs: Being perſecuted, we ſuffer it: Being defamed, we intreat: We are made as the filth of the world, and are the off-ſcouring of all things unto this day.

Let a man ſo account of us.] Here the Apoſtle raiſeth up again thoſe whom, in the foregoing chapter, he might ſeem to have caſt down and leſſened. (G.) For, as if he had carried the matter a little too far, and given them occaſion to think too meanly of this office, he ſeems, as it were, to correct himſelf in theſe words, the ſcope and coherence of which with what goes before may be illuſtrated by ſome ſuch paraphraſe as this; Tho' we are yours, as we have received our miniſtry for your ſervice and benefit, yet ye are to conſider, that we have receiv'd it from Chriſt and from God: And therefore, tho' we do not pretend to be the maſters of your faith, but only "Miniſters by whom ye believed;" yet ye ought to look upon us, as the Miniſters and ſervants of Chriſt, to whom, as to ſtewards (which is an office of great truſt and dignity,) is committed the care and overſight of you, and the power of diſpenſing to you the myſteries of the Goſpel: In which words the Apoſtle plainly intimates a more than ordinary account to be made of the Miniſters, and eſpecially of the Apoſtles, of Chriſt: Wherein is implied chiefly, 1. Juſt and due apprehenſions concerning their office and authority: And, 2. Suitable carriage and demeanour towards them. (Sydall)

The Miniſters of Chriſt.] The word (hyperetes) Miniſter, is taken from Eretes, an oar, and may be rendred under-rowers; becauſe, under Chriſt, the maſter-pilot, they help forward the ſhip of the church towards the port, Heaven. (Leigh.) The paſtors of the Church, beſides the proper names belonging to their office, ſuch as Apoſtles, Biſhops, and Elders, have ſeveral other figurative appellations and titles given to them in the New Teſtament; ſome of which ſeem to import only an obligation to labour and diligence; and being taken from mean and ſervile employments, do not, of themſelves, give any advantage to the character, nor raiſe any great ideas in us of the office and authority of ſuch as miniſter about holy things; ſuch as, Miniſters, Builders, Labourers. But when it is conſider'd, whoſe Miniſters and Labourers they are, and whoſe companions in labour, viz. "Miniſters of God and of Chriſt," "labourers together with God," and "workers together with Chriſt," they give us a quite different view of the matter. But there are other titles and names given to them, which as they ſuppoſe care and diligence becauſe of the truſt repoſed in them, ſo they carry in the very name undeniable characters of great honour, dignity, and authority. Such as, 1. Stewards, which is a moſt honourable title in a family; their buſineſs being to have the inſpection of the reſt of the ſervants, and to aſſign to each his due portion both of labour and proviſion. So that when they are here call'd, "Stewards of the myſteries of God," it denotes their having the care of, and ordering holy things; their power of diſpenſing the word and ſacraments, and of ſeparating, and ordaining perſons to the ſacred miniſtry. And thus St. Paul calls a Biſhop, "the Steward of God." Tit. i. 7. 2. The paſtors of the Church are call'd Ambaſſadors, 2 Cor. v. 19, 20. The great deſign upon which our Saviour came into the world, was to ſet on foot a treaty and to mediate a peace between God and man. This he firſt perform'd in his own perſon; but upon his leaving the world, he committed the word of reconciliation to his Apoſtles: And they acting by his commiſſion, thought it no preſumption to call themſelves ambaſſadors for, or in the behalf of, Chriſt. 3. They are call'd Angels, to ſhew their divine miſſion and authority. But of theſe more at large in another place. By theſe titles and appellations we ſee, what notion and apprehenſions the Scripture teaches us to have concerning ſpiritual paſtors; viz. as an order of men inſtituted by God for the nobleſt purpoſes, and call'd to an office of the higheſt truſt and authority: That they have an immediate relation to God, not only as his Miniſters and Stewards, but as his Ambaſſadors and Angels or meſſengers; by whom, as by his ſubſtituteſ, he manages all the affairs of the Church, which is his ſpiritual kingdom; as he does thoſe of his temporal kingdom, by the higher powers, who are likewiſe ordain'd by him. And therefore, as we are oblig'd to be ſubject to the governors of the ſtate, as unto them who are ordain'd of God; ſo likewiſe we are bound in conſcience, to be obedient to thoſe who are ſet over us in the Lord, to thoſe who are ſet over us in ſpirituals, and are over us in the Lord, to "watch for our ſouls," Heb. xiii. 17. And altho' theſe excellent things were ſpoken primarily of the Apoſtles, and of thoſe who were immediately appointed and ordain'd by them; and altho' the glorious characters mention'd do moſt ſtrictly and properly belong to ſuch as receiv'd their commiſſion either immediately from Chriſt, or from the Apoſtles by the direction of the Holy Ghoſt, and were endu'd with miraculous gifts; yet, in a lower ſenſe, and in proportion, they are applicable to all following governors of the Church. For, as they ſucceed the Apoſtles in ſuch parts of their office, and in ſuch degrees of their power and authority as are neceſſary for the good government of the Church, and the edification of it in all ages; ſo they are, conſequently, entitl'd, in ſome ſenſe, to thoſe characters and deſignations given to them, and to a proportionable degree of that honour and dignity which thoſe characters import. And thus we find, that the good primitive Biſhops, tho' they did not think it proper to retain the name of Apoſtles, (as judging it more convenient to be appropriated to thoſe who were immediately ſent by Chriſt) yet they ſtill look'd upon themſelves as ſucceſſors to them in the government of the church and claim'd a pre-eminence anſwerable to that character, and exercis'd a ſuitable authority, and the people readily acknowledged them as ſuch, and paid them the utmoſt reſpect and obedience. And that the former ſhould wrongfully aſſume a character and authority that did not belong to them, or the latter weakly comply and ſubmit to it, is not in the leaſt degree credible. (Sydall) But tho' we are all Miniſters in the Apoſtle's ſenſe, yet how abuſively and improperly we are ſo call'd, in the ordinary prevailing uſe of the word, will appear by what here follows. All eccleſiaſtical perſons or clergymen may be conſider'd in a threefold relation; 1. To God. 2. To the people. 3. One toward another. In reſpect to God, all are miniſters, of what degree ſoever they be; becauſe they do what they do, by commiſſion from him, either more or leſs immediate: For a miniſter is he qui operam ſuam alicui, ut ſuperiori, præbet. In reſpect of the people all are Biſhops, that is, Inſpectores, or overſeers; as having charge to look unto them. But, compared one to another, he whom we uſually call Biſhop is the only overſeer of the reſt; Inſpector totius Cleri. Deacons are only miniſters to the reſt; and in that reſpect have their name. Biſhops are a degree of Presbyters, of divine ordinance; to be as heads, chiefs, and preſidents of their brethren: All eccleſiaſtical miniſters, whether in Eccleſia, or Foro eccleſiaſtico (I mean whether they attend divine duties in the church, or juriſdiction in eccleſiaſtical courts) are all a kind of Deacons; being to the Presbyters, either ſingle or epiſcopal, as the Levites were to the Sacerdotes in the Old Teſtament, namely, to miniſter unto, or for them. Theſe grounds being forelaid and underſtood, I affirm, 1. That Presbyters are by us unnaturally and improperly call'd miniſters, either of the church, or of ſuch, or ſuch a pariſh: We ſhould call them, as the text doth, miniſters of God, or "miniſters of Chriſt;" not miniſters of men. 1. Becauſe they are only God's miniſters who ſends them, but the people's magiſtri to teach, inſtruct, and overſee them: Were it not abſurd to call the ſhepherd, the ſheep's miniſter? If he be their miniſter, they ſurely are his maſters. And ſo indeed the people, by occaſion of this miſappellation, think they are ours, and uſe us accordingly. Indeed we are call'd miniſters, but never their miniſters; but, as you ſee here, God's miniſters, Chriſt's miniſters, who imployeth us to diſpenſe his myſteries unto his church. There are three words in the New Teſtament, tranſlated miniſter; Diaconos, Hyperetees, Leitourgos. The firſt is moſt frequent; but not one of them is given to the Apoſtles, in the whole Scripture, with relation to the church or people: You ſhall never find them called Diaconoi, or Hyperetai tes Eccleſias, which is ſo frequent with us; but "Miniſters of God," 2 Cor. vi. 4. 1 Theſ. iii. 2. "Miniſters of Chriſt," as here, and 2 Cor. xi. 23. Col. i. 7. "Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt," 1 Tim iv. 6. or miniſters of that which they miniſter; as "Miniſters of the New Teſtament," 2 Cor. iii. 6. "Miniſters of the Goſpel," Eph. iii. 7. Coloſ. i. 23. But not miniſters of them to whoſe behoof they miniſter: Yet might this ſpeech, Miniſter of the church, if rightly conſtrued, be admitted; namely, if it be ſpoken, by an ellipſis, for miniſter of God, for, and over the church! So the Apoſtle, Coloſſ. i. 7. "A faithful miniſter of Chriſt for you;" that is, Chriſt's miniſter, not theirs: Yet not for Chriſt, but for them: But thoſe who uſe this ſpeech, commonly mean otherwiſe. 2. Angels are called "miniſtring ſpirits;" but not our miniſters, but God's miniſters to us-ward, or for our behalf: So miniſters of the Goſpel; not the people's, or congregation's miniſters, but God's miniſters for their behoof. 3. This ſpeech, miniſter of the church, or, of this, or that church, is ſo much the more incommodious, becauſe it hath begotten (as incommodious and unapt ſpeeches do) an erroneous conceit, not only among the vulgar, but ſome of better underſtanding; namely, that a miniſter is not lawfully called, unleſs he be choſen by the people, becauſe he is their miniſter, and ſo to be deputed by them: And indeed if he be their miniſter, in proper relation, they are his maſters; and ſo it is good reaſon they ſhould appoint him, as maſters do thoſe who are to ſerve them! But if, in proper relation, they are God's miniſters, and not theirs, tho' for them, then God is to appoint them, or ſuch as he hath put in place to do it. It is an erroneous opinion, that ſome maintain, that the power of ſacred order, and of the keys, is given by God immediately to the body of the congregation; and that they depute him who is their miniſter, to execute the power which is originally in them: For that power is conferr'd by God immediately to thoſe, who are Biſhops, and Paſtors, and, by and through them, reaches to the whole body, and no otherwiſe. Tantum potuit incommodi ſermonis uſus. Some perhaps object againſt this whole aſſertion, that of St. Paul, 2 Cor. iv. 5. "We preach not our ſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, (to wit, eſſe Dominum) and our ſelves your ſervants for Jeſus ſake." If the Apoſtles were the churches ſervants, why not their miniſters? I anſwer, The Apoſtle ſays not, they were the Corinthians ſervants, but that he had made himſelf ſo, in his preaching to them: So he ſays expreſly 1 Cor. ix. 19. "For tho' I be free from all men, yet I have made my ſelf a ſervant to all, that I might gain the more:" Yet he confeſſes the Corinthians began to vilify him for this condeſcenſion, 2 Cor. xi. 7. "Have I committed an offence in abaſing my ſelf, that ye might be exalted, becauſe I have preached unto you the Goſpel of God freely?" This was that wherein he carried himſelf toward the Corinthians as a ſervant; but to other churches he did not ſo! It would be a ſtrange aſſertion, to ſay the Apoſtle was the Corinthians ſervant, in a proper relation: We know, he ſays, Gal.. i. 10. "If I pleaſed men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt;" And, Rom. vi. 16. "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield your ſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants ye are to whom ye obey?" I come now to a ſecond aſſertion; which is, that how ſoever any eccleſiaſtical perſon may be rightly called a miniſter, (ſo it be in a proper relation to God-ward) yet the word miniſter is again moſt unfitly uſed amongſt us, for a name of diſtinction of one eccleſiaſtical order from another: As when they call thoſe who are Presbyters, miniſters, by way of diſtinction from deacons; for ſo they ſpeak; Miniſters and deacons, inſtead of prieſts and deacons! The reaſon they thus ſpeak, is to avoid the name Prieſt; which they conceive to ſignify ſacerdos, that is, one that ſacrificeth, ſuch as were thoſe in the law: But our curates of holy things in the Goſpel, are not to offer ſacrifice, and therefore (ſay they) ought not to be called ſacerdotes, and conſequently, not prieſts. This is their reaſon: But if it be well examined, Prieſt is the Engliſh of Presbyter, and not of ſacerdos; there being in our tongue no word in uſe for ſacerdos, Prieſt, which we uſe for both, being improperly uſed for a ſacrificer, but naturally expreſſing a Presbyter; the name whereby the Apoſtles call both themſelves, and thoſe who ſucceed them in their charge. For who can deny that our word Prieſt is corrupted of Presbyter? Our anceſtors the Saxons firſt uſed preoſter; which by a farther contraction became preſte, and Prieſt: The high and low Dutch have prieſter, the French preſtre, Italian prete, but the Spaniard only ſpeaks it full presbytero. But, to come more near the point, our men, in uſing the word miniſter, for a diſtinctive name, inſtead of prieſt, incur four ſoleciſmes; I mean when we uſe the word miniſter not at large, but for a diſtinction from the order of deacons, ſaying Miniſters and deacons. 1. We run into that we ſought to avoid: For we would avoid to call the Presbyters of the Goſpel, by the name of the ſacrificers of the law; and yet run into it in ſuch ſort, that we ſtyle thoſe of the law by the evangelical name: The Hebrew calls thoſe of the law Cohanim, of cohan, which properly ſignifies to miniſter; and thence comes the Greek word coneo, and diaconeo; but we call thoſe of the Goſpel, Cohanim, when we ſtyle them miniſters: On the contrary, the Apoſtles ſtyle thoſe of the Goſpel, Presbyters; but we transfer that name to thoſe of the law, when we call them Prieſts: This is counterchange; running foul upon one rock, to avoid falling upon another. 2. It is a confuſion or tautology, to ſay Miniſters and deacons; that is, miniſters and miniſters! For Diaconos is, in the Greek, a miniſter. The one is in Greek a miniſter, the other in Latin; as if one ſhould ſay, Homo and anthropos, or diluvium and cataclyſmus, and think ſo to diſtinguiſh things of ſeveral natures, or conditions. 3. We impoſe upon that order, a name of a direct contrary notion to what the Apoſtles gave them: The Apoſtles gave them a name of elderſhip, and ſuperiority, in calling them Presbyteri; we of inferiority, and ſubordination in calling them miniſtri. The Jews had no name more honourable than that of elder, perisbyteroi; for ſo they called their magiſtrates: So we read of "elders of the people," and "elders of the prieſts and Levites;" meaning the chief in both ſorts. This honourable name the Apoſtles gave, as a name of diſtinction, to the evangelical paſtors, whereby they dignified them above thoſe of the law; whoſe name in the Hebrew (as I ſaid before) is but a denomination of miniſtry: And we have rejected the name of dignity, of Fatherſhip and Elderſhip, and aſſumed inſtead thereof, a name of under-ſervice, of ſubjection, of miniſtry, to diſtinguiſh our order by. I ſay to diſtinguiſh our order: For in a general ſenſe, and with reference to God, we are all his miniſters; and it is an honour unto us ſo to be, more than to be other mens maſters, as our Apoſtle in the text intimates. 4. In the churches beyond the ſeas, there is a worſe ſoleciſme, by reaſon of this miſapplied ſpeech. They have a kind of officers, who are the paſtor's aſſiſtants in diſcipline, much like to our churchwardens; and theſe they call elders, we ſtyle them lay-elders. Theſe are but a kind of deacons at the moſt; and of a new erection too: And yet theſe are dignified by the name of Elders, and Presbyters, who are indeed but deacons, or miniſters; and the paſtor himſelf is called a miniſter, who in the Apoſtles ſtyle is the only Presbyter or elder. For ſo they ſpeak, The miniſter and his presbyters, or elders. To conclude, It had been to be wiſhed, that thoſe whom the term of Prieſt diſpleaſed, through their miſtaken notion or abuſe of the word Sacrifice, had rather reſtored the apoſtolical name of Preſbyter in the full ſound; which would have been as ſoon, and as eaſily learned and underſtood, as Miniſter, and was no way ſubject to that ſuppoſed inconvenience: But miſapplication of the word Preſbyter, in ſome churches, to an order which the Apoſtles called not by that name, deprived thoſe thereof, to whom it was properly due. However, when they call us Miniſters, "let them ſo account of us, as of the miniſters of Chriſt," and not of men; not as deputed by the congregation, to execute a power as originally in them, but as "Stewards of the myſteries of God." (Mede) See the notes on 2 Cor. iv. 5.

Stewards of the myſteries of God.] This contains the matter about which the miniſtry is imploy'd; viz. in diſpenſing the myſteries of God. This office is two-fold. 1. To ſuper-intend the daily proviſions of Chriſt's family, 2. To take care that due order be obſerv'd, and their maſter's honour kept up. 1. As Stewards, they are to provide a due portion of ſpiritual food for the ſeveral parts of the family committed to their care, according to the different capacities of each; Milk for babes, and ſtronger meat for ſuch as have ſtronger underſtanding. But here, there muſt be ſpecial regard had to the myſteries of the Goſpel, which are more properly applicable to the doctrines with which they ought to inſtruct the family. It was only by revelation that men could know the incarnation, the ſatisfaction and redemption of our bleſſed Saviour, the juſtification thro' faith, the doctrine of the Trinity, and ſuch like. Theſe therefore having been reveal'd by Chriſt and by the Holy Ghoſt, to the firſt Apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt, they were the Stewards of thoſe myſteries to diſpenſe them to others. They were truſted to open and unfold thoſe ſecrets, and "to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of Jeſus Chriſt," 2 Cor. iv. 6. Nor is their diſpenſing the ordinances of the Goſpel without myſtery. For the ſacraments are not only ſigns and memorials of that redemption purchas'd by the myſtery of Chriſt's ſatisfaction, but they are ſeals and conveyances of it. By one ſacrament we are admitted and initiated into Chriſt's family, and receive grace, and the pardon of our ſins; and by the other, we are confirm'd and ſtrengthned in newneſs of life. 2. It is the ſteward's office, to take care that decency and order be kept in the church, which is the houſe of God. And therefore to the Apoſtles, and in them to the paſtors of the church, to the end of the world, were given the keys of the kingdom of Heaven; the power of binding and looſing. They are firſt to admit into the church, ſuch as are qualify'd, by baptiſm. But if thoſe who are admitted do not behave as they ought, they may be cenſur'd by the ſteward; and if they become refractory and incorrigible, they may be turn'd out of the houſe by excommunication. And this is ſo far from placing Imperium in imperio, as ſome pretend to fear, that the very nature of this diſcipline denies any carnal weapons, either for offence, or for its own ſupport. The puniſhment it inflicts is not a ſecular coertion, but a ſpiritual: Its dominion is not directly upon the lives and bodies of men, but upon their minds and conſciences. 'Tis true, (in certain caſes) a civil ſanction follows the canons of the church, and enforceth her authority by a temporal power: But that is an aſſiſtance lent her from without, ſince her incorporation with the ſtate, and conſequently none of her own product. It muſt be own'd, however, that the church ſubſiſted before, upon her own bottom, upon the laws of her own diſcipline, and had her own Regimen, antecedently to civil laws and polity; Or elſe, what became of her before the time of Conſtantine? Surely, then, when Nurſing Fathers and Nurſing Mothers (to verefy the Prophet's prediction, Iſa. xlix. 23.) came themſelves to take her into their favour, they did not null the laws ſhe had before, nor take away what was her own, by giving her an additional protection. The church then ſtands upon her own intrinſick authority, whether in, or without, the ſtate: She owns the ſame law-giver ſhe had from the beginning, and cannot depart from the powers he enabled her to govern by, without ceaſing to be that ſociety which he erected. (Bynns) See the notes on Luke xiv. 23. John xviii. 36. and Acts v. 29.

Required in ſtewards, that a man be found faithful.] 'Tis a juſt and reaſonable ſentence of our Saviour's, that "unto whomſoever much is given, much ſhall be required," Luke xii. 48. And 'tis in no caſe more applicable, than in this now before us. For, as the ſtewardſhip of the miniſtry is, of all others, the moſt noble and important; ſo there's a greater number and meaſure of endowments required, to qualify men for it: And, as 'tis every paſtor's duty, to endeavour the attainment of them, and to come as near them as he can; ſo, wherever they are, or in whatſoever degree, they bring each of them their ſeveral obligations upon theſe ſtewards, with fidelity to employ them to the great ends of religion, in the ſeveral parts and branches of their duty, 1. To be faithful to the people in the miniſtration of their office: With a ſpirit of zeal and piety reading the publick prayers of the church; with a becoming awe and reverence performing the ſolemn ſervice of the altar; and with great efforts of zeal and prudence fulfilling the duty of the pulpit. The true and faithful paſtor is not to accommodate his doctrines to the times, to wreſt and diſguiſe the ſcriptures in favour of a party, or model them to the humours and vices of great men for the ſake of advancement: But, with the utmoſt ſincerity, perſpicuity and exactneſs, rightly to divide, and expound, "the word of truth," 2 Tim. ii. 4. to keep back nothing of what is given in charge to deliver, but unreſervedly to "declare the whole counſel of God," Acts xx. 27. But, beſides theſe, the ſick are to be viſited, the ſcrupulous ſatisfied, the weak ſupported, and the fallen rais'd; the ſtayed are to be reduced, the wavering confirmed, and thoſe who are at variance reconcil'd: And all theſe with proper remedies, cautions, exhortations, and reproofs. 2. To be faithful to Chriſt's church, in the ſupport and defence of her honour and intereſt againſt the treacheries and impoſtures of her pretended friends, as well as againſt the open aſſaults of her profeſs'd enemies. They are not, like Hirelings, to ſhrink, and flee away, when the wolf approaches; but, like good ſhepherds, to ſtand in the gap againſt all the invaders of this ſpiritual fold, and guard their flocks from being devour'd by the beaſts of the foreſt, even at the hazard of their lives: In a word, they muſt be continually wreſtling againſt the malice and fury, the fraud and ſubtlety of their earthly, as well as their infernal enemies; and amidſt all the encroachments of licentiouſneſs and profaneneſs, all the ſtorms of hereſy and ſchiſm in the church, and all the concuſſions of ſedition in the ſtate, muſt maintain their true principles firm and unſhaken, even tho' they lie firſt in the way to ſuffer and ſmart for them. And, 3. To be faithful to themſelves and their ſacred character, in adorning their doctrine by the regularity of their lives. For, without this, as they are too juſtly and deſervedly expoſed to the cenſure, contempt, and deſpite of the people, as well as to the ſevere laſhes and reproaches of their own conſcience; ſo they can never hope for ſucceſs in their miniſtry, or any other return of their labour, than their being condemn'd as wicked and unprofitable ſervants. (Smith) There is ſcarce any age, when there are not ſome ſins which are epidemical and popular; and it is dangerous to encounter any thing that is popular, that brings a man under an ill name, and a general odium. But, what is cenſure? What is reproach? What is perſecution, to a reſolved ſervant of Chriſt? He muſt expect, and, after the example of his great maſter, muſt contentedly bear, the indignities of a crooked generation. When he is reviled, he muſt bleſs; when he is defamed, he muſt entreat; when he is injur'd, he muſt forgive; when he is perſecuted, he muſt ſuffer. This, I confeſs, is not very pleaſing to fleſh and blood: But, no matter for that; this is our comfort, (and it is an abundant one) "the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world," 2 Cor. i. 12. (Killingb.) See more at large the ſeveral Sermons of Dr. Sydall, Dr. Smith, Mr. Bynns, and Mr. Killingbeck, on the text here explain'd.

A very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of you.] The judgment which St. Paul here profeſſes himſelf ſo little concern'd for, and diſſuades others from the exerciſe of, is not any public and legal one, which perſons in authority, whether eccleſiaſtical or civil, will paſs upon notorious offences; and which the miniſters of Chriſt, as well as others, are bound to ſubmit, and pay great deference to: But it is a judgment of private perſons, ſupported by no authority; a judgment of partiality and affection, which meddles where it hath nothing to do, and tends unduly to exalt or depreſs their teachers in the opinion of the world. And in bar to this, he offers two unanſwerable arguments: The one implied in their being "miniſters of Chriſt," accountable to none but their own maſter; who will judge all their actions one day immediately by himſelf; and who, in the mean while, judges ſuch as are of human cognizance, by thoſe who are deputed to act under him in an authoritative way; conſequently, when private perſons take upon them to cenſure and condemn ſuch, they incur the guilt of "judging another man's ſervant," Rom. xiv. 4. The other conſiſts in this, that theſe men neither have, nor can have, ſufficient proof to form a right judgment upon: Becauſe they cannot ſee into their teacher's conſcience; and ſo, not being able to take a full and diſtinct view of the principles he goes upon, muſt needs be liable to great miſtakes. (Stanh.) Not that the Apoſtle was unconcern'd, whether the Corinthians had a good eſteem of him, or not: For the contrary is evident from the whole drift of his Epiſtles; in which he labours to convince them of the truth of his doctrine, and of his ſincerity in the diſcharge of his office, and rejoiceth greatly in their affection to him, 2 Cor. vi. 13. vii. 14, 15. and viii. 24. His meaning therefore only is, That their judgment is little to him, in compariſon of the final, and unerring, judgment of the Lord. (W.) Therefore, ſays he, "I judge not mine own ſelf;" that is, definitively, ſo as to acquieſce in that judgment: For I may be deceiv'd in my judgment even of my ſelf; and therefore I leave my ſelf to the judgment of God. It is a ſingular ſupport to all the faithful members, and eſpecially to the miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, that they, and their actions, have a more righteous judge to be examin'd and tried by, than either the world or themſelves: The world's judgment may falſly condemn them, their own judgment may flatter and deceive them, but the judgment of God will deal impartially with them. (B.)

I know nothing by my ſelf.] Not, ſimply, no ſin; for "in many things we offend all," Jam. iii. 2. And "if we ſay that we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us," 1 John i. 8. But the Apoſtle's meaning is, My conſcience clears me from negligence and unfaithfulneſs in the function of my miniſtry. (Aſſ. and B.)

Yet am I not hereby juſtified.] Here the Apoſtle doth not intend to ſay, that he, and others, could have no good aſſurance of their preſent juſtification and favour with God, from the teſtimony of an upright conſcience, which (ſaith St. John) gives "confidence towards God," 1 John iii. 21. for, if ſo, farewel all joy and comfort in this world. He doth himſelf aſſure us, that their "rejoicing was this, the teſtimony of their conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, they had had their converſation in the world," 2 Cor. i. 12. He adviſeth all men to approve their own actions to themſelves: And then (ſaith he) "every man ſhall have rejoicing in himſelf alone, and not in another," Gal. vi. 4. His meaning therefore in this place is, That our final juſtification, or abſolution from condemnation, depends not on the judgment which we paſs upon our ſelves, but upon that which God, the righteous judge, will paſs upon us at the laſt. Here alſo note, in St. Paul, another ſenſe of juſtification, as it relates to our abſolution from condemnation, and our approbation as righteous at the laſt day, which (ſaith he) will be according to our works, 2 Cor. v. 10. and our fidelity in execution of the truſts committed to us, as here, ver. 2. (W.) See the notes on Rom. iii. 20. and iv. 2.

Judge nothing before the time.] See the notes on ver. 3. and on Matth. vii. 1. and Rom. ii. 1.

Manifeſt the counſels of the hearts.] Hence note, That the Lord Jeſus Chriſt muſt have the knowledge of the ſecrets of the hearts of all men ſubject to his judgment: And therefore he muſt be that God, who "alone knows the hearts of all men," 1 Kings viii. 39. and is alone the "ſearcher of all hearts," 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. "to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doing," Jer. xvii. 10. And therefore Chriſt expreſly aſcribes this knowledge to himſelf, by ſaying, "All the churches ſhall know, that I am he which ſearcheth the reins and hearts, and I will give unto every one of you according to your works," Rev. ii. 23. (W. and B.)

Then ſhall every man have praiſe of God.] That is, Every one ſhall have praiſe, who is praiſe-worthy: Every good man, tho' now diſprais'd and deſpis'd, tho' cenſur'd and condemn'd, tho' loaded with ſcandals and falſe reports; every righteous perſon ſhall then have praiſe from Chriſt the righteous judge. (B.) All who have praiſe, ſhall have it from him. This and ſuch like expreſſions, imply rather the ſingularity of the agent, than the univerſality of the patients. (Lukin) Some, no doubt, ſhall receive diſpraiſe: But the Apoſtle mentions praiſe only, becauſe the vice which he here reproveth, was, their giving more praiſe to ſome than to others, odiouſly extolling ſome to the diſparagement of himſelf, and others, who deſerv'd as well, or perhaps better than they. (Aſſ.)

I have in a figure transferred.] See the notes on chap. i. 11, &c. and iii. 4. and Rom. vii. 7.

Not to think of men, above.] What phronein ſignifies in this place, will beſt be gueſs'd by (phyſiouſthe) "puffed up," which follows on purpoſe to explain it. That ſignifying elation of mind to the deſpiſing of others, phronein muſt in all reaſon do ſo too. Thus 'tis expounded by the ſcholiaſt on Thucydides, St. Chryſoſtome, and Demoſthenes. (H.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 3.

Who maketh thee to differ.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Who is it that maketh one miniſter to differ from and excell another? Is it not God? If ſo, then let thoſe miniſters who have received the greateſt gifts from God, whom the inſpiration of the Almighty hath made moſt wiſe and underſtanding, be moſt humble themſelves; and let none take occaſion from thence to deſpiſe others who have received leſs. Learn hence, That miniſters, of great abilities, eminent for gifts and graces, are in great danger of being puft up themſelves, and their people alſo too prone to glory in them. There is a temptation in good things, yea, in the beſt things, to pride: The beſt men on earth may be over-heated by what they have received from heaven; and Satan may take occaſion, even from our raptures in ſpirit, to puff us up with ſpiritual pride: Therefore our Apoſtle puts forth this humbling and mortifying expoſtulation, "What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? Who made thee to differ?" There is nothing, wherein one miniſter, or indeed one man differeth, or is diſtinguiſhed from another, or wherein he excelleth another, but it is given him from God: It is God, and not himſelf, that makes him to differ: It is an high degree of pride, for any man to ſay, Ego diſcrevi meipſum, I of my ſelf have made my ſelf to differ. (B.) The Apoſtle manifeſtly ſpeaking here of thoſe gifts of the Spirit which were immediately infuſed without human induſtry, and were diſpenſed by God, and by his Spirit, according to his good pleaſure, ch. iii. 5. and xii. 11. it cannot be hence argued, that no man doth any thing to "make himſelf differ from another," in any virtue, or pious diſpoſitions. For, to what purpoſe are men continually exhorted, ſtirr'd up by powerful motives, to all Chriſtian duties, and particularly to excel in virtue, if theſe exhortations and motives are not propos'd to engage them to exerciſe theſe Chriſtian virtues, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the evil? And if one man, upon conſideration of theſe motives, do chuſe to live a pious life, whereas another is not by the ſame motives prevail'd on ſo to do, doth he not "differ from another" by virtue of that choice? And tho' the grace of God, by way of excitation, worketh in us thus to will, yet ſince our faculties do firſt deliberate upon, and then comply and chuſe to do that thing to which this grace incites us; if to conſider, be to differ from him who does not ſo, and to comply with and embrace the call of God, be to differ from him who complies not with the ſame call, it muſt be certain, that as God's grace preventing and exciting, ſo my faculties co-operating tend to make me differ from another; tho' having alſo theſe faculties from God, the action may be well aſcribed, and the whole glory of it muſt be due, to him. Seeing then no act of virtue, and no good habit is produced in us, without a frequent and manifold co-operation of our own faculties to the ſame action and habit, whereas theſe gifts of tongues, interpretation, and prophecy, were gifts conferr'd upon Chriſtians, in the primitive times, without any ſuch co-operation of their faculties; it cannot, with like reaſon, be inquired of the former, as it may of theſe gifts, "Who made thee to differ from another" in them? And tho' all ground, and even all pretence of glorying, by this immediate infuſion of theſe gifts, is evidently excluded; yet the Apoſtles themſelves do glory in thoſe good actions which they choſe to do, ch. ix. 15. 2 Cor. i. 12. xi. 21. and Gal. vi. 4. (W.)

That thou didſt not receive.] See the notes on John iii. 27. and Rom. xii. 6.

Now ye are full.] Theſe words are looked upon by interpreters, as an ironical reproof given by St. Paul to the Corinthians; in which with an holy deriſion he rebukes the over-weaning and high opinion which they had of their preſent attainments, and ſpiritual perfections. "Now ye are full, &c. As if he had ſaid, Now ye think your ſelves ſo full and rich in all kinds of knowledge, that ye deſpiſe your ſpiritual fathers, my ſelf and Apollos, who firſt converted you to the faith; we are looked upon as dull fellows, not worthy to be named in the ſame day with your new admired teachers! Ye advance your ſelves as much above us, as a king is above his own ſubjects. I wiſh with all my heart your happineſs were real, that we might be ſharers in it: But verily I fear that ye are only puft up with notions; I fear ye have little except in conceit; and there ye have a great deal too much. Learn hence, That ſpiritual pride, that is, boaſting of, and glorying in, the gifts, graces or privileges which are conferr'd upon us, is a ſin which the devil ſtrongly tempts, and profeſſors are extremely prone to the practice and commiſſion of. "Now ye are full, now ye are rich," &c. (B.)

Set forth us the Apoſtles laſt.] As in the former verſe, the flouriſhing condition of the Corinthians is ironically deſcribed; ſo here the afflicted and perſecuted condition of the Apoſtles is plainly declared: "We are a ſpectacle to the world, and appointed to death." The original word is, We are ſet as upon a theatre or ſtage, in publick view; heaven, earth, and hell, are ſpectators; God, angels, and men, wait to ſee the glorious triumphs of our faith and fortitude. What a great ſolemnity is there at the ſufferings of a ſaint! Bloody perſecutors are for making all the members, eſpecially all the miniſters of Chriſt, "a ſpectacle to the world:" An alluſion to the Roman ſpectacles; who carried thoſe perſons about for a ſight, that were to fight with wild beaſts; and if they eſcaped, were only reſerved for ſlaughter againſt another day. Thus the Apoſtles in their martyrdom conflicted with all ſorts of miſery, and with death itſelf at laſt. (Idem.) At thoſe Roman ſpectacles, (the beſtiarii, and the gladiatores) here referr'd to, in the morning men were brought upon the theatre to fight with wild beaſts; and to thoſe was allow'd armour, both to defend themſelves, and to ſmite the beaſt which aſſail'd them: But in the meridian ſpectacle the gladiators were brought out naked, and without any thing to defend them from the ſword of the aſſailant; and he who then eſcaped was only reſerv'd for ſlaughter to another day: So that theſe men might be well call'd (epithanatioi) men "appointed to death;" and this being the laſt appearance on the theatre for that day, they are ſaid here to be ſet forth (eſchatoi) the laſt. Of which two ſpectacles Seneca ſpeaks (Epiſt. 7.) And Tertullian cites the words thus, I think God hath choſen us Apoſtles laſt, as even to be expoſed to wild beaſts. (W.) So that, if the favour of God were to be inferred from proſperity, as many men think it is, the Apoſtles themſelves might ſeem to have the very loweſt place in it. (G.)

We are fools for Chriſt's ſake.] Either theſe words are ſpoken as an irony, as Oecumenius conceiveth, or they may be taken properly; and then they carry this ſenſe, "We are fools," in the opinion of the world, and yours, becauſe, for Chriſt's ſake and the Goſpel's, we expoſe our ſelves to manifold troubles and dangers; "but ye are wiſe," who ſo preach Chriſt, that yet ye hazard nothing for him, nor incur any danger of your perſons or eſtates ! (Aſſ.) The wiſdom of ſuffering Chriſtians, in hazarding all for Chriſt, and in laying down their lives in the cauſe of Chriſt, has been always accounted weakneſs and folly by the men of this world. (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 3. iii. 18. and Acts xvii. 18.

We both hunger and thirſt.] Obſerve here, The ſeveral kinds of ſufferings which the holy Apoſtles were expoſed to and exerciſed with; namely, hunger and want, poverty and reproach, perſecution and death. They ſuffer'd in their bodies by hunger, and nakedneſs, and ſtripes; in their names by ſcandals and reproaches, being accounted "as the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things." How then can we, the miniſters of Chriſt, complain of hard uſage from the world, when we conſider what thoſe great Apoſtles ſuffer'd in the world? (Idem.)

Are naked.] Gymneteuomen; We are meanly cloathed; not abſolutely naked. (G.) For as Glaſſius obſerves, the Scripture repreſents ſuch as naked who are ill-cloathed, as may be ſeen in many places; where it ought accordingly to be tranſlated ill-cloathed; in the ſame ſenſe as Seneca ſays, That he who has ſeen a man ill-cloathed, or cover'd with rags, ſays that he ſaw him naked. (Eſſ.)

Are buffeted.] See the notes on John xviii. 22. Acts xxiii. 2. and 2 Cor. xi. 23.

And labour, working with our own hands.] This St. Paul did ſometimes for neceſſity, and ſometimes that he "might not be chargeable to any," to whom he preach'd the Goſpel, 2 Theſſ. iii. 8. But, in mentioning it here, he ſeems ſecretly to tax the Corinthians; who tho' they were rich, and very bountiful to other teachers, yet ſuffer'd the Apoſtles to be in want, and under the neceſſity to relieve themſelves by their own labour. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xviii. 3. and xx. 34.

Being defamed, we entreat.] To be defamed, is to have our good name and reputation blaſted, to be evil ſpoken of; blaſphemoumenoi, the being reviled, deſpiſed, and falſly accuſed; having things laid to our charge that we know not, and being loaded with crimes and wickedneſs which we abhor. To entreat, is to make the mildeſt returns: Parakaloumen, we beſeech and perſwade; Obſecramur, et precamur, we pray to God for them, and deſire them to treat us with more fairneſs and juſtice, to look into the nature and tendency of thoſe opinions and actions for which they defame us; which we are aſſured will incline them to think better of us. (Whitear) To publiſh invectives againſt thoſe (even tho' the worſt of men) who reproach and perſecute us, is a modern piece of zeal, which the bleſſed Apoſtles, and holy ſufferers in the primitive times were not acquainted with, but perfect ſtrangers to. (B.) See the notes on Matth. v. 44. and Luke xxiii. 34.

As the filth of the world.] Perikatharmata ſignifies thoſe things which are uſed in the luſtrating a city among the Gentiles. Suidas has deſcrib'd the cuſtom of it thus, For the purging and luſtrating of a city they cloathed a man (in foul and filthy garments, ſay others) and put him to death; and he was called a luſtration or expiation: Thus, ſaith Euſtathius, Pericatharma is a luſtration, for which the vileſt perſons were wont to be uſed; ſordid, refuſe people. For thus it was, when the city was under any plague, or other great calamity, they choſe out one of the naſtieſt perſons in the city, and brought him to a certain place, with cheeſe, and dry figs, and a cake in his hand, and then beat him with rods about the ſecret parts, and then burnt him and the rods together in a ditch, and caſt the aſhes into the ſea, (paying a ſacrifice to Neptune, ſaith Suidas) with theſe words, (genou peripſema, genou catharma,) Be thou a luſtration for us. This perſon was call'd catharma and peripſema, and by Lycophron, and before him by Hipponax, pharmacon, a medicament, and by Philoſtratus (ſaith Sardus, de ritib. l. iii. c. 19. apotropaion, a cure, or averter of judgment from the city. (But this is a miſtake in Sardus; all that Philoſtratus ſaith being only this, that in the theatre to tou apotropaiou hidrutai, that is, the ſtatue of the deity that averteth judgment, plagues, &c. was ſet up.) By this it appears alſo, what is meant by (peripſema panton,) the refuſe of all in the next words; to wit, the very ſame thing in another expreſſion, the vileſt, refuſe creature in a city, ſuch as uſed to be the expiation in a public calamity. So ſaith Suidas, and Heſychius, Theſe two words are of the ſame ſignification, and denote thoſe who are paid for others ranſom, or put to death in others ſtead, or elſe any thing that is moſt vile, trodden under feet by all men. Thus, Tob. v. 18. we have this phraſe, "Let it be as refuſe in reſpect of our child," or in compariſon of him; the Heathen cuſtom, whence all this comes, being, in a manner, but a tranſcript of the Azazel, among the Jews, the Scape-goat, that was ſent into the wilderneſs with all the ſins of the people upon him, Levit. xvi. 22. which was therefore call'd apopompaios, rejectaneus, or refuſe. (H.) Hence Origen ſays, That our Lord, giving up himſelf for the propitiation of our ſins, was made much more than his Apoſtles (perikatharma tou koſmou, kai panton peripſema) the luſtration of the world, and peculiar ſacrifice of all men. (W.) So that the Apoſtle's meaning here is, as if he had ſaid, We are as deſpicable and odious, in the ſight of the people, as much loaded with the revilings and curſings of the multitude, as thoſe condemned perſons, who were offer'd up by way of public expiation. (Godw. and Leigh)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. I write not theſe things to ſhame you, but as my beloved ſons I warn you. For though ye have ten thouſand inſtructors in Chriſt, yet have ye not many fathers: For in Chriſt Jeſus I have begotten you through the goſpel. Wherefore I beſeech you, be ye followers of me. For this cauſe have I ſent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved ſon, and faithful in the Lord, who ſhall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Chriſt, as I teach every where in every church. Now ſome are puffed up as though I would not come to you. But I will come to you ſhortly, if the Lord will; and will know, not the ſpeech of them which are puffed up, but the power. For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power. What will ye? Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the ſpirit of meekneſs?

Inſtructors.] The word is pædagogos, ſchoolmaſters; whereby he puts a difference between himſelf and their preſent teachers. They, like ſchoolmaſters, taught for hire; but he freely: They imperiouſly; he tenderly, like a father, who begot them to Chriſt through the Goſpel. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John viii. 39.

Be ye followers of me.] Viz. In the ordinances which I have, and Timothy ſhall, deliver unto you from me; and in the example of humility and ſufferings which I have given you. (Fell) See the notes on ch. xi. 1.

Timotheus.] See the notes on Acts xvi. 1.

My ways.] That is, Either the way and rule which I follow every where, in teaching the churches; Or my courſe of life, and manner of converſation, that they may follow it. (Aſſ)

And will know.] That is, I will certainly come and try your boaſting envious teachers; not by their plauſible words and fine talk, diſcovering who has the ſmootheſt tongue: But I will examine the power; that is, Firſt, Their authority to preach; And next, What power and efficacy there is in their preaching; And laſtly, What power and influence their preaching has upon their own practice. (B.)

Not in word, but in power.] "The kingdom of God" is propagated, ſaith Theophylact, by miracles done by the power of the Spirit. For, to convince men of the truth of it, ſaith Chryſoſtome, 'tis not enough to uſe fine words, but the dead muſt be raiſ'd, the devils caſt out, and other mighty wonders muſt be wrought; for by theſe things the Goſpel is eſtabliſhed. (W.) See the notes on ch. ii. 4.

What will ye?] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, "I will come to you ſhortly," to regulate diſorders, and to rectify abuſes, among you. Now, chuſe ye how I ſhall come: Whether in the milder way of kindneſs, love and meekneſs towards you, or exerciſing the power God has given me, of inflicting corporal puniſhments on offenders, by delivering them to Satan, as God's executioner upon their bodies. Note here, 1. A power which the Apoſtle intimates himſelf to have in the Chriſtian church; namely, the power of the rod, that is, a power of inflicting the ſevereſt of corporal puniſhments, even death it ſelf, upon notorious offenders. Thus Elymas the ſorcerer was ſmitten with blindneſs by St. Paul, Acts xiii. 11. Ananias and Sapphira ſtruck dead by St. Peter, Acts v. 5, &c. Hymeneus and Alexander delivered unto Satan, 1 Tim. i. 29. It was uſual with God, in the earlier days of the Goſpel, to give Satan leave to ſeize the bodies of ſuch as were, for their obſtinate perſeverance in ſin, cut off from the communion of the church; who plagued them with diſeaſes, and ſometimes, with death, which is call'd "the deſtruction of the fleſh," 1 Cor. v. 5. 2. The neceſſary reaſon for inveſting ſuch a power, ſo great a power as this, in the Apoſtle; becauſe then there being no civil power of the magiſtrate on his ſide, had he been deſtitute of this extraordinary power, to puniſh bold and hardned tranſgreſſors, he could never have vindicated Chriſtianity from contempt, much leſs have conciliated any tolerable reſpect either to himſelf or it: People would have deſpis'd his perſon, and made a mock of his new religion; whereas finding him cloathed with his power, great fear fell upon the church, yea, on as many as heard theſe things, and the name of the Lord Jeſus was magnified, Acts v. 5. 3. How loth and unwilling the Apoſtle was to exerciſe this power of his, and to "come unto them with a rod," deſiring rather to uſe fair and gentle methods, and to come unto them "in love, and in the ſpirit of meekneſs." His paternal tenderneſs and fatherly affection, prompted him to menace and threaten puniſhment; but only to the end that he might not execute and inflict it, provided they would be but oblig'd by kindneſs, neſs, and reclaim'd by candid uſage. 4. That the Apoſtle was ſometimes forc'd, out of mere pity, to take his rod into his hand, to uſe ſharpneſs, tho' with great reluctancy; ſcourging them, to ſhew his compaſſion to them. In like manner muſt eccleſiaſtical rulers, to the end of the world, in order to maintain the church's purity and peace, by church-cenſures chaſtiſe that vice which doth deface the one, and thoſe diviſions that do diſturb the other. (B.) See the notes on ver. 1.

C H A P. V.

The church of Corinth reproved, for their neglect of diſcipline, in tolerating inceſt. The cenſure of excommunication denounced; and the end of it declared. Notorious offenders to be carefully avoided.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. IT is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and ſuch fornication as is not ſo much as named among the Gentiles, that one ſhould have his father's wife. And ye are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed, might be taken away from among you. For I verily as abſent in body, but preſent in ſpirit, have judged already, as though I were preſent, concerning him that hath ſo done this deed; in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when ye are gathered together, and my ſpirit with the power of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to deliver ſuch an one unto Satan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus. Your glorying is not good: Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Chriſt our paſſover is ſacrifiſed for us: Therefore let us keep the feaſt, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedneſs; but with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth. I wrote unto you in an epiſtle, not to company with fornicators. Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then muſt ye needs go out of the world. But now I have written unto you, not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with ſuch an one no not to eat. For what have I to do to judge them alſo that are without? Do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without, God judgeth. Therefore put away from among your ſelves that wicked perſon.

It is reported commonly.] Obſerve here, 1. The perſons, or the people blam'd. The famous church of Corinth has fornication, nay inceſt, charg'd upon her. Heinous ſins may creep into the beſt and pureſt churches: Yet doth not a church preſently ceaſe to be a true church; nor are Chriſtians preſently to ſeparate from the communion of a church, becauſe heinous crimes and ſcandalous offences are found in it. This church of Corinth was a true church; and it was ſchiſmatical to ſeparate from her communion, altho' erroneous principles and ſcandalous practices were found among the members of it. 2. The crime charg'd upon them; namely, that fornication was found among them; yea, the higheſt degree of fornication, to wit, inceſt. By the general name of fornication, all uncleanneſs is forbidden, all unlawful conjunctions and ſinful mixtures are condemn'd: By inceſt is to be underſtood the uncleanneſs of a perſon with ſome near relation; as a mother, a ſiſter, &c. 3. The crime of inceſt is not barely expreſs'd, but amplified and aggravated by its heinouſneſs, "ſuch as was not named among the Gentiles." Not but that many of the more brutiſh Gentiles were guilty of this ſin; but the more civilized among the Gentiles did, by the light of nature, deteſt and abhor it, condemn and forbid it. Lord! How ſad is it, that what is not ſo much as nam'd among the Heathens, ſhould be practis'd among Chriſtians! Whereas ſuch ſins ought not to be ſo much as nam'd among Chriſtians, which are practis'd among the Heathens. 4. The notoriouſneſs of the crime, "It is commonly reported;" the fame, or rather the infamy, of the fact ſpread far and near: The ſin became ſo publick, that it could not be coloured, much leſs conceal'd. All ſin is a work of darkneſs: Uncleanneſs particularly delights in darkneſs; therefore the notoriety of the act beſpoke the impudence of the agent. Ah ſad day! when men declare their ſin like Sodom, they hide it not. When both ſhame and fear are caſt off, ſin hath an hardned forehead, and a brazen brow. (B.)

Have his father's wife.] Either as his wife, or ſo as to commit fornication with her. Now this, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, was done by them agreeably to the Jewiſh doctrine concerning proſelytes, viz. That they were as perſons new born, and had loſt all their kindred they had before; ſo that, by the law, as the Rabbins expounded it, they might marry their mother and ſiſter. (See the notes on John iii. 3.) And to this Tacitus ſeems to refer, in his account of the Jews, when he ſays, All things are by them deem'd prophane, which to us are ſacred, and what we account inceſtuous is with them lawful; and that they are firſt of all taught to contemn the gods, and to have no regard to parents, children, and brethren. But conſidering, that Corinth abounded with philoſophers, and that Chryſippus the Stoic reckons the enjoyment of a mother, ſiſter, or daughter, as things blamed without reaſon; and that hence the Nicolaitans and Carpocratians had their doctrine of the community of women, not excepting mothers, and daughters, and ſiſters; I think it probable, that this corruption might have had its riſe from them; and that, on one or other of theſe accounts, they ſo tamely endur'd him who had done this infamous thing: Yea, they were puffed up, (ſay the Greek interpreters) on the account of the eloquence and wiſdom of this very man. (W.) For St. Chryſoſtome tells us, this crime was committed by one who was not only admitted to partake of the Divine myſteries, but had obtain'd the dignity of a doctor or teacher among them: And ſo ſaith Theodoret alſo. (H.)

Are puffed up, and have not rather mourned.] Here note, 1. The fault charg'd upon the church; they did not cenſure this offender, therefore the Apoſtle cenſures them: The tolerating of ſcandalous ſins in particular members of churches, is a thing very diſpleaſing to Chriſt, and offenſive to his miniſters. 2. As they did not cenſure the offenders, ſo neither did they mourn for the offence, as they ſhould and ought to have done. Learn hence, That the falls of particular members of churches are a juſt cauſe of mourning to the whole church: As members of the ſame body we ſhould ſympathize with one another; what the natural members do, the myſtical members ought to do. 3. The cauſe of both, why they did neither cenſure the offender, nor mourn for the offence: "They were puffed up;" partly with pride of their own gifts, and partly with vainglory, on account of their admired teachers. Now, this pride hindred their ſorrow: A proud man is ſeldom a compaſſionate man; true humility will teach us to lament and bewail others frailty; "Ye are puffed up, and have not mourned:" The original word, for to mourn, ſeems to refer to a cuſtom in the primitive times, when Chriſtians put on ſolemnly mourning attire, and bewailed excommunicate perſons as thoſe that are dead. Theſe Corinthians, being puffed up with pride, were ſo far from their compaſſionate mourning over this inceſtuous perſon, that they rather rejoiced at it, and inſulted over that party to whom this perſon belonged. So prone are perſons to rejoice at the downfal of others, either by ſin, or by affliction. (B.)

Taken away from among you.] That is, by excommunication. Now ('tis well known) this cenſure depriv'd men of two privileges; 1. Of the Euchariſt, and all that ſolemn part of divine worſhip which was peculiar to the faithful, that is, the communicants. 2. Of all familiar converſation with Chriſtian people; to whom it was not lawful even to eat, with ſuch a man, ver. 11. (Johnſ.) And, as to the right of exerciſing this power, it cannot be denied, that every ſociety whatſoever has all thoſe things which are neceſſarily requir'd to preſerve the ſociety ſafe and intire: But, for preſerving a ſociety ſafe and intire, it is in the firſt place requir'd, that it have a power of receiving worthy and fit perſons into the ſociety, and of turning out ſuch as are refractory and unworthy; for without this power, 'tis impoſſible for any even the leaſt ſociety to ſubſiſt. And as the Chriſtian church is a true and proper ſociety, (ſee the notes on Rom. xvi. 5.) 'tis therefore neceſſary, that the Chriſtian church have the ſame power, of admitting worthy and fit perſons, and of ejecting, that is, excommunicating, ſuch as are obſtinate. Hence likewiſe we may collect, that this power of excommunication appertains to the church by divine right. For, ſince the Chriſtian church is a true and proper ſociety, founded by God himſelf, it moſt evidently follows, that God has granted to this ſociety all thoſe privileges which are neceſſary to preſerve it as a ſociety. Therefore it was well obſerv'd by the learned Grotius, that for the aſſerting of this power to the church of Chriſt, it is not neceſſary to deſcend to particular paſſages of holy Scripture, This is abundantly demonſtrated from the very nature of ſociety. And indeed, this right of excommunicating appears ſo neceſſary, I will not ſay to the Chriſtian church, but to every religion whatſoever, that you will hardly find one ſect, or way of worſhip, even among the Heathen, that does not enjoy the like privilege. We are inform'd by Julius Cæſar, That the Druids were wont to exclude from their ſacrifices all thoſe who did not obſerve their decrees: In Philip of Macedon's

Epiſtle to the Athenians we read, That the people were ſo exaſperated againſt the Megarenſes, becauſe they had kill'd Anthemocritus, as to exclude them from their myſteries: And the Scholiaſt on Ariſtophanes obſerves, That it was the cuſtom, that murderers ſhould not partake of the ſacrifices: Nicolaus Damaſcenus ſays of the Cerceti, a people of India, That they ſhut out from their holy rites ſuch as had any way injur'd them. 'Tis moſt notorious, that before the ſacrifices were ſlain, a crier made this proclamation, Away, far away ye prophane; ſhut the doors upon the prophane. From all which it moſt evidently appears, That all ſects of men whatever have enjoy'd this power, viz. of excluding from the ſacrifices the prophane, the impure, the unholy; and of ejecting them out of their ſociety. Such inſtances do by no means prove what the vile factors of the Atheiſts would prove from them, that the Chriſtian church borrow'd this tyrannical cuſtom (as they call it) from the Heathen: But they manifeſtly prove, that excommunication is ſo neceſſary to all ſorts of religion, that the Heathens themſelves did, by the light of nature, both find out and exerciſe it: And it appears very unjuſt, to deny the Chriſtian religion (which was conſtituted by Chriſt himſelf) that very power, which the wiſeſt Heathens freely allow'd even to the fooliſheſt religions in the world. (Hughes)

For I verily, as abſent.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Although I am abſent from you in body, yet in mind and conſent I am preſent with you; and alſo by my diſcerning ſpirit, by which I am enabled to diſcern things done at a diſtance: And accordingly, by the authority and power given me by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, I have already determin'd, that when ye are ſolemnly gathered together in the name of Chriſt, and have my ſpirit concurring with you, and the power of Chriſt confirming the ſentence pronounc'd by you, that ye deliver this inceſtuous perſon unto Satan, by caſting him out of the church, and leaving him to God's executioner to inflict deſtructive puniſhment on his body, to bring him to repentance for the ſaving of his ſoul. Here note, 1. The cenſure and ſentence pronounc'd, excommunication; which conſiſteth of two parts: 1. Privative, in a ſeparation from the communion of Saints. 2. Poſitive, which is here expreſs'd by "delivering unto Satan," who had then a power over the excommunicated perſon's body, to torment it with diſeaſes: Which power, tho' now ceaſed, yet the Chriſtian church has at this day a power to exclude enormous offenders from the ordinary means of grace and ſalvation, and to expoſe them to the malice and temptations of their grand adverſary the devil, by depriving them of church communion; which is a more dreadful puniſhment than perſons are ſenſible of. 2. The perſon inflicting this cenſure; St. Paul: "I have adjudged already." He pronounc'd it judicially, and required the Corinthians to denounce it ſolemnly. "I have judged already;" implying that he did not determine raſhly and ſuddenly, but adviſedly, as became a judge: And, mark, they muſt denounce ſolemnly what he had determin'd judicially; and this in the face of the whole church, "when ye are gathered together;" that is, in the preſence of the chief paſtor, and all his flock at Corinth. A publick crime muſt have a publick doom, that others may hear and fear: Yet remark, The congregation or church were witneſſes of the cenſure; but they did not judge and determine it: The Apoſtle did that. The power of the keys is in the hand of the church; only, quoad chreſin, not quoad kteſin; that the church may have the benefit of them, not the managing of them; for that is committed to the paſtors only, as appears, Mat. xvi. and John xx. 3. The ſolemn and awful manner, in which the cenſure and excommunication was and ought to be pronounc'd, "In the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt;" that is, having firſt, in ſolemn manner call'd upon the Lord Jeſus Chriſt for his direction and benediction: Or in the name of our Lord Jeſus; that is, according to the command of Chriſt, by the power and authority of Chriſt, with an eye to the glory of Chriſt. This ſhould be the manner, and theſe ſhould be the ends, in denouncing church cenſures; and then Chriſt will be at the conſiſtory, and his co-operation will make good the cenſure, as his commiſſion was our warrant to pronounce it; and then the penitent may and ought to dread the ſentence, as coming out of Chriſt's own mouth, and to be inflicted by Chriſt's own hand. 4. The miſerable caſe and ſtate which the perſon that is duly excommunicated is in. He was then "delivered up to Satan," as God's executioner, to inflict ſevere puniſhments on the perſon's body now caſt out of God's ſpecial protection, depriv'd of the church's communion, and expos'd to the temptations and ſnares of our grand adverſary, Satan. St. Auſtin in his time declar'd, that it was then thought much more grievous to be excommunicated than to be beheaded. But, Lord! Where are the perſons at this day, who tremble when their ſins have brought them into this miſerable caſe and ſtate? 5. That perſons ought not to be in this ſevere and ſolemn manner proceeded againſt, but for notorious ſcandalous ſins. To denounce this awful cenſure upon every ſlight and trivial occaſion, is to proſtitute one of the moſt venerable ordinances of Chriſt to contempt and ſcorn. 6. The greateſt and ſpecial end for which this ordinance of excommunication was inſtituted by Chriſt in his church, and executed by his Apoſtles; namely, to recover the fallen perſon by repentance, and to be a warning to others. The reforming, and not the ruining of men, was the intention of this ordinance: The cenſure is not mortal, but medicinal. It is, 1. "For the deſtruction of the fleſh," ſo laſcivient in him; for the mortifying his luſts, by afflicting him with grief and ſorrow. 2. For the "ſaving of his ſpirit;" that is, his ſoul, that this may be recover'd out of the ſnare of the devil. Laſtly, The time is expreſs'd, when the penitent perſon ſhall find the benefit of this painful ordinance; namely, "in the day of our Lord Jeſus:" Not but that a penitent in this life ſhall find ſome eaſe in his conſcience, and ſatisfaction in his ſpirit; but the full benefit of eccleſiaſtical cenſure is reſerv'd to the day of the Lord, the day of judgment: Then will Chriſt manifeſt to the church triumphant, the good effect of the power of the keys, which he hath committed to his miniſters, to be exercis'd publickly in the church militant; he will then reveal how all ſtand bound in heaven, whom his church never loos'd on earth; and all whom his church hath loos'd on earth, ſhall then appear to be loos'd in heaven. (B) See the notes on Mat. xvi. 19. xviii. 18. and John xx. 23.

To deliver ſuch an one unto Satan.] This ſeems to have been done by a power peculiar to the Apoſtles, and not the effect of a common act of diſcipline. Some of the beſt Expoſitors are of opinion, that ſome bodily diſtemper was inflicted by the devil on the perſons who were put under this ſentence. For this reaſon it is call'd "delivering unto Satan," who is ever ready to puniſh and torment mankind. The deſign of God is, that the perſons thus puniſh'd might be brought to repentance: (For the following words are, "for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſav'd in the day of the Lord Jeſus;") which the ſuffering perſon might be, on his true repentance. I am inclin'd to think, that the "remitting and retaining ſins," John xx. 23. relates to this matter; and that what St. John ſays, 1 John v. 16. of "the ſin unto death," for which he would not ſay the church ſhould pray, reſpects thoſe who were under this cenſure. The ſins of ſome were probably attended with ſuch aggravating circumſtances, that no prayers would avail for their being deliver'd from temporal death, tho' from eternal puniſhments they might be deliver'd, on their true repentance. (Fox) The devil muſt of neceſſity reign where Jeſus Chriſt does not. A man is in his kingdom, and under his power, when he is not in the church, and under the protection of Jeſus, church. A perſon excommunicate, "deliver'd to Satan," and expos'd to his rage and malice, is as a man cover'd with wounds, diſarm'd, deſtitute of all ſuccour, and left in the hands of his mortal enemy. (Q.) This was the laſt means which Chriſt had preſcrib'd to be us'd for the reclaiming hardned ſinners: And 'tis evident, that it had its effect on this impure Corinthian. For we are aſſur'd, that tho' he had ſo numerous and formidable a party, combin'd together, as it ſhould ſeem, on purpoſe to ſcreen him from the ſevere ſentence which the Apoſtle had decreed againſt him, yet when he ſaw the Apoſtle firm in his reſolution, and the church of Corinth dutifully complying with St. Paul, and forſaking his communion, he was melted down to ſuch a degree of humility, and ſo deep a ſenſe of his ſin, that St. Paul ſaw occaſion, in the next Epiſtle, ch. ii. 7. to deſire his Chriſtian brethren to "comfort him, leſt he ſhould be ſwallowed up of over much ſorrow." (Johnſ.) See the notes on ch. iv. 21.

In the day of the Lord Jeſus] That is, in the laſt day, or the day of judgment. Not as if ſalvation were deferr'd to the laſt day, or that the repenting ſoul ſhould not enjoy it before that time; but becauſe ſalvation ſhall be then conſummated, and fully revealed. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Pet. i. 5.

Purge out therefore the old leaven.] Here the Apoſtle ſpeaks of cutting off the inceſtuous perſon, according to the metaphor of the Jews; whoſe ſaying is, That as a little leaven leavens the whole lump, ſo concupiſcence corrupts the whole man; and that by the command to abſtain from leaven, adultery is forbidden. This impurity he calls "the old leaven" to be purged out; becauſe the Corinthians were infamous for it to a proverb, as Phavorinus, Heſychius and Eraſmus ſhew. He alludes alſo to the command to put away leaven out of their houſe, in commanding to put away the evil perſon: And to the Paſchal feaſt, in giving this reaſon why the old leaven ſhould be put away, becauſe "Chriſt our paſſover is ſacrificed for us;" which being done once for all, we Chriſtians muſt ever keep the feaſt, by being always a new lump, pure from "hypocriſy, which is the leaven of the Phariſees," Luke xii. 1. from the leaven of falſe doctrine, and corrupting of the word of God, which is "the leaven of the Phariſees and of the Sadduces," Mat. xvi. 6, 12. and from the leaven of wickedneſs and wicked men, according to thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt, "Deliver me out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the cruel," and the leavened, Pſa. lxxi. 4. that is, the ſowre, and the angry man, who corrupts and depraves others. (W.)

Chriſt our paſſover.] Chriſt is term'd our paſſover, Either, by a metonymie of the thing ſignified for the ſign, or elſe by a metaphor in regard of many reſemblances between Chriſt and the Paſchal Lamb; as, 1. As the Lamb was without blemiſh, ſo Chriſt was without all ſpot of ſin. 2. As no bone of the Lamb was to be broken, ken, ſo neither any bone of Chriſt at his paſſion. 3. As the Lamb was offer'd to God for a typical reconciliation and ſatisfaction, ſo was Chriſt for the true reconciliation of all his elect, and ſatisfaction for all their ſins. 4. As the Paſchal Lamb was to be eaten, ſo we feed upon Chriſt by faith. 5. As the Paſchal Lamb was to be eaten with ſowre herbs, ſo Chriſt's fleſh is to be eaten in the Sacrament with a ſowre and bitter remembrance of our ſins, and Chriſt's dolorous ſuffering for them. 6. As the paſſover was to be eaten with unleavened bread, ſo all who feed upon Chriſt muſt purge out of their conſciences all leaven of maliciousneſs. 7. As that Lamb was call'd phaſe, Exod. xii. which ſignifies a paſſover, ſo Chriſt's death may be call'd phaſe, or paſſage, as having carried him from the world to his father. 8. As where the door cheeks and poſts were ſprinkled with the blood of the Paſchal Lamb, the family was ſav'd from the deſtroying angel, ſo all whoſe conſciences are ſprinkled by faith with the blood of Chriſt, the Lamb of God, are ſav'd from eternal deſtruction. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John i. 29.

Let us keep the feaſt.] The Apoſtle here more eſpecially alludes to the communion, which was celebrated at all their eccleſiaſtical meetings, from which the perſons mention'd in this chapter were chiefly to be debarr'd. (Fell)

The leaven of malice and wickedneſs.] Which is uſually carried on with diſſimulation of affection and concern for piety, and ſo is Phariſaical, and accompanied often with that wickedneſs which prompts men to deceive others to their hurt. Theophylact ſays upon this text, He is kakos, an evil man, one who does evil things; and alſo poneros, one who does evil with ſubtilty and deceit. Thus evil men and deceitful are join'd together, 2 Tim. iii. 13. (W.)

Unleavened bread of ſincerity.] This expreſſion ſeems to allude to the Hebrew Matſoth, or azyma, which, ſays Bochart, ſignifies pure and ſincere loaves free from all mixture of leaven. And ſo this is an exhortation to reject all falſe Apoſtles and deceitful workers, as the Doctor, abovemention'd, and others in the church of Corinth were, who transform'd themſelves into Apoſtles of Chriſt, 2 Cor. xi. 13. and yet were not ex eilikrineias men of ſincerity, 2 Cor. ii. 17. but corrupters of the truth, and walk'd in craftineſs, handling the word of God deceitfully, 2 Cor. iv. 2. and by their ſubtilty ſeduc'd them from the ſimplicity which was in Chriſt, 2 Cor. xi. 3. (Idem.) This word eilikrineia, ſincerity, is a metaphor, either from ſuch things as are tried, by being held up againſt the beams of the ſun, to ſee what faults or flaws are in them; or elſe from ſuch things as are purg'd and clarify'd, by the heat of the ſun, from the groſs matter that was in them. The word in Latin is taken from honey, ſine cera, unmix'd, without wax. (Leigh)

I wrote unto you in an Epiſtle.] Here there is no enforcing reaſon to conclude, that the Apoſtle refers to ſome former Epiſtle of his, not now extant, nor anciently mention'd by any; the words being very capable of this other rendring, that in this Epiſtle he had ſo written to them; and ſo he did ver. 2. of this chapter: Juſt as, Gal. i. 9. "As we have before ſaid, even now again I ſay," the word (proeirecamen) before ſaid, looking no farther off than to the eighth verſe immediately precedent, where that was ſaid, that ver. 19. is repeated by him. As for the (nuni de egrapſa) "but now I have written," ver. 11. which may ſeem to oppoſe this to ſome former Epiſtle, there is no force in that. For the (nuni) now is not always a note of time, but, as 'tis ordinary amongſt us, of tranſition, thus: When I wrote to you not to converſe with fornicators, I meant not the Heathen fornicators, but I wrote to you only in reference to the Chriſtian profeſſors, guilty of thoſe ſins. (H.) All the Greek Commentators upon this place, conclude that he wrote this, not in another Epiſtle en alle, but en taute, in this. So Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Photius, and Theophylact. And this ſeems the more probable, becauſe none ever heard among the ancients of more than fourteen Epiſtles of St. Paul; nor was one word ever cited from an Epiſtle of his to the Corinthians, now ſuppos'd to be loſt. It cannot therefore be concluded from theſe words that any Epiſtle of his, written and ſent to the church of Corinth, is loſt; but only that ſome things in this Epiſtle were changed (or rather farther explain'd) by him, before he ſent it to them. But Mr. Le Clerc ſays, 1. This interpretation is contrary to all the rules of grammar, which it ſeems none of the Greek Scholiaſts underſtood ſo well as he! But it is the common obſervation of grammarians, that the aoriſt, (the tenſe here us'd) is ſo call'd, becauſe it is of an indefinite ſignification, being ſometimes us'd for the perfect, and ſometimes for the plus-perfect time. So Herod laying hold of John edeſen auton, had bound him, Mat. xiv. 3. See likewiſe Luke xix. 15. John iv. 44. v. 13. and xviii. 24. Beſides the article te, as Phavorinus ſays, is put inſtead of taute, this, as it is 1 Theſſ. v. 27. So that this criticiſm from grammar is of no force. (W.) But if any one will ſtill contend that there was another Epiſtle written to the Corinthians, before this, by the ſame Apoſtle, all that can be ſaid in this caſe is, that it is long ſince periſh'd, the Divine Providence not ſeeing it neceſſary to be preſerv'd for the ſervice of the church. (Cave)

Not to company with.] What is the meaning of me ſynanamignyſthai here, whether only interdicting eccleſiaſtical aſſemblies, or farther excluding from civil commerce alſo, is a matter of ſome queſtion. In favour of the former of theſe, we may here obſerve one thing in the context, That 'tis ſomewhat which the Apoſtle had, before theſe words, written to them about. But, whether this be ſo (as in the foregoing note is obſerv'd) or not, yet it is apparent, that ver. 11. (which refers undoubtedly to this Epiſtle,) the ſame phraſe is us'd, (me ſynanamignyſthai) "not to converſe with them;" which will therefore make it reaſonable to explain this phraſe by that which is mention'd ver. 2. (exaireiſtho ek meſou) removing the offender from among them; which is the ordinary phraſe for excommunication, (ſee note there) and the brief of the ſentence ſet down ver. 3, 4, 5. "I have judged," &c. And then there will be no neceſſity of extending it any farther, than to not joining with ſuch an one in ſacred meetings, excommunicating, "delivering up to Satan;" And ſo, 2 Theſſ. iii. 14. (me ſynanamignyſthe, hina entrape,) "have no fellowſhip with him, that he may be aſhamed," may refer to theſe cenſures of the church inflicted on the diſobedient, or refractory there. But then a ſecond circumſtance in the context will be obſervable, that, ver. 11. where the me ſynanamignyſthai is repeated again, there is added to it, (toiouto mede ſyneſthiein) "nor to eat with ſuch an one." This is indeed more likely to belong to the interdicting all familiarity of civil commerce: And the rather, becauſe the Jews thought it unlawful to eat with the Samaritans, Publicans, and ſinners (me ſynchrontai,) they will have nothing to do with ſuch; and, "Why eateth your maſter with ſuch?" (Say they to Chriſt's diſciples) and a ſpecial example we have of it, in the Maccabees, where ſpeaking of the deſerters, apoſtates from their law by any notorious breach, 'tis ſaid, They expreſſed a deteſtation of them, judged them as enemies of the nation, and denied them the civility of common commerce and good uſage: And the ſame is call'd afterward in that place (choriſmos) a ſeparating from them, apoſtrophai (tho' it be corruptly and without ſenſe read cataſtrophai) averſation, and expreſs'd by apechtheis ephainonto, they appeared enemies to them. And 'tis certain that the Jewiſh niddui, or firſt degree of excommunication, being a ſeparation or remotion ad quatuor paſſus, not ſuffering any man to come within four paces of him that was under that cenſure, was an interdiction of civil familiar converſe, or of eating with him. And for this there is one farther argument from ver. 10. For if he had meant only church-aſſemblies, the caution he there interpoſeth, of not extending it to Heathens, had been ſuperfluous, ſince they who never were within their communion could not be ejected out of it. And ſo again the reaſon he gives for their converſe with them, for elſe they "muſt needs go out of the world," ſeems to denote a civil commerce, which is here interdicted. It is true indeed, that the not eating with the fornicator may be alſo applied no farther than to ſacred converſe (and accordingly the words may be thus read, me ſynanamignyſthai toiouto, mede ſyneſthiein, including what is between in a parentheſis, not to join, nor eat with ſuch a man) for in thoſe they eat together, ſuneuochoumenoi, ſaith St. Jude, ver. 12. feaſting together in their agapæ, the common ſuppers that accompanied the Sacrament, in this Epiſtle, ch. xi. 20. and when fornicators, &c. were receiv'd or admitted there, St. Jude calls them (ſpilades) "ſpots in their feaſts," unfit to be preſent here, as blemiſh'd ſacrifices to be offer'd to God. And if there be any more than this meant by the (mede ſyneſthiein) not eating with them, it muſt probably relate to the particular caſe of the church of Corinth at that time, as being then torn aſunder with ſchiſms, ch. iii. 4. and xi. 1, 8. in which caſe the cenſures of the church being neglected (ch. xi. 31. and ſo here ver. 2.) the Apoſtle might think fit to preſcribe to private Chriſtians this method of ſhewing their diſlikes, by avoiding all civil commerce or familiarity with notorious offenders, and that the rather, in reſpect of the ſcandal of ſuch ſins, that being not practiſed by the Gentiles there, but deteſted by them, ver. 1. could not be committed by Chriſtians among them, without bringing great reproach on Chriſtianity: And that would not be remov'd by excluſion from ſacred meetings, which could not be viſible to the Infidels, and therefore might fitly be provided for by this ſeparation from familiar converſe or ſociety, an expreſſion of a clear deteſtation of ſo foul facts. And ſo 'tis poſſible the Apoſtle might deſign his exhortation, Rom xvi. 17. to "mark ſuch as cauſe diviſions, &c. among them, and avoid them," and 2 Theſſ. iii. 14. to "note him that obeys not" St. Paul's orders by Epiſtle, "and have no company with him," as a direction not only for the publick cenſures in a quiet church, where they may be ſeaſonably exercis'd, but alſo what private Chriſtians were to do for the diſcountenancing of offenders in caſe of ſchiſm, and of either the neglect or unefficaciouſneſs of the cenſures of the church. And to that alſo may be applied that of Chriſt, Mat. xviii. 17. "Let him be to thee an Heathen, and a Publican;" it being in this caſe reaſonable for private Chriſtians to reſtrain themſelves towards thoſe who reſiſt all fraternal methods of charity, and by outward behaviour to ſhew a diſlike of their contumacy and obduration: Eſpecially when an Apoſtle at a diſtance ſhall paſs that judgment on any particular man, and the preſent ſtate of the church leave no place for expectation of formal cenſures; the law of Charandas being not unreaſonable in this caſe, That no man converſe with a wicked man or woman, or bring a reproach on himſelf, as if he were like him. But this is not to be thought neceſſary, but when it is by the governor of the church, as 'twas here by St. Paul, preſcrib'd; nor prudent, but when by ſo doing we may hope to bring offenders to ſome ſenſe of their faults. And whenſoever it is done, it ought only to be deſign'd to charitable ends, and not to gratify a man's own pride or wrath, to expreſs animoſities or revenges on any. (H.) See the notes on Mat. xviii. 17.

With the fornicators of this world.] What I have written, of not communicating with fornicators, and not converſing familiarly with them, I mean not of the Heathens among whom ye live, who have not given up their names unto Chriſt; nor, in like manner, of thoſe Heathens who are guilty of thoſe other ſins of unnatural luſts, &c. (See the notes on Rom. i. 21, &c) which are ordinary amongſt idolaters, and us'd as parts and rites of their religion; for theſe are ſo common among them, that if ye abſtain from the company of all thoſe Heathens who are ſo guilty, ye muſt depart out of their cities: But the purpoſe of my writing is only to interdict you that free encouraging converſe with Chriſtian profeſſors, who are guilty of retaining any of theſe ſenſual Heathen ſins, us'd by idolaters. (Hall and H.)

If any man that is called a brother.] Some think, the word onomazomenos refers to the words following, and imports that if any man be defam'd, and noted, for the vices following, he is, by the Apoſtle's direction, to be avoided: But the word plainly refers to the brother; and imports, that if any one, who hath profeſs'd himſelf a Chriſtian, be found guilty of theſe crimes, he is to be avoided. Now, of all theſe ſins ſome among the Corinthians were ſtill guilty: As of fornication, 2 Cor. xii. 21. of covetouſneſs and extortion, 1 Cor. vi. 8. 2 Cor. xi. 20. of idolatry, 1 Cor. x. 7, 14, 20. of railing, 2 Cor. x. 2. xi. 21. and of drunkenneſs, 1 Cor. xi. 21. (W.) For the critical ſenſe of which ſeveral words in this place, the curious reader may have recourſe to Dr. Hammond's notes thereon at large.

With ſuch a one, no not to eat.] He meaneth, that we ought not to have any unneceſſary familiarity with them. For otherwiſe, in ſome caſes, we are not forbidden ſimply to eat with ſuch: Since neither the bond of matrimony is broken by excommunication, nor are ſuch duties hindred, much leſs diſſolv'd thereby, as we owe one to another, children to their parents, ſubjects to their prince, ſervants to their maſters, and neighbour to neighbour, to win one another to God. (Aſſ.)

For what have I to do to judge.] Some doubt there is of the reading and rendring the words, from this place, to the end of the chapter. Theophylact tells us of ſome, who ſet the point after ouchi, and then began a new ſenſe without an interrogation. And then the reading muſt be, " What have I to do to judge thoſe that are without?" No, judge ye " thoſe that are within;" adding, as in a parentheſis, (" but thoſe that are without God judgeth") and ye ſhall take away the evil from among you; which beſt agrees to the cai (and, not therefore) in the Greek, and to the reading of Chryſoſtome and Theophylact, who read (exareite to poneron,) ye ſhall remove the evil thing, not (exaireite ton poneron) remove the evil or wicked perſon, from among you; referring, (ſay they,) to the paſſage in the Old Teſtament, Deut. xiii. 5. and xxii. 21. And accordingly Theodoret and the vulgar read (to poneron) the evil. For this latter part, that this reading and rendring is to be adhered to, there will be little doubt to any that conſiders how evidently theſe laſt words (cai exareite) and ye ſhall remove the evil from among you, refer to the phraſe in the Old Teſtament, Deut. xxii. 21. (tho' there the Rome edition reads corruptly ton poneron.) All the queſtion is of the former part, which depends on the pointing of the ouchi, of which Theophylact adds, Some read it conjoined with what follows, and by way of interrogation; as we do, and all the copies that now we meet with. And that I prefer this reading, beſide the conſent of copies, theſe are my reaſons; 1. Becauſe the context agrees very well to it; the thing that the Apoſtle now hath in hand, being to diſclaim meddling with Heathens, in the beginning of the verſe, upon which that which is here added, if it be read all in one interrogation, " Do not ye judge thoſe that are within, but thoſe that are without God judgeth?" will follow, and cohere very commodiouſly: For thus it will lie, I have nothing to do to judge thoſe that are without; but as ye, that is, the church, uſe to cenſure thoſe that are within, who belong to your cognizance, ſo for all others they muſt be referr'd and left to God's tribunal. 2. Becauſe in the former reading, ouchi is made an anſwer to ti, which I believe to be without example; the queſtion by ti being ſo ſtrong and familiar a negative, that generally there is not any negation added to it, and if there were, ouden would be it moſt regularly. 3. Becauſe ouchi is very frequently an interrogative form, and ouc and me, oudamos and medamos, the forms of anſwering the queſtion, and that argues the neceſſity of retaining the ſecond reading. The only difficulty remaining is how (cai exareite,) and ye ſhall take away the evil from among you, ſhall fitly connect with this ſenſe: For that cai ſhould be rendred therefore is not very reaſonable, nor that alſo which ſuppoſeth the right reading to be (exaireite ton poneron,) take away the evil perſon, not (exareite to poneron,) ye ſhall take away the evil thing, which we have already with great reaſon pitch'd on for the true. The probableſt way to ſolve this difficulty is, either to affix theſe laſt words of the chapter, and of this matter, as a teſtimony out of the Old Teſtament, to conclude, and to belong to the whole buſineſs of this chapter, that by their obeying his directions in it, they ſhould thus put away the evil from among them, and ſecure themſelves from the puniſhments which elſe might fall on them, among whom notorious ſinners were thus permitted to live, impune, as it had oft fallen out among the Jews: Or elſe to put the whole 12th verſe, and the beginning of the 13th, in a parentheſis (and not the beginning of the 13th only) and then to read it in ſenſe thus, from ver. 11. But now I have written to you not to accompany, or ſo much as to eat, or uſe any familiar converſe, with any unclean or drunken profeſſor; and by ſo doing ye ſhall put away the evil from among you; ſecure your ſelves from the judgments, which elſe ye have reaſon to fear will come upon you; then adding the parentheſis, in its due place, to give an account of his reſtraining theſe cenſures to profeſſors or Chriſtians only. And this ſeems the faireſt way of compoſing all difficulty. (H.) Here Mr. Le Clerc is too bold, 1. When he quarrels with St. Paul's Greek; asking, What conſtruction this is, Ti moi crinein? I anſwer, None at all: But Ti moi proſekei kai tous exo crinein (What concerns it me to judge them that are without?) is both good ſenſe and good Greek: As, in Latin, Quid mea refert? In Engliſh, What is it to me? So alſo Rom. iii. 3. 1 Cor. xv. 32. Phil. i. 18. 2. 'Tis horribly bold, to add, without any, yea againſt all copies, menourge, inſtead of crinein ouchi, which have no affinity either in letters or in ſenſe: The words need no ſuch criticiſm; being plainly taken from Deuteronomy, as before is obſerv'd. So the whole ſenſe runs thus, Kekrica, " I have judged already," of the inceſtuous perſon, ver. 3. And I judge concerning all other perſons, in profeſſion Chriſtians, but in practice fornicators, &c. that ye ought not to communicate with them: But I ſay nothing of the Step-mother of this perſon, who hath not own'd the Chriſtian faith. For what belongs it to me, " to judge them who are without" the church? Do not ye, in your church and civil aſſemblies, judge them only who are of your body? " But them that are without" the church, God, who is the governor of all men, judgeth. And by thus judging thoſe who are within your body, ye will put away the evil, or this evil perſon, from you. (W.)

Put away.] At the cloſe of this ſubject, I think it may not be unacceptable to the Chriſtian reader, to ſubjoin a tranſlation of one of the forms of excommunication; and that too, probably, the moſt ancient one of this ſort that is now to be found. " The church of Ptolemais gives this charge to all her ſiſter-churches, throughout the world. Let no temple of God be open to Andronicus and Thoas, and their complices. Let every holy place, and its verge, be ſhut againſt them. The devil has no part in Paradiſe; and if he comes in clandeſtinely, is driven out. I charge therefore every private man and governor, not to dwell in the ſame houſe, nor eat at the ſame table, with them: Eſpecially, I charge prieſts, that they neither converſe with them while living, nor attend their funerals when dead. If any one ſhall deſpiſe this church, as being ſmall, and ſhall receive thoſe who are excommunicated by her, as if it were needleſs to regard her becauſe ſhe is poor; let him be eſteem'd as a man that divides the church, which Chriſt would have to be One. But ſuch a man, whether he be Levite, Prieſt, or Biſhop, ſhall by us be plac'd in the ſame rank with Andronicus: We will neither ſalute him, nor eat with him; much leſs will we communicate the ineffable ſacrifice to them who chuſe to have their portion with Andronicus and Thoas." (Johnſ.)

CHAP. VI.

The Corinthians reproved for being litigious; and particularly for going to law before the Heathen judges. The wicked ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God. Some things lawful, yet not expedient. Our bodies are the members of Chriſt, and the temples of the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore not to be defiled.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. DARE any of you, having a matter againſt another, go to law before the unjuſt, and not before the ſaints? Do ye not know that the ſaints ſhall judge the world? And if the world ſhall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the ſmalleſt matters? Know ye not that we ſhall judge angels? How much more things that pertain to this life? If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, ſet them to judge who are leaſt eſteemed in the church. I ſpeak to your ſhame. Is it ſo, that there is not a wiſe man amongſt you? No not one that ſhall be able to judge between his brethren? But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers. Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, becauſe ye go to law one with another: Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather ſuffer your ſelves to be defrauded? Nay, ye do wrong and defraud, and that your brethren.

Go to law.] Obſerve here 1. That it was not, ſimply and abſolutely their going to law which the Apoſtle here condemns, but their impleading one another at Pagan tribunals, and before Heathen judges. "The law is good, if uſed lawfully;" but the beſt thing may be abuſed, and ſo is oft the law itſelf: Moſt evident it is, that the Apoſtle, who was offended at their uſing the law before Infidels, allows it before Chriſtians, as the firſt verſe implies. 2. The ſeveral errors enumerated by our Apoſtle, in the Corinthians going to law; viz. 1. In regard of the adverſary; "Brother goeth to law with brother," ver 6. Not Infidel with Infidel, nor Infidel with Chriſtian; but Chriſtian with Chriſtian, brother with brother, which ſeems both unnatural and unchriſtian. 2. In regard of the judges choſen to decide their controverſies; Infidels and unbelievers, not Saints. If brother will go to law with brother, let them make choice of Chriſtian judges: But for Chriſtians to refuſe Chriſtians, and to chuſe to be judged by Infidels, was highly ſcandalous! What will Heathens ſay, when Chriſtians are together by the ears, and Infidels live in unity! Obſerve, 3. The great argument here uſed to diſſuade them from this practice; viz. a majore ad minus. "The Saints ſhall judge the world," the wicked world; yea, the apoſtate Angels in another world: Are they not fit then to judge and determine trivial matters between man and man, between one Chriſtian and another, here in this world? Learn hence then, 1. O ye wicked, ye who now revile and ſcorn, injure and wrong the ſervants of the moſt high God, that they ſhall one day be your judges: And, 2. Learn alſo, ye Saints, ye who ſhall be judges of the world, that your time of judging is not yet: Do not ye therefore anticipate your work, nor antedate your commiſſion: "Judge nothing before the time, till the Lord come." (B.) The Jews have a ſaying, That he who goes to law before the tribunal of the Gentiles, profanes the name of God, and gives honour to an Idol; that he is to be accounted a wicked man, and as one who hath reproach'd, and blaſphem'd, and lifted up his hand againſt the law of Moſes. Accordingly, the Apoſtle here repreſents this action in Chriſtians as a reproach to the ſociety, and to the ſpirit of wiſdom which was poured out upon the church, ver. 5, 6. and as that which gave occaſion to the Heathens to obſerve in the Chriſtians a contentious ſpirit. (W.)

Saints ſhall judge the world.] See the notes on Matth. xix 28. and Luke xxii. 30.

Leaſt eſteemed in the church.] Dr. Whitby and Mr. Maſſey think theſe words muſt neceſſarily be underſtood of the Heathens: And therefore conclude, that this verſe muſt be read by way of queſtion, thus, "If then ye have judgments (controverſies, or judicial cauſes) of things "pertaining to this life, (do ye) ſet them to judge who are leaſt eſteemed in (and by) the church?" Or elſe, by way of charge againſt them, thus, If ye ſtill retain your ſecular judicatures, or tribunals, ye ſet them to be judges over you, who are deſpiſed in the church; meaning ſtill the Heathen magiſtrates. For (ſay they) the Apoſtle doth not here command them to do this, but ſharply doth rebuke them for it, ſaying, This "I ſpeak to your ſhame;" and ſhewing, that this in effect ſignified, that there was "not a wiſe man among them." But, conſidering the Corinthians conceit of their own wiſdom, ſo frequently tax'd by the Apoſtle in this Epiſtle, it ſeems rather more natural, to underſtand theſe words, of ſome among themſelves, to be choſen as arbitrators; of whom there could be no ſcarcity, among ſo many wiſe men, as they were, or, at leaſt, affected to be thought. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, If your ſo much admired doctors are not at leiſure to undertake it, chuſe yourſelves arbitrators out of ſome of thoſe who are even the "leaſt eſteemed in the church." This is Grotius's conſtruction of the text: And therewith alſo agreeth that of Hammond, Fell, and Fleury.

There is utterly a fault among you.] The word hettema (which is here render'd a fault) is alſo uſed, Rom. xi. 12. where we render it the diminiſhing, in oppoſition to (pleroma) fulneſs; noting there the paucity of the Jewiſh converts to Chriſtianity: Accordingly, tho' it be here applied to another matter, yet, in the ſame notion, it is a going leſs, or an inferior degree: Which in reſpect of what is expected of the higher proficients in Chriſtianity, is a defect, or failing, a low pitch from any Chriſtian; but not ſuch as can, abſolutely and univerſally, be counted a ſin, as not being againſt any precept. Contending, or going to law, for light inconſiderable matters, is forbidden by Chriſt, Matt. v. 40. but not, abſolutely, all contending for the recovering or defending one's own, when the matter is of weight or importance. Only, they who have gotten a ſuperiority, and contempt of the world, will go higher than that ſtrict precept; and rather endure conſiderable loſſes, than engage themſelves in ſuch diſquiets of mind, as ſuch contentions uſe to bring with them: And to this is to be applied that which here follows, "Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather "ſuffer yourſelves to be defrauded?" That is, It is more Chriſtian, and excellent ſo to do. And in this reſpect, or comparatively to this higher virtue, the going to law at all, tho' it be not (hamartema, or paraptoma) a ſin; yet it is (hettema) a diminution, a leſs degree of perfection; and that is all that is meant by it in this place. As for the word (holos) utterly, tho' that is left out of the King's MS. yet it may well be retain'd, as noting that this defect was univerſal among them. (H.) See the notes on Matth. v. 39. and Rom. xii. 17, &c.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Know ye not that the unrighteous ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abuſers of themſelves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, ſhall inherit the kingdom of God. And ſuch were ſome of you: But ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the ſpirit of our God. All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: All things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: But God ſhall deſtroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body. And God hath both raiſed up the Lord, and will alſo raiſe up us by his own power. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt? Shall I then take the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid. What, know ye not, that he which is joined to an harlot, is one body? For two (ſaith he) ſhall be one fleſh. But he that is joined unto the Lord, is one ſpirit. Flee fornication. Every ſin that a man doth, is without the body: But he that committeth fornication, ſinneth againſt his own body. What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are Gods.

The unrighteous.] By unrighteous here is meant the being unjuſt and injurious to our neighbour; as appears by the context, which ſpeaks of "doing wrong and defrauding." And this, and the ſeveral other ſins here enumerated, as excluding from the kingdom of heaven, are not to be underſtood copulatively, but disjunctively: Not as if he only who is guilty of all theſe ſhall miſs of heaven, but he who lives in any one of theſe or the like ſins, unrepented of: Neither is it meant only of an habitual ſtate of continuing in ſin, but of every deliberate act, till the guilt of it be waſh'd out by a ſerious repentance and amendment. (G. and B.) It was this, which made the primitive fathers ſay, that a man muſt be free from all theſe crimes, in order to be of the number of the true Chriſtians who have a right to heaven. But, can that man be ſaid to be free from them, who lives in a continual circle of confeſſions and relapſes? To abſolve this ſort of ſinners, who have no ſign of converſion, and whoſe wicked habits are ſtill lively and in full ſtrength, and to ſend them to the holy table, is to judge them worthy to "inherit the kingdom of God," contrary to the judgment of this Apoſtle, and the oracle of the Holy Ghoſt. Alas! How many are deceived, and even deceive themſelves, in this matter! (Q.) See the notes on Mat. v. 27. Mark x. 19. Luke xii. 15. Acts xv. 29. Rom. i. 24. and vi. 19.

Such were ſome of you.] Tauta tines ete. The word here is in the neuter, not the maſculine, gender; not (houtoi) ſuch perſons, but (tauta) ſuch ſins: By which he emphatically demonſtrates their wickedneſs, that they had been not ſo much ſinners, but, as it were, the very ſins themſelves, in the abſtract. (B.)

But ye are waſhed.] As the Apoſtle had before deſcribed the black and filthy condition of their former life in ſin; ſo here he deſcribes the great and happy change wrought in them upon their converſion: Where we may obſerve, 1. The particular expreſſions by which this change is repreſented; "Ye are waſhed;"

that is, ſacramentally waſh'd in baptiſm: "Ye are ſanctified;" that is, purified in your hearts and natures, by the ſanctifying influences of divine grace: "Ye are juſtified;" that is, acquitted from guilt, and approved as righteous. And, 2. The means, by which this change was wrought and effected; viz. "In the name of the Lord Jeſus;" that is, through the merits and mediation of Jeſus Chriſt, and faith in him; "And by the Spirit of our God;" that is, through the ſanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit. (Idem) But whereas Mr. Clerc here ſays, That to be juſtified is the ſame thing with being waſh'd or ſanctified; and that to be ſo, by "the name of the Lord Jeſus," is to be ſo, by taking upon them the profeſſion of the Chriſtian religion in baptiſm; he is utterly out in both: For, ſure I am, he cannot produce one paſſage in all St. Paul's Epiſtles, where dikaiothenai, to be juſtified, bears any ſuch ſenſe; but it ſtill ſignifies to be abſolv'd from the guilt of ſin, and approv'd as righteous, either at preſent, or before God's tribunal. And ſo "the name of Chriſt," when we are ſaid to be juſtified by it, muſt ſignify, not the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, but faith in Chriſt dying for us, and be the ſame with (en auto) in him; for in "him all that believe are juſtified," Acts xiii. 39. Moreover, juſtification here is aſcrib'd to "the name of Chriſt," that is, to faith in him; and ſanctification to "the Spirit of God;" which ſhews, that they cannot ſignify the ſame thing; for where the cauſe is different, the effect muſt be ſo alſo. (W.) See the notes on John iii. 3, &c.

All things are lawful unto me.] Theſe words are not to be underſtood in the moſt general ſenſe, but with ſome reſtriction. For, it is certain, we may not do any thing that is forbidden by God. For the clearer underſtanding of which we may diſtinguiſh things, 1. Into ſuch as are neceſſary; that is, ſuch as are commanded by God, either by the law and light of nature, or right reaſon, or in the holy Scriptures: Theſe are not only lawful to be done, but it would be ſinful to omit the doing them. 2. Into ſuch as are forbidden, either by the word of God, or the reaſon and nature of things: Theſe, how expedient ſoever they may appear to be, are utterly unlawful. 3. There are other things, of a middle nature, which generally ſpeaking, may be done, or left undone, without ſin; and to this kind of things muſt theſe words be reſtrain'd: All ſuch things are in themſelves indifferent, as being neither commanded nor forbidden by God: But, this notwithſtanding, it may be ſometimes expedient to forbear doing them; as, for inſtance, when it would offend our weak brother, whoſe conſcience may not be rightly inform'd concerning the nature and uſe of them. (Fox) Lawful things, when they hinder us in our Chriſtian race, muſt not be us'd: If lawful things begin once to be inexpedient, a Chriſtian is not to uſe, but eſchew them. By the uſe of indifferent things we are ſometimes brought under their power, ſo that they become predominant over us: And therefore we are ſo to uſe them, as that we come not under the power of them; that we may forbear them when we will, and uſe them when we will. (Andr.) See the notes on ch. x. 23.

Meats for the belly.] Here the Apoſtle inſtanceth particularly in meats; and grants that it is lawful to uſe any kind of meat, becauſe God hath ordain'd it for the good of man's nature. Meats are ordain'd for the belly, and the belly at preſent ordain'd for the reception of meats: But as God will deſtroy meats, ſo will he deſtroy the belly alſo, as to the uſe it now hath; for in the reſurrection men ſhall neither hunger nor thirſt any more. (B.) From theſe words, that opinion, not of Origen only, but of Athanaſius, Baſil, Hilary, Theodoret, and others, ſeems to be confirm'd, That at the reſurrection, when we ſhall neither eat nor drink, "marry, nor be given in marriage," Mat. xxii. 30. as there will be no meats, the world being then burnt up; ſo no belly, nec quæ ſunt ſub ventre, nor any difference of ſexes. (W.) See the notes on Mat. xv. 17. and Rom. xiv. 17.

The body is not for fornication.] From this verſe to the end of the chapter, our Apoſtle labours, by ſundry arguments, to convince the Corinthians of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of the ſin of fornication; partly becauſe they reckon'd it among the number of indifferent things, and alſo becauſe the Corinthians, before their converſion to Chriſtianity, were ſo notoriouſly addicted to this ſin, that they conſecrated a temple to Venus, at which a multitude of virgins proſtituted themſelves: For which reaſon St. Paul makes uſe of a ſix-fold argument here, to prevent the Corinthians relapſe into this ſin of fornication after their converſion, which they had been ſo notoriouſly guilty of before. The firſt argument is in the words before us, "Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body:" As if he had ſaid, Ye put the body to a uſe for which it was never intended: The belly was made for meats, but the body was not made for fornication, but for the Lord; that is, for the Lord's uſe and ſervice; and the Lord is for the body, that is, for the good and ſalvation of the body. Whence note, That ſuch is the wonderful goodneſs of God towards us his creatures, that look in whatſoever we are for him he is for us; as our bodies are for the Lord's ſervice as well as our ſouls, ſo the Lord is for the good of our bodies as well as our ſouls, and therefore our bodies ought to be employ'd for his glory in every thing. This is the Apoſtle's firſt argument againſt fornication. (B.)

Will alſo raiſe up us.] Here a ſecond argument againſt fornication is taken from the body's reſurrection: Our bodies are to be rais'd, therefore not to be defil'd: To be faſhion'd like unto Chriſt's glorious body in heaven, therefore not to be defil'd with luſt here on earth. As if he had ſaid, Were your bodies to be finally loſt in the duſt, then were it no great matter how ye us'd them, or abus'd them; but as God hath rais'd up Chriſt's body, ſo he will raiſe up your body: And ſeeing your body is the garment which your ſoul is to wear to all eternity in heaven, keep it pure and undefil'd here on earth. (Idem) See the notes on Acts ii. 24 and Rom. vi. 4.

The members of Chriſt.] Here follows a third argument. "Our bodies are the members of Chriſt," as well as our ſouls; that is, the union is made between Chriſt and us, conſiſting of ſoul and body both. Now, ſhall we diſpoſe of our "bodies, the members of Chriſt," to ſo baſe an uſe? Shall our bodies, which are join'd to Chriſt, even condeſcend to ſo baſe a conjunction, as that of being join'd to an harlot? God forbid that ſuch an indignity be done by us. (Idem) Fornication in an Heathen is a great ſin; but in a Chriſtian 'tis a kind of ſacrilege. For we take away from Chriſt ſome of his members, whenever we deliver up our bodies, or any of their members, to uncleanneſs, by filthy diſcourſe, laſcivious glances, corrupt deſires, &c. (Q.) For, as Hilary ſaith here, The members which cleave to an harlot, ceaſe to belong to Chriſt. (W.) See the notes on Rom. xii 5.

Two ſhall be one fleſh.] The ſenſe is, That as wedlock makes man and wife one body lawfully; ſo fornication makes the man and the harlot one body ſinfully: All the difference is in the morality of the act; but the ſpecies or kind of act is the ſame. Thus the fornicator and the harlot are one fleſh: "But he that is join'd to the Lord," namely, by faith and love, hath a nearer and more noble union, than that of fleſh, for he is one ſpirit with Chriſt; not eſſentially and ſubſtantially one, but myſtically and ſpiritually: Chriſt and the ſincere believer are led and guided, acted and influenced, by the ſame ſpirit; therefore take heed what ye do, for in making your bodies the members of an harlot ye diſſolve the union betwixt Chriſt and them. Learn from hence, How cloſely and intimately believers are united unto Jeſus Chriſt: They are nearer than one fleſh, they are one ſpirit with him; they have both one father, one houſe, one home, one heart, one intereſt, one acquaintance: Happy they who are thus join'd to the Lord; for they are one ſpirit. (B.) That which was ſaid of the inſtitution of marriage in paradiſe, Gen. ii. 24. that the man and the wife become one fleſh, concludes equally, that the fornicator makes himſelf one fleſh with an harlot. (H.) 'Tis true, theſe words (hoi, duo) two, or more properly, they two, are not expreſs'd in that text; but they are neceſſarily underſtood, and therefore ſupplied by our Apoſtle here, as well as by our Saviour, Mat. xix. 5. For in that original inſtitution, the ſubject is only one man and one woman, (a man, and his wife) which is a clear refutation of polygamy: For he who joins himſelf with divers women, divideth himſelf, as it were into divers parts. (Beza) And moreover, we may obſerve, (as St. Epiphanius does, againſt the Ptolemaites, who diſtinguiſh'd the law into one part which came from God, another from Moſes, and a third from the elders) That what often ſeems to be only the conception of a prophetic perſon is found to be the dictate of the divine ſpirit it ſelf: As in the place before us; which tho' ſaid to be no more than the words of Adam, in that text of Geneſis, yet are ſaid to be the words of "him who made them" (that is God) by our Saviour in the Goſpel, Mat. xix. 4, 5. (Parker) See the notes on Mark x. 7.

Flee fornication.] Note here, 1. The Apoſtle's advice to eſcape fornication; and that is, to flee it; namely, by ſhunning all occaſions of it, all temptations leading to it, all incentives and provocations of it; not ſuffering our eye to wander, or our thoughts to muſe, much leſs to dwell upon any unlawful or inſnaring object. 2. This fourth argument the Apoſtle uſes to "flee fornication," becauſe other ſins are "without the body;" but this "againſt the body." Queſt. But how is the Apoſtle to be underſtood, when he ſays, all other ſins are "without the body?" Anſ. Thus, Tho' all other outward ſins, as drunkenneſs, murder, theft, &c. have the body as an inſtrument for committing them, yet in this ſin of uncleanneſs the body is not only the inſtrument, but the object alſo; for the unclean perſon doth not only ſin with his body, but he ſins againſt his body: Uncleanneſs leaves that blot and brand of ignominy and baſeneſs upon the body which no other ſin doth; degrading it from that excellent honour whereunto God advanc'd it in its natural condition, by "making it the member of an harlot." (B.) This argument againſt fornication, from the defilement of the body by it, plainly ſhews, that it is a ſin againſt the law of nature, and is a fault in man, as man. (W.) See the notes on Acts xv. 29.

The temple of the Holy Ghoſt.] Here we have the Apoſtle's fifth argument againſt fornication and uncleanneſs. Temples, which are peculiarly conſecrated unto God and his ſervice, ought not to be profaned or polluted: But the bodies of Chriſtians are the temples of God, the Holy Spirit dwelling in them; and therefore they ought to be kept pure and undefiled: "Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt," as well as your ſouls? Our bodies are call'd temples of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe he hath ſanctified them for himſelf, for his habitation, and for his ſervice. From whence the divinity of the Holy Ghoſt may ſtrongly be inferr'd. A temple always ſuppoſes ſome deity to dwell in it: The tabernacle and temple are call'd God's habitation: Now if the Holy Ghoſt dwells in good men as a temple, he is truly and really God. In fine, ſince all Chriſtians are become the temple of God, by virtue of his Holy Spirit ſent into their hearts, conſecrating their bodies to his ſacred ſervice, let us not deſecrate or pollute this temple, by defiling it with filthy luſts, but make chaſtity the keeper of this ſacred houſe, and ſuffer nothing that defileth to enter into it, leſt that God, who dwelleth in it, being offended, ſhould deſert his houſe thus defil'd. (B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 16, 17.

Bought with a price.] Here we have the ſixth and laſt argument which the Apoſtle makes uſe of to flee fornication. Our bodies are not our own, but God's; they are his by creation, his by preſervation, his by purchaſe and redemption: We are bought out of our own hands, as well as out of the hand of Divine juſtice; therefore we ſacrilegiouſly rob and wrong God when we alienate any part of his own from him, and glorify him not, whoſe we wholly are, by the faithful ſervice both of our ſouls and bodies, which are his. Learn, 1. That Chriſtians are not their own, but God's: Not their own, and therefore not in their own power, not at their own diſpoſal, not to live after their own will or by their own luſts, but according to the will, and to the ends and uſes of their principal Lord, whoſe they are. 2. That as Chriſtians are not their own, ſo they muſt not act and live, and diſpoſe of themſelves, of their ſouls and bodies, as if they were their own, as if they had an original propriety, a plenary poſſeſſion, and a full dominion over themſelves: A Chriſtian muſt not make his own reaſon his ſupreme rule, nor his own will his chief law, nor his own intereſt his ultimate end, for he was neither made by himſelf, nor for himſelf. 3. That all of us are God's; and therefore we cannot without great ſacrilege invade his right, and give that body to an harlot which is conſecrated to him. 4. That tho' we are all God's, yet we have alienated our ſelves from God, and withdrawn our ſelves from his diſpoſal. 5. That, being thus alienated from God, he has once more bought us, bought us with a price, a great and full price, the blood of his Son; and we are now God's own again by redemption and purchaſe. 6. That our bodies and ſpirits being thus the Lord's, we ſhould glorify him both in our ſouls and bodies, which are his; glorify him in our bodies by external purity and exemplary ſanctity, and in our ſpirits by internal purity of heart. Thus if we "glorify him in our body, and in our ſpirits," in a way of obedience, he will at laſt faſhion our vile bodies like unto his glorious body, and make our ſpirits as the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, in that great day, when he ſhall come to be glorified in his Saints, and admired in all them that believe. (Idem) See the notes on Rom. xi. 36. and Biſhop Reynolds's and Mr. Baſſet's Sermons on this text. All which ſeveral arguments againſt fornication, I heartily recommend to the ſerious conſideration and remembrance of every Chriſtian reader: And particularly, as an antidote againſt the poiſon of an author, who with equal modeſty has publiſh'd an Eſſay, profeſſedly to juſtify fornication from ſcripture and reaſon; prefix'd to it the name of a noble perſon, as the patron of it; and ſtil'd himſelf A young Clergyman. But it is no ſmall comfort to me, that I can upon good teſtimony, aſſure all who have a due regard to clergymen, that this Philoſarchus (as this lover of the fleſh is not aſham'd to call himſelf) is no clergyman in any proper ſenſe of the word, but only a teacher among the Sectaries in the northern parts of this iſland. To give a more particular account of that Eſſay, is not the buſineſs of this undertaking: But I beg leave to ſay, If ſuch an audacious attempt (more becoming a votary of Priapus, than the ſacred character of a clergyman!) be ſuffer'd to triumph over religion and law, in a country which has not yet profeſſedly renounc'd Chriſtianity, it will be imputed to ſomething elſe than the meanneſs of the performance; whatever other dire effects it may have, in an age which is forward enough to follow example, and does not need precepts or prompters, to Libertiniſm and debaucheries of all ſorts.

CHAP. VII.

Inſtructions concerning marriage; and a reſolution of ſeveral queſtions relating to it.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. NOW concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me: It is good for a man not to touch a woman. Nevertheleſs, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband. Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: And likewiſe alſo the wife unto the husband. The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: And likewiſe alſo the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife. Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with conſent for a time, that ye may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency. But I ſpeak this by permiſſion, and not of commandment. For I would that all men were even as I my ſelf: But every man hath his proper gift of God; one after this manner, and another after that. I ſay therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I. But if they cannot contain, let them marry: For it is better to marry than to burn. And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband: But and if ſhe depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: And let not the husband put away his wife. But to the reſt ſpeak I, not the Lord, If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and ſhe be pleaſed to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleaſed to dwell with her, let her not leave him. For the unbelieving husband is ſanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is ſanctified by the husband: Elſe were your children unclean; but now are they holy. But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a ſiſter is not under bondage in ſuch caſes: But God hath called us to peace. For what knoweſt thou, O wife, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband? Or how knoweſt thou, O man, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy wife? But as God hath diſtributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, ſo let him walk: And ſo ordain I in all the churches.

Ye wrote unto me.] See the Preface.

Not to touch a woman.] The firſt ſcruple, or caſe of conſcience, which the Corinthians wrote to the Apoſtle about, was concerning marriage. Among many other hereſies of the Gnoſticks, this was one, That marriage was from the devil. The Apoſtle elſewhere declares, that marriage is holy and honourable, Heb. xiii. 4. And here he determines, 1. In general, That ſuch as have the gift of continency, and can live chaſte in a ſingle ſtate, do well. And, 2. In particular, That a ſingle life, at that time, was moſt adviſeable, as being moſt agreeable to the calamitous and afflicted ſtate of the church. So that when the Apoſtle ſays, in this verſe, "It is good for a man not to touch a woman," his meaning is, It is more agreeable to the preſent neceſſity, more convenient in regard of the perſecuted ſtate of the church; as being a condition leſs diſtracted with cares, and troubles. For marriage plunges men into an exceſs of worldly cares: It multiplies their buſineſs, and uſually their wants; and thoſe wants are harder to be ſupplied than in a ſingle life, and more difficult to be borne: It is much eaſier to bear perſonal wants than family wants. With reſpect to all which, eſpecially in the preſent ſtate of the church, "it is good for a man not to touch a woman:" Not that it is at any time ſimply unlawful, but at ſome times manifeſtly inexpedient. (B.) It was an old philoſophical queſtion, Whether a man ſhould marry? Many of them held the negative; as Bion and Antiſthenes, who ſaid, An handſome wife would be common, and a deform'd one a puniſhment; and therefore we ſhould have none: Hence that of Menander, If thou art wiſe, thou wilt not marry. This was held, out of different ſentiments. By ſome, out of good liking to the doctrine of Plato, That women and children ſhould be common: Which doctrine was improv'd by the Nicolaitans into all manner of impurity, who therefore did commit whoredom without ſhame. But others, of the ſchool of Pythagoras, refuſed to touch a woman, as being an impediment to philoſophy, and that which defiled that purity they aim'd at. Hence Apollonius the magician is repreſented as a man of ſo great chaſtity, that he liv'd ever free from converſe with women. And Porphyry ſaith, A philoſopher muſt not marry; and that, to live the intellectual life, we muſt abſtain from women, all uſe of them being a defilement. The word gyne, which in this chapter ſtill ſignifies a wife, ſeems to refer this queſtion to the former opinion: But the phraſe "not to touch a woman," inclines us to refer it to the latter: The firſt queſtion being too groſs to be propounded by the Corinthians to the Apoſtle; but the ſecond being a queſtion then in vogue, on the account of which Apollonius, and the Pythagoreans, obtain'd great repute. (W.) To "touch a woman," is frequently us'd for lying with her; as Gen. xx. 6. and Prov. vi. 29. Hence virgo intacta, that is, integra a viro. In the ſame ſenſe alſo is tangere uſed by Plautus. (Parker)

Nevertheleſs, to avoid fornication.] Whatever advantages there may be in ſingle life, yet "nevertheleſs, to avoid fornication," there is a neceſſity of marriage. But this ſo, as that neither one man ſhall have more than one wife, nor one woman more than one husband. (Beza) As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Such are the inclinations of human nature, that every man cannot always do that which is moſt for his own quiet and eaſe, but men find the ſtrength of luſt, and the power of concupiſcence ſo ſtrong in themſelves, that marriage, which is God's ordinance for avoiding fornication, and for the propagation of mankind, is of abſolute neceſſity to ſome perſons; Therefore, for avoiding fornication, and all ſorts of uncleanneſs, "let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband." Where obſerve, 1. The Apoſtle's expreſſion, (ekaſtos & ekaſte) "every man, and every woman;" not ſome only: He excepts none, neither Prieſt nor Nun; but every one is here permitted, yea, for avoiding fornication, commanded to marry. Let the church of Rome then conſider, how ſhe will anſwer at the bar of God, for her contempt of his ordinance, in denying the lawfulneſs of marriage to her Prieſts and Nuns, when God has told us, that "Marriage is honourable in all, but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge," Heb. xiii. 4. 2. How the Apoſtle directs every man to have his own wife, and every woman her own husband. More than one is forbidden, and polygamy, or the having more at a time than one, is here condemn'd. (B) The words in the original are ten heautou gynaika, and ton idion andra, where our tranſlation does not come up to the emphaſis of the Apoſtle's expreſs meaning: For the words ten heautou gynaika, do not only import "his own wife," but, more expreſly, a wife of his own: And ton idion andra do not barely ſignify "her own husband," but an husband who ſhould be proper or peculiar to her ſelf; and conſequently in ſuch a ſenſe her own, as not to be the husband of any one elſe. (Wheatly) Should any Libertine produce the examples of Abraham and Jacob, of David, &c. to juſtify polygamy, and keeping of concubines, the anſwer is eaſy, They, tho' particularly favour'd by God, yet did not ſit under that clear light which has ſhin'd by the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, nor did they know, as we Chriſtians do, the duties of holineſs. It becomes not us, to leſſen theſe great, and, for the times they liv'd in, good men: Nor yet muſt we undervalue the advantages of the Chriſtian religion. What our Lord ſays of divorce, Mat. xix. 8. is applicable to other inſtances, "Moſes ſuffer'd you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it was not ſo:" To which he adds, that whoſoever ſhould imitate the Jews, doing that which had been tolerated till then, ſhould be guilty of adultery. Our Lord condemns divorce, even tho' the barrenneſs of the wife ſhould be pleaded as a pretence; for he allows it in no caſe, but only that of her being falſe to her husband's bed. See Dr. Wall's Hiſt. of Infant-Baptiſm, Part I. p. 99. Edit. 3. and Mr. Oſtervald of The cauſes of the preſent corruption of Chriſtians, Part I. Cauſe iv. (Fox)

Let the husband render.] Obſerve here, 1. That matrimonial converſation, or the husband's and wife's performing towards each other all the duties of marriage which they promiſed, is an act of juſtice which they owe to one another, as is intimated in the word (apodidoto) render; and conſequently, to deny the ſame is injuſtice and fraud; "Defraud ye not one the other," ver. 5. Marriage takes away from perſons that power which they had over themſelves and their own bodies, and transfers it in ſome ſort to the perſon they are married to, ver. 4. Yet, 2. That married perſons may, and in ſome caſes, (namely, for religious ends and purpoſes) ought, by mutual conſent, to abſtain from a conjugal duty for ſome time, ver 5. And, 3. That the Apoſtle lays no obligation upon any ſingle perſons to take upon them a vow for a ſingle life; nor doth he direct married perſons to thoſe perpetual divorces from the marriage-bed, which the Papiſts practiſe, under pretence of religion. For the Apoſtle admits of no perpetual ſeparation between husband and wife, on any pretence whatſoever: No, not "that they may give themſelves to faſting and prayer;" but he only permits it for a time," on condition alſo that they "come together again." So far was this holy man from laying a ſnare upon the conſciences of any perſons, either in a ſingle or married ſtate. (B.) See theſe queſtions fairly and particularly diſcuſs'd at large, in Maſon's Vindication of the Church of England, Book II. ch viii.

Due benevolence.] What is meant here by eunoia, may be beſt conjectur'd from Exod. xxi. 10. where, after "her food and raiment," is mention'd "her duty of marriage," which muſt not be denied the wife. The Septuagint render it (homilian autes) accompanying with her: The Hebrew word there us'd ſignifies alſo (eunoia) benevolence; which is therefore us'd here by the Apoſtle, as a more moderate word, inſtead of the other: The Syriac reads it, The love which he owes; and ſome other Greek copies read (opheilomenen timen) due honour, or worſhip. And this perhaps is the ground of the retaining the word worſhip by our church, in the form of marriage; meaning the kindneſs, which is here ſaid to be due to her: But the King's Manuſcript hath opheilen only; meaning all that by the vow of marriage is due unto her. (H.) And the very word (eunoia) benevolence imports, that it muſt be perform'd with good will, and delight; willingly, readily, and chearfully. (Leigh) Where alſo we may further note, what modeſt words the Holy Ghoſt makes choice of, to expreſs the lawful and conjugal duties; to teach us, not to ſpeak too plainly, but to uſe the like modeſty of expreſſion in ſuch matters. (Andr.)

Hath not power.] Here is another plain argument againſt polygamy. For if "the husband hath not power of his own body," he cannot give the power of it to another, and ſo he cannot marry another: Nor could his wife, excluſively to him, have the power of his body, if he could give his body to another. (W.) The phraſe here is ouk exouſiazei; which properly ſignifies authority, and not power only, as diſtinct from that. For 'tis too notorious, that either the husband or wife has the power to give the uſe of their body to another, if conſcience do not reſtrain them from it: But they have no authority ſo to do, that is, no right to exerciſe that power; their reſpective bodies, by means of the tie of marriage, being the property of each other, and conſequently not to be uſurped by, or alienated to, any third perſon, without ſin. See more of this phraſe, in the notes on Rom. xiii. 1.

That ye may give your ſelves.] Scholazete. The Apoſtle doth not ſay, that ye may faſt and pray, but "that ye may (thereby be more free to) give "your ſelves to faſting and prayer:" Becauſe the more ſolemn performance of theſe duties doth require the mind to be free from all worldly cares and concerns. (Leigh) That this text is not intended to oblige any married perſons to a continual abſtinence from the lawful uſe of each other, is evident; 1. Becauſe it extends no farther than to ſuch prayer as is accompanied with faſting: But ſuch prayer is not made every day, but only at certain times, and on extraordinary occaſions. 2. It does not import any reſtraint for altogether, but only "for a time;" that is, during the ſolemnity of ſuch prayer and faſting. And, 3. The condition is expreſs to the contrary; viz. That, when the ſolemnity is ended, they "come together again." Neither does the Apoſtle here addreſs himſelf to the clergy only, but to the whole church: So that the Papiſts can make no advantage of this text againſt the marriage of the clergy, but what will equally affect the laity alſo; and therefore it can be nothing at all to their purpoſe. See the notes on ver. 35.

For your incontinency.] What acraſia ſignifies here, will be beſt gueſs'd by the context, where the reaſon of the advice, (ſynercheſthai) for the man and the wife to accompany together, being this, "that the devil tempt them not" (dia ten acraſian) acraſia being the occaſion or advantage that the devil takes hold of to tempt, muſt ſignify their want of ability to contain: Not that it ſignifies incontinence; for that is a ſin againſt the marriage vow, and will not agree with the context, which ſuppoſes no ſuch ſin: But, I ſay, a want of ability to contain or abſtain any longer from the lawful pleaſures of marriage; as encrates is he that (heauton en cratei echei) hath himſelf in his power, his own command, and ſo ouc encrateuontai, ver. 9. they that have not the command of themſelves, ſo as to live chaſtly without marriage: And ſo, acrates, and thence acraſia, the contrary inability to contain; which inability or weakneſs is an occaſion of temptation, and will be an advantage alſo to the tempter, by which, when he tempts, he may be moſt probably able to overcome. (H.)

I ſpeak this by permiſſion.] Kata ſyngnomen. That ſyngnome may ſignify advice or counſel, will be gather'd from the grammarians, Heſychius and Phavorinus; who ſay, that ſyngenoſomai (it ſhould be ſyngnoſomai) is ſymbouleuſo, giving counſel, and ſyngnoſkomenoi are peithomenoi, they who are perſwaded by advice or counſel. And then the plain import of this verſe is, That, in reſpect of the contrary dangers of fornication, &c. ver. 2, 5. he generally gives his advice, that men ſhould marry, &c. ver. 2, 3. Yet for this he is far from giving any command, or laying obligation on any: For if, upon experience, and long trial, there be no fear of thoſe dangers, then his advice is to live unmarried. For ſo he had ſaid, ver. 1. that "it is good for a man not to touch a woman;" and again he ſubjoins it, ver. 8. that it was "good for them to continue as he was himſelf," that is, in ſingle life. And ſo each of theſe, marrying, and not marrying, is, according to ſeveral circumſtances, matter of counſel, but neither abſolutely of precept. If there be danger of fornication, then it is his advice, that, for the avoiding of that, marriage be choſen, ver. 2. and, to the ſame purpoſe, rather let them marry than burn, ver. 9. And becauſe every man hath not the gift of continence, and it is not preſently diſcerned who hath, therefore in general ſpeaking, and as far as belongs to thoſe who do not diſcern that they have this gift, the contrary danger is ſo ſtrictly to be avoided, that the Apoſtle's advice (tho' not command) is, that (hecaſtos, and hecaſte) men and women generally, ver. 1. betake themſelves to that ſafer courſe. But this ſtill far from any univerſal precept: For in caſe ſecurity from that danger of fornication be otherwiſe to be had, then the Apoſtle's counſel and advice is to follow his example, ver. 7, and 8. and, either in virginity, or widowhood, to remain unmarried. That is the meaning of (Thelo gar) for I will, or would; not that he commands or preſcribes that, but that, in caſe a man hath the gift of containing, he prefers the ſingle life. For the Hebrews, for want of a word in their language to denote comparative degrees, uſe poſitives inſtead of comparatives; and accordingly, (thelo) to will ſignifies here to wiſh rather, or to be more willing, to prefer, or recommend, as better. And that is the meaning of (calon eſti) "it is good," both ver. 1, and 8, and 26. that is, (creiſſon) better, or more eligible; if that circumſtance of the contrary danger do not hinder it, or outweigh on the other ſide. Of this ſpeech of the Apoſtle's concerning marriage, it is Tertullian's ſaying (lib. De monogam.) Dixit hoc Apoſtolus indulgens, non præcipiens; What the Apoſtle here ſaid, he ſpake by way of indulgence, not by way of command; rendring ſyngnome, indulgence, according to that other notion of the word, whereby it ſignifies pardon or forgiveneſs of a fault; and ſo ſaith Heſychius, (ſyngnomon, eleemon) it denotes pity or mercy. Thus, it is poſſible, Tertullian might interpret the place; being by the Montaniſts infuſions ſomewhat unkind to marriage. But againſt this, the Apoſtle's words are plain, (even when he adviſes ſingle life as beſt at that preſent) "If thou marrieſt thou haſt not ſinned," ver. 28. And in this place the context is no way favourable to that notion. For the (hecaſtos echeto) "Let every man have his own wife," &c. ver. 2. and the (gameſatoſan) "Let them marry," ver. 9. in caſe of the forementioned danger, (dia tas porneias) becauſe of fornications, and (ei ouc encrateuontai) if they have not command over themſelves; is certainly more than this; even a free conceſſion of marriage to all, and in caſe of that danger, an advice and counſel alſo. To which purpoſe it is obſervable, that as here, ſyngnome is oppoſed to epitage, command, ſo is gnome alſo, ver. 25. where that gnome ſignifies advice or counſel, and not only permiſſion, or indulgence, appears by the conſequents, (nomizo oun touto calon) ver. 26. I think this is good (that is, as was ſaid, better) for the approaching inſtant diſtreſſes, and again (hoti calon) that it is good, or better, for a man to be ſo. From whence, as it follows evidently, that gnome ſignifies counſel, as that looks on that which is better, and as counſel is generally oppoſed to precept, and as many things which are not under precept are yet under counſel; ſo in all reaſon, the ſyngnome differing ſo little from gnome will, by the oppoſition to epitage, precept (common to both of them) be determined alſo to this ſignification of advice and counſel. And ſo there is no queſtion of it, that for all thoſe who have not that command over themſelves, which may give them ſome degree of ſecurity againſt the danger of fornication, it is (creiſſon gameſai) ver. 9. better to marry; and ſo matter not only of permiſſion, or indulgence, but of counſel to them. (H.)

That all men were even as I my ſelf.] That is, undoubtedly, endow'd with the gift of continency: But whether, in ſingle life or marriage, in celebacy or widowhood, is not ſo eaſy to determine. There want not ſome of the ancients, who expreſly reckon St. Paul in the number of the married Apoſtles; as Clemens Alexandrinus, Ignatius, and ſome others; tho' 'tis confeſs'd, that paſſage is not to be found in the genuine Epiſtle of the latter. (Cave) Grotius thinks it probable, from what is ſaid here, ver. 8. that he had been married, but that his wife was dead before the writing this Epiſtle: And Dr. Whitby further obſerves the ſtrictneſs of the Jewiſh canons, which obliged all Jews to marry at twenty years of age. Be that as it will, it is of no weight at all, in the queſtion of the marriage of the clergy: Becauſe, whether he was ever married or not, he clearly maintain'd his liberty to marry, ch. ix. 5. And whatever St. Paul did, 'tis not to be denied, that St. Peter was a married man, whom nevertheleſs the Papiſts pretend to have been the ſupreme Apoſtle.

Hath his proper gift of God.] Some have ſuperior graces, others inferior: Some have virginal chaſtity, others conjugal: And again, ſome, by their natural temper, are more, others leſs, ſubject to concupiſcence, and liable to be tempted. (Fell) The Apoſtle here declares the gift of continence not to be common to all, but proper to ſome only, as being the "proper gift of God;" and therefore not to be gotten by our induſtry. Thus alſo our Saviour ſaith, "He that is able to receive it, let him receive it," Mat. xix. 12. Whence it is natural to conclude, that all men are not able. (W.) God will not give that gift unto all, (for if ſo, there would be an end of mankind,) but unto ſome only. It is not promiſed to all: It is not required of all; neither is it given unto all. "Every man hath his proper gift of God; one after this manner, and another after that:" Wherefore marriage is the gift of God, as well as celebacy. (Maſon)

To the unmarried and widows.] The Apoſtle begins his diſcourſe concerning the virgin man and woman, at ver. 25. Here therefore "the unmarried" muſt be underſtood of the man who is looſed from a wife; that is of a widower and widow. (W.) And concerning theſe alſo he, determines as before of the firſt marriages, That "it is good for them if they abide" as they are; "but if they cannot contain, let them marry" again. This place makes ſtrongly againſt thoſe who condemn ſecond marriages after death has diſſolv'd a former bond. (Beza) For 'tis evident, that ſuch marriages are not only lawful, but an incumbent duty, if perſons cannot contain themſelves within the bounds and rules of chaſtity; "I ſay therefore to the unmarried and widows, If they cannot contain, let them marry." (B.) See the notes on ver. 39.

Better to marry than to burn.] Had the Apoſtle then known of any vow of continence, or any eccleſiaſtical law, which could render it a damnable ſin, and a renouncing the faith, to marry, howſoever they might burn, he could not ſo generally have propounded and preſcrib'd marriage, as the remedy of that diſeaſe; but would have reſtrain'd his words, as Eſthius here does, to thoſe who were free from the law and vow of celebacy. But, I believe, he knew of none, whom God's law had placed under a neceſſity of burning; that is, as the Greek commentators ſay, of being ſubject to the inſults of luſt. (W.) Some interpret this burning, to be the burning in hell-fire for their incontinency: And, no queſtion, but the words of the Apoſtle are true in that ſenſe. But, becauſe he addeth not either hell fire, or eternal, nor doth any circumſtance of the text look that way, the natural conſtruction ſeemeth to be this, That it is better to marry than, by forcing ourſelves to live ſingle, having not the gift of continency, ſo to burn with luſt, that either the will yieldeth to the temptation, or elſe that we cannot call upon God with a good conſcience. He is not ſaid to burn, who only feels the heat of fire; for ſo the moſt continent might be ſaid to burn: But only he who is ſinged and ſcorched thereby; he who is ſo aſſaulted with the temptation of luſt, that he is ſome way wounded, and hurt in conſcience, thereby. (Beza and Aſſ.) When the Apoſtle ſays, "It is better to marry than to burn," he does not compare two evils together, but a good and an evil, a remedy and a diſeaſe; which is a common way of ſpeaking: As if, for inſtance, a man ſhould ſay, It is better to be ſav'd under the croſs, than to periſh in delights. (Maſon)

Unto the married I command.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Herein I lay the authority of God's command upon you who are married, that ye agree together, and that no difference which may ariſe between you cauſe you to ſeparate and live aſunder. But to marry again, upon ſuch a departure, is a double ſin. Therefore, if any diſagreements and diſcontents between husband and wife cauſe you to live aſunder for a time, think not either of you of marrying to another perſon; but be reconciled to each other, and live together in love, as becometh perſons profeſſing godlineſs. Nothing but death, or adultery, can untie the marriage-knot, and releaſe you from your obligation to each other. (B.) Note, The Apoſtle ſpeaks here of married perſons, who had mutually embrac'd the Chriſtian faith: Among whom he condemns divorces, for any other cauſe, except for adultery, according to the doctrine of our Saviour himſelf; as is evident, from his ſaying here, "I command, yet not I, but the Lord." (W.) That is, Not I only, but the Lord himſelf alſo. He meaneth not, that the Lord's precepts and his were contrary; for he ſays, ver. 40. "I think alſo, that I have the Spirit of God:" And whatſoever St. Paul wrote, in this or any other of his Epiſtles, was by divine inſpiration. But his meaning is, that he ſpake not this by peculiar revelation, as he did ſome other things; but that he had an expreſs command of our Lord for it in Scripture. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. v. 32. xix. 9. and Mark x. 11.

But to the reſt ſpeak I, not the Lord.] That is, The Lord himſelf has not determined this queſtion, but left it to the deciſion of his Apoſtles, by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, promiſed to "guide them into all truth," John xvi. 13. (W.) Here we have another caſe of conſcience put by the Corinthians to the Apoſtle; namely, Whether ſuch husbands as had Heathen and Infidel wives might put them away? And whether ſuch wives as had Infidel husbands, might not, and ought not to depart from them? The Apoſtle reſolves the caſe, That they ought, according to the intent and end of marriage, to cohabit and dwell together: And he aſſigns the reaſon for it, becauſe the unbelieving or Infidel wife is ſanctified to the believing or Chriſtian husband. How ſanctified? Not in her name, but in her uſe; ſo that they might lawfully cohabit and converſe together, being by marriage made one fleſh with him or her that is holy: And for your children, ſays he, they are not ſeminally unclean, like the children of Heathens, but federally holy. How are they holy? Not with an inherent, internal, perſonal holineſs; for the holieſt man's child is born in ſin, and by nature a child of wrath: But with an external, relative, and federal holineſs; they are not common and unclean, like the children of Infidels, but fit to be partakers of the privileges of the church, to be admitted into covenant with God, as belonging to his holy people; "Elſe were your children unclean, but now are they holy." Obſerve, He doth not ſay, Elſe were your children baſtards, but now they are legitimate; as the enemies of infant-baptiſm, thoſe duri infantum patres, would make him ſpeak: But "elſe were they unclean," that is, Heathen children, not to be own'd as an holy ſeed, and therefore not to be admitted into covenant with God, as belonging to his holy people. If by holineſs here the Apoſtle means a matrimonial holineſs, as the Anabaptiſts dream, then, according to their interpretation of the word holy, the Apoſtle ſpeaks neither pertinently, nor truly. Not pertinently, 1. For then the anſwer had been nothing to the purpoſe. The caſe put was concerning husbands and wives, not concerning men and whores: And the queſtion propounded by the Corinthians, was, not whether a believing husband, and an unbelieving wife, were lawful man and wife together? No body queſtion'd that: But whether the Chriſtian husband might put away his Heathen wife? The Apoſtle anſwers, He ought not, if ſhe were willing to dwell with him, for ſhe is ſanctified to him; not ſanctified in reſpect of her perſonal condition, but in reſpect of her conjugal relation, otherwiſe their children would be look'd upon as unclean, like the children of Heathens; "but now are they holy," that is, to be accounted viſible Saints, and as ſuch, to be admitted to church-privileges. 2. According to this interpretation of the word holy, the Apoſtle had not ſpoken truly: For the children of Heathens born in lawful wedlock, are no more baſtards than the children of Chriſtians; for their parents marriage frees them from the charge of illegitimacy as well as others. Add to this, that in all the New-Teſtament, tho' the word holy be us'd above five hundred times, yet it never once ſignifies legitimacy, but is always us'd for a ſtate of ſeparation to God: Therefore to make it ſignify ſo here, is a bold practiſing upon Scripture, a wracking and wreſting of the word of God, to maintain a private opinion, to make the text ſpeak what they would have, and not what the Apoſtle intends: But the argument for infant-baptiſm from this text runs thus: If the holy ſeed amongſt the Jews were therefore to be circumciſed, and made federally holy, by receiving the ſign of the covenant, and being admitted into the number of God's holy people, becauſe they were ſeminally holy; "for the root being holy, the branches were alſo holy;" then by like reaſon, the holy ſeed of Chriſtians ought to be admitted to baptiſm, and receive the ſign of the Chriſtian covenant, the laver of regeneration, and ſo be entered into the ſociety of the Chriſtian church. (B.) For the ground of this ſaying here, that "Elſe were your (that is, the Chriſtians) children unclean, but now are they holy," is only this, in the beginning of the verſe. "For the unbelieving husband hath been ſanctified by the believing wife," &c. That is, 'tis of common experience, and from thence preſumed very probable, that a Chriſtian, living with an unbeliever, will inſtil Chriſtianity into him or her, and therefore they ſhould live together. This he farther proves by the practice of the church about children, thus, Were it not for the great probability, that the Chriſtian living with the Heathen, ſhould infuſe Chriſtianity into him, there could no reaſon be rendred of the practice of the church, why the Chriſtian's child, which is no more a Chriſtian than the child of an Heathen (Chriſtianity being no natural gift, born with them) ſhould yet be capable of baptiſm, and thought fit to receive that ſacrament, when the Heathen's child is not wont to be ſo admitted: And this, it ſeems, by the general judgment and practice of the church, with whom 'tis thought reaſonable thus to preſume, that the Chriſtian's child ſhall be educated in Chriſtian knowledge, which of the Heathen's child they cannot preſume, unleſs he be taken out of the hand of the parents. This conſideration, thus propos'd by the Apoſtle here by the way, is of great authority to prove the apoſtolical uſe and practice of baptizing the infants of Chriſtian parents, viz. upon preſumption that thoſe parents will ſee them educated and inſtructed in the knowledge of their undertaking, and vow of baptiſm; and when any other Chriſtian will undertake the ſame for the children of Heathens, there is little doubt, but they may be admitted to baptiſm alſo, by analogy of reaſon. And this was alſo the cuſtom of the Jews before Chriſt, in their receiving and baptizing proſelytes. (H.) Thus is this text reſcued from the gloſs of the moderns, and prov'd not to be fairly underſtood in any other ſenſe, than of the baptiſm of infants. (Wheatly) See Dr. Wall on Infant Baptiſm.

Let him depart.] Here another doubt is reſolv'd by the Apoſtle: In caſe the unbelieving party, either husband or wife, depart, that is, refuſe to cohabit and dwell with their believing yoke-fellow, and ſo make void, as much as in him or her lieth, the marriage-bond, out of hatred to the faith: In that caſe, if they will go, let them go: You are not bound to leave your family to follow them. However, let every Chriſtian, husband or wife, omit nothing, but endeavour every thing to the utmoſt, to oblige and win, to incline and engage their unbelieving yoke-fellows, to live quietly with them: For "God hath called us to peace;" and therefore we muſt give no occaſion of quarrel with, or ſeparation from, ſo near a relation. And beſides, by the peaceable dwelling together, there is hope of, and a fair opportunity for, the gaining and bringing over the unbeliever to the faith of Chriſt, and of being the inſtrument of his or her ſalvation: But however that may be, let every Chriſtian diſcharge his duty in every relation in which God has ſet him. This order I appoint "in all churches" converted to Chriſtianity; knowing it to be agreeable to the mind of God, That no Chriſtian ſhould pretend his profeſſion of religion to excuſe him from the duties of any relation. (B.) Note here, in theſe laſt words, the authority of the Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors, to ſettle the diſcipline of the churches, as alſo the uniformity of their conduct therein. (Q)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Is any man called being circumciſed? let him not become uncircumciſed: Is any called in uncircumciſion? let him not become circumciſed. Circumciſion is nothing, and uncircumciſion is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God. Let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called. Art thou called being a ſervant? care not for it; but if thou mayſt be made free, uſe it rather. For he that is called in the Lord, being a ſervant, is the Lord's free man: likewiſe alſo he that is called, being free, is Chriſt's ſervant. Ye are bought with a price, be not ye the ſervants of men. Brethren, let every man wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

Is any man called.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds to exhort the Corinthians to be content with the lot and condition which God had diſtributed unto them, and to frame themſelves to walk Chriſtianly in it. Particularly he ſhews, That if any perſon amongſt them were a native Jew, and ſo circumciſed, and afterwards converted to Chriſtianity, he ſhould neither trouble himſelf to get off that mark from his fleſh, nor affect the ſtate of him who, being a Gentile, had never been circumciſed. On the other ſide, if any of them were native Gentiles, and never circumciſed, but now converted to Chriſtianity, let him not affect the ſtate of one who was a native Jew, and circumciſed: For "circumciſion is nothing, and uncircumciſion is nothing;" that is, nothing now available to ſalvation; nothing that renders perſons more or leſs acceptable in the ſight of God; "but the keeping the commandments of God" is all in all: For God regards not mens outward conditions, but obedience to his commands. Chriſtianity conſiſts not in a warm zeal, either for or againſt outward ceremonies, but in poſitive holineſs, and a ſtrict conformity to divine precepts. (B.)

Let him not become uncircumciſed.] Me epiſpaſtho. That there was ſuch a practice of ſome of the Jews, in times of perſecution, by a certain chirurgical operation, called in Greek epiſpaſmos, (that is, attraction) to conceal their having been circumciſed, we learn from Corn. Celſus, a famous phyſician, and others; to which there is alſo a reference, 1 Maccab. i. 15. And the reaſon why 'tis here forbidden by the Apoſtle, was probably, that ſome of the converted Jews did ſo zealouſly renounce all their Judaical rites, that they uſed means to attract the part again; which was an act of too much ſuperſtition and curioſity, and ſo is cenſured here. (H.) Epiphanius tells us, that Eſau did thus; which made him odious in the ſight of God. (W.)

Circumciſion is nothing.] That is, a matter of no conſequence, or conſideration, as to mens ſalvation. (G.) See the notes on Acts xv. i, &c.

Abide in the ſame calling.] The Apoſtle ſeems to intimate from theſe words, that ſome perſons converted to Chriſtianity, in the primitive times, apprehended, that thereupon they muſt leave their worldly callings and employments; as if they were ſnares to them, or unneceſſary diverſions from better things. No, ſays the Apoſtle, "Let every one, in his calling, wherein he is called, therein abide with God;" That is, In what honeſt civil calling they were found when they became Chriſtians, let them keep to that calling ſtill: For God doth not call us from our worldly employments and buſineſs, but calls us to be holy in them; nor doth our ſerving God any whit acquit or diſcharge us from ſerving one another. But particularly, it was the opinion of ſome ſervants converted to Chriſtianity, that their ſpiritual freedom by Chriſt exempted them from all civil ſervice to their maſters. The Apoſtle therefore tells them, they are indeed freed by Chriſt from ſinful ſlavery, but not from civil ſervitude and ſubjection; from Jewiſh bondage, but not from Chriſtian obedience. Learn hence, That Chriſtianity doth not free men from any civil obligations which they before lay under. Our advantages by Chriſt are ſpiritual, and not ſecular: No man's outward condition is changed by his becoming Chriſtian; tho' he be now the Lord's freeman, yet he is a ſervant ſtill, if he was ſo before; nay, their Chriſtianity did not exempt them from their ſecular relation to their Heathen and Infidel maſters: As ſervice to man doth not exempt us from, nor is inconſiſtent with, the ſervice of God; ſo our ſpiritual calling doth not make void our civil: Therefore "let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called." (B.) It were much to be wiſh'd, that this were duly conſider'd, eſpecially by thoſe who have an intereſt in the plantations abroad. Many of whom do neglect to inſtruct the poor Heathens whom they purchaſe, in the principles of Chriſtianity, or refuſe to admit them to baptiſm, when happily inſtructed by others; under a miſtaken notion, that baptiſm would ſet them at liberty, and ſo their maſters ſhould loſe the benefits of their ſervice: Whereas, we ſee here, that the true principles of Chriſtianity would by no means diſcharge them from their proper maſters, but would teach them to be more dutiful and faithful ſervants. And again, we muſt obſerve, That this is not a command, but only a permiſſion, to "every man to abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called, as is well noted by Mr. Fox, upon this text.

Ye are bought with a price.] Times egoraſthete; Have ye been bought with a price? That the charity of Chriſtians was employ'd to buy their brethren out of ſlavery, we learn from the apologies of Juſtin Martyr and Tertullian, who tell us, That the offerings of Chriſtians at the Sacrament were, amongſt others, employed for that uſe. And that theſe words ought to be rendred by way of interrogation, is evident from the preceding diſcourſe, which is ſtill by way of queſtion; "Is any man called, being uncircumciſed?" ver. 18. "Art thou called, being a ſervant?" ver. 21. And that they are to be thus interpreted, the deſign of the Apoſtle ſhews; which is to inform them, that their Chriſtianity did not exempt them from their former ſecular relations to Heathens. Now, to tell them, they were bought with a price by Chriſt, and therefore ought not to be the ſervants of men, is plainly to contradict this deſign: But it is well conſiſtent with the foregoing advice, to add, Are ye then bought out of ſervitude by the charity of Chriſtians? Return not again to the ſervice of unbelievers. (H. and W.) The Apoſtle does not here diſallow of that relation between maſters and ſervants, which is common in all nations; becauſe he elſewhere gives particular directions reſpecting their behaviour to each other. But we are here forbidden to "be the ſervants of men," ſo as to do any thing inconſiſtent with our being the ſervants of Chriſt. We muſt not do any thing which our great Lord and Maſter has forbidden, to ſerve, or pleaſe, or gain the favour of any earthly maſter, or other perſon whatſoever. (Fox) See the notes on chap. vi. 20.

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. Now concerning virgins, I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful. I ſuppoſe therefore that this is good for the preſent diſtreſs; I ſay, that it is good for a man ſo to be. Art thou bound unto a wife? ſeek not to be looſed. Art thou looſed from a wife? ſeek not a wife. But and if thou marry, thou haſt not ſinned; and if a virgin marry, ſhe hath not ſinned: nevertheleſs, ſuch ſhall have trouble in the fleſh; but I ſpare you. But this I ſay, brethren, the time is ſhort. It remaineth, that both they that have wives, be as though they had none; And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they poſſeſſed not; And they that uſe this world, as not abuſing it; for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. But I would have you without carefulneſs. He that is unmarried, careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may pleaſe the Lord: But he that is married, careth for the things that are of the world, how he may pleaſe his wife. There is difference alſo between a wife and a virgin: The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that ſhe may be holy, both in body and in ſpirit; but ſhe that is married, careth for the things of the world, how ſhe may pleaſe her husband. And this I ſpeak for your own profit, not that I may caſt a ſnare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without diſtraction. But if any man think that he behaveth himſelf uncomely toward his virgin, if ſhe paſs the flower of her age, and need ſo require, let him do what he will, he ſinneth not; let them marry. Nevertheleſs, he that ſtandeth ſtedfaſt in his heart, having no neceſſity, but hath power over his own will, and hath ſo decreed in his heart, that he will keep his virgin, doth well. So then, he that giveth her in marriage, doth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage, doth better. The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth: But if her husband be dead, ſhe is at liberty to be married to whom ſhe will; only in the Lord. But ſhe is happier if ſhe ſo abide, after my judgment; and I think alſo that I have the Spirit of God.

Concerning virgins.] Here Eſthius takes care to add, that the Apoſtle muſt be underſtood "only of ſuch virgins as were not under the vow of continence;" and when the Apoſtle ſays, without any exception, "If a virgin marry, ſhe hath not ſinned," Eſthius alſo adds, "unleſs ſhe be a virgin conſecrated to Chriſt by ſuch a vow:" But ſince St. Paul, who was aſſiſted by the Holy Spirit, thought not fit to add any ſuch exception, we may well preſume he knew nothing of that matter. (W.)

I have no commandment.] See the notes on ver. 10.

I give my judgment.] What gnome here ſignifies, is matter of ſome diſpute; ſometimes it is render'd a ſentence, ſometimes counſel, and here judgment. A learned interpreter diſlikes the word counſel, leſt it ſhould ſeem to favour the Popiſh councils; and would have it only called ſentence, or rather opinion. But ſurely, he who gives his opinion when asked, may properly be ſaid to give counſel: And the matter here treated of is the rather thought to be counſel, becauſe of the diſtinction here made between epitage and gnome. Thus the Syriac, the vulgar Latin, Eraſmus, and the Rhemiſts, do all render it counſel: Others define it to be a ſentence, or verdict, declaring what is or ought to be done. For this Greek word ſeems indeed to import more than counſel; and to ſignify a grave and ſound ſentence and judgment, not without the force of a precept; eſpecially where it is uſed by an Apoſtle divinely inſpired. But ſee the notes on ver. 6. and the note immediately following.

Obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful.] This, ſaith the Apoſtle, is all that is required of a miniſter of God, and ſteward of his myſteries, that he "be found faithful," in adminiſtring the grace of his Apoſtleſhip, chap. iv. 1, 2. And this fidelity was ſtill attended with the power of Chriſt aſſiſting them, as appears from 1 Tim. i. 12. So that this phraſe, "I give my judgment," &c. doth not imply, as ſome imagine, that the Apoſtle had only an ordinary aſſiſtance in this advice, ſuch as any pious skilful paſtor may ſtill expect; much leſs, that this is a counſel which might be diſregarded without ſin. (W.) See the notes on chap. iv. 2.

Good for the preſent diſtreſs.] It is clear from theſe words, That the Apoſtle's deſign in this chapter was not, in the general, to prefer a ſingle life before a married one: Much leſs was it to teach, that the living unmarried was either more holy, or more acceptable to God; or that thoſe who vow a ſingle life, provided they keep that vow, ſhall certainly obtain eternal ſalvation, as the church of Rome teacheth. For we have here the reaſon, why the Apoſtle thought a ſingle life was then rather to be choſen; namely, becauſe of "the preſent diſtreſs;" that is, the ſufferings to which they were then liable. (Fox) Which phraſe plainly ſhews, that this cannot relate to the peaceable times of the church; for they are not times of tribulation, as the word anangke often ſignifies: Nor can it ſignify the troubles common to this life; for they are not always inſtant, or preſent. (W.) See the notes on ver. 1.

But I ſpare you.] That is, I forbear to ſpeak any more of that matter, leſt I ſhould ſeem to diſſuade you from marriage (which is the ordinance of God) more than is fit; or be thought by any to lay the yoke of celebacy, or ſingle life, upon you. (B.)

But this I ſay, brethren, the time is ſhort.] As if he had ſaid, Let all perſons, married and unmarried, conſider, that the time of this life is ſhort and paſſing: It is but a point of time we have to live; and ſhortly it will not be a pin to chuſe, whether we had wives or not, or children or not; but before the expected fruit of the comforts be ripe, we ourſelves may be rotten. It's therefore true ſpiritual wiſdom to look upon theſe things now, as they will be ſhortly: To be very moderate in the enjoyment of them; not to be too much affected when we have them, or too much afflicted when we want them. Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle's propoſition; "The time is ſhort." This is true in all the notions of it. Take it for the whole duration of this world, from the day of its creation, to the hour of its diſſolution; compare it with what ſucceeds it, eternity; and it is very ſhort, but a moment. Take time for the whole duration of any one man's life, 'tis ſhorter; ſo ſhort, that it is nothing. Take time for the ſpecial ſeaſon, either of doing or enjoying good in this life; and ſo 'tis ſhorteſt of all. 2. The inference which the Apoſtle draws from the propoſition; therefore "let them that have wives be as if they had none," &c. Learn thence, That the conſideration of the great ſhortneſs of time, and the incertainty of human life, ſhould keep our hearts in a great deal of moderation towards the beſt and ſweeteſt of our outward comforts and enjoyments: That we neither love inordinately any mercy when we enjoy it, nor mourn immoderately for any contentment when we come to be deprived of it: "They that weep as tho' they wept not; and they that rejoice as tho' they rejoiced not." 3. The advice which the Apoſtle gives to ſuch as have great poſſeſſions and revenues in this world; (1.) To take heed, tho' they poſſeſs theſe things, that they be not poſſeſſed by them. (2.) That they ſo uſe them as not to abuſe them, nor be abuſed by them. There is much evil in the world: Yet we may, we muſt, uſe it, and it will be our wiſdom to make a good uſe of this world, while we are in it; otherwiſe we neither anſwer the end of God in ſending us into the world, nor the deſign of God in truſting us with the good things of this world. Obſerve, 4. The reaſon aſſigned, why we ſhould uſe the world in the forementioned manner, becauſe "the faſhion of this world paſſeth away." Here the Apoſtle compares the things of this world to a ſcene which is preſently changed, and vaniſheth, almoſt aſſoon as it appears. As faſhions in this world alter, ſo doth the faſhion of this world alter every day. There is a world to come, the faſhion whereof ſhall never paſs away; but the faſhion, or ſcheme, of this world paſſeth away continually. This world is like a ſtage, perſons interchangeably act their parts upon it; but they ſoon diſappear, and the ſtage itſelf ere long will be pulled down; "the faſhion of this world paſſeth away." Thence learn, That this conſideration, that all the comforts and conveniences of this life are fading and paſſing away from us, ſhould be a ſtrong motive and inducement to us, not to ſet our hearts upon them. (B.) They who interpret theſe words "the time is ſhort" with relation to the troubles ſhortly to come at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and "the faſhion of the world paſſing away," as of a new ſcene of things then beginning to appear, ſeem not to give the true import of the Apoſtle's words. For, 1. It is not eaſy to conceive what concernment the Corinthians then had in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: And, 2. The "faſhion of the world paſſing away" ſeems plainly to refer to the diſſolution of it, or at leaſt to our paſſing out of it, in a ſhort time, according to thoſe words, 1 John ii. 15, 17. (W.) See the Sermons of Dr. Sibbes, and Mr. J. Cave, on this text.

They that have wives, be as though they had none.] What? to uſe them, as if they had none? to care for them, as if they had none? No! that's not the meaning; but to "be as if they had none." That is, let them be as reſolute for God's truth, as if they had no wives to hinder them: As willing to ſuffer croſſes, if God call them, as if they had none: As ready to good duties, if they fall within their calling, as if they had none. Let them avoid diſtracting cares, and worldly incumbrances, as if they had none. Let them not plead their marriage, in excuſe for their baſeneſs and worldlineſs, and for avoiding croſſes and afflictions, nor for their doubting or diſſembling in religion. For Chriſt hath given us command to hate all in compariſon of him: And a man is not worthy of Chriſt and his religion, who does not undervalue wife and children, and every thing elſe, for the Goſpel's ſake. (Sibbes.) See the notes on Luke xiv. 26.

Without carefulneſs.] See the notes on ver. 1. and Matt. vi. 25. and Luke xii. 11.

Not that I may caſt a ſnare upon you.] To wit, by impoſing precepts upon you, which Chriſt has not commanded. (G.)

For that which is comely, &c.] Or, in order to decency, and a cloſe and ſtrict adherence to God without diſtraction. In which paſſage, the compound Greek words are very beautiful, and ſtrongly expreſſive: And St. Jerome obſerves, that it was omitted in many of the Latin books, becauſe of the difficulty of tranſlating it any thing equal to the nobleneſs and vigour of the admirable original. (Blackw.)

Let him do what he will.] Moſt interpreters underſtand this verſe, and the two following, to be meant of virgins under the power of their parents or guardians: Of which opinion are Beza, Heinſius, Bp. Hall, the Aſſembly-men, Grotius, Bp. Fell, Burkit, and Queſnell. But Dr. Whitby and Mr. Fox hold, That this paſſage refers to a man's keeping his own virginity, and not another's; Becauſe thoſe phraſes, "Standing ſtedfaſt in his heart; having power over his own will;" and "having no neceſſity to marry," &c. muſt needs reſpect the perſon himſelf, and not any other. Somewhat different from all theſe is Dr. Hammond's paraphraſe, who interprets it of a man who is betrothed, but not married: In which caſe (ſays he) If the virgin to whom he is betrothed, do "paſs the flower of her age," (that is begin to grow in years) ſo that if the marriage be deferr'd, ſhe will be paſt her prime, I lay no reſtraint upon him more than that of prudence, "let him do what" he likes beſt, let them marry. This however is agreed, amongſt all Chriſtian expoſitors, that in which ſoever of theſe conſtructions we take it, the alternative is only marriage or virginity, but cannot, with any degree of modeſty, be underſtood to admit of fornication; tho' the infamous Philoſarcus labours to perſuade us (what can hardly be repeated after him without blaſphemy) that even this is here preferr'd to marriage! See the cloſe of the foregoing chapter.

Only in the Lord.] The Apoſtle concludes the chapter with a reſolution of this caſe of conſcience; namely, Whether ſecond marriages of widows were lawful or not. He anſwers, They were. After the firſt huſband was dead, the widow might marry again, provided that ſhe married "in the Lord;" that is, with a believer, not an infidel; with one of the ſame faith with herſelf. It is very dangerous and ſinful for perſons profeſſing the true faith of Chriſt to match with idolaters. There is far greater ground of fear that they will pervert you, than there is ground of hope that you ſhall convert them. (B.) To be "married in the Lord," is to be married, neither through covetouſneſs, nor ambition, nor luſt; but either through neceſſity, or in conſulting the will of God, and following the ſpirit and maxims of the Goſpel. (Q.) They who contract a ſecond marriage, ſucceſſively, "in the Lord," are not unchaſte becauſe they marry again, but they marry again leſt they ſhould be unchaſte. (Maſon) See the notes on ver. 8. and on Rom. vii. 3. and Hebr. xiii. 4.

I think alſo, that I have the Spirit of God.] Thoſe who think theſe words are not ſpoken with the authority of an Apoſtle, but only imply that he had the Spirit of an ordinary paſtor, do not well conſider, 1. That St. Paul was now writing to the Corinthians, ſome of whom were apt to queſtion his Apoſtleſhip, and required "a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in him," 2 Cor. xiii. 3. To whom therefore it was proper for him to aſſert his "having the Spirit of God." Nor, 2. That dokeo is often uſed only as an expletive. (W.) However, theſe words may be well underſtood thus paraphraſed; I think, that I (at leaſt, as well as your other teachers) have the Spirit of God, to guide me in making this judgment, tho' I have no expreſs precept for it; and conſequently, that I am enabled thereby in theſe things to direct you aright. (Fell.) See the notes on ver. 25. and Luke xxii. 25.

CHAP. VIII.

We muſt abſtain from meats offered to idols: And be careful not to abuſe our Chriſtian liberty.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. NOW as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. But if any man love God, the ſame is known of him. As concerning therefore the eating of thoſe things that are offered in ſacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. For tho' there be that are called Gods, whether in heaven or in earth (as there be gods many, and lords many) But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him.

As touching things offered.] It was the opinion of the Gnoſticks and Nicolaitans, (thoſe early erroneous perſons in the Apoſtles days) that from the knowledge they had of their Chriſtian liberty, they might either be preſent in the idol-temples, or eat of the idol-ſacrifices as they pleaſed. The Apoſtle here tells them, that he knew many of them had a good degree of knowledge; but deſires that they may not be puffed up with it, but that their knowledge may be accompanied with charity; which reſpects the edification of others; and puts men upon conſidering not only what is lawful to be done in itſelf, and with reſpect to ourſelves, but what is expedient or inexpedient in relation to others. True love, or Chriſtian charity, will put us upon conſulting the good of our neighbours ſouls, as well as our own; and will not ſuffer us to do that thing which may offend our weak brother; that is, lay a ſtumbling-block before him to tempt him into ſin. "Knowledge puffeth up:" This is to be underſtood of a notional, literal, and ſpeculative knowledge only; not of a ſpiritual, practical, and experimental knowledge. The more a gracious Man knows, the more humble he is, becauſe his knowledge ſhews him his own vileneſs and emptineſs; but the more a carnal man knows, the more proud he is, becauſe he knoweth not himſelf: His knowledge is not only a temptation to pride, but the very matter of his pride. Such knowledge doth not build up, but puff up: Whereas "Charity edifieth;" that is, applies itſelf to the inſtruction of others, and accommodates itſelf to the edification of others, and conſiders not only what may lawfully be done, but what is fit and expedient to be done; as in the caſe here before us, eating things offered to idols. (B.) Note alſo, That this expreſſion, "We all have knowledge," is not to be underſtood univerſally, but with reſtriction, as appears by ver. 7. and as a ſevere irony. (Beza) See the notes on chap. xiii. 1, &c. Acts xv. 29. and Rom. xiv. 3, 10, 14, 22.

Think that he knoweth.] That is, if a man have ever ſo much knowledge, yet if it be not accompanied with charity and humility, if he improves not his knowledge to the glory of God, and the good of others, " he knows nothing " to any ſaving purpoſe, or " as he ought to know." Learn, That Chriſtians ſhould by no means content themſelves with an empty ſpeculative knowledge, but labour to know as they ought to know. Obſerve farther, The Apoſtle ſays, " He that thinketh that he knows any thing," that is, he that is conceited of his own knowledge, that thinks of it with inſolency and pride, and ſpeaks of it with affectation and vain-glory; he who is thus conceited of his own knowledge, knows not himſelf; yea, " he knows nothing as he ought to know." Learn thence, That it becomes us to have very humble thoughts of ourſelves, and of our own knowledge, how much ſoever we really know; that man's wiſdom is but conceit, who is only wiſe in his own conceit. (Idem)

As he ought to know.] Thus to know, ſaith St. Bernard, is to know in what order, with what ſtudy and endeavour, and to what end, we ought to know all things: In what order; as deſiring to know that firſt which is moſt neceſſary to ſalvation: With what ſtudy; as deſiring moſt ardently to know that which is moſt vehemently to be loved, and tends moſt to prove love in us; To what end; viz. Not out of curioſity, vain-glory, or filthy lucre; but for the edification of thyſelf, or thy brother. (W.)

Known of God.] See the notes on John x. 14, 27. and xiv. 17.

Eating of thoſe things that are offered.] The meats offered to the idols were part, of thoſe ſacrifices which the Heathens offer'd to their Gods; of the remaining portions whereof they uſually made a feaſt in the idol temple, inviting their friends thither, and ſometimes their Chriſtian friends to come along with them. (Cave) And the Chriſtian Euchariſt agrees with the moſt ſolemn ſacrifices of the ancients in this, that it is attended with a feaſt upon the things offer'd to God. (Johnſ.) See the notes on Acts xv. 29.

An idol is nothing.] This aphoriſm, that " an idol is nothing," was uſual among the Jews; who were taught by the Old Teſtament, that the Heathen deities were (Elilim) nothings, or had no exiſtence. Hence their Rabbins concluded, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot, That the idol, being nothing, could have no power to pollute; and that whatſoever worſhip was paid to it, if it were not worſhipped under the notion of a God, it was nothing. But, whatever they meant of an idol's being nothing, 'tis certain, the Apoſtle only means that it is nothing of a God: For he proves, that it is nothing, becauſe " there is none other God but one;" and ſo all the criticiſms about the word idol are impertinent. (W.) This nothingneſs the Gnoſticks urg'd, for their liberty to frequent the idol-feaſts. Now, tho' formally the " idol is nothing" of that it is taken for, and materially nothing, but a lifeleſs piece of wood, ſtone, or the like: Yet relatively it is ſomething; and the worſhip and ſacrifice offer'd to it is not offer'd to nothing, but to devils, who, in and by theſe idols, much deluded the Heathens. See ch. x. 14, &c. And this cauſed the unlawfulneſs of partaking of ſuch ſacrifices; either in reſpect of any ſuch worſhip exhibited to them, i. e. to devils, or of ſcandal, as if we concurr'd in it. (Fell) The Papiſts don't fail to infer from this, that they are no idolaters, becauſe their images are, and repreſent ſomething that is real, whereas the idols of the Pagans repreſented but bare imaginations which had no exiſtence. But, neither the verſions nor inference are juſt: For their idols were real and viſible, and the moſt of them repreſented real and viſible beings, ſuch as the ſun, moon, and other creatures, which the Pagans had deified. This expreſſion then only ſignifies that an idol has no virtue or power; and ſo it ſhould be render'd. (Eſſay)

There be that are called Gods.] Here the Apoſtle tells them, that altho' the Heathen idolaters acknowledged a plurality of Gods; ſome in heaven, as the ſun, moon and ſtars; ſome on earth, as men and beaſts, they having their celeſtial and terreſtrial gods and lords; but theſe were only called gods; that is, gods in name, not in nature, not in reality: Yet (ſays he) we Chriſtians do own and acknowledge but one living and true God, one in nature, not one in perſon, to whom all our prayers muſt be directed; and one mediator, by whom all our prayers are to be offered: " To us there is but one God, the Father." This text the Arians, Socinians, and Unitarians, exceedingly boaſt of, as if it expreſly confined the deity to the Father, as diſtinct from Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt. Thus they argue, 1. He who ſaith there is one emperor, to wit, Cæſar, ſays in effect there is no other emperor but Cæſar; ſo when St. Paul ſaith there is " one God the Father," he doth (ſay they) in effect declare that there is no other God beſides the Father. To this the orthodox anſwer, 1. That God the Father is often put in ſcripture for the whole deity, comprehending the Three Perſons; he being fons deitatis, and fundamentum trinitatis, as the ſchoolmen ſpeak: So that the application of the word God here unto the Father doth not exclude the Son from being God, but only from being the fountain of the deity, as the Father is. In Rev. i. 17. Chriſt ſays, I am Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt: Will any conclude thence that God the Father is not Alpha and Omega? Is not he the firſt and the laſt, as well as Chriſt? Again, We call our Lord Jeſus the only Saviour: Do we therefore exclude God the Father from being a Saviour? Is he not ſtyled " the Saviour of all men? 1 Tim. iv. 10. Again, God the Father is called the Creator of all things; yet is it aſſerted that all things were created by Chriſt, the Word, John i. 3. In ſhort, we aſſert, as well as they, the Unity of the God-head, and that Chriſt is not another God, but only another Perſon from the Father. We anſwer, 2. Their own argument may be thus retorted upon themſelves: As the Apoſtle ſays here, " there is but one God the Father," ſo he adds in the next words, there is " but one Lord Jeſus Chriſt:" Now, if the ſaying that there is but one God, doth exclude Chriſt from being God, then the ſaying that there is but one Lord, doth exclude God the Father from being Lord; and if it be blaſphemy to exclude God the Father from being Lord, it is no leſs to exclude Chriſt the Son from being God. Know then, That as Chriſtians have in all ages of the church acknowledg'd one God only, even God the Father, ſo have they alſo owned that Jeſus Chriſt was truly " God, of the ſubſtance of the Father, God of God, very God of very God." The Lord keep us ſtedfaſt in this faith, ſeeing he that honoureth the Son honoureth the Father that hath ſent him; but he that denyeth the Son denyeth the Father alſo. (W. and B.) See the notes on John x. 34. and xvii. 3.

As there be Gods many.] Here Mr. Clerc tranſlates the words thus, As really there are Gods many, &c. and magiſterially ſaith, The Apoſtle hath no reference to the Gods or idols of the Heathens; but by Gods in Heaven, are meant God and the Angels; in the earth, magiſtrates who are alſo called the Lords of the world. But he proves not a word of all this: Yea, the contrary is not only ſaid by all the ancient Fathers and commentators upon the place, who both aſſert and prove the contrary; but 'tis alſo evident from the words themſelves. For, 1. When the Apoſtle had ſaid expreſly, We Chriſtians know, that " there is none other God but one," would he immediately add, There are really Gods many? What would this have been, but, as Chryſoſtom and Theophylact ſay, To ſpeak things repugnant? To avoid which, the Apoſtle adds, " Tho' there be (hoi legomenoi Theoi) thoſe that are called Gods;" by theſe words ſeparating them from him that truly is ſo. 2. This is evident from the words following, Tho' to them " there be Gods many, and Lords many;" yet to us (Chriſtians) there is but one God, and one Lord. And 3. Whereas he ſaith, By Gods in heaven are meant God and the Angels, let him ſhew any inſtance in the New Teſtament where Theoi is put for God and the Angels; or where both are thus mention'd under that one name. Here, to be ſure, it cannot be ſo: For the Apoſtle had not only ſaid before, We Chriſtians " know that there is none other God but one;" but ſaith after, This is he " of whom are all things;" i. e. whoſe creatures the Angels are: Could he then ſay, in the intermediate words, There really are many Gods in heaven; God and the Angels? (W.)

Of whom are all things, &c.] See the notes on Acts xvii. 28. and Rom. xi. 36.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Howbeit, there is not in every man that knowledge: for ſome with conſcience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conſcience being weak is defiled. But meat commendeth us not to God: For neither if we eat, are we the better; neither if we eat not, are we the worſe. But take heed leſt by any means this liberty of yours become a ſtumbling-block to them that are weak. For if any man ſee thee which haſt knowledge ſit at meat in the idols temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat thoſe things which are offered to idols: And through thy knowledge ſhall the weak brother periſh, for whom Chriſt died? But when ye ſin ſo againſt the brethren, and wound their weak conſcience, ye ſin againſt Chriſt. Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no fleſh while the world ſtandeth, leſt I make my brother to offend.

Not in every man that knowledge.] Theſe words are brought in by the Apoſtle, as a reaſon why ſtrong Chriſtians ſhould not eat meat offered unto idols, with reſpect to thoſe that are weak: As if he had ſaid, Tho' many of you know that an idol is nothing, and that meat is neither ſanctified nor polluted which is ſet before it, and therefore ye can eat, or not eat, without any ſcruple as to yourſelves, yet ye ſhould conſider what is ſafeſt to be done with reſpect to others: For every man has not this knowledge that an idol is nothing; but ſome perſons, having a conceit of the idol's being ſomething, eat what is offered to it, as a thing offered to an idol, that is, not as common meat, but as a ſacred banquet in honour of the idol; and ſo his " conſcience being weak," that is, erroneous, is defiled. Learn hence, That an action, which is lawful, in reſpect of ourſelves, may yet be a ſin if done by us, with reſpect to others: Another, encouraged by our example, may do the ſame act, but not do it with the ſame intent, as in the caſe before us: The ſight of one Chriſtian's eating things offered unto idols, who knows that an idol is nothing in the world, may harden, embolden, and encourage others to do the ſame, who really intend ſome honour by it to the idol: The outward action is the ſame, but the opinion and intention wide and different. (B.) See the notes on John viii. 36. and Rom. xiv. 13, &c. And obſerve further, that the arguments uſed here, and in the following verſes, with relation to idolatrous, will hold equally good againſt being preſent at immoral worſhip, where the immorality is known to be a conſtant part of the preſcribed worſhip, or a ſettled term of communion.

If any man ſee thee.] That is, If any man, with an erroneous conſcience, goes to theſe feaſts, and there ſees thee, who he thinks haſt more knowledge than himſelf, ſit at meat in the idol's temple, will not his conſcience be the more embolden'd by thy example, to eat things offered to idols, in the honour of the idol, or, as thinking it no hurt, to worſhip the idol? And thus, by occaſion of thy knowledge, a weak brother is in danger of periſhing, for whom Chriſt died. (B.) He may by degrees fall from the faith, thinking thus with himſelf; Why ſhould I ſuffer, or expoſe myſelf to the hazard of perſecution, if theſe things be indifferent? For ſuch he concludes them to be, through an opinion of thy knowledge, under the pretext of which thou defendeſt thy own appearance there. (G.)

Ye ſin againſt Chriſt.] Here the Apoſtle goes on, to ſhew, that ſuch an uſe of our Chriſtian liberty as doth embolden and encourage others to do that which is evil, is both an act of uncharitableneſs towards our brother, and alſo a ſin againſt our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in betraying a ſoul to ruin, as much as in us lieth, and hindring his ſalvation, for the ſaving of whom Chriſt died; wounding the members of his body, defeating the great end of his death, and deſtroying them whom he deſigned to ſave. (B.) For here, and elſewhere, it evidently appears, That Chriſt intentionally died for thoſe who may nevertheleſs for ever periſh; as is ſtrongly argued, by Dr. Whitby, on this text; to which I refer the inquiſitive reader.

Will eat no fleſh while the world ſtandeth.] Eis ton aiona; To the end of my life. (D. Heinſ.) This is an exaggeration. Not that this abſtinence could ever be neceſſary in itſelf; but to ſhew, that we ought to bear much more, for the ſalvation of our neighbour, than what he has here required of us. (G.) As if he had ſaid, If therefore this my eating in an idol-temple, or any other uſe of my liberty in the ſame kind, be an occaſion of confirming any Chriſtian in an erroneous ſinful practice, or bringing him to do any thing which is unlawful, I will ſurely deny myſelf the uſe of that liberty, be it ſuppoſed to be ſuch as by the laws of Chriſt truly belongs to me, when it ſhall prove of ſo dangerous conſequence to my fellow-Chriſtians. (H.) See the notes on ver. 7.

CHAP. IX.

The Apoſtle aſſerts his Chriſtian liberty: Yet ſhews, how much he abridg'd himſelf of it, in divers inſtances here mentioned.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AM I not an Apoſtle? am I not free? have I not ſeen Jeſus Chriſt our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord? If I be not an Apoſtle unto others, yet doubtleſs I am to you; for the ſeal of mine Apoſtleſhip are ye in the Lord. Mine anſwer to them that do examine me, is this, Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not power to lead about a ſiſter a wife, as well as other Apoſtles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?

Am I not an Apoſtle?] Before he proceeded any farther, in the matter of "things offered unto idols," (which was the ſubject of the foregoing chapter) he ſtrikes here at the root of all the miſchief; viz. that the Corinthians did not think themſelves bound to depart from any one point of their liberty for any man's ſake: And therefore he propounds himſelf for an example; and that too in matters which were in ſome degree neceſſary. (Beza, and Aſſ.) As if he had ſaid, That ye may not think, that what I ſaid (chap. viii. 13.) of abſtaining from many things that are lawful, is magnificently and ſpeciouſly, rather than with exactneſs of truth, ſpoken by me, I ſhall now mention my own practices of this kind in other inſtances: And this the rather, becauſe of another part of your letter, which mentions the deep knowledge of the teachers ye have now among you, and intimates how I am deſpiſed by them, and that particularly for labouring in the works of my calling, making of tents, and ſo getting mine own living among you. Now, hereto I make this reply, That, without the vanity of comparing with them, I may ſurely ſay four things of my ſelf, 1. That I am an Apoſtle of Chriſt, called from heaven immediately to that office: 2. That I had no obligation to do what I have done among you (ſee ver. 4, and 19.) that is, to preach on free-coſt to you, as I have done; but that I diſcern my Chriſtian liberty ſo well, that I know I might have done otherwiſe: 3. That tho' I was none of Chriſt's followers here on earth, yet I have been equall'd to them by ſeeing, and being ſpoken to by, Chriſt out of heaven: And, 4. That I am certainly he that converted you to the faith, that planted the Goſpel at Corinth; and ſo ſurely am not unworthy to be conſidered by you (H.)

Am I not free?] If, ſaith he, ye alledge for your ſelves, that ye are free, and therefore will uſe your liberty; Am not I alſo free, ſince I am an Apoſtle? Yet I, for the benefit of others, forbear the uſe of my Chriſtian liberty, in things which more nearly concern me, and may ſeem in ſome degree neceſſary: And will not ye forego yours, in matters of leſs moment and meerly indifferent, rather than offend your weak brethren? (Beza and Aſſ.)

Have I not ſeen Jeſus?] The Apoſtles being choſen to be witneſſes of the reſurrection, it was requiſite, that St. Paul, being called to that office, ſhould alſo ſee him riſen. Accordingly, we find, that Chriſt "was ſeen of him," ch. xv. 8. yea, oft appear'd to him after his reſurrection, Acts xviii. 9. and xxii. 18. and that he was taught the Goſpel by the immediate "revelation of Jeſus Chriſt," Gal. i. 12. (W.) Yet it will not hence follow, that Chriſt was at the ſame time at the right hand of his Father in heaven, and upon earth, or near the earth, where St. Paul ſaw him, as our adverſaries would infer. For either St. Paul ſaw Chriſt in a viſion, or elſe with his corporal eyes, as St. Stephen did, Acts vii. 56. his eyes being ſtrengthen'd, and elevated above nature, to diſcern Chriſt ſo far diſtant. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts ix. 17. and xxiii. 11.

My work in the Lord.] See the notes on ch. iii. 10. and iv. 15.

The ſeal of mine Apoſtleſhip.] Your converſion, by my miniſtry, is, as it were, a ſeal, to confirm the truth of my apoſtolical miſſion. Whatſoever belongeth to an Apoſtle I have exhibited among you, both by my powerful miniſtry, and the ſigns and wonders which God hath wrought by me. (Aſſ.) But this text ſeems very much abuſed by our Sectaries, when, from theſe words, they argue, That, ſeeing they have been inſtrumental to work ſome reformation in others by their preaching, or diſcourſes, therefore they have a divine call to exerciſe their miniſtry, and to adminiſter the holy ſacraments; which argument will plead as much for religious maſters and miſtreſſes of large and well-regulated families, and for ſchoolmaſters, and for every good man or woman who is ſo happy as to prevail with others to lead a virtuous and religious life. But what is it they would prove from theſe words? Is it, that they are of the number of Chriſt's Apoſtles? If not, why do they produce this text? Is it that they have converted men from Heatheniſm to Chriſtianity, by ſigns and miracles, and powers of the Holy Ghoſt? Or that "the ſigns of an Apoſtle have been wrought among their auditors, by ſigns, and wonders, and mighty operations," as this Apoſtle argueth? 2 Cor. xii. 12. Or that they have given their hearers ſuch "a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in them," as he did, ch. xiii. 3? Or that, by their means, their hearers were endow'd with the gifts of tongues and prophecy, as the Corinthians were? If not, this text cannot concern them at all, who had no ſuch ſeal, or ſign of their Apoſtleſhip, as St. Paul ſaith he had. (W.)

Have we not power?] Exouſia; that is, rightful power or authority. (W. and B.) As the word is to be underſtood, alſo, Rom. xiii. 1. (where ſee the notes,) and elſewhere.

To eat, and to drink.] To wit, Either without uſing ſo much abſtinence, or at the charge of the church, as well as others. (W.)

To lead about a ſiſter, a wife.] Adelphen gynaika periagein. It is the obſervation of Hilary, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, That as ſome women attended on the Lord, when he was on earth, to miniſter neceſſaries to him and his diſciples; ſo ſome rich women, converted by them, follow'd the Apoſtles, to provide diet, and other neceſſaries, for them; and they who thus interpret theſe words tranſlate them a ſiſter-woman. This expoſition Theodoret mentions, but ſeems not to approve: And indeed it ſeems to have had its riſe from Tertullian, when he was a Montaniſt. For Clemens of Alexandria not only ſaith, That he who marries hath the Apoſtles for examples, and that St. Peter carried his wife with him till her martyrdom: But he confutes the enemies of matrimony from this very text; adding, That they carried their wives about, not as wives, but as ſiſters, to miniſter to thoſe who were miſtreſſes of families, that ſo the doctrine of the Lord might, without any reprehenſion or evil ſuſpicion, enter into the apartments of the women. This expoſition ſeemeth to be moſt agreeable, 1. To the words; which are not gynaika adelphen, but adelphen gynaika; which cannot well be rendred a ſiſter-woman, there being no ſiſter which is not a woman. 2. To the context; which plainly ſeems to ſpeak, not of ſuch wealthy women as could nouriſh the Apoſtles out of their abundance, but of ſuch as were to be nouriſhed, with them, by others. 3. To the language of the Jews; who called their wives, ſiſters: As Tobit ſaith to his wife, "Take no care, my ſiſter," Tob. v. 20. And, laſtly, This ſeems beſt to conſult the credit and eſteem of the Apoſtles; who could not, without evil ſuſpicion, carry about with them ſingle women, or the wives of other men. As for the women who are ſaid to have follow'd Chriſt, they were none of his retinue: They attended not upon his perſon, but upon his doctrine; and ſo they miniſtred no ſuch ground of ſuſpicion. But hence, I think, it doth not appear, as Mr. Clerc ſaith, that St. Paul then had a wife: But only that either he, or Barnabas, had one, or at leaſt might have had one, no law then forbidding it; and Tertullian ſays, if not in his own ſenſe, at leaſt in the perſon of the Orthodox, That it was lawful for the Apoſtles to marry and lead about their wives with them. (Idem.) This conſtruction ſeems likewiſe to be favour'd by the verb periagein; which importeth a ſuperiority and authority over the perſon lead about, ſuch as an husband has over his wife. (Leigh) See the notes on ch. vii. 7. and Rom. xvi. 1.

To forbear working.] That is, May the other Apoſtles eat and drink on the expence of the church, and keep their wives alſo and families, by the offerings of their children whom they beget in the Goſpel; and muſt "I only and Barnabas" not live but by the works of our hands? (Aſſ.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? Or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Say I theſe things as a man? Or ſaith not the law the ſame alſo? For it is written in the law of Moſes, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? Or ſaith he it altogether for our ſakes? For our ſakes, no doubt this is written: That he that ploweth, ſhould plow in hope; and that he that threſheth in hope, ſhould be partaker of his hope. If we have ſown unto you ſpiritual things, is it a great thing if we ſhall reap your carnal things? If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheleſs, we have not uſed this power; but ſuffer all things, leſt we ſhould hinder the goſpel of Chriſt. Do ye not know that they which miniſter about holy things, live of the things of the temple? And they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar? Even ſo hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the goſpel, ſhould live of the goſpel.

Who goeth a warfare.] That he may not ſeem to reprove the Apoſtles who were maintain'd by the church, he ſheweth, that it was juſt and lawful for them to live as they did of the church's allowance; by an argument of compariſon, ſince ſoldiers live by their pay, husbandmen by the fruit of their labours, and ſhepherds of that which cometh of the flock. (Beza and Aſſ.) As ſoldiers have deſervedly their due ſtipends, as husbandmen reap their anſwerable fruits, as ſhepherds receive their paſtoral profits: Surely, ſo muſt the ſpiritual ſoldiers, the chariots and horſemen of Iſrael, the captains of Chriſtian companies under the great general our Lord Jeſus, have their full dues; ſo muſt the myſtical husbandmen, in the vineyard and garden of his church, freely participate of the grapes, and fruits of their plantations; ſo muſt the ſhepherds of mens ſouls receive meet benefit from among their tended flocks, and be fed with the milk of nurſing fathers and nurſing mothers breaſts: As the ſoldier meriteth his military ſtipend, the vineyard-planter his wine, and the ſhepherd his wool; ſo muſt the ſpiritual paſtors (repreſenting all theſe callings in a diverſe kind) be thought to deſerve, and indeed receive, liberal recompence for their labours. (Meene) This is the firſt argument which the Apoſtle here makes uſe of, to prove the miniſters maintenance a duty, taken from the law of nations, equity and cuſtom, which do appoint and allow to ſoldiers, vine-dreſſers and ſhepherds, yea, and to all that labour for the uſe of others in their reſpective callings, a due reward of wages; "Who goeth a warfare at any time at his own charges?" &c. (B.) As to the dangers of their calling, they are likened to ſoldiers; as to their pains, to husbandmen and vine dreſſers; and, as to their love and care, they are compared to ſhepherds. (Comb.) And the pertinency of theſe ſimilitudes will be the more viſible, if we conſider, That both in the Old and New Teſtament, the miniſterial function is repreſented as a warfare: (See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 18.) And the Levite, who was conſecrated to the ſervice of the Tabernacle, is ſaid to "enter into the hoſt," Numb. iv. 3. The church of God is alſo repreſented as his vineyard, Iſa. v. 1, &c. Mat. xx. 1, &c. xxi. 33, &c. Luke xiii. 6, &c. And as his flock, Iſa. xl. 11. and lxiii. 11. Mat. xxvi. 31. Luke xii. 32. Acts xx. 28, 29. 1 Pet. v. 2, 3. (W.) See the notes on ch. iii. 6, 8. and Acts xx. 28.

Say I theſe things as a man?] Kat' anthropon; That is, only from principles of natural reaſon and equity. This phraſe, in the New Teſtament, doth always ſignify to ſpeak, act, and live after the manner of a mere natural man, not yet acquainted with the mind of God, not acting by the guidance of divine wiſdom, or not aſſiſted by the Holy Spirit. (Idem)

Saith not the law the ſame alſo?] This ſecond argument for the people chearfully to maintain their miniſters, is taken from the Levitical law. "Say I theſe things as a man? Or ſaith not the law the ſame alſo?" That is, This is not only agreeable to the light of nature and the law of nations, but the Levitical law ſays the ſame. For, when God, in Deut. xxv. 4. ſays, "Thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox, when he," by hard labour, "treadeth out the corn" with his feet, his deſign therein is more than the bare "taking care for oxen:" For thereby he ſhews, in general, what equity ſhould be uſed, in the juſt rewarding of all who labour for us; and, in particular, that ſpiritual labourers, who plough, and ſow, and thraſh, (as it were) in the ſpiritual husbandry, ſhould labour "in hope" of a livelihood and ſubſiſtence, and eat their bread when they have earn'd it. If all men are encourag'd to work, by a juſt expectation of the fruit of their own juſt labours, why ſhould not the miniſters of Chriſt meet with the like encouragement, which all mankind look upon as their juſt due? (B.) As to the phraſe of treading out the corn with his feet, 'tis obſerv'd, that in thoſe days the uſe of the flail for threſhing it was but little known; but either the feet of beaſts, as in Hoſ. x. 11. or wheels, and ſometimes ſtones, were employ'd to that purpoſe, as in Iſa. xxviii. 27, 28. (Meene) See the notes on Gal. vi. 6. and 1 Tim. v. 18.

If we have ſown.] A third argument for the miniſters maintenance is here taken from common juſtice. They "ſow ſpiritual things;" that is, they diſpenſe the word and ſacraments, and endeavour to make men ſpiritual and holy here, and happy hereafter: And therefore they ought to reap ſome of their people's carnal things; things for the ſupport of their lives, ſubſiſtence for themſelves and their families. So that the miniſters of God are not indebted to their people; but their people are indebted both to God and them: They give their people things of a much greater, and more excellent uſe; even ſpiritual things for carnal. (B.) Which if they value according to their worth, all that they can give will appear far ſhort of a requital. (Comb.) See the notes on Rom. xv. 27.

If others be partakers.] Here is a fourth argument taken from their own example to other teachers at Corinth: As if he had ſaid, Ye maintain others; and why not us? Do not ye owe more to us who firſt laid the foundation of a Chriſtian church among you, and have begotten you through the Goſpel, than ye do to others? (B.) Where note alſo, That the word here tranſlated power, is exouſia; which properly ſignifies right, or authority. So that the Apoſtle, by uſing that word in this place, does plainly aſſert a right in the clergy to a maintenance, and their authority to demand it. (Beza) See the notes on ver. 4. and ch. iv. 12.

We have not uſed this power.] See the notes on ver. 15.

But ſuffer all things.] See the notes on ch. iv. 9, &c.

They which miniſter.] Here is a fifth argument, for the miniſters maintenance, taken from the Levites, who had a known right, by the expreſs law of God, to live of the things about which they were employ'd in their miniſtry; viz. excoriating, waſhing, and preparing the ſacrifices for the altar. (G. H. W. and B.) Moſt of theſe Corinthians had been firſt Jewiſh proſelytes, and were now become Chriſtians. Wherefore the Apoſtle here ſets before them the known example of the proviſions for the Prieſts and Levites under the law; and in the next verſe propounds unto them the ordinance of Chriſt in the Goſpel. His argument paraphras'd ſtands thus; The miniſters of the Goſpel certainly deſerve as much as the Levitical Prieſthood: And "do ye not know" how honourably the law provided for them? For, beſides many free cities and lands, and all the tithes, (which Scaliger proves to have been nineteen parts out of an hundred, and Joſephus noteth to have been enough for above five thouſand prieſts) it was appointed, "that they which" were but Levites, and did only "miniſter" and ſerve the Prieſts "about holy things," ſhould be nobly fed, and "live" plentifully "of the things of the temple," (that is, upon the beſt parts of the ſacrifice)? And" that the Prieſts, which offer all oblations, being "they which wait" on the ſervice of God "at the altar," ſhould have a large ſhare of the offerings, and the benefit of all conſecrated things, ſo that they "are partakers with the altar," which only conſumeth God's part, and the reſt they feaſted upon? (Comb.)

Even ſo hath the Lord ordained.] Viz. Mat. x. 10. and Luke x. 7. Hence it clearly appears, That a maintenance for the miniſtry, under the Goſpel is of divine right: If it was ſo under the law, it is likewiſe under the Goſpel; for "even ſo hath the Lord ordained."

God's will in this matter is the ſame under the New Teſtement as it was under the Old. (B.) But for the more certain diſcovery of what is meant by the words (ek tou evangeliou zen) to "live of the Goſpel," we muſt conſider the propoſition, in the foregoing verſe, whereof this verſe is the application. Where (hoi ta hiera ergazomenoi) Thoſe who were employed or did "miniſter about holy things," are the Levites, who lived (ek tou hierou) of the holy thing, or (if you had rather it ſhould be a ſubſtantive) "of the temple." 1. Of that which belonged thereto; namely, of the tithes, which belong'd to the temple, but were no offering of the altar: (hoi to thuſiaſterio proſedreuontes,) They who did (incumbere, or aſſidere altari) "wait at the altar" were the Prieſts, whoſe proper office it was to offer ſacrifices thereon, and had part of the ſame for their proper maintenance; as the breaſt and left ſhoulder before it was burnt; and after, ſo much as was reſerv'd from burning: And ſo they did (to thuſiaſterio ſymmerizeſthai, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) "partake (or were fellow ſharers) with the altar;" the altar having one part of the offering, they another. Thus, we ſee, the Apoſtle in both ſuits the maintenance with the office. The office of the Levites was (ta hiera ergazeſthai,) to "miniſter about holy things;" their maintenance, (to hieron) the holy thing, or the revenue of the temple; (ek tou hierou eſthiouſi,) they eat of the holy thing; The office of the prieſts (to thuſiaſterio proſedreuein) to "wait at the altar;" their maintenance, (to thuſiaſterio ſymmerizeſthai) to ſhare or "partake with the altar." Now muſt not the application anſwer the propoſition? What manner of ſimilitude, what analogy, will there be, elſe? Therefore, as (catangellein to euangelion) to "preach the Goſpel," is the office of the miniſters of the Goſpel, ſo is their maintenance noted by (ek tou euangeliou zeen) "living of the Goſpel." Thoſe therefore, who interpret theſe words, as if euangelion in the laſt place were taken in no other ſenſe, than it was in the firſt; namely, to note the function, or calling of the miniſters; (as if the ſenſe were no other, but that the miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe calling it is to preach the Goſpel, ſhould get their living by their calling, of preaching the Goſpel) make St. Paul the author of a lame and inconſequent ſimilitude, whoſe application anſwers not unto his propoſition. For what an houto, what an "even ſo," or analogy, would this be? The Levites lived of the holy portion, or revenue of the temple, as their opſonion, or wages; even ſo the miniſters of the Goſpel muſt live by their calling and function! The Prieſts were maintain'd out of the ſhare they had of the offerings of the altar; even juſt ſo, the miniſters of the Goſpel muſt live by their calling and function of preaching the Goſpel! May not any one ſee that the application anſwers not the propoſition? For that ſpeaks of the wages, this of the ſervice, for which the wages is due: Well therefore, as in the propoſition, the wages was compar'd with the work; ſo muſt it be in the application too; and conſequently, ek tou euangeliou zeen, muſt here expreſs the wages, as to euangelion katangellein, doth the work. But now here is the query. If ek tou euangeliou zeen, note not the function, but the wages and maintenance due to the evangelic miniſters, in what notion then is euangelion here to be taken, and how to be expounded? Oecumenius would have euangelion, in this laſt place, to ſignify (hoi to euangelio pepiſteukotes) the believers of the Goſpel; and the meaning to be, that (euangeliſthentes) thoſe who preach the Goſpel, ſhould be maintained by theſe which believe the Goſpel: But this would make our application to anſwer the propoſition little better than the former: For that ſpeaks of the maintenance, and wages of the Levites, and Prieſts, not a word of the maintainers. Beſides, to ſpeak properly, it is not true, that the people maintain the miniſters: They are not their miniſters, but God's; and he maintains them, out of his own revenue, and not at other mens charges. Quis militat ſuis ſtipendiis? (ſaith our Apoſtle, at his entrance upon this argument) Who goeth to war at his own charges? Now I aſk; Cujus ſtipendiis militat, qui militat? Nonne imperatoris? To which purpoſe, note alſo by the way, that it is not ſaid here (as we tranſlate it) So hath God ordained, that thoſe which preach the Goſpel, ſhould live of the Goſpel: But, So hath God appointed, or given order, to theſe who preach the Goſpel, that they ſhould live of the Goſpel; that is, Non dicit Dominum mandaſſe aliis, ut eos alerent, ſed mandaſſe ipſis, ut ex evangelio viverent. But, to return again to the interpretation of euangelion, which others therefore had rather take here for (ta tou euangeliou) that which in the Goſpel is conſecrated to God: To wit, As the Prieſts, and Levites had their maintenance out of that, which was offered unto God in the law; ſo God had ordained, that the miniſters of the Goſpel ſhould be maintained of that, which is conſecrated to him in the Goſpel. And this ſenſe is ſtreight, and good. But what need we fly to a trope, when the natural ſenſe of the word euangelion will ſerve our turn; yea do it much better? For howſoever in the New Teſtament it moſt commonly ſignifies good tidings; yet, in other Greek writers, the more uſual ſignification, in the ſingular number, is the gift, or reward wont to be given for good tidings. Homer (Odyſſ. xiv.) brings in Ulyſſes, in a poor traveller's diſguiſe, ſtipulating with his ſervant Eumæus, what his reward ſhould be, for the good news he promis'd to tell him of his maſter's life, and ſpeedy return: (Euangelion de moi eſto) Let this be my reward, ſaith he, &c. To whom Eumæus anſwers, Neither am I able to give ſuch a reward (Euangelion;) neither will Ulyſſes ever come home again! Plutarch (de gloria Athenienſium) relates, that the Lacedemonians, to one who brought them tidings of the victory at Mantinea, having been no actor, but a ſpectator only, ſent for an euangelion, only a diſh of meat from one of their common ſuppers, called phiditia. The ſame author (within three or four lines after) affirms, that hiſtorians, who relate and deſcribe battles and victories in ſuch perſpicuous ſtyles, deſerve an euangelion, from thoſe who firſt read them: And (in his Demetrius) he tells, that when one Ariſtodemus brought news to king Antigonus, of a notable victory his party had obtain'd againſt Ptolomæus Lagi, but put the king firſt in great perplexity, by diſcovering nothing, either by word or countenance, what his tidings were, till he came to the king's preſence, then ſaying, Salve rex Antigone, vicimus prælio navali regem Ptolomæum: The king anſwer'd, Et tu quoque hercle ſalve; quia vero ita nos torſiſti, lues pœnam, nam tardius euangelion accipies: All which is a ſufficient teſtimony both of the uſe of the word, and the cuſtom. Cicero (in one of his Epiſtles, Ad Atticum) uſeth the plural number; O ſuaves tuas epiſtolas (ſaith he) uno tempore mihi datas duas: Quibus euangelia quæ reddam, neſcio; deberi quidem plane fateor. Beſides, in the plural number, euangelia, ſignifies a ſacrifice for good tidings. Hence Plutarch (in his Phocio) hath euangelia thyei: And ſo Iſocrates (in Areopagitico) and Xenophon (in his Hellanica) likewiſe uſe it. To conclude, It is apparent by theſe examples, that euangelion ſignifies a gift, or tribute due for good tidings; whether as an offering to the gods, the authors; or as a reward to men, the meſſengers and bringers. Now, the moſt bleſſed and happy tidings that ever came to the ears of the ſons of men, is ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; whereof his Prieſts and Miniſters are the daily meſſengers: Is there not then an euangelion due for this? And is not this what our Apoſtle meaneth, when he ſays, The Lord hath ordained that they who preach the Goſpel ſhould live ek tou euangeliou? So that, which of old was requir'd only for acknowledgment of the divine dominion, under the bondage of the law, is now turn'd into the nature of an euangelion in the liberty of the Goſpel; I mean that which we offer now unto God, for the maintenance of the Evangelical miniſtry, and other uſes of his ſervice. The ſenſe is moſt fit, and agreeable; and makes the Apoſtle's expreſſion (if ſo underſtood) paſſing elegant. But you will ſay, What probability is there, the Apoſtle ſhould uſe an euangelion in this notion? For tho' prophane authors do ſo, yet the Scriptures meaning, both here and elſewhere, is to be meaſur'd by its own dialect. Have therefore the Hebrew, the Chaldee, the Septuagint any ſuch notion as this? I anſwer, Yes; All three of them. For in the Hebrew, the only word for good tidings, ſignifies alſo præmium boni nuncii: Yea, being not above five times found in the Old Teſtament, ſome will have it thrice taken in that ſignification; and twice will be eaſily yielded them: Likewiſe in the Chaldee, the words ſignify as well the one as the other, both nuncium, and nuncii præmium. As for the Seventy, the word euangelion is but thrice found with them; and once ſo apparently in this ſignification, as leaves no place for contradiction. It is, 2 Sam. iv. 10. where they have, dounai euangelion. They are the words of king David, when Rechab and Baanah brought Iſhboſheth's head unto him; "When one told me, ſaying, Behold Saul is dead, (thinking he had brought good tidings) I took hold of him, and ſlew him in Ziklag, when I ſhould have given him a reward for his tidings:" The Hebrew, the Seventy, the Vulgar, or St. Hierom, and the Chaldee Paraphraſt, all agreeing in the ſame ſenſe. Thus, we ſee, this notion was familiar to all the languages that St. Paul was brought up in. Why ſhould it then be improbable, he ſhould uſe it when he had occaſion? And no marvel, it is to be found no oftner; For, unleſs it be in this chapter, in the whole New Teſtament, the thing itſelf (reward for good tidings) is never mention'd, intimated, or alluded to. How then could the word be us'd? But in this chapter, methinks, I hear it us'd a ſecond time, ver. 23. where St. Paul, tho' he receiv'd no reward of the Corinthians for his pains in making known the glad tidings of ſalvation unto them, but did it gratis to them-ward; Yet he look'd for an euangelion from God, ſtor'd up in the heavens, for all his faithful meſſengers, and to be receiv'd at the great day: In expectation whereof, he not only preach'd the Goſpel to them freely, but endur'd all things, and made himſelf a ſervant to all; "And this I do, for the euangelion, that I might be partaker thereof." What euangelion ſhould it be, that Paul here aim'd to be partaker of? Surely, it ſhould ſeem it here notes ſome præmium, even by that which immediately follows; "Know ye not, that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the brabæum; So run that ye may obtain." (Mede) See the reſpective Sermons of Mr. Sclater 1612. Mr. Johnſon 1633. and Mr. Meene 1638. on theſe foregoing texts.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. But I have uſed none of theſe things. Neither have I written theſe things, that it ſhould be ſo done unto me: For it were better for me to die, than that any man ſhould make my glorying void. For though I preach the goſpel, I have nothing to glory of: For neceſſity is laid upon me; yea, wo is unto me, if I preach not the goſpel. For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: But if againſt my will, a diſpenſation of the goſpel is committed unto me. What is my reward then? Verily that when I preach the goſpel, I may make the goſpel of Chriſt without charge, that I abuſe not my power in the goſpel. For though I be free from all men, yet have I made my ſelf ſervant unto all, that I might gain the more. And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, as without law (being not without law to God, but under the law to Chriſt) that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means ſave ſome. And this I do for the goſpel's ſake, that I might be partaker thereof with you.

But I have uſed none of theſe things.] The Apoſtle having thus aſſerted his liberty, now ſhews his great moderation in the uſe of it: Altho' he had a liberty to marry, and to demand maintenance for his miniſtry, as well as others, yet he denied himſelf in both. He was charg'd by falſe teachers, that he preach'd the Goſpel for his own profit and advantage: Whereas he gloried in the contrary, that he did it without charge; looking upon it as his great honour, that he could, and did, preach the Goſpel freely, for ſincere ends, and not out of ſiniſter reſpects; and profeſſes he had rather die by ſtarving, than loſe his advantage of glorying. Now the inference which St. Paul draws from all this diſcourſe of his declining the uſe of his lawful liberty, is this; If I your miniſter, for your profit, and the advantage of the Goſpel, abate of my own juſt right, and unqueſtionable liberty, why ſhould not ye abate of yours, in the caſe of eating things offer'd unto idols, to keep your weak brother from deſtroying his ſoul by ſinning againſt God? (B.) See the notes on Acts xx. 33, 34.

Nothing to glory of.] That which the Apoſtle glories in, is not his bare preaching of the Goſpel, but his preaching of it freely and without maintenance: For, ſays he, "tho' I preach the Goſpel," that has nothing ſingular in it, others do it as well as my ſelf; and I am bound to do it as well as others; "for neceſſity is laid upon me," by ſpecial call and command from Chriſt ſo to do; "yea, woe is unto me," for my diſobedience to Chriſt in the heavenly viſion, "if I preach not the Goſpel." Now, "if I do this thing willingly," that is, freely, without demanding any thing of you for my pains, which I might do, "I have a reward;" that is, a ſpecial reward from God, and may glory in it: But if I preach unwillingly, (demanding a maintenance for my pains, and refuſing to preach without it) all that can be ſaid is this, that "a diſpenſation of the Goſpel is committed to me;" and ſo in preaching I only diſcharge a truſt, of which I cannot boaſt or glory. The ſtrength of the Apoſtle's argument lies here; No man can reaſonably boaſt of, glory in, or expect an extraordinary reward for, the doing of that which he is under a command from his ſuperior to do, and that under a penalty too. Now this was his caſe: Neceſſity was laid upon him to preach the Goſpel; but no neceſſity but what he had laid upon himſelf to preach it freely: Therefore, for him to do it, without demanding any reward from them for the doing of it, this made it matter of glorying to him; which he declares he had rather die than any ſhould take from him. But was it the Apoſtle's own glory that he was thus fond of, and concern'd for, that he had rather loſe his life than loſe it? No, it was the glory of God, the honour of the Goſpel, that was ſo inexpreſſibly dear unto him: This great Apoſtle did upon pure principles of faith and love from his heart and ſoul deſign the glory of God, purſuant to which he did chearfully and willingly apply himſelf to the preaching of the Goſpel, waiting upon God for his acceptance and reward, without expecting any wages (as he might) from them, his Corinthian converts; and this was the matter of his boaſting and glorying in the face of the falſe Apoſtles, who inſinuated that he preach'd the Goſpel for filthy lucre ſake. (Idem.) There is (kauchema) matter of glorying, in things done by the aſſiſtance of the grace of God, and it is for the glory of a man to do them; as appears 2 Cor. i. 12. xi. 10. and Gal. vi. 4. The glorying therefore which the Apoſtle elſewhere doth reject and exclude, is only that of the merit of our works, or their ſufficiency to procure the juſtification of a ſinner, Rom. iii. 27. and iv. 2. or that which doth exclude the help, or the aſſiſtance of the grace of God in Chriſt, 1 Cor. i. 29, 31. (W.) See the notes on Rom. ii. 17.

If I do this thing willingly.] What is the meaning of hekon praſſo, to do any thing voluntary, or as a voluntier, appears by ſeveral parts of the context; 1. By the oppoſition to akon, involuntary; as that is explained by "a neceſſity is laid upon me, and wo is to me, if I preach not," &c. ver. 16. and I am intruſted, or a truſt is repoſed in me, ver. 17. For that notes the involuntary action to be that which is by law required, and cannot be omitted without ſin, and ſo becometh neceſſary. So ſaith Theophylact, By theſe words, If I am intruſted, 'tis manifeſt he means that I do it not of myſelf, but perform the Lord's command; for this is to do it involuntary. And therefore to do it hecon, voluntary, is to do it of one's ſelf, without any command or obligation on him to do it. So Theophylact interprets it, If this were not committed to me as a truſt, but I did it of myſelf. 2. By the mention of kauchema, boaſting, ver. 16. and 2 Cor. xi. 9, 10. for that implies what is done to be done without obligation, and above that which was neceſſary by engagement of any precept. And ſo, 3. By miſthon echo, "I have reward," here and ver. 18. for reward ſignifies a return or retribution to ſomewhat, which a man was not bound to do. So the phraſe is uſed among the Jews; and Maimonides hath this rule, (Mor. Neb. l. 3. c. 17) To him a reward is given, who doth any thing unbidden. And therefore the whole phraſe here, ei gar hecon touto praſſo, muſt thus be rendred moſt clearly, not "If I do, or ſhall do, this voluntary," as ſuppoſing that poſſible that he may, (for ſpeaking of "preaching the Goſpel," he had before ſaid, that "neceſſity was laid upon him," and therefore he cannot be free, or at liberty to do or not do it:) But as a ſuppoſition doth not affirm, ſo the ei is to be render'd, if, that is, on ſuppoſition, that I did this voluntarily, a reward would then belong to me; ei de akon, but ſeeing 'tis not ſo, ſeeing I do it not of my own inſtinct, but by appointment from God, &c. therefore there is nothing heroical, or matter of holy emulation, or ambition in it. And accordingly it follows, that the matter of preaching being to him diſtinctly under precept, there was but one thing which could bring him any reward, viz. the making it coſtleſs to the auditors, ver 18. in not making uſe of that power which he had; that is, the power of receiving maintenance from others, ver. 5. which he might moſt lawfully have done, ver. 7, 12, 14. and which Cephas and others freely did, ver. 5. and the not uſing it would therefore be thankworthy with God, and yield him ſome reward from him. To this purpoſe clearly St. Chryſoſtome ſays, One was a precept, the other a virtuous action of his choice; for what is done above the command, hath proportionably a great reward: And again, of the word anagke, neceſſity, that it refers to the command, in oppoſition to the freedom, or liberty, of receiving, ver. 12. So again Theophylact, Preaching the Goſpel is a command, and ſo a debt; and if I do it, there is no great matter of virtue in it; but to preach without charging them, is the ambition of my free will, or choice, and in that reſpect there is a place of boaſting, or I may boaſt. And ſo St. Auguſtine ſays, Bleſſed Paul might get his food by preaching the Goſpel; but in that he choſe to labour, with his hands, he erogated the more, did more in God's ſervice, than by any particular precept was required of him. (H.)

A diſpenſation of the Goſpel.] See the notes on chap. iv 1. and Luke xvi. 2.

That I abuſe not my power.] Or rather, ſo that I uſe it not. See the word katachraomai uſed in the ſame ſenſe, chap vii. 31. For 'tis plain, ver. 14. that thoſe who made the Goſpel a charge, abuſed not their power. (Fell)

For, though I be free from all men.] In theſe verſes our Apoſtle proceeds to ſhew the Corinthians farther, how mightily he did abridge himſelf of his Chriſtian liberty, which was the argument he was inſiſting upon. For, ſays he, "tho' I be free from all men," as being a ſervant to none, "yet have I made myſelf as a ſervant to all, that I might gain the more," to embrace the Goſpel. To the unconverted Jew he "became as a Jew;" circumciſing Timothy for their ſakes, Acts. xvi. 3. "that he might gain the Jews." To them, who in their opinion were yet under the obligation of the ceremonial law, he carried himſelf as a perſon under that law, tho' he knew himſelf free from it, to the end "that he might gain them that are under the law;" and accordingly he purified himſelf in the temple, Acts xxi. 16. "To them that were without law," that is, the Gentiles, who were without the ceremonial law, he became as a perſon without law; abſtaining from the uſe of all ceremonies as they did: But yet "not being without law to God, but under the law to Chriſt:" That is, at to the moral law of God, which was not aboliſhed, but reinforced by Chriſt, he did never account himſelf free from that, nor durſt do any thing contrary to that eternal rule of righteouſneſs; and all this, "that he might gain them that are without law." To the weak converts, either among Jews or Gentiles "he became as weak," by abſtaining from what might hurt their weak conſciences, "that ſo he might gain the weak." Finally, he became "all things to all men," by compliance with them in all lawful and indifferent things, that he might gain as many as poſſibly he could. And all "this he did for the Goſpels ſake," that the Goſpel might be the better eſteem'd, and farther propagated, and he might himſelf partake of the promiſes and rewards of it, together with them to whom he preached it, and who had effectually entertained it. Behold here the humility and charity of this great Apoſtle; his ready condeſcenſion to the pityable weakneſſes of all men; his compliance with them in all lawful and indifferent things, for the glory of God, and the advantage of the Goſpel: A rare and ſingular pattern for all miniſters and private Chriſtians to imitate and follow. Now from this example of St. Paul's becoming all things to all men, and making himſelf a ſervant unto all, we learn, 1. That one great duty of a Goſpel-miniſter is not to be a ſlave to any, but a ſervant to all; not a ſervant to their luſts, but to their weakneſſes and infirmities. Our Apoſtle did not turn, as the flattering and falſe Apoſtles did, with the tide and times, nor conform to them in what was ſinful: He did not ſymbolize with all colours; nor was he a man for all hours or humours; for, ſays he, "If I pleaſe men, (that is, in any thing that is ſinful) I am no more the ſervant of Chriſt," Gal. i. 10. But wiſely conſidering the caſe and ſtate of all men, he did accommodate his miniſtry for the gaining of as many as poſſibly he could. Some are all things to all men, that they may gain by all; a ſpirit not only unworthy of a miniſter, but a man. But St. Paul complied with all men, and made himſelf the ſervant of all, that Chriſt might thereby gain, his Goſpel gain, yea, and they themſelves alſo gain. 2. The great end which the holy Apoſtle aim'd at, in this his compliance with, and condeſcenſion towards, the weakneſs of his people; "This I do for the Goſpel's ſake:" As if he had ſaid, Tho' I thus ſtoop and yield to all men, 'tis to ſerve my Maſter, not myſelf. Think not that I thus put myſelf into all forms towards men, for my own preferment in the world, but that Chriſt may be prefer'd in the hearts and acceptations of all men: "I pleaſe all men in all things; not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be ſaved," chap. x. 33. This was the mark which this miniſter of Chriſt had in his eye, viz. The ſaving of ſouls: And that he might hit it, he wiſely obſerv'd the temper and ſtate of his people, ſtriving to render himſelf acceptable unto all, "that he might by all means ſave ſome." Yet had he alſo an eye to himſelf in all this: "He had reſpect unto the recompence of reward," as lawfully he might; "This I do, for the Goſpel's ſake, that I might be partaker thereof with you;" that is, that I may have a ſhare myſelf in the promiſed rewards of the Goſpel which I have preached to you. (B.) See the notes on ver. 14. Rom. xiv. 1. and xv. 1.

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27. Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain. And every man that ſtriveth for the maſtery, is temperate in all things: Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible. I therefore ſo run, not as uncertainly; ſo fight I, not as one that beateth the air: But I keep under my body, and bring it into ſubjection; leſt that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myſelf ſhould be a caſt-away.

Know ye not that they which run.] To render his repreſentation of this matter as moving and lively as might be, the Apoſtle chuſes to expreſs himſelf in terms exceeding proper for the perſons to whom he wrote. It was with them, among other parts of Greece, that thoſe games, ſo renowned in ſtory, were celebrated. No honour was more eagerly coveted, than that of excelling in theſe public exerciſes. One of theſe was racing; another compounded of wreſtling and cuffing. In order to both theſe, a long preparation of ſett diet, abſtinence from ſome pleaſures, and ſeveral hardſhips, were preſcribed and undergone. And, in the courſe and combat itſelf, much ſweat and toil, many hazards, ſharp conflicts, and ſore wounds and bruiſes, were to be expected. And yet, all theſe were ſubmitted to, with incredible alacrity and reſolution. But, for what? For an empty name; for a crown of leaves! A prize contended for by many; but to be won by one; and yet courted as induſtriouſly, as painfully, as if each could; nay the more ſo, becauſe it was known all could not, obtain it: But ſtill each flatter'd himſelf, that he ſhould be the ſingle happy man, to whom the glory of the field ſhould be adjudged. Since therefore it was a thing ſo common, ſo creditable, among the people of Corinth, to exert themſelves ſo vigorouſly, upon ſo very poor, ſo very incertain proſpects; why ſhould they decline the like diligence and zeal, where the prize they aim at is ſo much nobler and ſurer? Why think it hard to obey the rules, and contain themſelves within the limits, marked out for their Chriſtian courſe? (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. ix. 30. and Dr. Hammond's critical expoſition of the ſeveral terms of art made uſe of in relation to the exerciſes here alluded to.

Every man that ſtriveth.] The former ſimilitude ſuppoſes every combatant for the prize obliged to make the beſt of his way: But the preſent intimates a danger, not only of being outſtrip'd by the more vigorous endeavours of others, but of encountring great difficulties and obſtructions in our own; and therefore it calls upon us to prepare for a combat: The nature whereof, when we rightly underſtand it, will plainly appear to be ſuch, as we can neither decline, nor behave ourſelves negligently in, without ſuffering the utmoſt damage and diſhonour. (Stanh.) See Dr. Frank's Sermons on theſe texts.

I keep under.] By theſe emphatical compound words, hypopiazo and doulagogo, here applied to mortifying and bringing under bodily appetites, we receive juſt notions of that abſtinence, and thoſe wholeſome ſeverities, which the Chriſtian inſtitution requires, and reaſon dictates to us, as neceſſary to allay our violent paſſion to the pleaſures of this world, and to refine our temper, and raiſe our affections to heaven. The one (doulagogein) ſignifies to conquer an enemy, and carry him captive with us in chains: The other (hypopiazein) is an alluſion to the bruiſes and blackneſs of eyes, which the boxers give one another, contending for victory in the publick games. Here a celebrated Critic (Heinſius) will needs indulge his humour of alteration and conjecture; and puts in hypopiezo, without competent authority: But he makes Glaucus's exchange, parts with a reading of genuine value and noble ſignification, for one of much weaker ſound and feebler meaning; and that too not ſupported by books ſufficient either in number or value. (Blackwall) See the notes on Rom. viii. 13.

A Caſtaway] Adokimos here doth not ſignify reprobate, as the word is oppoſed to elect. For St. Paul was elect, and knew himſelf to be ſo, and therefore could not become a reprobate, but reproved, reproveable, or unapproved. So the word is taken, 2 Cor. xiii. 7. and Heb. vi. 8. For it is oppoſed to the word dokimos, which ſignifieth approved. And therefore it is not ſo much to be refer'd to the perſon of St. Paul, as to his miniſtry; leſt his miniſtry ſhould be rejected, and himſelf be worthy to be reproved. (Leigh)

CHAP. X.

The analogy between the Jewiſh and Chriſtian ſacraments. Their puniſhments a warning to us. Cautions with reſpect to weak brethren.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. MOreover, brethren, I would not that ye ſhould be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all paſſed through the ſea; And were all baptized unto Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea; And did all eat the ſame ſpiritual meat; And did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink: (For they drank of that ſpiritual rock that followed them: and that rock was Chriſt.) But with many of them God was not well pleaſed; for they were overthrown in the wilderneſs. Now theſe things were our examples, to the intent we ſhould not luſt after evil things as they alſo luſted. Neither be ye idolaters, as were ſome of them; as it is written, The people ſat down to eat and drink, and roſe up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as ſome of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thouſand. Neither let us tempt Chriſt, as ſome of them alſo tempted, and were deſtroyed of ſerpents. Neither murmure ye, as ſome of them alſo murmured, and were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer. Now all theſe things happened unto them for enſamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall. There hath no temptation taken you, but ſuch as is common to man: But God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it.

Moreover, brethren.] The foregoing chapter had concluded with very preſſing exhortations to diligence and zeal in our Chriſtian courſe, enforced by the Apoſtle's own example; who, in his own caſe, found this neceſſary, to prevent his being at laſt a caſtaway. But, becauſe ſome might think, there was no cauſe for ſuch melancholy apprehenſions, after the ſignal mercies and advantages, of which the Goſpel-covenant had not only given them poſſeſſion, but had encourag'd them to look upon the preſent as certain pledges of more and greater hereafter; To prevent any falſe and dangerous confidences of this kind, the next thing he attempts is to prove, that all ſuch hopes include a condition of obedience; and that, without this, even the moſt glorious privileges cannot avail for averting the wrath of God. In evidence of his aſſertion, he ſets before them the ſtate of the Jewiſh church: He ſhews, how highly they were favour'd, and yet how unhappily they miſcarried, in the wilderneſs. And from thence he draws an inference, that the Chriſtian church hath reaſon to expect the like dealing, if they ſhall render themſelves obnoxious to it, by the like ingratitude and diſingenuous provocations. (Stanh.) "All our fathers were under the cloud;" that is, under the conduct and protection of the cloud: "And all paſs'd thro' the Red-Sea," as upon dry ground. This cloud which accompanied the Iſraelites in their journeyings had a threefold uſe; 1. In reſpect of God; it was a ſign and ſymbol of the preſence of God with them, and of his care and protection over them, for it encompaſs'd their camp as a wall doth a city. Hence is that of the Pſalmiſt, "He ſpread out a cloud for a covering to them, and fire to give light in the night-ſeaſon," Pſal. cv. 39. 2. In reſpect of the Iſraelites, the cloud did guide and direct them in their journeying; Pſa. lxxviii. 14. "In the day he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire." And as the cloud did guide and direct Iſrael, ſo did it cool and refreſh them in the wilderneſs, preſerving them from the heat of the ſun: It was a covering canopy over them in a ſcorching deſart. 3. In reſpect of their enemies: It was darkneſs to the Egyptians; and conſequently protected the Iſraelites from their enemies, that they could not aſſault or fall upon them: It had a bright ſide to the Iſraelites, and a dark ſide to the Egyptians. (B.) In Exod. xiii. 21, 22. there is mention of "a pillar of a cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night:" By which we are to underſtand, 1. That this pillar was not a ſolid body, ſtanding on the ground, but (as pillars were anciently built hollow, as a kind of dwelling-place) a concave body over their heads, and ſo coming down to the ground, like wings, encompaſſing them on every ſide: And 2. That the pillar of a cloud, and pillar of fire, were both one; viz. A bright, ſhining cloud, ſuch as that deſcrib'd, Mat. xvii. 5. For the ſame Hebrew word ſignifies both light and fire; and that a firey or lightſome cloud, tho' in the day-time, when the ſun ſhines it doth not ſhine, doth yet ſhine in the night, and give light, as fire, 'tis evident. And this, I ſuppoſe, is the reaſon, why here is mention only of the cloud, not of the fire, tho' in Moſes there is mention of both. All this being thus premis'd, it appears 1. How fitly it is here ſaid by the Apoſtle, that "our fathers (that is, thoſe Iſraelites that then went out of Egypt) were under the cloud, and paſs'd through the ſea;" theſe two being varied phraſes of the ſame importance. For upon their entring into the channel, the ſea gave way to them, and then return'd up to the ſhore again, dry ground being left to them in the midſt of the channel, and the ſea incompaſſing on every ſide of them, before them, behind them, on the right hand, and the left; and ſo, as the cloud environ'd them, in like manner the ſea environ'd them alſo, and as they were protected and ſecur'd by the one, ſo they were by the other. And therefore 2. From hence it alſo appears, why it is here ſaid of them, that they "were baptized in the cloud, and in the ſea;" and why by both "baptized into Moſes." For baptiſm being among the Jews (as well as Chriſtians) the ceremony of initiation of all that enter'd into the covenant, by the ſame reaſon that ſuch are ſaid to be received under the wings of the divine preſence, they may alſo be ſaid to be baptized in, or with, the cloud, and ſea; that covering them with the cloud, and environing them with the ſea, being on God's part the receiving them under his protection to bring them ſafe to Canaan, and ſo to perform to them his part of the covenant, and on their part, an obligation to be for ever obedient to God, under the conduct of Moſes; the aſſuming of which, is "being baptized into Moſes." And this may ſerve for the literal explication of the verſe, as it belongs to the fathers. Now for the application of it to the matter in hand, to which it is accommodated by the Apoſtle, it ſeemeth to lie thus: The Gnoſticks were great pretenders to liberty, by reaſon of their being ſpiritual and perfect: And among the branches of their hereſy, St. Irenæus inſiſting at large on Marcus's followers, obſerves of them, among other things, their pretence that they were (phyſei pneumaticoi) naturally ſpiritual, by which means, they ſaid, no ſin was able to defile them, any more than gold was defil'd by being in a ſink, or the ſun beams by ſhining on a dung-hill; then that they had a ſhield, or cloud, or covering, which whatſoever they did made them (aoratous to crite) inviſible to the judge, and that this belong'd to all that had their (apolytroſis) redemption, as they ſtil'd their baptiſm. That theſe ſcholars of Marcus were after the Apoſtles time, there is no doubt: But yet, being branches of the Valentinians, it is to be thought, that they did, as the ſame Irenæus ſaith of them, take the old doctrines of the Gnoſticks, and accommodate them to their own manner of ſpeaking: And ſo we may, from what we find in theſe latter, diſcern the deceits of thoſe former Hereticks, that unclean ſink of the Gnoſticks, who pretended to that perfection of knowledge, calling themſelves the ſpiritual, and Simon their leader pretending that he was that God the Father that appear'd in mount Sinai, they were thoſe Iſraelites, ſhielded by him with the cloud, carried ſafe through the Red-Sea, and had a ſpecial kind of baptiſm, which they, by their myſtical interpretations of Moſes writing, made proportionable and parallel to the ſeveral things here nam'd of the Iſraelites, ver. 2, 3, 4. And this ſeems to occaſion the Apoſtle's diſcourſe in this place; where, following their language of themſelves, and ſuppoſing, but not granting, them parallel to thoſe Iſraelites that were ſo miraculouſly led and fed, he ſhews, by their example, that if they go on in their ſins, they muſt expect that uſage that the Iſraelites then had, viz. to die in the wilderneſs, and not come to Canaan. (H.)

Eat the ſame ſpiritual meat.] As the one ſacrament (mention'd in the foregoing verſe) was the ſame to Jews and Chriſtians, ſo was the other here: For they "did all eat the ſame ſpiritual meat, and did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink." They, that is, the fathers in the wilderneſs, did all eat of the manna which came down from heaven, which is here call'd "ſpiritual meat;" either becauſe it came down from heaven, which is the habitation of ſpiritual beings; or becauſe it was food given out by the miniſtry of angels, thoſe ſpiritual agents; or elſe it is call'd ſpiritual, that is, ſacramental meat, becauſe it typified Chriſt, who is the bread of life, the true bread which came down from heaven. That manna was a type of Chriſt, thus appears; Was manna provided by God for the Iſraelites without their labour and induſtry? So is Chriſt given unto men without any merit or work of theirs, but of the free gift and goodneſs of God: Did manna come down from heaven, beſides the ordinary courſe of nature? So was Chriſt's birth wonderful, and not as the birth of other men; being not begotten of mortal ſeed, but by the influence of the Holy Ghoſt: Was manna diſtributed to all alike, one not having more, and another leſs, but all an equal ſhare? In like manner Chriſt communicates himſelf unto all alike, without acceptance of perſons; A beggar may have as great a part in Chriſt as a prince. Again, As manna was food, plentiful food, ſweet and pleaſing food; ſo is Chriſt, the food of life, very ſweet to ſuch a ſoul as can truly reliſh him. Farther, Muſt the manna, before fit for food, be beaten in a mortar, or broken in a mill, and bak'd in an oven? So Chriſt, our heavenly manna, was broken on the croſs, ſcorch'd in the fire of his father's wrath, that he might become the ſpiritual food wherewith our ſouls are nouriſh'd unto everlaſting life. Finally, As manna was given only in the wilderneſs, and ceas'd when the Iſraelites came to Canaan; ſo is Chriſt our ſpiritual meat, our ſacramental food, whilſt we are in the wilderneſs of this world; but when we ſhall come to the heavenly Canaan, we ſhall have no more any need of ſacramental ſupports, but ſhall behold him face to face, and be ſatisfied with his likeneſs. The water out of the rock is alſo called ſpiritual drink, it being typically and ſacramentally ſo. (B.) Tho' ſome manuſcripts omit (to auto) "the ſame" in this text, yet this muſt be retain'd. For ſo read Irenæus, and all the Greek Expoſitors. And whereas Eſthius interprets the words thus, They eat the ſame among themſelves, not the ſame with us; this expoſition is contrary, not only to what St. Auguſtin and all the Greek Fathers teach, but alſo to the ſcope of the Apoſtle; which is to ſhew, that they had the like ſpiritual advantages and privileges with us; which yet he doth not do, unleſs their ſpiritual meat and drink ſignified or typified to them Chriſt, as ours doth to us. (W.) Some, both of the ancients and the moderns, have believ'd, that the Apoſtle means, that the old Iſraelites in the wilderneſs did apprehend the manna which they ate, and the water which they drank, to have been prefigurations of the body and blood of Chriſt: And 'tis very evident, that when the Apoſtle calls them "ſpiritual meat and drink," his deſign was to inſtruct us, that the manna, and the water of the rock, did before-hand deſcribe Chriſt, not to the outward ſenſes, to the eyes and taſte, but to the mind or ſpirit; or that the Iſraelites ate and drank the body and blood of Chriſt, not ſubſtantially, or in a ſenſible manner, but under a veil and cover, diſcernible only to the eye of the ſoul. But I think, with others both of the ancients and moderns, that it is not abſolutely neceſſary, that we ſuppoſe the old Iſraelites actually to have diſcover'd the meaning of this meat and drink; but that it was ſufficient to the Apoſtle's purpoſe, that the manna and the water were certain ſigns of God's favour to that people; and that Chriſtians, who have the veil taken away from their eyes, may in that manna and water ſpiritually diſcern the body and blood of Chriſt utterly typified. (Johnſ.) This text is urged againſt the Popiſh doctrine of the corporal preſence in the Lord's Supper, thus; How Chriſt was preſent to the fathers in the wilderneſs, in manna, and in the rock, even ſo he is preſent to us in our ſacrament: But he was not preſent to them in their ſacrament, in his natural body; Therefore he is not in his natural body preſent in our ſacrament.

They receiv'd in their ſacrament the ſame ſubſtance that we do: Therefore they had the ſame preſence. (Goade)

That ſpiritual rock that followed them.] The Jews have now a relation, whether by way of ſtory, or of parable, that the water that came out of the rock in Horeb, Exod. xvii. 6. or the ſtreams that flowed, or overflowed, Pſa. lxxviii. 20. did follow the Iſraelites through their journeying in the wilderneſs: And that it did ſo may appear probable, becauſe in that dry wilderneſs we hear no more of their wanting water, till at Cadeſh, which was ſome thirty-ſix years after this, when they had taken a contrary way in their journeying; by which means (as alſo by God's making this new trial of them, and to that purpoſe ordering the change of their journey) that water might now ceaſe to follow them, which before, as long as the miraculous flowing laſted, might naturally, without any new miracle, follow them all their voyage. This ſaying of theirs St. Paul makes uſe of in a myſtical ſenſe, making Chriſt indeed to be the rock in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and that Chriſt, following (coming really, ſo long after, into the world) but even then (ſo long ago) ſpiritually, and in power preſent among them. (H.) "That rock was Chriſt;" that is, it typified Chriſt. The word was doth import as much as ſignified, or repreſented: So "the rock was Chriſt;" that is, it ſignified, repreſented and typified Jeſus Chriſt. For as the rock gave no water before it was ſmitten with the rod of Moſes; ſo was Chriſt ſmitten upon the croſs, and out of his ſide came forth water: And as it was the rod in Moſes's hand, that ſmote and broke the rock; ſo was Chriſt ſmitten with the curſe of the law, in the day when his ſoul was made an offering for ſin. In a word, as the rock yielded water not only to them that were preſent at the firſt broaching of it, but follow'd them with its ſtreams, in their ſtations through the wilderneſs; in like manner the water which guſhed out from our ſmitten Saviour, the ſweet fruits and benefits of his death, did not only belong to them who were preſent at the time and place of his ſufferings, but it doth and will accompany all believers to the end of this world. The virtue and efficacy of Chriſt's blood is now as great, as efficacious and effectual, as it was the firſt hour it was ſhed; the divinity of his perſon adds an eternal efficacy to his paſſion. (B.)

With many of them.] En tois pleioſin; with moſt of them. (H. and Maſſ.) Yea, even all of them, except only Joſhua and Caleb. (Fell)

Theſe things were our examples.] See the notes on ver. 11.

As they alſo luſted.] The examples here enumerated, as Theodoret obſerves, exactly anſwer to the ſins of the Corinthians. For, as the Jews luſted to eat fleſh, ſo the Corinthians luſted to eat things offer'd to idols, when they had other meat provided plentifully by God for them. (W.)

Idolaters, as were ſome of them.] Here he ſets before them the idolatry of the Jews, who "ſate down to eat and drink" of the ſacrifices offer'd to the golden calf, "and roſe up to play;" that is, to dance before the golden calf, after the manner of the Heathen, this being one of their rites by which they honour'd their gods. (B.) Here almoſt all the criticks obſerve, That paizein, to play, bears an impure ſenſe, importing their fornication with one another; as when we ſay, Such a one hath play'd the whore. But this criticiſm ſeems here to be without foundation. For, 1. The Scripture often mentions their idolatry, but never charges them with whoredom then committed, when they made the golden calf. 2. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of whoredom, in the verſe following, as a diſtinct ſin; and therefore cannot reaſonably be ſuppos'd to charge them with it here. And, 3. That the expoſition of the ancients, that they roſe up to dance before the calf, is confirm'd by theſe words, Exod. xxxii. 19. When "Moſes ſaw the calf, and the dancing, his anger waxed hot:" And becauſe this was done after the manner of the Heathens, and was one of the rites by which they honour'd their gods, the Apoſtle uſeth it as a confirmation of their idolatry. And this is all the Fathers ſeem to mean, by ſaying, That to play is us'd for committing idolatry; and the Jeruſalem Targum, when it ſaith, they did ludere cultu peregrino, play after the Heathen manner. (W.) See the notes on ver. 14, 16.

Fornication, as ſome of them committed.] How prone the Chriſtians of the church of Corinth were to this ſin, which had made the Heathen Corinth infamous to a proverb, we learn from theſe words of the Apoſtle, "I fear, leſt, when I come again, I ſhall bewail many who have ſinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanneſs, and fornication, and laſciviouſneſs which they have committed," 2 Cor. xii. 20, 21. (W.) See the notes on ch. iii. 17. v. 9. vi. 13, &c. and vii. 38.

Three and twenty thouſand.] The whole number was four and twenty thouſand, Numb. xxv. 9. and ſo Oecumenius ſays, ſome ancient copies read here: But of this number, One thouſand was ſlain by the judges, and that probably the day before the plague; and three and twenty thouſand by the immediate hand of God. Now, the deſign of the Apoſtle is here only to mention them who "fell in one day," by the hand of God. See Bochart. Hieroz. l. ii. c. 34. (W.) Or perhaps, in the firſt copy, teſſares might be written tres by an abbreviation, which the tranſcriber might eaſily miſtake for treis, and ſo make it three inſtead of four. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John xx. 26.

Neither let us tempt Chriſt.] Viz. by trying how long his patience will laſt, as the Iſraelites did, when (as the angel of the covenant) he went before them in the wilderneſs, Numb. xxi. 5, 6. And note here, The object, or perſon whom the Iſraelites are ſaid to have tempted; viz. Chriſt: Which proves, 1. His pre-exiſtence before his incarnation: For the Iſraelites could not have then tempted him, had he not been then exiſtent. And, 2. His divinity: For, he who is here call'd Chriſt, is by the Pſalmiſt call'd God, Pſa. cvi. 14. "They tempted God in the deſart." Chriſt had not an human nature to be then tempted in; and therefore they tempted him as he was God. A good argument to prove the divinity of our Saviour; and as ſuch made uſe of by the ancients. (B.) This reading ought not to be queſtion'd: For we find it not only in Hilary the Deacon, St. Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, but alſo in Irenæus. (W.)

Neither murmure ye.] The ſin of murmuring is a diſſatisfaction and uneaſineſs of mind, which makes men repine and complain of their preſent condition: And that either, 1. In their private concerns, wherein 'tis oppoſite to that meekneſs and ſubmiſſion, which the Scripture, and eſpecially the New Teſtament, every where requires of us. Or, 2. In relation to public affairs; importing a diſſatisfaction under the adminiſtration of our governors. And here, as Biſhop Patrick obſerves, the original word gongyzein, which is here tranſlated to murmur, implies not only the inward uneaſineſs of the mind, but alſo the outward expreſſions of that diſcontented humour in undutiful words; and may be render'd, to grumble or mutter, by ſpeaking againſt ſuch things and perſons as we diſlike, without juſt reaſon for it, or upon ſlight cauſes. And this was the very ſin of the Iſraelites; in their murmuring againſt Moſes and Aaron, whom God had ſet over them. (Berdm.) In Egypt, where they had meat enough, they murmur'd for want of liberty: And in the wilderneſs, where they had liberty enough, they murmur'd for want of meat. There, by reaſon of the hard bondage they were in, under Pharaoh and his cruel officers, they would have exchang'd their very lives (had it been poſſible) for a little liberty: Here, when they wanted either bread, or water, or fleſh, they would have exchang'd their liberty again for the onions and garlick, and fleſh-pots of Egypt. Like wayward children, which are never well, full or faſting, but always wrangling; ſo were they: And as they were then, ſo have ever ſince been, and ſtill are, the greateſt part of mankind; and all for want of learning the holy art of contentation. (Sanderſ.)

Happened unto them for enſamples.] That is, The hiſtory of the Iſraelites ſins and puniſhments was written and recorded by God in the holy Scriptures for the uſe and benefit of all ſucceeding generations; and particularly for us, who live in the laſt ages of the world, to warn us to avoid the like ſins, that we may eſcape the like puniſhments. (B.) The mention of theſe provocations, and of the dreadful judgments conſequent upon them, were, in a particular manner, ſeaſonable to the church of Corinth: Among whom theſe two Epiſtles of St. Paul ſufficiently diſcover ſeveral abuſes and errors, of great affinity with the crimes of thoſe Iſraelites. Profane contempt and public diſhonour to the body and blood of Chriſt, in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, ch. xi. 17, &c. Of which true bread from heaven, thus diſdainfully us'd, the manna, treated of old with ſo much contumely, was in that reſpect alſo a type. The ſcandalous liberty of partaking in idol-feaſts and temples, in this and the eighth chapter, were an approach to the Iſraelites eating and drinking before their molten calf. The indulgence given to luſt and ſenſuality appears, not only from the care taken to inſiſt on theſe vices, and the danger of them, at large, ch. v, vi, vii. but eſpecially from their conniving at a crime ſo flagitious and unnatural, as open inceſt with a father's wife, ch. v. 1. to the inſupportable ſcandal of Chriſtian diſcipline and religion. And laſtly, for the murmurers of old, who grew weary of God's methods in the wilderneſs, deſpair'd of Canaan, and, in diſcontent at the hardſhips they felt or form'd to themſelves, were for returning back to Egypt. Theſe alſo met but too near a parallel at Corinth, in many, whom dread of perſecution and trials affrighted from their duty: But in none ſo much as in them, whoſe ſtaggering in the faith render'd that diſcourſe, in ch. xv. neceſſary, in proof of Chriſt's reſurrection and our own; which two important articles they who ceaſe to believe plainly give up that promiſed inheritance, of which Canaan was a figure; do by neceſſary implication make God in Chriſt a liar, revolt from him, and, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, return back to Egypt. So appoſite were the inſtances of diſobedience here, to the circumſtances of the Corinthian converts at that time. By which remark we ſhould flatter our ſelves too much, did we conclude, that they are not alſo admonitions and examples, highly ſeaſonable to the Chriſtians of this, or of any other place and time. The parallel is but too eaſy to be drawn. (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. xv. 4.

The ends of the world are come.] Ta tele ton aionon; The ends of the ages. This phraſe either ſignifies the end of the Jewiſh age; as if the Apoſtle intended to ſay, Theſe things, which happen'd in the beginning of the Jewiſh age, were recorded for caution and example to us who are come to the concluſion of it: Or the laſt of the ages of the world; i. e. The Chriſtian age. For the Jews, according to the tradition of Elias, divide the duration of the world into three ages; the age before the law, the age of the law, and the age after the law, or that of the Meſſiah. (W.)

Take heed leſt he fall.] Theſe words are an inference drawn from the foregoing diſcourſe. Since ſo many, who enjoy'd great privileges, among the Jews, were yet puniſh'd greatly for their ſins; and ſince ſacraments are no privileges, either for ſin, or from plagues, "Therefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall." Where note, 1. A great mutability to which human nature is ſubject; "He that thinketh he ſtandeth may fall:" And, 2. The great vigilancy which is therefore requir'd of us, "leſt we do fall." How many thouſands have fallen by a preſumptuous confidence in their own ſtrength to ſtand! They fell by thinking it impoſſible to fall! A Chriſtian's motto is Cavendo tutus: Never ſafe but when wary and watchful. Let him always keep a jealous eye upon the weakneſs and inconſtancy of his nature, and with a believing eye look up to the promiſe and power of God, and he ſhall be both preſerv'd "from falling, and alſo be preſented faultleſs" and unblameable in the day of Chriſt: For if ever we ſtand in the day of trial, 'tis fear and faith muſt enable us to ſtand. (Biſhop Lake and B.) See the notes on Rom. xi. 20.

There hath no temptation taken you.] Here the Apoſtle anſwers a plea which the Corinthians might probably make, for their compliance with their fellow citizens, in eating things offer'd unto idols in their temples with them; namely, that thereby they ſhould avoid perſecution. Fear not that, ſays the Apoſtle, Ye have hitherto been preſerv'd, that "no temptation has taken you, but ſuch as is common unto man;" that is, Ye have not yet been exercis'd with any trial, but what is human, what the ordinary ſtrength and reſolution of human nature is able to bear: But in caſe ye ſhould be tried with extremity of ſuffering, and that ye muſt either comply with the Heathen idolatry, or endure ſuffering to extremity, yet ye have the promiſe of a faithful God for your ſupport in that caſe; "God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted (at any time) above what ye are able; but will with the temptation alſo make a way (ſo far) to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it." Learn hence, 1. That it is a great addition to an affliction not to ſee or diſcern a way to eſcape, and get out of affliction. God is exceeding gracious in our afflictions, in that he doth not hedge us in on every ſide, and hinder all poſſibility of eſcape out of our troubles. 2. That the conſideration of God's ſtrength to ſupport us in and under our ſufferings; is a mighty encouragement to us to grapple with them reſolutely, and to bear them patiently and ſubmiſſively: If our ſufferings were intolerable, and human nature were not divinely aſſiſted to ſtand under them, we might be forc'd to conſult our preſent eaſe and deliverance, and chuſe ſin rather than affliction; but the aſſiſtance of God makes ſuffering work eaſy. (B.) See Dr. Hickes's excellent Sermon on this text.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry. I ſpeak as to wiſe men: Judge ye what I ſay. The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? For we being many are one bread, and one body: For we are all partakers of that one bread. Behold Iſrael after the fleſh: Are not they which eat of the ſacrifices, partakers of the altar? What ſay I then? That the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in ſacrifice to idols is any thing? But I ſay, that the things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils, and not to God: And I would not that ye ſhould have fellowſhip with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils. Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſy? Are we ſtronger than he?

Wherefore.] Here our Apoſtle re-aſſumes his exhortation to the Corinthians, not to meddle with the myſteries of Paganiſm, nor to eat of things offer'd unto idols; aſſuring them, it was no leſs than idolatry in the account of God to eat of thoſe things which were taken from their execrable altars, as a part and remnant of thoſe ſacrifices to idols, which were perform'd in the city of Corinth, with all the pomp of an abominable ſuperſtition: This participation of things offer'd to idols, in the idol temples, our Apoſtle calls idolatry; "Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry." Where note, 1. That the nature of man is extremely prone to idolatry, and very ready to comply with men in their idolatrous practices. 2. That the idolatry of the Jews of old, and of Chriſtians ſince, who knew and own'd the true God, and gloried in him, was and is far worſe than the idolatry of Pagans, who knew him not, nor ever gloried in him. (B.) And, 3. That St. Paul ſpeaks here of the communion as a ſacrifice. For he charges the Chriſtians at Corinth "not to be idolaters," ver. 7. meaning, ſuch idolaters as the Iſraelites were, when they "ſate down to eat and drink" before the golden calf; and therefore, by idolatry he means the eating things offer'd to idols. And here again he cautions them to "flee from this idolatry:" And uſes this argument againſt eating things offer'd to idols; namely, that, by eating of what has been ſacrificed, men communicate with that God to whom it was offer'd. To prove this, he begins with the Euchariſt, ver. 16. and aſks, "The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt?" True communion conſiſts in giving and receiving: And if the Euchariſt be the moſt proper way of communicating with God, then it muſt conſiſt in giving ſomewhat to him, and receiving ſomewhat from him; and the Apoſtle here ſeems to tell us what we give to God, and receive again from him; viz. The body and blood of Chriſt, ſignified, or repreſented by bread and wine. Therefore, in calling the Euchariſt "the communion of this body and blood," he at once proves what he intended, and ſhews, that we both give, or offer, the ſacramental body and blood of Chriſt to God, and that we have it return'd to us again, to make a ſpiritual or religious banquet; and by this means do perfectly communicate with the one God, which is what he was to prove. He argues next from the Jewiſh ſacrifices, ver. 18. and obſerves, That "they which eat of them are partakers of the altar;" that is, they ſhare the ſacrifices between the altar and themſelves: What is burnt on the altar is God's portion, what they eat is their own; and thus, by parting the ſame living creature betwixt God and themſelves, they communicate, and are, as it were, partners with him. Then he proceeds to ſhew the abſurdity of being communicants with the true and falſe gods, at one and the ſame time, ver. 20, 21. "I would not (ſays he) that ye ſhould have fellowſhip (or communion) with devils, (by eating things ſacrificed to them:) Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils." The table of devils is clearly an altar erected to idols: Therefore the table of the Lord muſt be the Chriſtian altar: And the table of the Lord is a title never given to any thing in Scripture, but to the altar of the true God; and we can be partakers of the altar of God only by eating or drinking what has been offer'd on it. And this the Apoſtle intimates, when he ſays, "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils:" For as by the cup of devils he means the liquor offer'd to idols; ſo by the cup of the Lord we can reaſonably underſtand nothing but the conſecrated wine; which muſt therefore have been offer'd to the true God. (Johnſ.) See the notes on ch. xi. 27.

The bread which we break.] Hereby it appeareth, That after ſanctification bread remaineth. For he ſaith, "The bread which we break;" and breaking followeth after bleſſing or ſanctifying. It cannot be underſtood of the body of Chriſt; for that cannot be broken. So that by this place it appeareth, that after conſecration the bread remaineth ſtill. (Goade)

One bread, and one body.] As Chriſtians, tho' many, yet, by virtue of their ſociety in the ſame worſhip, are compacted together, as it were, into one loaf and lump; that is, into one myſtical body, in that they partake of one and the ſame ſacramental bread: So thoſe who communicate with idolaters, in eating things offered unto idols, are compacted together, as it were, into one body, foraſmuch as they communicate in one and the ſame ſacrifice: As many grains of corn moulded together make one loaf, and the juice of many grapes make one cup: So Chriſtians, tho' many, yet are one viſible church, one myſtical body, and declare themſelves ſo to be by their fellowſhip together at the Lord's table. (B.) From whence we may obſerve, 1. How groſly the church of Rome hath varied from Chriſt's inſtitution, in diſtributing to the communicants ſeverally an unbroken wafer; ſo that they neither are partakers of one bread or loaf, or of bread broken, as the cuſtom both of Jews and Chriſtians was to do. (W.) And, 2. What a very ſad account thoſe Chriſtians have to give of themſelves, who chuſe, for the moſt part, or very often, to turn their backs upon this divine ordinance; and ſo wilfully interrupt the communion betwixt God and their own ſouls, betwixt the church of Chriſt and themſelves. The caſe is very plain: For if "he who feedeth on the fleſh of Chriſt dwelleth in him," then he who ſeldom or never eats it cannot have Chriſt dwelling in him, but muſt be alienated from the life of God. (Johnſ.) See the notes on John vi. 56. and Rom. xii. 5.

They which eat.] Here another argument againſt eating things offer'd to idols is produc'd by our Apoſtle, and it runs thus: As in the Jewiſh church all perſons that did eat of the peace-offerings, which were laid upon God's altar, did by that act declare themſelves ſelves members of the Jewiſh church, and that they own'd the God of the Jews, to whom thoſe ſacrifices were offer'd; in like manner the converted Corinthians by eating part of thoſe beaſts which were ſacrific'd in the idol's temple, did by that act declare their owning of that idol, and that idolatrous worſhip which had been there perform'd, and were really partakers of that idolatrous altar: Not that an idol is any thing, or that which is offer'd to the idol any thing, that can of its own nature pollute and defile: But the plain truth was, the Heathens were ſeduc'd by the devil to offer theſe ſacrifices, and they were devils whom they worſhipped; tho' not in their own intention, yet in God's eſtimation: And conſequently thoſe that did eat of thoſe feaſts, are ſuppos'd to join in thoſe ſacrifices, and thereby to hold communion with devils. (B.) See the notes on ch. viii. 4, 10, &c.

Ye cannot be partakers.] That is, Ye may not be partakers of both; for poſſumus quod jure poſſumus: Or, "Ye cannot be partakers of both, without provoking the wrath of God againſt you, as it followeth in the next verſe. (Aſſ.) Idolatry is the ſin here ſpecified, or ſacrificing unto devils: But it holds true of all ſin in general, and of having fellowſhip with Satan in any of the unfruitful works of darkneſs. Learn hence, That no perſon can really enjoy any fellowſhip and communion with Chriſt at his holy table, who maintains correſpondence with ſin, and holds communion with Satan. (B.) See the notes on ch. viii. 10.

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: All things are lawful for me, but all things edify not. Let no man ſeek his own: But every man another's wealth. Whatſoever is ſold in the ſhambles, that eat, asking no queſtion for conſcience ſake. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof. If any of them that believe not, bid you to a feaſt, and ye be diſpoſed to go; whatſoever is ſet before you, eat, asking no queſtion for conſcience ſake. But if any man ſay unto you, This is offered in ſacrifice unto idols, eat not, for his ſake that ſhewed it, and for conſcience ſake. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof. Conſcience, I ſay; not thine own, but of the others: For why is my liberty judged of another man's conſcience? For if I by grace be a partaker, why am I evil ſpoken of for that for which I give thanks? Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God: Even as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be ſaved.

All things are lawful for me.] Here the rule of Logicians muſt help, That notes of univerſality are not always to be underſtood in that fulneſs of latitude which the words ſeem to import, but moſt often with ſuch convenient reſtrictions as the matter in hand will require. Now, the Apoſtle, by mentioning expediency in the text, giveth us clearly to underſtand, That by "all things" he intendeth all ſuch things only, whoſe expediency or inexpediency are meet to be taken into conſideration; as much as to ſay, all indifferent things, and none other. For, things abſolutely neceſſary muſt be done, whether expedient or inexpedient; for we muſt do our bounden duty, tho' all the world ſhould take offence thereat. And, on the other ſide, things abſolutely forbidden may not in any caſe be done, ſeem they ever ſo expedient; for we may not do any evil, for any good that may enſue. But then, there are things of a middle nature, which are neither abſolutely commanded, nor abſolutely forbidden, but left to every man's choice, either to do or to leave undone, as he ſhall ſee cauſe; and of theſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh freely, univerſally, and without exception, that they are all lawful. Now, every action or thing whatſoever, that cannot by juſt and logical deduction, either from the light of nature or from the written word of God, be ſhewn to be either abſolutely neceſſary or ſimply unlawful, is in its own nature indifferent; and conſequently permitted to our free liberty and choice, from time to time, either to do or to leave undone, to uſe or to forbear, as in godly wiſdom and charity (according to the juſt exigence of circumſtances) we ſhall ſee it expedient. Injurious then are all they to true Chriſtian liberty, and adverſaries to the truth of God, who either impoſe any of thoſe things as neceſſary, or condemn any of them as unlawful, which God has been pleas'd to leave free, arbitrary and indifferent: Both extremes are ſuperſtitious; both derogatory to the honour of God, and the liberty of his people; both ſtrong ſymptoms of great pride, in daring to piece out the holy word of God, by tacking thereunto their own devices. But then, we are to obſerve, 1. That the Apoſtle eſtabliſheth the point of lawfulneſs, before he meddleth with that of expediency: For, neither pious intentions alone, nor reaſons of expediency alone, nor yet both together, will either warrant us beforehand to the choice, nor excuſe us afterwards for the uſe, of unlawful means; as is plain from the caſe of Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 15, &c. and that of Uzzah, 2 Sam. vi. 6, &c. 2. That he requireth, we ſhould have an eye to the expediency alſo of the things we do; not reſting upon their lawfulneſs alone: For lawfulneſs alone will not bear us out in the uſe of a thing, unleſs there be care had withal to uſe it lawfully; leſt otherwiſe our liberty degenerate into a carnal licentiouſneſs, as it may eaſily do. It muſt therefore be a man's firſt care, to propoſe to himſelf in all his actions ſome right end; and then he is to judge of the expediency of the means, by their ſerviceableneſs thereunto. 'Tis very unſafe to reſt upon the bare lawfulneſs of a thing alone, without regard to expediency; ſince even lawful things become unlawful when they grow inexpedient; that is, lawful in themſelves, but unlawful to us; lawful in their nature, but unlawful in their uſe. And therefore, 3. The Apoſtle here meaſureth the expediency of lawful things, by their uſefulneſs unto edification. Thus, if we ſhall ask, Why are not all lawful things always expedient? The Apoſtle's anſwer is, Becauſe they do not always edify. When they do edify, they are not only lawful, but expedient too, and we may do them: But when they do not edify, but deſtroy, tho' they be lawful ſtill, yet they are not expedient, and we may not do them; for, from the unſerviceableneſs of any thing to edification, we cannot reaſonably infer the unlawfulneſs of it (as many miſtaken people are apt to do) but the inexpediency only. But, after all, in weighing the decency and expediency of things, we ought to make a difference between thoſe lawful things wherein ſuperior authority hath interpos'd and determin'd our liberty either way, and thoſe things wherein we are left wholly to our ſelves: For, where lawful authority hath determin'd our choice, we muſt hold to their determination, any ſeeming inexpediency to the contrary notwithſtanding. (Sanderſ.) See two excellent Sermons of this judicious Biſhop on this text; and the notes on ch. vi. 12. viii. 1. and xiv. 26, 40. John xi. 50. Rom. iii. 8. xiii. 1, &c. xiv. 14, &c. and xv. 1, &c.

Let no man ſeek his own.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 5.

For the earth is the Lord's] From this propoſition, concerning God's dominion over all the creatures and his propriety in them, the Apoſtle doth here infer different concluſions. We may eat, in ſome caſes, ver. 25, 26. on that ground; God having created all things to "be receiv'd with thankſgiving," 1 Tim. iv. 4. But yet, in caſe of offence, we ſhould forbear, ver. 27, 28. God having created more meats enough for our uſe. (Lukin) And this upon the very ſame ground, of that full right which we have, in God, to all his creatures; and therefore need not to be tyed to eat of any of them, but may well let the idol-ſacrifices alone. (Hall, W. and B.) This quotation from Pſa. xiv. 1. is not repeated again here, in ver. 28. in many copies; and particularly in the King's Manuſcript. 'Tis poſſible, this repetition might be firſt occaſion'd, through the overſight of ſome tranſcribers, ſince they immediately follow the ſame words (dia ſyneideſin) "for conſcience ſake," in the one verſe as well as the other. If they were not repeated here, the 29th verſe would immediately adhere to thoſe words in ver. 28. thus, "For conſcience ſake; conſcience, I ſay," &c. which connexion will be otherwiſe ſomewhat diſturb'd or interrupted. However, as they ſtand here, the meaning of them is clear according to the expoſition above ſet down. (H. and Fell) See the notes on ch. viii. 10, &c. and Rom. xiv. 16, &c.

Do all to the glory of God.] The Apoſtle concludes his diſcourſe with three excellent rules, to direct all Chriſtians how to govern themſelves in the uſe of their lawful liberty, as to things in their nature indifferent; of which this is the firſt, To refer all our actions in general, natural, civil, and religious, "to the glory of God;" making that our ſupreme aim, and our ultimate end, in all we do, in all we deſign, in all we deſire. A Chriſtian is to perform his natural actions to ſpiritual purpoſes; and, while he is feeding and refreſhing his body, muſt have an eye to his ſerving God both with body and ſoul: And the like alſo in his civil employments, yea, and even in his lawful recreations; but above all, in his religious duties; for this injunction, "Do all to the glory of God," is applicable to all the actions of human life. (B.) In things capable of honouring God poſitively, or proper to give glory to him, have always a general intention of glorifying God in the doing them; that in the virtue of that intention ye may proceed to particular actions: And in things not capable of honouring God poſitively, be careful to act ſo, that the name of God be not blaſphemed, or his doctrine evil thought, or evil-ſpoken of, by reaſon of your actions; yea, do, or abſtain from, all things ſo, as to ſatisfy your own conſcience, and diſcover to others, that the honour of God, and the advancement of the intereſts of his kingdom, are much dearer to you than any gratifications of your carnal appetites or any temporal concern. (W.) See Dr. Hickes's Sermon on this text.

Give none offence.] This is the ſecond rule; Give no offence to any: Particularly by eating of things offer'd to idols, at any time, or in any place, whereby any may be ſcandaliz'd. For the Jews will conclude ye are enemies to the Law and the Prophets: The Gentiles will believe your abhorrence of idols is not real, when they ſee you eat things offer'd unto idols, before their faces: And weak Chriſtians will be tempted, by your example, to revolt from the faith; Therefore, do nothing that may tend to the hurt, or juſt offence, either of Jew, Gentile, or Chriſtian. (W. and B.) See Dr. Stuart's Sermon on this text; and what is here noted on ch. viii. 10, &c. and Rom. xiv. 13, &c.

I pleaſe all men.] This is the laſt rule, which the Apoſtle lays down; to wit, his own practice and example. (B.) See the notes on ch. ix. 19. xi. 1. and 2 Cor. iv. 5.

C H A P. XI.

He reproveth them for certain irregularities in their religious aſſemblies; and particularly with reſpect to the Sacrament of the Euchariſt.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. BE ye followers of me, even as I alſo am of Chriſt. Now I praiſe you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances as I deliver'd them to you. But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Chriſt; and the head of the woman, is the man; and the head of Chriſt, is God. Every man praying, or propheſying, having his head covered, diſhonoureth his head. But every woman that prayeth or propheſieth with her head uncovered, diſhonoureth her head: For that is even all one as if ſhe were ſhaven. For if the woman be not covered, let her alſo be ſhorn: But if it be a ſhame for a woman to be ſhorn or ſhaven, let her be covered. For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, foraſmuch as he is the image and glory of God: But the woman is the glory of the man. For the man is not of the woman: But the woman of the man. Neither was the man created for the woman: But the woman for the man. For this cauſe ought the woman to have power on her head, becauſe of the angels. Nevertheleſs, neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man in the Lord. For as the woman is of the man, even ſo is the man alſo by the woman: But all things of God. Judge in your ſelves: Is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered? Doth not even nature it ſelf teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame unto him? But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: For her hair is given her for a covering. But if any man ſeem to be contentious, we have no ſuch cuſtom, neither the churches of God.

Be ye followers of me.] Here note, 1. The duty recommended to their practice; namely, to follow their ſpiritual guide; "Be ye followers of me." It is the ſtanding duty of a people, whom God honours with the enjoyment of faithful ſpiritual guides, to follow their faith, and to imitate their exemplary converſation: The graces of all Chriſtians in general, but of the Miniſters of the Goſpel in particular, whether living or dead, are patterns ſet forth to the world for their careful imitation; and for omiſſion herein they muſt certainly become accountable to God. 2. With what great modeſty and caution, with what reſtriction and limitation, St. Paul propounds his own example to the Corinthians view; "Be ye followers of me, even as I alſo am of Chriſt." As if he had ſaid, If at any time ye find me, your ſpiritual guide, ſtepping aſide, and walking unanſwerably to that uniform pattern of holy and humble obedience, which the Lord Jeſus ſet before both you and me, in his own exemplary life, be ſure, ye decline my example, and follow not my footſteps. Learn hence, That the beſt of miniſters, and the beſt of men, being but men, our imitation of them muſt not be an univerſal, but a limited, imitation: We muſt follow paſtors, teachers, nay Apoſtles themſelves, no farther than they follow Chriſt, their infallible Lord and maſter. (B.) See the notes on ch. x. 33. and Rom. xv. 2, 3.

Now, I praiſe you, brethren.] This commendation muſt either be reſtrain'd to the ſounder part of the church of Corinth (ſuch in particular as had wrote to him for inſtructions, (ch. vii. 1.) or elſe muſt be underſtood (as ſuch general expreſſions uſe to be) as for the moſt part; or excepting thoſe few things in which he afterwards found reaſon to complain of their neglect, ver. 17. and ch. xv. 12. (G. W. and B.)

Keep the ordinances.] Paradoſeis; traditions. Vain is the note of Eſthius on this text, that it makes plainly for unwritten traditions. For, 1. The word, tradition, is common to things written and unwritten; to things deliver'd "by word or by epiſtle, 2 Theſſ. ii. 15. Thus, the doctrine of Chriſt's death, and burial, and reſurrection, is a tradition, ch. xv. 3, 4. and the whole Chriſtian faith is a tradition, Jude 3. And will the Romaniſts ſay, that theſe things are not written in the New Teſtament? 2. To prove traditions extra-ſcriptural, 'tis not ſufficient to cite a paſſage out of Scripture, ſpeaking of traditions not then writ by one Apoſtle: But it muſt be prov'd, that theſe traditions were neither then (when mention'd) in writing, nor afterwards committed to writing, either by himſelf or any other inſpir'd perſon. And, 3. The traditions, mention'd here, and 2 Theſſ. ii. 15. were traditions immediately deliver'd to thoſe churches from the mouth of an Apoſtle: And, when the Romaniſts can make good this, from like authentic teſtimony, of any of their traditions, we ſhall be ready to receive them. (W. and B.) By (paradoſeis) traditions here, he meaneth particular ordinances or injunctions, concerning decency and order, which belong to eccleſiaſtical polity, and were afterwards call'd canons. (Beza, Aſſ. and G.)

And the head of Chriſt is God.] Here our Apoſtle reſolves the caſe, which the Corinthians had put to him, about church-order, and the decent behaviour of men and women in church aſſemblies: And firſt, he reminds them, That a ſubordination of perſons in the church of God ought to be obſerv'd and kept: That as Chriſt, as Mediator, is inferior to God the Father, but is the head and Lord of all men, as creator and redeemer; ſo the man is the head of the woman, and as ſuch ſhe muſt ſhew her ſubjection unto the man: As Chriſt, as Mediator, acts in ſubordination to the Father; ſo muſt the woman act in ſubordination to the man. The Socinians would wreſt this text to confirm them in their blaſphemous denial of the Divinity of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Here, ſay they, the Apoſtle declares, that "the head of Chriſt is God:" Now, the moſt high God can have no head above him; therefore Chriſt, who hath an head above him, cannot be the moſt high God. The modern and general anſwer is, That God is here call'd the head of Chriſt, as Mediator; in which relation he receiv'd his kingdom from him, and exerciſes it for him, and therefore is elſewhere ſtil'd the Father's ſervant, Behold my ſervant, &c. becauſe he doth all things according to his Father's will, and with a fix'd eye to his Father's glory. But the ancients reply'd to this objection thus, That God is ſaid to be the head of Chriſt, as he is the Father of the Son, and ſo the cauſe of him: And as the woman is of the ſame nature with the man, who is her head; ſo is Chriſt of the ſame nature with God the Father, who is here call'd his head. (W. and B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 23. and John xiv. 28. and xvii. 2.

Every man, praying or propheſying.] By the "man's praying and propheſying," underſtand his performing any divine offices in the church; as prayer, and expounding the Scriptures, ſinging of pſalms, and the like. By doing this cover'd, underſtand not the natural covering of the hair, but an artificial covering by a veil, after the manner of women; which is a token of ſubjection. By "diſhonouring his head," underſtand either, 1. Chriſt, who in the former verſe was call'd "the head of every man:" He that adminiſters in the church in holy things, repreſents Chriſt, who is the head of the church; therefore by covering the head he declares a ſubjection in his adminiſtration, and doth as it were make the church the head of Chriſt, inſtead of Chriſt's being the head of the church. Or elſe, 2. By diſhonouring the head, may be underſtood the miniſter's own head: He betrayeth his ſuperiority, and leſſeneth the honour and dignity of his ſex, by uſing ſuch a geſture in divine offices as is a token of inferiority and ſubjection; for in that country at that time it was a ſign of ſubjection to have the head cover'd, but a ſign of power and dominion to have the head uncover'd. (B.) See the notes on ver. 5. ch. xiv. 1. and Rom. xii. 4, &c.

Every woman, that prayeth or propheſieth.] Here our enquiry muſt be, 1. What is here meant by propheſying; a thing attributed to women, and therefore undoubtedly ſome ſuch thing as they were capable of. And, 2. What was this fault, for matter and manner, of the women of the church of Corinth, which the Apoſtle here reproveth? Now, 1. Some take propheſying here, in the ſtricter ſenſe, to be foretelling of things to come: As that which, in thoſe primitive times, both men and women did, by the pouring out of the Holy Ghoſt upon them; according to that of the Prophet Joel, applied by St. Peter to the ſending of the Holy Ghoſt at the firſt promulgation of the Goſpel, Acts ii. 16. And that ſuch propheteſſes as theſe, were thoſe four daughters of Philip the Evangeliſt, whereof we read Acts xxi. 9. Others take propheſying here in a more large notion, for the gift of interpreting and opening Divine myſteries contain'd in holy Scripture, for the inſtruction and edification of the hearers; eſpecially, as it was then inſpir'd and ſuggeſted in extraordinary manner by the Holy Spirit, as prophecy was given of old, 2 Pet. i. 2. So becauſe many, in the beginning of the Goſpel, were guided by a like inſtinct (or inſpiration) in the interpretation and application of Scripture, they were ſaid to propheſy. Thus our Apoſtle uſeth it, ch. xiv. 3. where he diſcourſes of ſpiritual gifts, and before all prefers this of prophecy; "he that propheſieth ſpeaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." But neither of theſe kinds of prophecy ſuit with a woman. For it is certain the Apoſtle ſpeaks here of propheſying in the church: But in the church a woman might not ſpeak, no not ſo much as ask a queſtion for her better inſtruction, much leſs teach and inſtruct others. This the Apoſtle teacheth us alſo, ch. xiv. 34, 35. and 1 Tim. ii. 11. Where note, That to ſpeak in a church aſſembly, by way of teaching or inſtructing others, is an act of ſuperiority, which therefore a woman might not do; becauſe her ſex was to be in ſubjection, and ſo to appear before God in garb and poſture, which conſiſted therewith; that is, they might not ſpeak to inſtruct men in the church, but to God they might. To avoid this difficulty, ſome would have the word propheteuouſa, in the text, to be taken paſſively; namely, to hear, or be preſent at prophecy; which is an acception without example, either in Scripture, or any where elſe. It is true, the congregation is ſaid to pray when the Prieſt only ſpeaks; but that they ſhould be ſaid to preach, who are preſent only at the hearing of a Sermon, is a trope without example. For the reaſon is not alike: In prayer the Prieſt is the mouth of the congregation, and does what he does in their names; and they aſſent to it by ſaying, Amen: But he that preaches or propheſies is not the mouth of the church, to ſpeak in their names, that ſo they might be ſaid to ſpeak too; but he is the mouth of God ſpeaking to them. It is not likely therefore, that thoſe who only hear another ſpeaking or propheſying to them, ſhould be ſaid propheteuein, no more than that all they ſhould be ſaid to preach, who were at the hearing of a Sermon. Yet, there is a fourth acceptation, which if it can be made good, will ſuit the text better (I think) than any of the former; to wit, that propheſying here ſhould be taken for praiſing God in hymns and pſalms: For ſo it is fitly coupled with praying; praying and praiſing, being the parts of the Chriſtian Liturgy. Beſides, our Apoſtle alſo, ch. xiv. 15. joins them both together; "I will pray (ſaith he) with the ſpirit, and I will pray with underſtanding alſo; I will ſing with the ſpirit, and I will ſing (that is, propheſy) with the underſtanding alſo." For, becauſe Prophets of old did, 1. Foretel things to come, 2. Notify the will of God unto the people, and, 3. Did utter themſelves, in muſical wiſe, and in a poetical ſtrain and compoſure; Hence it comes to paſs, that to propheſy, in Scripture, ſignifies the doing of any of theſe three things; and amongſt the reſt, to praiſe God in verſe or muſical compoſure. This I ſhall prove, 1. Out of 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2, 3. where the word propheſy is three ſeveral times thus us'd; For there, to propheſy and to give thanks (or confeſs) and to praiſe the Lord with ſpiritual ſongs, made all one. Nor needs ſuch a notion ſeem ſtrange, when as even among the Latins, the word vates ſignifieth both him that foretels things to come, and a poet: And the Gentiles oracles were given likewiſe in verſe: And St. Paul to Titus, calls the Cretian poet, Epimenides, a prophet; "as one (ſaith he) of their own prophets ſaid," &c. And the Arabians (whoſe language comes the neareſt, both in words and notions, to the Hebrew) call a chief poet of theirs (princeps omnium poetarum (ſaith Erpenius) quos unquam vidit mundus) muttenabbi, that is, prophetizans, or propheta, cat' exochen. Now then, if Aſaph, Jeduthun, and Heman, propheſied when they praiſed God in ſuch pſalms as are entituled unto their ſeveral quires, as we find them in the Pſalm-Book, (for know that all the pſalms, entituled to the ſons of Korah, belong'd to the quire of Heman, who deſcended from Korah) why may not we, when we ſing the ſame pſalms, be ſaid to propheſy likewiſe? Namely, as he that uſeth a prayer compos'd by another, prayeth; and that according to the ſpirit of him that compos'd it: So he that praiſeth God with theſe ſpiritual and prophetical compoſures, may be ſaid to propheſy, according to that ſpirit, which ſpeaketh in them. And that Almighty God is well pleaſed with ſuch ſervice as this, may appear by that one ſtory of king Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 21. who when he march'd forth againſt that great confederate army of the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, the text tells us, that having "conſulted with his people, He appointed ſingers unto the Lord, that ſhould praiſe the beauty of holineſs, as they went out before the army, and ſay, Praiſe the Lord, for his mercy endureth for ever," (that is, they ſhould ſing the One hundred and ſixth pſalm, or One hundred thirty ſixth pſalm, which begins in this manner, and were both of them not unfit for ſuch an occaſion) "And when they began to ſing and praiſe, the Lord ſet ambuſhments againſt the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come againſt Judah, and they were ſmitten." A ſecond place where ſuch kind of prophets, and propheſying, as we ſpeak of, is mention'd, is 1 Sam. x. 5. in the ſtory of Saul's election, where we read, That "when he came to a certain place, call'd the hill of God, he met a company of prophets coming down from the high place, (or oratory there) with a pſaltery, a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them; and they propheſied, and he with them." Their inſtruments argue what kind of prophecy this was; namely, praiſing God with ſpiritual ſongs and melody. In what manner, is not ſo eaſy to define or ſpecify: But if we may conjecture by other examples, one of them ſhould ſeem to have been the præcentor, and to utter the verſe, or ditty; the reſt to have anſwer'd the extreams, or laſt words of the verſe: For after this manner did the primitive Chriſtians ſing their hymns, having in all likelihood learnt it from the Jews, whoſe manner it was: Some footſteps of which cuſtom remain ſtill with us, when in thoſe ſhort verſicles of the Liturgy, being ſentences taken out of the pſalms, the Prieſt ſays or ſings the firſt half, and the people anſwer the latter; As (for example) in that taken out of the fifty-firſt pſalm, the Prieſt ſays, "O Lord open thou our lips;" The people (or chorus) anſwer, "And our mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe." But whatſoever the ancient manner of anſwering was, thus much we are ſure of, that the Jews, in their divine lauds, were wont to praiſe God after this manner; in antiphones, or reſponſories; as (to let paſs other teſtimonies, and the uſe of their ſynagogues to this day deriv'd from their anceſtors) we may learn by two ſpecial arguments; 1. From Iſa. vi. 3. where it is ſaid, "The Seraphims cried one unto another, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hoſts, the whole earth is full of his glory." 2. From the uſe of the Hebrew word, which in the proper and native ſignification thereof being to anſwer, is alſo us'd for to ſing; as in Exod. xxxii. 18. Numb. xxi. 17. Ezra iii. 11. Pſa. cxlvii. 7. Iſa. xxvii. 2. and other places. Hence was deriv'd the manner of praying and praiſing God in the Chriſtian ſervice, alternis vicibus, in a muſical way, and, as it were, by way of propheſying and verſifying; even tho' we do but ſpeak it only; according as the poet ſays, Amant alterna camænæ. And now, to underſtand, 2. What was that fault among the Corinthians, which the Apoſtle here taxeth; we muſt obſerve, that the offenders were the women, and not the men. That which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh concerning men, being by way of ſuppoſition only, and to illuſtrate his argument againſt the uncomely guiſe of the women, a pari. This appears, becauſe his concluſion ſpeaks of women only, and nothing at all of men. And as to the quality of the fault, it was this; That the women, at the time of praying and propheſying, were unveil'd in the church; notwithſtanding it was then accounted an unſeemly and immodeſt guiſe, for women to appear open and barefac'd in publick. How then, will you ſay, ſhould it come to paſs, that Chriſtian women ſhould ſo much forget themſelves, as to tranſgreſs this decorum in God's houſe and ſervice, which they obſerv'd other where? I anſwer, From a phantaſtical imitation of the manner of the She-prieſts and propheteſſes of the Gentiles, when they ſerv'd their idols; who us'd, when they utter'd their oracles, or celebrated rites and ſacrifices to their Gods, to put themſelves into a wild and extatical guiſe, having their faces diſcover'd, their hair diſhevell'd, and hanging about their ears: This theſe Corinthian women (conceiting themſelves when they prayed or propheſied, in the church, to be acting the parts of She-prieſts, uttering oracles like the Pythiæ, or Sibyllæ, or celebrating ſacrifice, as the Mænades, or Bacchæ) were ſo fond, as to imitate (as that ſex is prone to follow the faſhion) and accordingly caſt off their veils, and diſcover'd their faces immodeſtly in the congregation, and thereby (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) "diſhonoured their heads;" to wit, were unſeemly accoutred, and dreſs'd on their heads; which he proveth by three arguments, 1. From nature, which having given women their hair for a covering, taught them to be cover'd, as a ſign of ſubjection; the manner of this covering being to be meaſur'd by the cuſtom of the nation: 2. By an argument a pari, from men; for whom, even themſelves being judges, it would be an uncomely thing to wear a veil, that is a woman's habit; ſo by the like reaſon, was it as uncomely for a woman to be without a veil, that is, in the guiſe and dreſs of a man. And howſoever the devils of the Gentiles ſometimes took pleaſure in uncomelineſs, and abſurd garbs and geſtures, yet the God whom they worſhipp'd with his holy angels, who were preſent at their devotions, lov'd a comely accommodation, agreeable to nature and cuſtom, in ſuch as worſhipp'd him. "For this cauſe therefore (ſaith he) ought a woman to have a Covering on her head, becauſe of the angels." Laſtly, He concludes it, from the example and cuſtom both of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian churches; neither of which had any ſuch uſe, for their women to be unveil'd in their ſacred aſſemblies: "If any man (ſaith he) be contentious, (that is, will not be ſatisfied with theſe reaſons) let him know, that we, (that is, we of the circumciſion) have no ſuch cuſtom, nor the church of God." For ſo, with St. Ambroſe, Anſelme, and ſome of the ancients, I take the meaning of the Apoſtle to be in thoſe words. From all which we our ſelves may learn thus much, That God requires a decent and comely accommodation in his houſe, and eſpecially in the act of his worſhip and ſervice: For if in their habit and dreſs, ſurely much more in their geſture and deportment, he loves nothing that is unſeemly, in the one or in the other. (Mede) What then would an Apoſtle ſay, of the ſcandalous dreſſes of the preſent age, and of thoſe faſhions which are fitter for the theatre than the church, where they are worn without the leaſt ſhame? The immodeſty here reprov'd by St. Paul does not come near that which we now-a-days behold with ſorrow. (Q.)

He is the image and glory of God.] The image of the glory of God. (Lukin) Man is not here diſtinguiſh'd from the woman, as being "the image and glory of God," either in reſpect of body or ſoul; for in reſpect of the ſoul, the woman is equally "the glory of God," as to ſpirituality and immortality, and ſo is equally ſaid to be "made after his image," Gen i. 27. But he is ſo diſtinguiſh'd, only (as Theodoret obſerves) in reſpect of rule and government; which is the proper glory of the man, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, "Thou haſt crowned him with glory and honour; thou madeſt him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou haſt put all things under his feet," Pſa. viii. 5, 6. (W.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 34.

Created for the woman.] The man was not created to the end that he ſhould ſerve the woman as his ſuperior; but, on the contrary, the woman to ſerve, obey, and to be a helper to the man, Gen. ii. 18. Howbeit, in ſome ſenſe, the man may be ſaid to be created for the woman, to protect her from wrong, and inſtruct her, and direct her in the way to eternal ſalvation, 1 Cor. xiv. 35. (Aſſ.)

To have power on her head.] All the ancient interpreters agree in this, That exouſia, which we render power, doth here ſignify a veil, or covering; which being put over her head, compels her to hang down her eye-lids: And 'tis here (ſay they) call'd power, as being the token of the power and dominion of the man over her. This alſo, among the nine maledictions of the woman which the Jews reckon up, is one, That ſhe is to have her head cover'd like one that mourneth; as a token of ſhame, due to her becauſe ſhe brought the firſt ſin into the world: Agreeably with which, Tertullian ſaith, She ought, by her habit, to reſemble Eve, a mourner and penitent. (W.) The Apoſtle, being an Hebrew of the Hebrews, might here have reſpect to the Hebrew word radid, ſignifying a veil, which cometh from the root radad, to bear rule and authority; and ſo might uſe the Greek word, ſignifying power, in the ſame ſenſe as the Hebrews did. And, in truth, What is this ſubjection to the huſband, but a kind of power and protection deriv'd unto the wife, in compariſon of her former ſtate being a virgin? And therefore, in caſe her huſband was jealous of her, amongſt other tokens of ſorrow, ſhe was commanded to ſtand at her trial with her head uncover'd, Numb. v. 18. intimating thereby, that if ſhe could not then clear her ſelf, ſhe was from thence forward depriv'd of all power, which heretofore ſhe enjoy'd by means of her huſband. (Godw. and H.)

Becauſe of the angels.] The preſence of God in any one place more than in another is not eaſily conceiveable by any: And therefore that any place ſhould be call'd his houſe, or place of reſidence, his temple wherein he dwells, 2 Cor. vi. 16. muſt needs be in ſome other reſpect: And what that is, is ſufficiently explicated by Jacob; who upon the viſion of angels at Luz, awakes and ſays, that the place was venerable, and that God was in it, and that it was "the houſe of God;" which concludes that the appearance or preſence of angels is that from which God is ſaid to be peculiarly preſent any where, and which fits that place to be God's houſe. And thus, Eccleſ. v. 6. when we read, from the Hebrew, "before the angel," the Septuagint interpret it, before the face of God; making the angel, and God's preſence, all one. Thus, Pſa. lxviii. 17. the myriads of angels are ſaid to be "God's chariots;" places to receive God, as he is ſaid to ſit on the cherubims, and to "fly on the wings of the wind," or angelical ſpirits, Pſa. xviii. 10. Agreeable to this was it, that God was ſaid to be in the ark between the cherubims, and that the ark was therefore call'd the glory, the Schechinah, or habitation of God; and many things of this nature in the Old Teſtament. And proportionably, both under the Old and New Teſtament, the angels have been thought to be preſent in the places of God's publick ſervice. And ſo, the very Heathen Plutarch, ſpeaking of the daimones, which differ little in their notion from that of angels among Chriſtians, ſaith of them, that they are overſeers of their divine offices, and prieſts of their myſteries; and Jamblichus to the ſame purpoſe, that every temple hath its keepers. Which being ſuppos'd and taken for granted, the account will be clear, why the woman muſt "be covered becauſe of the angels;" that is, that ſhe ought to do that which was moſt decent, in that place where the angels were preſent to behold them: And that yet more particularly, when ſhe hath thoſe angels (which uſe to be preſent in ſuch places) for her example alſo; who by covering their faces uſe to teſtify their ſubjection toward God: For ſo we read of the Seraphim, Iſa. vi. 2. With two wings they covered their face. (H.)

If any man ſeem to be contentious.] Here dokei is elegantly pleonaſtical: Which is peculiarly worth notice, becauſe upon it depends the emendation of the obſcure and faulty rendring of this paſſage in our Engliſh. It ſhould be either, If any man is diſpoſed to be contentious; or elſe, If any man is contentious; according to the uſe of the phraſe in the beſt claſſic authors, Xenophon, Ariſtophanes, &c. (Blackw.)

Neither the churches.] That is, Neither the Chriſtian churches planted by me; nor thoſe planted by others. (Fell) Obſerve here, How the Apoſtle appeals to the cuſtom and practice of the churches of God in the caſe before us. The cuſtom of all the churches is againſt women being uncover'd, as an unſeemly thing. It is a known rule, Ubi nihil certi ſtatuit Scriptura, mos populi Dei, & inſtituta majorum pro lege tenenda ſunt: We ought not to diſſent and differ from the cuſtom and practice of the church of Chriſt in matters not poſitively determin'd; but the cuſtom of the church muſt ſway with us, with whoſe practice it is our duty to be as concordant as we can: "If any man will be contentious, we have no ſuch cuſtom, neither the churches of God." Learn thence, 1. That in things only reſpecting decency, and in compliance with which there is no violation of the command of Chriſt, the cuſtom of the church of Chriſt ſhould determine us, and be as a ſtanding rule unto us. 2. That it argues a contentious ſpirit, and ſavours very much of pride, in matters of little moment, to be ſingular in our practice, and to create diſturbance to the church of God. (W. and B.)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. 34. Now in this that I declare unto you, I praiſe you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worſe. For firſt of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be diviſions among you; and I partly believe it. For there muſt be alſo hereſies among you, that they which are approved, may be made manifeſt among you. When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's ſupper. For in eating every one taketh before other, his own ſupper: And one is hungry, and another is drunken. What, have ye not houſes to eat and to drink in? Or deſpiſe ye the church of God, and ſhame them that have not? What ſhall I ſay to you? Shall I praiſe you in this? I praiſe you not. For I have received of the Lord that which alſo I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jeſus, the ſame night in which he was betrayed, took bread: And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and ſaid, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you: This do in remembrance of me. After the ſame manner alſo he took the cup, when he had ſupped, ſaying, This cup is the New Teſtament in my blood: This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do ſhew the Lord's death till he come. Wherefore, whoſoever ſhall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lord's body. For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep. For if we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chaſtned of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world. Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the reſt will I ſet in order when I come.

I praiſe you not.] Our Apoſtle here enters upon a new argument or ſubject; namely, to reprove the abuſes which were crept in among them in their adminiſtration of the holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper: And the firſt abuſe which he blames them for, was the diviſions and factions which were found among them; "I hear there are ſchiſms amongſt you:" Where we are to underſtand by ſchiſms, not a ſeparation from the unity of the Catholick church, but of ſects and diviſions in the church: They did not ſeparate from the church, but they eat the Lord's Supper ſeparately in the church; and the whole congregation did not join together in the celebration of that ordinance. Tho' we do not ſeparate from the communion of the Catholick church, yet if we occaſion diviſion and diſſenſion groundleſly in the church, we juſtly fall under the imputation and charge of ſchiſm. Obſerve next, The Apoſtle argues a minori ad majus: He did eaſily believe there were diviſions, becauſe " there muſt be alſo Hereſies among them." Hereſies are worſe than ſchiſms; falſe doctrines more dangerous than diviſions. Hereſy is an error in the fundamentals of religion, maintain'd with obſtinacy: When the green wound of an error is let alone, it ſoon rankles, and quickly grows into the old ſore of an hereſy. But how comes the Apoſtle to ſay, there muſt be Hereſies? What neceſſity is there for them? Anſ. 1. Negatively; There is not an abſolute neceſſity for them on God's part, or a neceſſity of his making, but a conditional neceſſity, or a neceſſity ex hypotheſi, which muſt needs be, if ſuch a thing be granted before; As ſuppoſing the ſun be riſen, it muſt be day. Thus here, upon ſuppoſition of the pride, vain-glory, envyings, ſtrife and contentions, which are among the members of the church; upon ſuppoſition of the craft and ſubtilty, malice and malignity, of Satan, the church's grand enemy; upon ſuppoſition of God's permiſſion, that Satan and wicked men ſhould act according to their corrupt affections and inclinations, Hereſies muſt and will be. Note farther, That the reaſon here aſſign'd for the neceſſity of Hereſies is not cauſal, but eventual: Not cauſal, as if the wiſdom of God did deſign there ſhould be Hereſies for this end, " that they who are approv'd of him ſhould be made manifeſt;" but rather eventual; as if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Hence it will come to paſs, that they who are approv'd will be made manifeſt. (W. and B.) It would fix a more agreeable idea in the mind of every reader, if this text were rendred, as it might be, There will be hereſies, and ſchiſms; the conſequence of which will be, that they who are approved will be made manifeſt: For, we cannot think it pleaſing to God for hereſies to ariſe; and therefore we may be ſure, that he has not, by any decree of his, made them abſolutely neceſſary. He has, doubtleſs, many wiſe and good reaſons, why he ſuffers, that is, does not by his providence hinder them: But we muſt not entertain ſuch unworthy thoughts of God, as to ſuppoſe them to be agreeable to his will; or that that proceeds from him, which is occaſion'd by the weakneſs or wickedneſs of men, and the malice of the devil. (Fox) See the notes on ch. i. 10. and Luke xvii. 1. and Dr. Clagget's Sermon on this text.

When ye come together.] St. Paul here uſes this phraſe of " coming together," and " coming together in the church," ver. 18. in the ſame ſenſe, as coming together to eat bread, Acts xx. 7. meaning the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, which was their principal buſineſs when they met (Johnſ.) See the notes on Acts i. 15. ii. 44 and xx. 7.

For, in eating.] Here our Apoſtle begins to reprove the Corinthians for the abuſes found in their love-feaſts. Theſe love-feaſts were founded on no expreſs command in holy writ, but only on the cuſtom of the church, who, immediately before the receiving the Sacrament, us'd to have a great feaſt, to which all the poor were invited at the charges of the rich, as an expreſſion of their perfect love and charity one towards another. Now, in theſe feaſts of charity, they did not obſerve due order and decency: For " every one," that is, every part and faction, being come to the place of the aſſembly, did preſently ſit down to eat what they had brought, in the company of their own party, not minding or regarding others: Whereupon, this holy feaſt of charity was neither celebrated at the ſame time by all, nor with that unanimity and concord which it was deſign'd to repreſent; while the poor were excluded, and ſent home hungry, the rich were feaſted, and drank to ſome degree of exceſs, which is here call'd drunkenneſs; " one is hungry, and another is drunken." Behold, what great irregularities and diſorders are here found in the church of Corinth! Who can expect a church without ſpot in this imperfect ſtate? God has left theſe miſcarriages upon record, not for imitation, but for our caution. (B.)

Or deſpiſe ye the church of God?] Here, by church, is not meant the aſſembly, but the place in which they us'd to aſſemble; as is evident, partly from what went before, ver. 18. where their " coming together in the church," is explain'd, ver. 20. by their " coming together into one place," plainly arguing, that the Apoſtle meant not the perſons, but the place; and partly from the oppoſition which he makes between the church and their own private houſes. If they muſt have ſuch irregular banquets, they had houſes of their own, where 'twas much fitter to have their ordinary repaſts, than in that place which was ſet apart for the common exerciſes of religion; and therefore not to be diſhonour'd by ſuch extravagant and intemperate feaſtings, which was no leſs than deſpiſing it: For which reaſon he enjoins them, ver. 34. " if any man hunger, let him eat at home;" and in this ſenſe was this text always underſtood by the ancient Fathers. (Wheatly) Hence 'tis manifeſt, that there were, in the times of the Apoſtles, places ſet apart for the joint and public worſhip of God: And conſequently, that it is the duty of Chriſtians to appear before God in ſuch holy places; which are profaned when they are put to any common uſe. Accordingly, we may obſerve here, that the Apoſtle would not allow the Corinthians ſo much as to eat and drink therein, to ſatisfy their hunger. (Fox) See Dr. Fulwood's Sermon on this text.

Shame them that have not.] Here he does not mean them who have not " houſes to eat and drink in" according to the foregoing clauſe; but them who have nothing to eat and drink: For they were put to ſhame by this, that they had nothing to eat or drink, as others had, nor were thought worthy to partake with them that had, in the aſſembly of which they were a part. (W.)

I praiſe you not.] Obſerve here, With what lenity and mildneſs the Apoſtle reproves thoſe great diſorders in the church of Corinth. " Shall I praiſe you in this? I praiſe you not." It was the firſt time he had told them of this fault; and therefore he doth it gently, in hopes of amendment: And God ſo bleſs'd the mild ſeverity of the Apoſtle, that the Corinthians, on this firſt Epiſtle, reform'd all their diſorders; as we may gather from hence, that no fault is tax'd in the ſecond Epiſtle that was reprov'd in the firſt. (B.)

I have received of the Lord.] Obſerve here, 1. How the Apoſtle, for reforming thoſe abuſes which were crept into the church among them, relating to the holy Sacrament, reduces them to the firſt inſtitution of that ſacred ordinance: " I have deliver'd to you what I have received of the Lord." Mark, The Apoſtle did receive and deliver, but not inſtitute and appoint, this venerable ordinance: Had he not receiv'd, he had wanted authority; and had he not deliver'd what he receiv'd, he had wanted integrity. 2. The author of this inſtitution, " the Lord Jeſus." To inſtitute ſacraments is an act of Chriſt's regal power and royal authority: The church has no power to appoint them, but only to execute and adminiſter what Chriſt appoints. 3. The time of the inſtitution; " the ſame night in which he was betray'd." It is a night much to be remember'd; in which he ſettled an ordinance in the church for the confirmation and conſolation of his people to the end of the world. 4. The ſacramental elements, or the commemorative, ſignificative and inſtructive ſigns; bread and wine, ſhadowing forth the body and blood of the crucified Jeſus. Where note, St. Paul calls it bread, five times over, which Chriſt calls his own body, becauſe it was a ſign and repreſentation of his body; not his real body, for then Chriſt muſt have eat his own body whilſt he was alive, his diſciples alſo devouring that body over night which hung upon the croſs next morning; with a thouſand ſuch abſurdities which the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation carries along with it. 5. The miniſterial actions; the breaking of the bread, and bleſſing of the cup. The bread muſt be broken, to repreſent the breaking of Chriſt's body upon the croſs, which comprehended all the ſufferings of his human nature, all which were conſummated in his crucifixion: And this broken bread muſt be taken and eaten by us, to intimate that all his breakings, bruiſings, and woundings, both in ſoul and body, were for our ſins, and for our benefits, and that the ſole intention of all his ſufferings was for us. Wine alſo is pour'd forth; becauſe as no liquor like wine doth chear a ſad and drooping ſpirit, in like manner nothing doth ſo glad and chear the ſoul as faith in a crucified Saviour. That ſpiritual life which a ſoul is rais'd to by the death of Chriſt, is a life of the greateſt delight and joy which we can conceive. 6. The great deſign and end of this inſtitution; " Do it in remembrance of me;" or for a memorial of me. Chriſt knew how apt our baſe hearts would be to forget him, amid ſuch a throng of ſenſible objects as we here converſe with; and how much our forgetfulneſs of him and his ſufferings would tend to our prejudice and diſadvantage; and therefore doth he appoint this ordinance to bring him to remembrance. 7. The ſtrict charge given for the frequent celebration of this ordinance; " Do this as oft as ye drink it;" that is, Do it often. We can no more live and thrive without our ſpiritual, than we can without our corporal food, as the body muſt be often fed, ſo the ſoul muſt have its frequent repaſt. 8. The reaſon aſſign'd for the frequent celebration of this ordinance; " For as oft as ye do this, ye do ſhew the Lord's death till he come;" that is, by frequenting this ordinance we commemorate the death of Chriſt during his abſence from us. As the end of the ordinance was to be a ſtanding memorial, ſo the obligation that lies upon Chriſtians to obſerve it is perpetual: Chriſtians are by this ordinance to repreſent the ſacrifiſing of Chriſt for their ſins, till he come again in glory. Learn, from the whole, 1. That the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was inſtituted by Chriſt as a ſtanding memorial of his death and ſufferings for us. Here we ought to remember the painfulneſs, the meritoriouſneſs, the voluntarineſs, the acceptableneſs, and the advantageouſneſs of his death: And the manner how we ſhould remember Chriſt and his death in the Sacrament is various; with judgment and underſtanding; with reverence and humility; with ſorrow and grief of heart for our ſins, yet with joy and thankfulneſs for the ſufferings of a Saviour; with faith and affiance, with love and affection, with reſolutions for a new and better obedience. 2. That the command of Chriſt lays it as a law upon, and makes it the ſtanding duty of all Chriſtians to commemorate his death at his holy table; "Do this in remembrance of me." Here it deſerves our notice, what kind of command this is. It is a ſovereign and ſupreme command; 'tis a poſitive and expreſs command; 'tis a permanent and laſting command; 'tis the command of a Saviour, yea, of a dying Saviour; 'tis a command of love; 'tis ſuch a command, as if we duly obſerve, will be a bleſſed means to enable us to obſerve all the commands of God better. Laſtly, 'Tis ſuch a command, as whoever lives in the wilful neglect of it, cannot be call'd a Chriſtian, but will be treated by Chriſt, at the great day, as an enemy and deſpiſer of his dying love. 3. That it is a Chriſtian's duty not barely to do this, but to do it often: Frequent communicating is a great duty. The primitive Chriſtians receiv'd every Lord's day; yea, 'tis believ'd oftner than every Lord's day. This is agreeable to the nature of the ordinance, which is a ſpiritual repaſt, banquet, and feaſt, and therefore to be receiv'd frequently: 'Tis alſo agreeable to the author of the ordinance: 'Tis a feaſt of God's own providing; therefore to neglect it is to fly in the face of God: 'Tis agreeable to the end of the ordinance, which is, to renew our covenant; and that can't be done too often. (B.) See the notes on ch. xv. 3. and Luke xxii, 19.

This do ye, as oft as ye drink it.] Note here two reaſons for the participating of the cup by the whole body of the church of Corinth; 1. Becauſe it is the blood of the New Covenant; which belongs as much to the Laity as to the Prieſts; the blood ſhed for the remiſſion of the ſins, not only of the Prieſts, but of the Laity. 2. Becauſe, by the drinking of this cup, they remembred Chriſt's blood ſhed for them, and ſhew'd forth his death. Now, ſince theſe reaſons do equally concern all Chriſtians, the drinking of the cup, by which this commemoration, by our Lord's inſtitution, is to be made, muſt equally concern them: For ſure, the means which Chriſt appointed for ſuch an end ought to be us'd by all who are oblig'd to purſue that end. And if the Apoſtle here reprehends the Corinthians for varying from the tradition receiv'd from the Lord in celebration of the Sacrament, he would have reprehended them much more, had they ſo varied from it, as to neglect the diſtribution of that cup, which he had inſtituted for thoſe ſacred ends. (W.) In the original the words are only "as oft as ye drink;" and therefore the word it is diſtinguiſh'd in our tranſlation by a different character. But Biſhop Wettenhall, in his Due frequency of the Lord's Supper, has eſſay'd to prove, that theſe words, "This do ye, as oft as ye drink," are a command, requiring Chriſtians, duly prepar'd, to celebrate the holy Sacrament every Lord's day at the leaſt. He ſuppoſes, that the word (pinete) which we tranſlate to drink, ſhould, by an uſual Hebraiſm, be tranſlated by its compound, to drink or feaſt together: So that the text would then run thus, Do this in remembrance of me, as often as ye feaſt, or, on all your feaſt-days. And foraſmuch as every Lord's-day was a holy feaſt among Chriſtians when this Epiſtle was written; therefore the command will come to thus much, Do this, or, celebrate this my Supper every Lord's day, at the leaſt; I ſay, at the leaſt, becauſe they had other feaſts beſides the Lord's day. (Fox) And this conſtruction is indeed the more probable, becauſe 'tis certain, the Euchariſt was the conſtant, ſtated, worſhip of the ſolemn aſſembly on every Lord's day: And I ſuppoſe, there is not one ſingle proof, that the Euchariſt was ever deſignedly omitted in any Chriſtian aſſembly on that day, for many hundred years after Chriſt: Yea, for any one of the faithful to come to church on the Lord's day, and not to receive the Euchariſt, was a thing unknown in the firſt ages. (Johnſ.) See the diſcourſes of Archbiſhop Tillotſon and Biſhop Beveridge, and others, on frequent communion.

Shew the Lord's death till he come] In the Jewiſh Paſſover, he who bleſs'd the table was wont to declare the meaning of that ſervice, and wherein it differ'd from all other ſolemnities, according to the precept, Exod. xii. 26. This they call'd Haggada; that is, annunciatio, the declaring, or ſhewing forth of the Paſſover: And hence the Apoſtle borroweth his phraſe here, "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, (katangellete) ye do ſhew (or ſhew ye) the Lord's death till he come." (Godw.) If then this be the end and uſe of this Sacrament, to be a ſolemn commemoration of the death of Chriſt, during his abſence from us; and if it was deſign'd to be a ſtanding memorial of his ſufferings till he comes again to judgment; the obligation that lies upon all Chriſtians to obſerve it, is perpetual, and ought not to ceaſe till the world ends. Indeed, ſaith Theodoret, After his preſence, there will be no more need of the ſymbols of his body, becauſe the body it ſelf will then appear: Which words are a full confutation of the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation. (W.)

Eat this bread, and drink this cup] Here Walker's note is, That in the original Greek 'tis not (kai) and, but (he) or; that is, "eat this bread, or drink this cup." And this he does, that he might lead us to think, there is ſomething in the Popiſh argument taken hence, to prove, that Whole Chriſt is contain'd in either ſpecies; becauſe either by eating or drinking unworthily, men become guilty of profaning both the body and blood of Chriſt. But, for juſtification of our verſion (and,) it may be noted, 1. That the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read (and) as we do; and ſo does Clemens Alexandrinus, Cyril, Athanaſius, &c. 2. That according to Phavorinus, (he) or is often put for (kai) and. So, what is in the Hebrew (vau) or, is by the LXX interpreters rendred (kai) and, Lev. iv. 23, 28. Numb. xv. 8. and Mal. ii. 17. So that which in Luke xx. 2. is (he) or, in Mat. xxi. 23. and Mark xi. 28. is (kai) and. And ſo the Hebrew vowel, when it divides, or is diſtributive, is rendred ſometimes he, and ſometimes kai: And the "eating and drinking," going before, in ver. 26. and following again, in ver. 28, 29. do ſhew, that this intermediate verſe muſt bear the ſame ſenſe. (W.)

Let a man examine himſelf.] Dokimazeto; A metaphor taken from goldſmiths, who try the truth of their gold by the touchſtone; the purity of their gold by the fire, and the weight of it by the ſcale. (B.)

He that eateth and drinketh unworthily.] In order to know what is meant by eating and drinking (anaxios) unworthily, it will be proper to obſerve in what ſenſe the word (axios) worthy is generally uſed in Scripture: And there we find it uſed to ſignify ſuitable, fit, meet, or becoming. Thus, when St. John the Baptiſt bids the multitudes "bring forth fruits worthy of repentance," Luke iii. 8. it is in Mat. iii. 8. expreſs'd thus, "bring forth fruits meet for repentance;" that is, ſuch fruits as are requiſite, meet, or proper to be produc'd by repenting ſinners. And whereas the Apoſtle directs how to "walk worthy of the Lord," Col. i. 10. and exhorts the Theſſalonians to "walk worthy of God," 1 Theſſ. ii. 12. and the Epheſians, that they would "walk worthy of (that is, ſuitably to) the vocation wherewith they were called, Eph. iv. 1. he explains what he means all along by this word worthy, where he tells the Philippians what he chiefly deſires of them; viz. Only that their converſation may be ſuch as becomes the profeſſors of the Goſpel of Chriſt, Phil. i. 27. And by "being counted worthy of the kingdom of God," 2 Theſſ. i. 5. is meant no more than that they would endeavour, by their regular lives and converſations, to render themſelves as duly qualified, meet, and fit for ſuch a glorified ſtate, as by the grace of God they could attain to upon earth, while they were clogg'd with the frailties and infirmities of human nature. And, as this is the general ſenſe in which the word worthy is uſed on theſe accounts; ſo, in the text, the becoming worthineſs there requir'd is, to perform this ſacred office with a due ſenſe of the nature and end of this holy inſtitution, and to addreſs our ſelves to God at the celebration of this holy Sacrament, with all profound reverence and devotion, meet, fit, ſuitable and becoming thoſe ſacred myſteries. Therefore, on the contrary, to receive thoſe holy myſteries unworthily, is to approach God's holy altar ignorantly, irreverently, profanely, rudely and careleſly; which ſeems to be the unworthineſs charg'd upon the Corinthians in this place. For, alas! if we ſhould ſtretch the word unworthy, to the moſt ſtrict and rigid, literal ſenſe, this would be to debar and affright the moſt holy and perfect man living from daring to approach the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; for at that rate, the beſt of men, in this lapſed ſtate, after the greateſt care and utmoſt preparations for that holy ordinance, muſt eat and drink unworthily. (Buchan.) But the Apoſtle doth not here ſpeak of the unworthineſs of the perſon, but of the action. For he doth not ſay, If any unworthy perſon ſhall eat this bread and drink this cup; for all are unworthy, and thoſe uſually the moſt who think themſelves the leaſt, and thoſe the leaſt who think themſelves the moſt, unworthy: But he ſaith, "he that eateth and drinketh unworthily," or after an unworthy manner, unbecoming ſo great and ſacred a duty; and what this unworthy manner of receiving the holy Sacrament was, which he here ſpeaks of, appears clearly from the context, before explain'd. (Bever.) See Biſhop Beveridge's, Mr. Buchanan's, and Mr. Coleby's Sermons on this text, and the notes here next following.

Damnation to himſelf.] The word (krima) here render'd damnation, properly ſignifies judgment or puniſhment: And the judgments inflicted on theſe Corinthians, for their unworthy receiving, were temporal. Nor can theſe words be referr'd to eternal puniſhments, but on ſuppoſition that the unworthy receiver dies without repentance. The meaning of them therefore is not that they who receive the Sacrament unworthily are certainly damned; for there is room for repentance in this caſe as well as others. Nor is their condition deſperate, who have fallen into ſin after they have receiv'd the Sacrament: For St. Peter denied his Lord and maſter, after he had receiv'd the Sacrament; and was notwithſtanding admitted to repentance and pardon. Some ſcrupulous perſons may have been kept from the Sacrament by what is here ſaid: But I doubt, the true reaſon, why ſo many live in the neglect of this holy ordinance, is, not ſo much the fear of receiving unworthily, as an unwillingneſs to part with their ſins. But ſuch ought to know and conſider, that as long as they are in this ſtate, they are in danger of eternal condemnation, whether they receive the Sacrament or not. Were Chriſtians convinc'd of their duty in this reſpect, which they might eaſily be, they would be as much afraid of unworthy refuſing, as of unworthy receiving. For, if this be a duty, there is a puniſhment annex'd to the neglect, as well as to the ill performance thereof. Therefore there is danger in not coming at all, as well as in coming unworthily; for God is offended by ſins of omiſſion as well as commiſſion. Did Chriſtians truly love God; were they duly ſenſible of the ineſtimable value of the benefits of Chriſt's death; did they ſeriouſly endeavour to become ſuch renewed, ſanctified, and holy perſons, as all who would have a reaſonable hope of being ſaved by Chriſt muſt be, they need not fear their receiving the Sacrament unworthily, nor would they want any arguments to perſwade them to a compliance. If the danger of receiving unworthily be a reaſon for not receiving at all, it will be likewiſe a reaſon againſt hearing the word of God, prayer, and other duties, becauſe they may be perform'd unworthily. (Fox) Note alſo, It is judgment "to himſelf" that receives; not to another that receives with him. If a wicked man's preſence at the Sacrament pollutes the ordinance to a worthy receiver, then Chriſt and his eleven Apoſtles were defil'd by the company of Judas at the Paſſover; for at that he certainly was, and, as many think, at the Lord's Supper alſo. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 2.

Not diſcerning the Lord's body] The word diakrinein may be better rendred, diſtinguiſhing. For, the fault the Corinthians are charg'd with, was their eating this bread and drinking this cup, as one would do an ordinary and common meal, meerly to ſatisfy hunger; without conſidering the inſtitution of Chriſt, by which it is made a ſymbol or repreſentation of his body and blood. (Fox)

For this cauſe.] That is, for prophaning the Sacrament, and "not diſcerning the Lord's body" at the Lord's table; for not approaching it as a feaſt of love, deſign'd equally for the benefit of all his members, and to knit them in the cloſeſt bonds of unity and friendſhip each to other: Therefore it was, that many were viſited with ſickneſs and weakneſs, and ſome with death. (B.)

We are chaſtened of the Lord.] To be chaſtened has a double aſpect; 1. Upon our privilege: It denotes our relation as children unto God our Father. Chaſtenings are a part of his children's portion: Yet, in that we are chaſtened, it taxes us with weakneſs; we are fooliſh, wanton, and unruly children, and therefore, ſo long as we are here, muſt always go with a rod at our backs. Chriſt, who was alſo a ſon, was chaſtened; "the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him," Iſa. liii. 5. But his were judiciary chaſtiſements; for God did not chaſtize him as a child, but as an enemy, and as a malefactor in our ſtead, as we muſt have been chaſtened, who were enemies and malefactors. Our chaſtenings are fatherly; Chriſt's judiciary. 2. The merciful deſign of God in the chaſtenings of his children: It is to prevent their condemnation; "we are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemn'd with the world." When therefore, at any time, we are under chaſtiſement; in all we ſay or do, let us juſtify God and condemn our ſelves, ſince his chaſtiſements are deſign'd to prevent our condemnation. (B.)

Will I ſet in order.] The power given to the Apoſtles, to ſet all things in order in the church, is deriv'd to their ſucceſſors the Biſhops. It is blindneſs, not to perceive the authority they have, to make new ordinances. (Q.) See the notes on ch. iv. 21. and vii. 17.

CHAP. XII.

The different gifts and operations of the Holy Spirit. The whole church is but one body; and every member has its proper function.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. NOW concerning ſpiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto theſe dumb idols, even as ye were led. Whereſore I give you to underſtand, that no man ſpeaking by the ſpirit of God, calleth Jeſus accurſed: And that no man can ſay, that Jeſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt. Now there are diverſities of gifts, but the ſame ſpirit. And there are differences of adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord. And there are diverſities of operations, but it is the ſame God, which worketh all in all. But the manifeſtation of the ſpirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the ſpirit, the word of wiſdom; to another the word of knowledge by the ſame ſpirit; to another faith by the ſame ſpirit; to another the gifts of healing by the ſame ſpirit; to another the working of miracles; to another propheſy; to another diſcerning of ſpirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. But all theſe worketh that one and the ſelf ſame ſpirit, dividing to every man ſeverally as he will.

Concerning ſpiritual gifts.] Tho' the extraordinary gifts and operations of the Holy Spirit were intended to eſtabliſh the truth, to convince unbelievers, to promote the increaſe, and edification, and unity of the church of Chriſt, by ſuch mutual aſſiſtances and ſervices, as each, in his way and meaſure, was qualified to contribute, for the benefit of the whole, yet theſe were abus'd by ſome, to the prejudice of that doctrine they were meant to confirm; by others, to oſtentation, vain glory, and private reſpects; to invidious compariſons between the different kinds of theſe gifts, and between thoſe who partook of the ſame kind; to contempt of them who were endued with leſs, and envying of them who were diſtinguiſhed by larger meaſures. To reform which abuſes, the Apoſtle, 1. Puts the Corinthians in mind of the vanity and ſuperſtition of that falſe religion, to which they had formerly yielded a blind obedience; viz. the worſhip of ſenſeleſs and dumb idols; ſuch as were falſly pretended to give out their dark oracles, but were in truth altogether incapable, either of uttering any themſelves, or of dictating any to others; whereas now they had embrac'd the doctrine of a God indeed. 2. He fortifies them againſt the ſeducements of ſome, who boaſted that they were, tho' in reality they were not, acted by the ſpirit of God; and gives them one general rule, how to diſtinguiſh the falſe from the true. And, after this introduction, 3. He proceeds to explain to them the cauſe, the end, and the different ſorts of ſpiritual gifts. (Stanh.) Theſe gifts are not call'd ſpiritual from the ſoul or ſpirit of man, wherein they were as in their ſubject, but from the author of them; viz. the Spirit of God, whom our Saviour promiſed to ſend to his diſciples; as is plain from their not being here call'd pſychica, but pneumatica. But then, there being two ſorts of ſpiritual gifts, common and ſpecial, which are different in their nature, extent and uſe, we muſt here underſtand thoſe of the latter ſort; viz. ſuch as the gift of tongues, the power of working miracles, the ſpirit of prophecy, &c. which are not neceſſary for the church, but in certain caſes of ſpecial exigence; and which when they are neceſſary, are not given, like the other moral virtues, jointly to all, but ſeverally to ſome. (Hickes)

Calleth Jeſus accurſed.] Here is the Apoſtle's rule, before-mention'd, for diſtinguiſhing who were, and who were not, acted by the ſpirit of God; viz. To obſerve their doctrines, with regard to our bleſſed Saviour's own perſon and authority. If any ſpake in derogation of him; inſinuating, that he was a deceiver, and, as ſuch, to be ſhunn'd and abhorr'd; even ſuppoſing that perſon to work wonders, yet were they to be look'd upon as lying wonders, and not operations of the Holy Ghoſt: Becauſe the Holy Ghoſt was given on purpoſe to atteſt the truth, and win men over to the belief, of Jeſus and his authority; and therefore he cannot be ſuppoſed to act in ſuch manifeſt contradiction to his own deſign, as the imparting a power of working miracles, in diminution of, nay, in direct oppoſition to, the dignity and doctrine of Jeſus, muſt argue him to do. On the other hand, If any perſon made it his buſineſs to inculcate the truth, as it is in Jeſus; if he taught men to believe, to obey, to ſerve, and ſubmit to him, and entirely to depend upon him for their ſalvation; whatever miracles ſhould be wrought in confirmation of ſuch a one's authority, theſe, they might be aſſur'd, were wrought by God's own ſpirit, and the preacher working them might be ſafely adher'd to: Becauſe a confirmation of ſuch principles as theſe was every way agreeable to the end and purpoſe of imparting that ſpirit and his powers; but tho' we ſhould admit a power, yet we cannot ſuppoſe an inclination, in any evil ſpirits, to lend ſuch an aſſiſtance as this, to the promoting a perſuaſion ſo deſtructive of their own intereſts and deſigns, as that of the Goſpel and advancement of Chriſt's kingdom is manifeſtly known to be. (Stanh. and W.)

Diverſities of gifts.] Here the Apoſtle inſiſts, That, how different ſoever the abilities, or the manner of exerciſing them, or the ſtations in which they were exerciſed, might be; yet ſtill this was common to them all, that they were gifts, and that they were given by the ſame hand. Nor does he, on this occaſion, content himſelf with affirming, in general terms, that God is the author of them; but diverſifies his expreſſion in ſuch manner, as may be reaſonably thought done with deſign to intimate the perſonality and divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, the Trinity of perſons in unity of the Godhead, and the joint acting, and equal concern of Father, Son, and Spirit, in matters of this nature: An operation common to all three Perſons; however the Scriptures, in condeſcenſion to our capacities, do ſometimes (as here in particular) appropriate ſome actions and effects to one or other Perſon in the Deity, in more ſpecial manner, or more frequently, than to the reſt (Stanh.) By the gifts of the Spirit are underſtood "the word of wiſdom, the word of knowledge, faith," &c. The adminiſtrations of the Spirit are the Miniſtry of the Goſpel; as Apoſtles, teachers, and the like: And the Operations of the Spirit are prophecy, working of miracles, healing diſeaſes, divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues; all which are expreſly mention'd in this chapter. Which leads us to have an idea of the differences between the graces and the powers of the Spirit: For wiſdom, faith, and knowledge, are the graces of the Spirit, and may be common to all ranks and degrees of men; but to teach, and to propheſy, are deriv'd from the powers of the Spirit, and ſuppoſe an ability to act, and are inveſted in particular perſons: Which detects the folly of thoſe men who pretend to exerciſe ſuch powers by virtue of grace; which pretence they have turn'd into an unlimited commiſſion, to act what they pleaſe; not conſidering at the ſame time the Apoſtle's words in this chapter, nor being able to produce one of their Saints, with all his predeſtination and grace, who has been able to work one miracle ſince the clear light of the Goſpel (as they ſay) has ſhined among them. See the notes on Rom. xii. 6.

Given to every man to profit withal.] Pros to ſympheron. This word importeth ſuch a kind of profit, as redoundeth to community; viz. to the profit of the church. It is properly collatitious; when a great many bring every one his ſtock, and lay them together, and make a common bank for them all. (Leigh) Thus "the manifeſtation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal:" That is, To whomſoever it is given, it is for that end, that he may profit with it. (Lukin)

To one is given.] Obſerve here, The ſeveral ſpiritual gifts, plentifully poured forth upon the miniſters and members of the church of Chriſt; of which extraordinary gifts our Apoſtle reckons up nine ſorts or kinds, which were found in the primitive church in his days, as they here follow. 1. One had "the word of wiſdom;" that is, The revelation of the Goſpel, which is call'd the manifold wiſdom of God: This was the gift of the Apoſtles; to whom extraordinary meaſures of divine wiſdom were firſt given, to reveal the myſteries of the Goſpel to the Pagan world. 2. Another had "the word of knowledge;" that is, A ſpecial ability to interpret the myſtical ſenſes and veil'd meanings of the Scripture, and alſo to foretel remote and future things: Thus St. Paul told the centurion before the ſhipwreck, that not a man in the ſhip ſhould be loſt, Acts xxvii. and Agabus foretold the famine, and St. Paul's impriſonment, Acts xi. 3. To another faith; by which ſome underſtand ſupernatural courage and confidence, with which God did endow them, when call'd to extraordinary ſufferings or ſervices: Accordingly we read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, with what invincible courage and reſolution poor men appear'd before the Jewiſh and Heathen tribunals, and with what aſtoniſhing preſence, both of body and mind, they bore the name of Jeſus before the kings and people of the earth. Others by faith here underſtand a miraculous faith; that is, a ſupernatural confidence, and firm aſſurance, wrought by the Holy Spirit in the minds of ſome in the Apoſtle's time, by which they were certain that they could do ſuch and ſuch a miracle before they undertook to do it; and the greateſt Apoſtle durſt never undertake to do a miracle, but when he was aſſured by the Spirit that he could do it: And indeed it was requiſite for Almighty God, by ſome ſecret preceding impreſſion of mind, to let the teachers of the Goſpel know when he would aſſiſt them in working miracles; leſt they ſhould attempt to work when they could not, and ſo diſcredit Chriſt's doctrine, and their own authority, and diſhonour the name of God: And therefore it is obſervable, that "the gift of faith" here is ſet immediately before the gift of healing, and working miracles, becauſe it conſiſted in an antecedent impulſe to both. 4. The next miraculous gift, is the gift of healing;" that is, A power of curing all diſeaſes both of body and mind, without the help of phyſick, through the alone name of Jeſus Chriſt. 5. "The gift of miracles;" under which is comprehended the power of ſilencing and caſting out devils, inflicting diſeaſes and death on the bodies of incorrigible ſinners; as on Elymas and Ananias; as alſo the more wonderful power in raiſing the dead. 6. "The gift of prophecy;" that is, 1. The prediction or foreknowledge of things to come. Thus Agabus foretold, by the Spirit, of famine, Acts xi. And this gift was ſometimes exerciſed by foretelling who would be fit perſons to do God ſervice in the church: Thus, 1 Tim. i. 18. and ch. iv. 14. "According to the foregoing prophecies concerning thee, neglect not the gift that was given thee by prophecy." 2. Others by prophecy underſtand preaching and expounding Scriptures by divine inſpiration, praiſing God by inſpired hymns and pſalms, and alſo praying unto him in publick aſſemblies by inſpir'd prayers; for in the Apoſtle's time there was a miraculous gift of preaching, praying and ſinging, in which the Spirit did in an extraordinary manner aſſiſt ſome perſons, which with other extraordinary gifts is long ſince ceas'd. 7. "The gift of diſcerning of ſpirits;" that is, either, 1. A power of quick and ſure diſcerning, whether men pretending to the ſpirit ſpake from God, or not; or a ſupernatural ſagacity to diſcern between the impulſes of Satanical ſpirits, and divinely inſpired perſons: Or, 2. A ſpirit of diſcerning whether ſuch or ſuch perſons be beſt qualified for ſuch an office in the church, and accordingly chuſing them out for that work. Thus, Acts xiii. 2, 3. the Holy Spirit in the Prophet ſaid; "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them." Or, Laſtly, By this power of diſcerning ſpirits the Apoſtles could tell very much of the inward purpoſes of mens hearts and thoughts; for ſo Peter diſcerned the heart of Ananias, and the thoughts of Simon Magus. 8. "The gift of tongues;" that is, An ability to ſpeak divers kinds of languages, unlearned and untaught. To which was added, 9. The gift of interpreting thoſe languages; for theſe two gifts did not always go together: Some could ſpeak divers languages that could not interpret them, others could interpret them that could not ſpeak them. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 5. Acts ii. 4. Dr. Hickes's Sermon on this text, intitled, The Spirit of Enthuſiaſm exorciſed: And another (anonymous) intitled The Nature of Spiritual Rebellion conſider'd; reprinted 1718.

As he will.] Here ſeems to be a plain argument for the perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt; 1. Becauſe a will is here aſcrib'd to him: 2. Hence 'tis evident that he is no creature; becauſe no creature can enable others to do theſe works: 3. That he is God. For, as all this diverſity of operations is aſcribed to "the ſame God;" ver. 6. ſo it is here ſaid, "all theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit." (W.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: So alſo is Chriſt. For by one ſpirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one ſpirit. For the body is not one member, but many. If the foot ſhall ſay, Becauſe I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear ſhall ſay, Becauſe I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the ſmelling? But now hath God ſet the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleaſed him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot ſay unto the hand, I have no need of thee: Nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more, thoſe members of the body, which ſeem to be more feeble, are neceſſary. And thoſe members of the body, which we think to be leſs honourable, upon theſe we beſtow more abundant honour, and our uncomely parts have more abundant comelineſs. For our comely parts have no need: But God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked; That there ſhould be no ſchiſm in the body; but that the members ſhould have the ſame care one for another. And whether one member ſuffer, all the members ſuffer with it: Or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it.

As the body is one.] Here the Apoſtle acquaints us, That the intent and deſign of God, in giving theſe various gifts, was the profit and edification of his Church, which he compares to a body that has many members: For tho' that one Spirit which diſtributes the gifts, could have given them all to the ſame perſon; yet, to maintain a mutual dependance, and a charitable ſerviceableneſs of the members, one among another, he gave to one one gift, to another another; by which means one member of the Church would be obliged to take care of the reſt. Behold here, How the wiſdom of God has ordered the ſtate of the Church, like that of the natural body; to which the Apoſtle elegantly compares the body of Chriſt, which is his Church: "As the body hath many members, ſo alſo has Chriſt," that is, the Church of Chriſt. Now, having aſſured them, that they were indeed members of one body, he tells them what it was that made them ſo, ver. 13. "For by one ſpirit, (ſays he) we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit;" that is, by being baptized we are all made members of the body of Chriſt, and united one to another under him the head; and this, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, we are all one in Chriſt, who by baptiſm were admitted into his Church: And this union of ours, one with another, is teſtified and declared by our communion at the Lord's table, which is here call'd a "drinking into one ſpirit." And whereas by baptiſm we are ſaid "by one ſpirit to be baptized into one body," and at the Lord's Supper are ſaid to "drink into one ſpirit;" we learn, That the grace of the Holy Spirit was given in Baptiſm and in the Lord's Supper to all the faithful; who do not receive unprofitable ſigns, but the quickening Grace and Spirit of God, to make them living members of that one body. (B.) The Chriſtian church is a body conſiſting of various and different members, ordain'd and appointed for divers uſes: That is, The Chriſtian church is one ſociety, furniſh'd and adorn'd with ſeveral orders and offices, and miniſtries of men. Some are to be taught, and ſome teach in this church: Some are ſubjects, and ſome on the contrary are rulers and governors, appointed by Jeſus Chriſt himſelf. They muſt be ſtupid and ſenſeleſs, whom this does not convince, that the Chriſtian church is a ſociety, to which all men are obliged to join themſelves: And if it be granted, that the Church of Chriſt is a ſociety, to which all Chriſtians, as ſuch, are obliged to join themſelves, it will plainly follow from hence, that this ſociety is different and diſtinct from all other ſocieties whatſoever. (Hughes) See Dr. Claget's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ch. x. 17. and Rom. ix. 3. and xii. 4, &c.

Not one member but many.] Our Apoſtle here elegantly compares the ſtate of the myſtical body, the church, with that of the natural body. As the natural body is one, ſo is the myſtical body; as the natural body is informed and animated with one ſpirit or ſoul, ſo the myſtical body, the church, is animated by one and the ſame ſpirit, received from our ſpiritual head, Chriſt Jeſus, and communicated to all the members of his body, to give them life and motion: As the members of the natural body are not alike, but ſome ſuperior, and others inferior in excellency, yet all of indiſpenſible uſe; (for the wiſe God hath created no member of man's body in vain, but deſigned all for the mutual help and benefit of one another) in like manner is it in the church, the myſtical body: There are different gifts, different offices; ſome are ſuperior and more excelling in gifts, others are of meaner abilities, yet all conduce to the good of the whole: One of inferior gifts muſt not account himſelf uſeleſs; (for every one that cannot be excellent may yet be uſeful) for if ſo, what would become of the church? Therefore there muſt be different gifts and offices for different uſes: But every one muſt employ his gift, and perform his office, according to the nature of it, for the ſervice of the whole. Learn hence, 1. That ſeveral men have their ſeveral gifts, as it pleaſeth the ſpirit to give unto them. 2. That ſuch as have the meaneſt talent, either of gifts or graces, ought not to eſteem themſelves, or be eſteemed by others, as uſeleſs or unſerviceable; but to employ their talent, tho' ever ſo ſmall, for the ſervice and benefit of the whole church. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 3, &c.

The eye cannot ſay to the hand.] As the principal members of the body, the eye and hand, do need the leſs principal: So the rulers, paſtors, and wiſeſt members of the church, do need even thoſe weak and inferior Chriſtians whom the world makes ſmall account of. "The eye (that is, the man of great underſtanding) cannot ſay to the hand, (that is, to the perſon employed in leſſer ſervices) I have no need of thee: Nor again, the head (that is, the perſon placed in the higheſt dignity in the church) to the feet (that is, the perſons employed in the loweſt offices) I have no need of you." Therefore, the ſuperior members of the church muſt not pride it over the inferior, nor the moſt-knowing Chriſtians deſpiſe the leſs-knowing as unuſeful and unprofitable; but as fellow-members, jointly endeavour the mutual benefit and advantage of one another. (B.)

Beſtow more abundant honour] That is, We put on a more decent covering. (B.) The cloaths God made to cover the nakedneſs of Adam and Eve, are ſtiled, by Onkelos, Cloaths of honour: And the Greek word (time) here render'd honour, is in the Septuagint put to ſignify a cover, Gen. xx. 16. For illuſtration of this long compariſon, between the body natural and myſtical, Obſerve, 1. That this compariſon is taken from the Jews, who teach, That ſuch order ought to be obſerved betwixt the prieſthood and the people, as in the humane body; in which there are ſome members ſuperior, and others ſerving to the reſt; for all of them ſerve the heart, from whence life proceeds: And ſo it is meet, That the Levites ſhould ſerve the Prieſts, and the people the Levites. 2. That the argument, which the Apoſtle uſeth from the compariſon of the natural with the myſtical body, ſeems to conſiſt in theſe particulars; 1. That as the moſt inferior members of the natural body are as much the members of that body as the moſt noble; ſo are the moſt inferior Chriſtians as much the members of Chriſt's body 2. That there would be no perfect natural body without this diverſity of members; and in like manner, no myſtical body without ſuch diverſity of gifts and offices, as God hath order'd in his church, ver. 17, 19. 3. That the members are placed in the body according to the wiſdom and the good pleaſure of God, ver. 18, 24. And ſo it is in the members of the myſtical body; which therefore ought to acquieſce in the good pleaſure of his will, in whatſoever ſtation and condition his wiſdom doth ſee fit to place them. 4. That the members, which ſeem the weakeſt and the meaneſt, are as neceſſary and ſerviceable to the body as the other. Humane life could not continue, nor humane kind ſubſiſt without them, ver. 22. So, in the myſtical body, they who are employed in works of charity and mercy to the poor and the ſick, thoſe who ſerve tables, are all, in their kind, as neceſſary and ſerviceable, as other members of the church, and had their chariſmata, or ſpiritual gifts, as well as others, Rom. xii. 6, 7, 8. and 1 Pet. iv. 10, &c. 5. That, as nature had provided a covering for the leſs-honourable parts, and taught us to employ our care in covering and adorning them: So was it alſo with reſpect to the leſs-honourable members of the eccleſiaſtical body; there were helps, and miniſters, particularly appointed to take care of them, to cover their nakedneſs, and ſupply their wants; and promiſes were made to thoſe who employ'd themſelves in ſuch acts of charity, ver. 23, 24. And, 6. That, as there was no diviſion in the members of the natural body, but all the members took care of, and were employ'd for the good of the whole: So, God hath order'd matters thus in the body myſtical, that there ſhould be no diviſions, no ſeparate intereſts in it, but they ſhould mutually regard the intereſts of one another, ſympathizing, and rejoicing together, ver. 25, 26. (W.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Now ye are the body of Chriſt, and members in particular. And God hath ſet ſome in the church, firſt apoſtles, ſecondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diverſities of tongues. Are all apoſtles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? Do all ſpeak with tongues? Do all interpret? But covet earneſtly the beſt gifts: And yet ſhew I unto you a more excellent way.

Now, ye are the body.] Here the Apoſtle comes to make a particular application of his foregoing diſcourſe, to the believing Corinthians; whom he acknowledges to be a part of the myſtical body of Chriſt. (B.) Mele ek merous: Members of a part; that is, members of this church of Corinth; which is but a part of the Catholic Chriſtian church: For, all the faithful, whereſoever they are, make the whole (that is, the Catholic) body. Ye Corinthians are not the whole body; but members only: Neither all the members, but only a part of them. (Aſſ.) And the like muſt be underſtood of the church of Rome, and every other national church. See the notes on Rom. xii. 5.

God hath ſet ſome in the church.] Our Apoſtle having, in the beginning of the chapter, reckoned up the divers gifts which God had variouſly beſtowed upon the church, concludes here with reckoning up the particular officers whom God has thought fit to place in it: 1. Apoſtles; perſons ſent forth immediately by Chriſt, to lay the foundation of Chriſtian churches, and upon whom the care of all the churches lay. 2. Prophets; perſons immediately inſpired with the knowledge of future things. 3. Teachers; ſuch as labour in the word and doctrine; either as itinerary preachers, going from place to place, or as ſettled fixed miniſters in the church, expounding the Scriptures to the people. 4. Miracles; that is, ſome perſons endued with an extraordinary power to work miracles, for convincing Infidels, and confirming believers. 5. Gifts of Healing; ſuch perſons as had a power conferred upon them to heal diſeaſes, without the help of phyſick, in an extraordinary way. 6. Helps; Deacons, who took care of the poor, and aſſiſted the church in the diſtribution of her charity; and alſo aſſiſted in holy things, particularly in baptizing and adminiſtring the Lord's Supper. 7. Governments; the rulers of the church, and ſpiritual guides. And, 8. Diverſities of tongues; that is, perſons enabled to ſpeak divers languages, in order to the farther ſpreading of the Goſpel, without the help of ſtudy. (B.) For a more critical diſtinction of theſe ſeveral offices, the curious reader may conſult Dr. Hammond at large. See alſo the reſpective notes on ver. 12. John xx. 21. Acts vi. 3. xi. 27. and xiii. 1. and Rom. xii. 7, 8. And obſerve, by the way, 1. That it belongs to God to ſet and conſtitute theſe officers in the Church, and not to men to conſtitute themſelves therein. (Q.) And, 2. That, becauſe the Corinthians were proud of the gift of tongues, above all the reſt, therefore, to abate their high conceit of themſelves, in regard of this gift, the Apoſtle ſetteth it in the laſt place; it being (as they ordered the matter) of the leaſt uſe of all in the church. (Aſſ. and Fell)

Covet earneſtly the beſt gifts.] The Apoſtle concludes the whole chapter with this advice; That they covet and deſire the beſt; that is, the moſt uſeful and excellent gifts, the moſt beneficial and edifying gifts, ſuch as are moſt advantageous to the church; yet withal intimating to them, that tho' there be an excellency in gifts, yet there is a greater excellency in grace; particularly in the grace of love. Charity, or love to God and our neighbour, is more excellent than a load of gifts, tho' very extraordinary, ſupernatural, and miraculous “Yet ſhew I unto you a more excellent way:” That is, a more excellent way of miniſtring to the welfare of the church, and of edifying your own ſouls, even by true Chriſtian love one towards another. Learn hence, That as the ſanctifying graces of the Holy Spirit are far more excellent than the miraculous and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit; ſo it is the Chriſtian's duty, to be much more covetous and deſirous of them: For when gifts vaniſh away, the habits of grace ſhall never fail, but abide for ever; particularly the grace of love, which ſhall not only accompany us to heaven, but in heaven; where, from a ſmall and little ſpark, it ſhall be improv'd into a ſeraphic and never-failing flame. (B.) See Mr. Bridge's Sermon on this text; and the notes on the chapter next following.

CHAP. XIII.

All gifts, how excellent ſoever, are nothing worth, without charity. A deſcription of charity; and its preference both to hope and faith.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. THough I ſpeak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of propheſy, and underſtand all myſteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, ſo that I could remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing. And though I beſtow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Though I ſpeak with the tongues.] That is, Tho' I had the gift of tongues, or ſpeaking divers languages, in the higheſt meaſure, and moſt exalted degree; could I preach and pray like an angel, diſcourſe and talk beyond the rate of any mortal man, and have not the grace of love and charity; alas! what is all this to God? Who is not taken with a noiſy ſound, as children are with a muſical inſtrument. Behold here, that the tongues of men or angels could have ſaid nothing more plain or emphatical, to ſhew how much more excellent the ſaving graces of the Spirit are than miraculous gifts, which commend us not to God, render us not like God, nor any ways qualify us for the enjoyment of him, giving us no intrinſic worth, or inherent excellency: They only proclaim God's goodneſs towards us, but are no ways evidential of any goodneſs in us towards him. Gifts are like the gold which adorns the temple, but grace is like the altar which ſanctifies the gold. (B.) Here 'tis to be noted, That the Apoſtle, in theſe verſes, reckons up the things which were of higheſt value with the Jews, and which rendred their wiſemen the moſt celebrated. Thus, of R. Jochanan Ben Zacchai, they ſay, That he underſtood the language of the angels; and of R. Azai, That there was not, in his days, a rooter up of mountains like to him, or one who could do ſo great things as he did. They ſay, The man on whom the Spirit of prophecy did reſt, or who was fit to receive him, muſt be a wiſe man, a religious man, a temperate man, and endued with all probity of manners Of alms, they ſay, That whoſoever diminiſheth any thing of his ſubſtance to beſtow in alms, ſhall be deliver'd from hell. And, as for martyrdom for the law, they thought it ſufficient to expiate, not only for their own ſins, but even for the ſins of the whole nation. Hence Joſephus brings in Eleazar praying thus for the Jews, Let my blood be an expiation for them, and receive my life for their lives: And he ſays of the martyrs, who ſuffered under Antiochus Epiphanes, That the divine providence ſaved all Iſrael from the evils they ſuffer'd, by the blood, and the propitiatory death of thoſe pious men. But here is raiſed a diſpute, Whether the gifts here mention'd were at any time or could be exerciſed by them who wanted charity? Or whether ſuch profuſe alms, and conſtancy in ſuffering to the death, ever were, or could be, ſeparated from that grace? To which I anſwer, 1. That 'tis true, the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh only hypothetically, that is, ſuppoſing theſe things were perform'd without charity, they would not profit to ſalvation: But then, that ſuppoſition ſeems fairly to imply the thing it ſelf not to be impoſſible; or that there was no neceſſary connexion betwixt theſe gifts and actions and the grace of charity. 2. That our Saviour ſeems plainly to inform us, that men might “propheſy, and caſt out devils, and do mighty works in his name,” Mat. vii. 22, 23. and yet be workers of iniquity, and perſons whom he will not own at the laſt day. 3. That he alſo teacheth, that ſome may do their alms to be applauded of men, Mat. vi. 2. ſo as to receive no reward from God; and ſo informs us, that alms may be given, without true love to God, or to our neighbour for his ſake. And, 4. That all the Fathers teach, That it is not the ſuffering, but the reaſon of it, that makes the martyr; and that when men, in ſchiſm or hereſy, thus “give their bodies to be burnt,” they are not to be deemed true martyrs, by reaſon of the want of charity: And the ſame they ſay of thoſe who ſuffer for vain-glory, viz. That they ſhed their blood in vain. (W.) See the notes on ch. i. 4.

Or a tinkling cymbal.] That (kymbalon) cymbal here is an inſtrument of loud muſick, may appear, not only by the epithets which are given it, Pſa. cl. 5. the loud cymbals, and the high-ſounding cymbals; but alſo by the reſt of the conſort there mention'd, “the ſound of the trumpet” in the firſt, and (after “the pſaltery and harp, timbrel and pipe, ſtringed inſtruments and organs”) this of the cymbal, in the laſt and higheſt place, and that no doubt (pneumaticon) a wind inſtrument of braſs, as appears by Heſychius; who renders chalkoſtoma, inſtruments with braſen mouths, by chalkea kymbala, braſen cymbals: So improbable is it that this ſhould be that tinckling inſtrument of ſo ſlight and low a ſound, that now we call by that name. This more appears by the epithet here added to it, alalazon, which certainly ſignifies a loud noiſe or cry, a ſhout either of mariners and the like, when they ſet all uniformly to ſome work of difficulty, to hoiſe the main ſail, to which they all muſt join, and ſummon one another to it by that ſhout, or elſe of conquerors in a field. The word alalazei notes ſhouting for victory, ſaith Heſychius; and alalagmos, a ſong of victory, or ſhout of acclamation: And that ſignifies this inſtrument to be ſuch as was then uſed (as the trumpet, meant, I ſuppoſe, by the ſounding braſs, is now) for thoſe ſolemn military ovations and triumphs; and in that reſpect it ſeems moſt applicable to the gift of tongues in the church, as that is oppoſed to charity. Charity is all for the edification, the benefiting and profiting of others; but the gift of tongues being only uſeful, as a miracle, to convince unbelievers, and to ſpeak intelligibly to them which are of another nation, and not at all uſeful to believers of their own nation that underſtand not a ſtrange tongue, may, in reſpect of them, fitly be compared to a cymbal, or trumpet, ſounding a triumph for oſtentation, but not for edification, as is inſiſted on at large in the fourteenth chapter. (H.)

The gift of prophecy.] Suppoſe I had the ſpirit of prophecy, and could ſpeak by inſpiration of things preſent, and things to come, and could underſtand deep and difficult points in God's word and works, what is this more than Balaam had? And ſuppoſe I have all faith, that is, the higheſt degree of miraculous faith, ſo “that I could remove mountains,” yet this ſevered from charity, or the predominant love of God and our neighbour, is all nothing: And “I am nothing;” that is, nothing worth in the ſight of God. Obſerve here, That miraculous faith may be ſevered from charity, but juſtifying faith cannot, which always worketh by love; and wherever that grace is found, it gives value and acceptance to all other graces. Faith without charity is but a dead aſſent; hope without charity is but like a tympany, the bigger it grows, the more dangerous it proves; and the moſt diffuſive almſgiving without love, is but a ſacrifice to vanity. (B.) See the notes on ch. xii. 8, &c.

Beſtow all my goods.] Obſerve here (as before is intimated) That alms may be given, without true love to God, or to our neighbour for God's ſake: They may be given out of mere natural pity to the poor, out of a deſire to be well thought of, and well ſpoken of by men, out of an opinion of merit, and obliging God, or from ſome other cauſe, which includes not love either to God or man; and wherever they are thus given, they profit nothing to ſalvation. The Greek word for “feeding the poor” here, ſignifies to divide victuals in ſeveral pieces, and ſo diſtribute it among the poor. Lord! what a conſideration is this, that a man may do all the external works of mercy, even the higheſt and moſt tranſcendent works, and yet want true love to God and his neighbour. 2. That as alms may be given, ſo martyrdom may be undergone, without charity. “If I give my body to be burned;” that is, If I have ſo much fortitude and courage as to lay down my life for Chriſt and his truth, which is ſuch an high expreſſion of my obedience to him as angels are not capable of performing; yet without charity burning is but a vain-glorious blaze; and inſtead of ſealing the truth with our blood, we ſeal but our own ſhame and folly. 3. The Apoſtle ſays not, If I be burnt, perſecuted, and put to death by others; but if I give my ſelf to be burned; if I voluntarily and freely offer up my ſelf, not to impriſonment only, but to death it ſelf, yea, to the moſt terrible kind of death, burning; yet if all this be not from a right principle and ſincere end, if all this be without true love to God and his glory, church, and truth, it will avail nothing to ſalvation. Learn hence, That no kind of external ſufferings, tho' ever ſo grievous, either for the truth of Chriſt indeed, or for that which a man's conſcience judges to be the truth of Chriſt, is a ſure and infallible ſign of a gracious ſtate: A man may ſuffer for truth, but not for truth's ſake, only for intereſt's ſake; he may ſuffer from a natural ſtrength, and ſtoutneſs of ſpirit, and not from a ſpiritual fortitude wrought in him by the ſpirit of God. Ah, Lord, how miſerable is it to be burnt with fire here for Chriſt; and to hear him ſay afterward, “Depart, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire!” It is indeed a great matter to ſuffer for Chriſt; but is much greater to ſuffer with ſuch a diſpoſition of heart as Chriſt requires. (B.) See Biſhop Grove's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 1. and Rom. xii. 20.

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Charity ſuffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not it ſelf, is not puffed up, doth not behave it ſelf unſeemly, ſeeketh not her own, is not eaſily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth: But whether there be propheſies, they ſhall fail; whether there be tongues, they ſhall ceaſe; whether there be knowledge, it ſhall vaniſh away. For we know in part, and we propheſy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part ſhall be done away. When I was a child, I ſpake as a child, I underſtood as a child, I thought as a child: But when I became a man, I put away childiſh things. For now we ſee through a glaſs darkly; but then face to face: Now I know in part; but then I ſhall know even as alſo I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, theſe three; but the greateſt of theſe is charity.

Charity ſuffereth long.] Here the Apoſtle ſetteth forth the nature of charity; partly by a compariſon of contraries, and partly by the effects of it; whereby the Corinthians might underſtand both how profitable it is in the church, and how neceſſary; as alſo how far they were from it, and conſequently how vainly and without cauſe they were puffed up with other gifts, wanting this the chief of all. (Aſſ.) The notion of macrothymein, for ſlowneſs to wrath, or revenge, in oppoſition to quick reſentment of injuries, is ſufficiently known, Rom. ix. 22. And ſo it is to be taken here, as a firſt and principal act of charity; on which (chreſteuetai) is kind, or good, or gentle, or gracious, fitly attends. This differs from the ou paroxynetai, is not exaſperated, or highly provoked to anger, ver. 5. eſpecially in two things. 1. Paroxyſmos notes the height or pitch to which it advanceth, as the paroxyſm is the ſharp fit of the feaver: And ſo that part of the character of charity is, that where that is planted, it moderateth anger, and ſuffers it not to boil to that height; but this of macrothymia is the deferring and putting it off: The charitable man is ſo far from raſh anger, or ſudden revenges, that he can bear and forbear long. 2. Paroxyſmos is reſtrain'd to the paſſionate, ſharper part of anger, which is call'd orge, as the former to the rational and heavier part of it, thymos, which relates to revenge, or inflicting of puniſhment. This is otherwhere expreſs'd by (bradys eis orgeen) ſlow to wrath, Jam. i. 19. by anexicacos, 2 Tim. ii. 24. bearing with evil, not apt or forward to puniſh thoſe that do amiſs; to which is annex'd (en praoteti paideuon) in meekneſs inſtructing oppoſers. Contrary to this are the anemeroi, fierce, 2. Tim. iii. 3. (H.)

And is kind.] Chreſtotes ſignifies (according to Phavorinus) tenderneſs of compaſſion, kindneſs toward the neighbour; making all things that belong to him as if they were his own: And ſo it ſeems to ſignify here, that it is the property of charity, where it is planted, to infuſe a benignity into their nature; making them conſider others as they do themſelves, and ſo extend the ſame liberality and kindneſs to them that ſtand in need of it, that in the like caſe they would wiſh to themſelves; a god-like quality, attributed to God himſelf, 1 Pet. ii. 3. (Idem.) The charitable perſon is ſo far from "rendring evil for evil," that he labours to "overcome evil with good." His temper and converſation are ſweet and obliging. As he is ſlow in taking juſt offence, ſo he is ſure never to give any. His conſtant aim and endeavour is to be as beneficial as poſſibly he can: Quite contrary to that deviliſh and malicious diſpoſition, too viſible and common in the world; which is continually employ'd in miſchief; diſturbing the quiet, and obſtructing the advantage of its neighbours; and rendring men, whom nature and religion intended for mutual helps and comforts, continual plagues and torments, to each other. (Stanh.)

Charity envieth not.] This is a degree of perfection, ſtill higher than the former. For many, who with-hold their hands from doing harm, can yet be well enough pleaſed with ſeeing it done; eſpecially to thoſe for whom they have no affection. But he who is truly charitable, takes a real ſatisfaction in the happineſs of others: If God vouchſafes them larger meaſures of knowledge, or virtue, or riches, or credit, or honour; in a word, of any bleſſing, temporal or ſpiritual; he grudges it not, murmurs not at it, is perfectly contented with the preference this gives ſuch above himſelf, and feels a freſh delight in obſerving the glory of the giver advanc'd, and the ends of the gift anſwer'd. This is his deſire, this his joy, whoever they be, who are choſen for the inſtruments of bringing it about, and how much ſoever his own endowments, and reputation, ſhall happen to be eclipſed by their brighter luſtre. (Idem.) See Dr. Willis's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Rom. xiii. 13.

Charity vaunteth not it ſelf.] What the word perpereuetai ſignifies, or of what origination it is, whether Greek or Latin, is ſomewhat difficult. Among the ancient Greeks it is not met with; but among the moſt ancient Latins it is, perperi in Accius; and perperitudo, and perperam facere, very ordinarily: Which makes it reaſonable to reſolve it a Latin, not a Greek, word originally. Then, for the meaning of it, in the Latin it ſignifies generally to do amiſs, (perperam oppoſed to recte:) But in the Greek, the gloſſaries, and the ancient fathers, do differ, and yet pretty well agree. Perpereuetai, katepairetai, ſaith Heſychius, is elated, ſets himſelf out at the greateſt advantage; and perperos meta blakeias epairomenos, lifted up, and fooliſh: And therefore, when in Phavorinus we read perpereia, he kolakeia, it ſhould doubtleſs be read he blakeia, fooliſhneſs; and ſo preſently to the ſame word he hath he kai blakeia. And Phavorinus hath pointed to this place, ou perpereuetai, ho Apoſtolos pheſi; touteſtin, ou propetei: (For which St. Chryſoſtome reads, ou propeteuetai; and what that is, will be beſt judg'd from Antiochus, to be not lifted up above meaſure, not exalted with an opinion of himſelf; as appears by the oppoſites there, lowly-minded, depreſs'd in heart, accounting himſelf to be an unprofitable ſervant) when the Apoſtle ſaith, ou perpereuetai, the meaning is, That he runs not headlong, precipitous, as giddy proud fools are wont to do. Propetees, ſaith Heſychius, (propipton pro tou logiſmou) that falls upon any action before conſideration, or deliberation, raſh, unadviſed: So Antiochus, ſpeaking of longanimity and lenity of mind, ſaith, that he that hath it, is (among other things) aperperos, not guilty of that precipitous raſhneſs that wrathful men are ſubject to: (And therefore, when Heſychius hath perpera, protrepei, it will be reaſonable to correct, and read it propetei. Clemens Alexandrinus renders perpereia (callopiſmos) adorning and dreſſing one's ſelf gaily: And St. Baſil ſays, What doth it ſignify? All that is put on, not for uſe, but ornament. So Cicero, ad Atticum, ſays, Quomodo eneperpereuſamen novo auditori Pompeio? This is, How did I ſet my ſelf out, and play the orator, decking or adorning my ſpeech with borrow'd beauty? Where, it ſeems, it notes an oſtentation of eloquence, as of any thing elſe. From all theſe put together, the reſult may ſeem to be, That perpereuetai ſignifies that ambitious oſtentation, and ſetting himſelf out, which proceeds from a fooliſh, giddy pride and elation of mind, and puts a man forward upon all headlong, precipitous actions in purſuit of his own glory, or to ſatisfy his own intemperate humour. Thus, in Accius, ductabilitas nimia, and perperitudo, are put together, for an eaſineſs to be led, and an haſty, raſh, precipitous behaviour. And then, the excellency of charity (as in other things) appears in this, That where it is truly planted, it keeps a man from this fooliſh, giddy elation of mind; which breaks out precipitouſly into all ambitious, oſtentatious actions, and renders him ridiculous by an undue purſuit of his own glory or praiſe: Whereas the true Chriſtian love of others, ſo contrary to ſelf-love, (the ſource of all this) is buſied in the advancement of the real concernments of others, and ſets conſiderately about that, and runs not headlong after ſuch improper ways of getting in any aerial empty good unto themſelves. (H.) Some incline to render this phraſe, To do nothing in an inſolent manner. (D. Heinſ.) Others interpret it, Not to be tumultuous. (Trem.) And ſome again chuſe to expound it of flattery; reading this laſt period thus, Charity flattereth not others, and is not puffed up it ſelf. (Maſſey) But, tho' the word is, in the original, obſcure and ambiguous, it ſeems here chiefly to denote ſedateneſs and prudence, meekneſs and modeſty: Not being raſh and forward and aſſuming; "not exerciſing our ſelves in matters too high for us," as David expreſſes it, Pſa. cxxxi. 1. nor thruſting into buſineſs above our capacity and proper ſphere. By this we preſerve order and publick peace, and contentedly keep within the bounds of that ſtation which the providence of God hath call'd us to. Private men are ſatisfied with obeying, and thoſe who have no lawful authority, with learning: The one does not aſpire to government in the ſtate, nor the other uſurp the office of teachers in the church. For where theſe things are inordinately arrogated, the perſons guilty of it betray a ſpirit manifeſtly defective in this divine virtue; by aiming at poſts which they are by no means qualified for, and ſo introducing miſchief and confuſion. Nor does charity only reſtrain men from pretending to talents they have not, but prevents their being exalted even with thoſe they have. For it

Is not puffed up.] It teaches them to conſider theſe, as they are, gifts and graces. If theſe are ſpiritual, and ſuch as religion is immediately concern'd in, they miniſter very great ground for humility and thankfulneſs, and all imaginable care to anſwer the purpoſes they are intruſted with us for; but not the leaſt for vanity and ſelf-conceit: And if they be thoſe of perſon, or of fortune, we have yet leſs reaſon to be proud of them; becauſe the value and conſequence of theſe to us is not near ſo much, the freedom of the gift is the ſame, and the dangers and temptations attending them are more. (Stanh.)

Doth not behave it ſelf unſeemly.] What ouk aſchemonei here ſignifies, is a matter of ſome queſtion. That which ſeems moſt commodious to ſome circumſtances of the place is, That it is one effect of the grace and duty of charity to our brethren, that he who hath it doth never uſe others unſeemly in words or geſtures, but eſpecially not reproachfully. Thus will it fitly be join'd to ou phyſioutai, "is not puffed up," in ver. 4. contumelious behaviour being a natural concomitant of pride and arrogance. And accordingly, as Heſychius renders aſchemonei (for ſo it ſhould be read, and not aſchynei, as the copy there corruptly hath it) akoſmei, doth uncomely, in general; ſo he explains aſchemon thanatos, an uncomely death, by eponeidiſtos, reproachful, contumelious; to which it will be conſequent, that the verb may alſo ſignify to deal reproachfully; and to do ſo is very contrary to charity, of which therefore it is here denied. The notion which Eraſmus hath of it, for being aſhamed of nothing, doing any the meaneſt offices, tho' it might be agreeable to the context, as an act of high charity, doth not yet any way agree with the nature of the word. And the other notions of doing no diſhoneſt thing, &c. affix'd by others, will not agree with the context, which belongs all to duties of charity to other men, whereas this is terminated in our ſelves. Only it may be worthy of conſideration, whether (this chapter of the marks and effects of charity being founded in the diſcourſe of gifts in the church, ch. xii. and both compared with and ſet before them, here, ver. 1, 2, 8. and alſo ſet oppoſite to the factions and diviſions incident to the irregular uſe of them, and ſo particularly purſued, ch. xiv.) this, and many other parts of the character of charity, be not ſo to be interpreted, as may moſt immediately refer to that matter. Thus, the three immediate precedents here, (ou zeloi, ou perpereuetai, ou phyſioutai) "envieth not, vaunteth not, is not puffed up," ſeem peculiarly to mark out the malice, and pride, and oſtentation of the Gnoſticks; and then, proportionably, ſo may (ouk aſchemonei) behaves not it ſelf diſorderly: That is, where true Chriſtian charity is, oppoſed to (gnoſis) knowledge, ch. viii. 1. it hath this effect, it keeps men from irregular, diſorderly behaviour, in the church, ſuch as are mention'd ch. xiv. throughout, but eſpecially ver. 23, 35. and in reſpect of which it is preſcrib'd in the end of the chapter, that all things be done, in the church certainly, euſchemonos, orderly; which may very reaſonably be thought to interpret the contrary here, ouk aſchemonei. (H.)

Seeketh not her own.] This is a form of ſpeech made uſe of by St. Paul, to denote, not that neceſſary care and concern for our private benefit, which religion allows and requires, and which nature perſwades in the firſt place: But ſuch an inordinate purſuit of this, as narrows the object of our deſires and endeavours, and confines them to our ſelves, excluſive of all others. Thus, he exhorts them, "Let no man ſeek his own, but every man another's wealth," ch. x. 24. Thus he propounds his own practice as their pattern, in "not ſeeking his own profit, but the profit of many," ver. 33. And thus he complains, That "all ſeek their own, not the things which are Jeſus Chriſt's," Phil. ii. 21. The diſpoſition then, which he clears charity of, in this place, is that vicious and ſelfiſh one, which looks no farther than its perſonal intereſt; which never conſiders one as a member of ſociety, but ſtands perfectly ſingle; and is ſo far from placing or ſeeking its private in the common good, that it would ſtick at no methods of purchaſing the former, at the expence and certain loſs of the latter. The contrary virtue, implied and recommended by this character, is ſuch a generous and public ſpirit, as expects and endeavours our own in the general good: That largeneſs of heart, which is ſenſibly affected for humane nature; wiſhes the eaſe and proſperity of all mankind; never ſeparates it ſelf from the body by abſtracted views, but conſiders each member as a part of our ſelves; contributes its utmoſt to ſerve and profit the whole; and eſteems the glory of God, and the greater gain of our brethren, as an ample reward of our own labours and ſufferings, and eſteems ſome loſs and inconvenience, not only tolerable, but even eligible, on ſo beneficial an account. (Stanh.)

Not eaſily provoked.] Ou paroxynetai. Our tranſlation hath repreſented this, in meaning, much the ſame with the firſt quality of "ſuffering long." But the word, thus rendred, does not ſo properly import the ſuddenneſs, as the ſharpneſs, of a paſſion. And the thing intended here ſeems to be, that this grace keeps the mind calm and ſmooth; corrects that heat, which either the natural conſtitution, or the greatneſs of a provocation kindles in our breaſts; and even when our anger is moſt juſt, prevents its flaming out with that rage and fury, ſo common in men who are not under this guard. Nor is it hard to diſcern a very natural connexion between this and thoſe good fruits laſt taken notice of. For, as nothing does ſo expoſe us to the inſults of paſſion, as pride, and partiality to one's own intereſt; ſo are true humility and generoſity in no one inſtance more conſpicuous, than in that of curbing and ſubduing the wild beaſt within us. It is this that muſt preſerve the decency of men, and the moderation of Chriſtians, towards thoſe who may have deſerv'd the higheſt of our reſentment; by teaching us, that we are not however releas'd from the duty of remembring, that they too ſtill are men, and carry (tho' perhaps very unworthily) the title of Chriſtians; and conſequently, that in both reſpects they have ſtill a right to be treated as fellow-members with our ſelves. (Idem.) See the notes on ver. 4. and Acts xv. 39.

Thinketh no evil.] Charity does not harbour malicious and revengeful thoughts, (ſay ſome) as many are ſeen to do, who diſſemble their paſſion, but are full of lurking miſchief, and only wait an opportunity of making thoſe pay dear who have diſoblig'd or injur'd them: And thus the Greek word (logizetai) is often uſed, for putting any fault to account, in oppoſition to diſcharge and forgiveneſs. Or (as others) it keeps a man from ſuſpecting, and thinking the worſt of, others and their actions; but of the good which they do, it allows all juſt commendation, and is ready to acknowledge it. But, as it never charges any with doing amiſs, except upon undeniable evidence; ſo, when they plainly appear to have done ſo, it makes all poſſible allowances in their favour, and is as ready to excuſe or extenuate it. (Idem.) Thus, if we render it, Charity maketh no account of injuries, the tranſlation will agree with the ſcope of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe, as well as with the true ſignification of the word, Luke xvi. 2 and Philem. 18. in both which places it is rendred, account. (Maſſey)

Rejoiceth not in iniquity.] For the explaining this verſe, it muſt firſt be reſolv'd, what is meant by (adikia) iniquity, and (aletheia) truth. Adikia may ſignify, (in oppoſition to the peculiar notion of truth,) deceit or falſeneſs; as when it is ſaid of Chriſt, (houtos aletbees eſtin) "This is true," and (ouk eſtin adikia en auto) John vii. 18. "there is no unrighteouſneſs in him," that is, no deceitfulneſs: And then the meaning will be, that true charity infuſes ſuch a value of truth, and diſlike of deceit and couſenage, that it permits not any man to be pleaſed with any ſuch act, either in himſelf or others. But as adikia is oft uſed in a wider ſenſe, for all wickedneſs, and peculiarly for the villanies of the Gnoſticks, Rom. i. 18. ſo is aletheia taken for purity and ſincerity of goodneſs, 1 Cor. v 8. and 3 John 3. and often in other places: And then, as (ou chairei) "rejoiceth not," denotes the taking no pleaſure, but, on the contrary, being very ſad, extremely griev'd (as Iſa. lxvi. 4. "that in which I delighted not," is their abominations, ver. 3.) ſo the full meaning of the verſe will be, That charity will make a man truly mourn and grieve at any ſin committed by others (ſo far is it from the practice of the Gnoſticks, which delight in debauching men to unchriſtian ſins,) and moſt heartily rejoice to ſee men diſcharge their Chriſtian duty, and live in all manner of ſincerity. And thus ſaith St. John, that he "hath no greater joy, than to hear that his children walk in the truth," 3 John 4. (H.) Charity rejoices not in any evil done, either 1. By our ſelves, in the commiſſion, or after contemplation of it; or, 2. By others. Now, How ſad is it, when it becomes matter of mirth and ſport, to ſee another ſtab at once the Chriſtian name, and his own ſoul! Or, 3. It rejoices not in any evil done to others: Charity ſuffers no man to be pleaſed or delighted with any deceit or falſhood, ſpoken of or done to others; or with any ill ſtories, or malicious inſinuations concerning them, or in any calamity befalling them. "But rejoiceth in the truth;" that is, 1. Charity is ſo far from rejoicing, either in the falls or misfortunes of others, that it rejoices when the truth and innocency, the righteouſneſs and equity of any perſon or cauſe is made evident and manifeſt: A good man rejoices when he ſees any ſuſpected for, or charged with, iniquity, upon due examination cleared and acquitted. Or, 2. In mens loving truth, doing juſtly, and living righteouſly, according to the rule of truth, the Goſpel. O! What a complacency and inward pleaſure doth it beget in a good man's mind, when he beholds truth and righteouſneſs, piety and goodneſs, prevailing in the world! (B.) See the notes on Luke xvi. 8. and Rom. i. 18.

Beareth all things.] That ſtego ſignifies to cover, and is, within a very little, the Latin tego, and from thence ſtegos, tectum, is ſufficiently known; and therefore by Heſychius 'tis firſt expreſs'd by cryptei, ſynechei, to cover, to contain, and then by baſtazei, hypomenei, to carry, to endure. And that this notion of covering belongs principally to concealing, in oppoſition to ſpeaking out or reporting, may appear by Heſychius alſo, who in the word ſteganon, explains it by covering words, and not reporting them; referring to ſilence, or holding the peace. And this is the moſt probable notion of the word here; where, ſpeaking of charity, that it "rejoiceth not in iniquity" (that is, is ſo far from joying to ſee another offend, that it produceth great ſorrow and compaſſion for it) but, on the other ſide, "rejoiceth in the truth," is very glad to ſee men do as they ſhould do, live in all Chriſtian ſincerity, he adds (panta ſtegei) as a farther evidence of that temper, conceals all the ill of another, unleſs when 'tis greater charity to reveal it, (as Prov. x. 12. it is ſaid of love, that it "covers all ſins") and then goes on, (piſteuei panta) "believeth all things;" that is, all things that are ſaid for the excuſe or mitigation of a fault (which is the quality of the ſupernal wiſdom, Jam. iii. 17. that 'tis (eupeithees) eaſy to be perſwaded of that which tends to mitigate the fault) and when nothing is ſaid in defence, or excuſe, yet (elpizei panta) hopeth the beſt that the matter is capable of: And then follows (panta hypomenei) "endureth all things;" whatſoever of injury comes to him by another's fact, he is moſt ready to bear, and never meditates revenge. Which is the very thing that muſt be meant by this phraſe panta ſtegei, if it were rendred, "beareth all things;" as in Heſychius 'tis manifeſt, that ſtego, in that notion of bearing, is hypomeno, to endure. And that is one farther evidence, that ſtego is here in the other notion; for elſe there would be no avoiding a tautology. It is true, that ch. ix. 12. it may bear another ſenſe (for the word certainly ſignifies to endure, as well as to conceal) and yet that, with ſomewhat of this notion in it: For the ſenſe lies thus, We might uſe our liberty or authority, claim the privilege of labourers, that is, to be provided for by thoſe for whom we labour; but we have not done ſo, but (panta ſtegomen) make no ſuch claims, but endure hardſhip, rather than hinder the propagating of the Goſpel by inſiſting on this right. (H.) Some have explain'd theſe characters ſo as to concern that charity which hath God for its immediate object. They therefore make them to import faith in his revelations, truſt in his promiſes, patience and conſtancy under the afflicting diſpenſations of his providence. The ſenſe is true; but ſeems not proper to this place: St. Paul, in appearance deſigning to confine himſelf within the inſtances of charity to our neighbour, in purſuance of his argument in the twelfth chapter; and to ſhew, how juſtly he gave the upper hand to this virtue, by declaring it more excellent than all thoſe boaſted gifts of the ſpirit which they were tempted to covet ſo much rather than this. (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. xv. 1.

All things.] The word (panta) all things, tho' it be an univerſal, is not to be taken in the utmoſt extent, but, according to the uſe of the like phraſes in all languages, wherein the univerſal ſign affix'd either to perſons, or times, or places, or things, ſignifies only a greater number, but not all without exception. So when, Pſa. xiv. 4. it is ſaid, of the children of men, that "they are all gone out of the way, all become abominable," it is manifeſt that it is not ſpoken of all men without exception; for ver. 4. there is mention of God's people, and ver. 5. of the righteous. So for things, John xiv. 26. the Holy Ghoſt "ſhall teach you all things, and bring all things to your memory;" not abſolutely all, but all that were uſeful to their office: So, 1 Cor. x. 23. "All things are lawful to me;" that is, many of thoſe things which are unexpedient, or all indifferent things: So Phil. iv. 13. "I can do all things" is determined there to the things there ſpoken of, to want, and to abound, &c. And ſo here, the covering, and believing, and hoping, and enduring all things, is the concealing and burying in forgetfulneſs many conſiderable injuries and evils of other men; believing, and hoping, and enduring very many things, which they which have not this excellent divine grace of charity will never do. (H.)

Charity never faileth.] Charity is the only virtue which will never have an end: Becauſe it is it ſelf the end of all other virtues, as it is the principle and the perfection, the merit and the crown of them; becauſe it is the eternal bond which unites the members to each other, and to Chriſt their head; becauſe it is by this virtue, that the head and the members ſhall be conſummated eternally in God, who is charity or love; and becauſe it is this at laſt which will compoſe the ſacrifice, and the whole religion of Heaven, to glorify God to all eternity. (Q.) This ſhall never be aboliſhed in the Saints: Whereas the other gifts, which are neceſſary for the building up of the church, ſo long as we live here, ſhall have no place in the world to come (Aſſ.)

For we know in part.] We are now in that ſtate that we ought to learn daily; and therefore we have need of theſe helps; to wit, the gift of tongues, and knowledge of thoſe who teach them: But, to what purpoſe will they ſerve when we have obtain'd and got the full knowledge of God? (Idem.)

When I was a child.] Here the Apoſtle compares the Chriſtian's imperfect ſtate of knowledge and holineſs in this life, to a ſtate of childhood; his perfect ſtate of holineſs and happineſs in heaven to a ſtate of manhood. As a child conceives, thinks, and ſpeaks of things ſuitably to his childiſh ſtate; but when he comes to manly perfection, and to the full uſe and exerciſe of his reaſon, he then puts away childiſh conceptions and things: Thus it is with the beſt of us in this life: Like children we conceive and think, we diſcourſe and ſpeak of ſpiritual things in a confuſed and imperfect manner; but when we arrive at our ſtate of manly perfection in heaven, we ſhall have knowledge and other graces perfected. (B.)

See through a glaſs, darkly.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Now, in our minority, we ſee divine revelations, as the Prophets did of old, in a dark, enigmatical manner, and by ſymbolical repreſentations of things upon the fancy, as in a glaſs: But then, in the adult ſtate of the church, we ſhall ſee them after the Moſaical manner, in a way more accommodate to humane nature, and as it were, face to face; we ſhall ſee clearly, immediately, not by reflection, but by intuition. Theſe adverbs, now, and then, diſtinguiſh the twofold ſtate of gracious ſouls; and ſhew what they are while confined to the body, and what they ſhall be when emancipated and freed from the body, that clog of mortality which now hangs upon them. Obſerve here, 1. That our imperfect knowledge of God is ſet forth by ſeeing in a glaſs: Becauſe it is a weak and imperfect viſion; a glaſs gives but a weak and languid repreſentation of the face that is ſeen in it: And becauſe it is a vaniſhing and tranſient viſion; a man having look'd in a glaſs, preſently forgets what he ſaw there: And becauſe it is no immediate ſight, but mediante ſpeculo, by the glaſs of his word and ordinances we ſee and underſtand ſomething of God's nature and will; tho', after all our ſearchings here to find out what God is, we rather know what he is not, than are able to declare what he is. 2. That ſuch as have ſeen God here, as in a glaſs, in the glaſs of his ordinances and providences, in the glaſs of his word and works, ſhall ſee him "face to face," and fix their eye upon him in heaven to all eternity: When once the pious ſoul is unſheathed from the body, it gliſters glorioully; as ſoon as the cage is open, this bird ſoars aloft, and ſings melodiouſly. It is death's office to beat down the partition-wall, a groſs earthly body; and then the glorified ſoul ſhall have a clear and perfect viſion, an immediate and poſſeſſive viſion, a ſatisfying and ſoul-transforming viſion, a permanent and eternal viſion of the holy and bleſſed God, which the Apoſtle here calls "ſeeing face to face." 3. How St. Paul, in the latter words of the verſe, gives us a plainer expreſſion of that which before he had ſpoken more darkly and obſcurely: "Now I know in part, but then I ſhall know, even as I am known." Where note, How the Apoſtle changes the perſon: Before, it was, "we ſee through a glaſs darkly," here it is, "I know in part." When ſo great an Apoſtle acknowledges the imperfection of his knowledge, who can, who dare, boaſt of the largeneſs of his underſtanding? Note farther, The Apoſtle's ſaying, "Now I know," intimates, that he had begun his acquaintance with God here, which he expected ſhould be improved and perfected in heaven: He that knows not God in part here, ſhall never know him face to face in glory: Heaven is a place of perfection indeed; but nothing is perfected there, that was not begun here; no knowledge, no holineſs, will be conſummated there, which did not commence and begin here. 4. When the Apoſtle ſays, We "ſhall know even as we are known;" he means, that we ſhall know God as really and truly, tho' not ſo fully and comprehenſibly, as he knows us; we ſhall know him in his nature and attributes: Then and there will his wonderful clemency be ſweetly diſplay'd, his exact juſtice be demonſtrated, his perfect wiſdom clearly unfolded, all the knotty intrigues of providence wiſely reſolv'd, all the myſterious depths of divine counſels fully diſcover'd, to the delightful ſatisfaction of the admiring and adoring ſoul, who ſhall then ſee as it is ſeen, and know as it is known. (B.) See the notes on Rom. viii 29.

And now abideth.] The deſign of the Apoſtle in theſe words, is, 1. To inform the Corinthians, that the ſanctifying graces of faith, hope, and charity, are far to be preferred before all the forementioned extraordinary gifts of prophecy, miracles, tongues; healing the ſick, and raiſing the dead, not excepted. The leaſt degree of ſanctifying grace from the Holy Spirit is to be preferred (with reſpect to our ſelves) before the largeſt meaſure of extraordinary gifts, which are wholly for the good and benefit of others. 2. As our Apoſtle had compared gifts and graces together before, ſo he compares graces among themſelves now: "Faith, hope, and charity," are ſet in competition, and the preference given to the laſt; partly with reſpect to its preſent excellency, for charity is the end to which faith and hope are but the means; and partly with reſpect to its future duration: Faith and hope will vaniſh with this life; faith will end in ſight, and hope in enjoyment; but charity will never be out dated, but laſt and flouriſh when we come to heaven, and be a ſpecial ingredient in, and a conſiderable part of, our happineſs there; which conſiſts in the rapturous contemplation of divine love, in loving, praiſing, admiring, and adoring God, our great creator, and in loving all whom he loves, and that eternally. Learn, 1. That faith, hope, and charity or love, are abiding graces; they do and muſt abide not only in the church-militant in general, but in the ſoul of every member of it in particular. 2. That of all theſe graces, charity is the greateſt and moſt excellent; 1. In regard of its extent, reaching to God, angels, and men. 2. In regard of its uſe, extending to the good of others; whereas faith and hope are particular and private graces. 3. In regard of perfection, as rendering us more like to God. And 4. In regard of duration: Farewel faith and hope, when we come to heaven; but welcome charity, or love: Therefore "the greateſt of theſe is charity." (B.) See the Sermons of Biſhop Griffith Williams, and Mr. Thomas Adams, on this text.

CHAP. XIV.

Prophecy more to be deſired than the gifts of tongues. Public worſhip to be perform'd in a known tongue. Rules for decency and order in the church.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. FOllow after charity, and deſire ſpiritual gifts, but rather that ye may propheſy. For he that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, ſpeaketh not unto men, but unto God: For no man underſtandeth him; howbeit in the ſpirit he ſpeaketh myſteries. But he that propheſieth, ſpeaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. He that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, edifieth himſelf: But he that propheſieth, edifieth the church. I would that ye all ſpake with tongues, but rather that ye propheſied: For greater is he that propheſieth, than he that ſpeaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying: Now, brethren, if I come unto you ſpeaking with tongues, what ſhall I profit you, except I ſhall ſpeak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by propheſying, or by doctrine?

Follow after charity.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 13. and Rom. ix. 30. and xii. 13.

Deſire ſpiritual gifts] The Apoſtle exhorts the Corinthians, above all things, to practiſe charity: And, if they "deſire ſpiritual gifts, he will not have them ſearch for ſuch as are moſt wonderful, out of a childiſh curioſity, but ſuch as are moſt profitable: That is, the gift of prophecy, rather than the gift of languages; and the gift of interpreting a language, together with that of ſpeaking it. The reaſons of which he gives us in the following verſes. (Fleury) See the notes on ch. xii. 31.

Rather that ye may propheſy.] Here obſerve, 1. That the gift of tongues, or ſpeaking divers languages, was greatly valued, and much deſired by ſome in the church at that time; probably for this reaſon, becauſe the Apoſtles were very eminently endowed with this gift; the Holy Ghoſt deſcending upon them in the ſhape of cloven tongues: But yet the gift of prophecy, that is, of underſtanding and interpreting God's will, was clearly the more valuable and deſireable accompliſhment; for tho' ſpeaking with tongues created more admiration, and conciliated greater veneration, to the ſpeaker, yet propheſying was by far the more excellent gift, and tended moſt to the edification of the church: It is far better to do good, than to appear great; that is moſt valuable and excelling which is moſt advantageous and edifying. 2. How the Apoſtle enters upon a compariſon between the gift of "ſpeaking in an unknown tongue," and propheſying or ſpeaking plainly to the church's benefit and comfort: "He that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue," that is, in a language not underſtood, not explain'd or interpreted, "ſpeaketh not unto men," that is, not to the underſtanding of men; "but unto God" only, who alone underſtands him, "for no man underſtandeth him:" And tho' "in the ſpirit he ſpeaketh myſteries," or the deep things of God, yet all this is not to edification, becauſe not underſtood by the Church. Whereas "he that propheſieth," that is, he who intelligibly openeth and applieth the word of God to his auditors in the congregation, by what he ſpeaks, conduceth exceedingly to their "edification, and exhortation and comfort." (B) Where, by edification, underſtand confirmation of the faith, and inſtruction of the ignorant; by exhortation, incitements to virtue, and reproof of the unruly; and by comfort, the applying the promiſes of God to the conſolation of the afflicted. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 16, 26. and Acts ii. 4.

What ſhall I profit you.] Nothing is more barren in it ſelf, or more apt to puff us up, or leſs profitable to the Church, than the knowledge of foreign languages, when it is alone by it ſelf, and we have not the gift to make it uſeful, either to unfold the myſteries and ſecrets of religion, conceal'd under the figures of the Old Teſtament, or to explain the truths of Chriſtianity and the knowledge of the faith, or to illuſtrate the prophecies and the promiſes concerning the world to come, or to inſtruct men in the doctrine of manners, and in the rules of Chriſtian morality. (Q.)

By revelation.] See the notes on ver. 26, 30.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. And even things without life giving ſound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a diſtinction in the ſounds, how ſhall it be known what is piped or harped? For if the trumpet give an uncertain ſound, who ſhall prepare himſelf to the battle? So likewiſe ye, except ye utter by the tongue words eaſy to be underſtood, how ſhall it be known what is ſpoken? For ye ſhall ſpeak into the air. There are, it may be, ſo many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without ſignification. Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I ſhall be unto him that ſpeaketh, a barbarian; and he that ſpeaketh ſhall be a barbarian unto me. Even ſo ye, foraſmuch as ye are zealous of ſpiritual gifts, ſeek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church. Wherefore, let him that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, pray that he may interpret. For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my ſpirit prayeth, but my underſtanding is unfruitful. What is it then? I will pray with the ſpirit, and I will pray with the underſtanding alſo: I will ſing with the ſpirit, and I will ſing with the underſtanding alſo. Elſe when thou ſhalt bleſs with the ſpirit, how ſhall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned, ſay Amen at thy giving of thanks, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt? For thou verily giveſt thanks well, but the other is not edified. I thank my God, I ſpeak with tongues more than you all: Yet in the church I had rather ſpeak five words with my underſtanding, that by my voice I might teach others alſo than ten thouſand words in an unknown tongue. Brethren, be not children in underſtanding: Howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in underſtanding be men. In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips, will I ſpeak unto this people: And yet for all that will they not hear me, ſaith the Lord. Wherefore tongues are for a ſign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: But propheſying ſerveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe. If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all ſpeak with tongues, and there come in thoſe that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not ſay that ye are mad? But if all propheſy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all: And thus are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt; and ſo, falling down on his face, he will worſhip God, and report that God is in you of a truth.

Things without life giving ſound.] The Apoſtle here proceeds to illuſtrate his former argument by a ſimilitude taken from muſical inſtruments; the trumpet uſed in war, and the harp in peace. As they are uſeleſs, if by diſtinction their ſignification is not perceiv'd; for if a man hears not, or underſtands not, the ſound of the harp or trumpet, he cannot prepare himſelf either for the dance or the battle: So, if perſons in the Church do not ſpeak intelligibly, they will nothing edify; it is like beating the air, all in vain, and to no purpoſe. (B.)

So many kinds of voices.] Here the Apoſtle tells them, There may probably be as many voices and languages in the world as there are nations; and every nation underſtands its own language, and commonly no other. Now, (ſays he) If he who has the gift of tongues ſpeak to you in a language which ye underſtand not, will not he "be a Barbarian" unto you? And if ye talk to him in a language he underſtands not, will not ye be Barbarians unto him? He adds, that ſince they were ſo very deſirous of the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, they ſhould ſeek thoſe gifts eſpecially, by which the Church might receive edification and advantage. Where note, 1. The noble end, which St. Paul directs them to propound in what they deſire and deſign; viz. "The edifying of the Church." And, 2. The operation to be perform'd, and the means to be us'd, to that end: "Seek that ye may excel;" that is, paſſionately deſire and endeavour that ye may, by the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, be eminently qualified for edifying and building the Church of God. (Idem.) The word (barbaros) a Barbarian is deriv'd from the Arabic word barbar, which ſignifies a murmur or confus'd noiſe, or from bar, which ſignifies a wilderneſs; for thoſe who were firſt ſtiled barbari, liv'd in deſarts, after the manner of wild beaſts. Afterwards the word was taken in a larger ſenſe, for all thoſe who ſpake not the pure language of the Grecians: And, by degrees, almoſt all nations came to call ſtrangers, who underſtood not their language, by that name. (Aſſ. and W.) See the notes on Acts xxviii 2.

Pray that he may interpret.] Obſerve here, How ſtrongly the Apoſtle pleads the neceſſity for all publick worſhip, particularly preaching or propheſying, praying and ſinging, to be perform'd in a language known and underſtood by all the congregation: Let him that ſpeaketh, preacheth, or teacheth, in an unknown tongue, in which he cannot edify others, pray for the edifying gift of interpretation, that others may be edified as well as himſelf; otherwiſe, when we pray in an unknown tongue, our ſpirit prayeth, that is, our own gifts are exerciſed; but our underſtanding is unfruitful, that is, unto others; if we ſatisfy our ſelves, we cannot edify them. He reſolves therefore tho' he pray with the ſpirit, and ſing with the ſpirit, that is, with a ſtrange tongue miniſtered to him by the ſpirit; yet to pray with underſtanding alſo; that is, to pray ſo as others may underſtand him, and join with him, and be edified by him. Learn from hence, Both the impiety and abſurdity of the Church of Rome, in appointing their publick offices to be perform'd in Latin; a language which the common people in France, Spain, Germany, yea, in Italy it ſelf, do not underſtand: For the Latin tongue is not now the mother-tongue of any nation under heaven: And the council of Trent thunders out an anathema againſt thoſe that ſay the maſs ought to be celebrated only in the vulgar tongue. What is, if this be not, to offer the ſacrifice of fools? How can this be reaſonable ſervice, which is no better than a ſinful taking God's name in vain? How can their hearts and tongues go along together, who underſtand nothing which their tongues utter? They neither know the God they pray to, nor yet the mercies which they pray for: Lord, pity the miſerable ſouls in their communion, who erect an altar, and offer up unknown prayers to an unknown God. (B.) Note alſo, That the Greek phraſe here (proſeucheſtho hina diermeneue) ſhould rather be tranſlated, Pray yet ſo as that he do interpret; unleſs we could think, that they to whom God gave the gift of tongues, did not underſtand 'em, or know what they ſaid themſelves: For the particle (houtos) ſo, is ſometimes elegantly deficient, as Budæus has well prov'd. (W. and Eſſay) See the notes on John vii. 23.

But my underſtanding is unfruitful.] That is, It does no body elſe any good. (H.) The word nous here ſignifies indeed the underſtanding: Not the active, by which the ſpeaker underſtands himſelf; but the paſſive, by which he is underſtood of his hearers. It ought therefore to be expounded by ſenſe, or meaning, thus; " If I pray in an unknown tongue, my ſpirit prayeth, but my meaning is unfruitful;" that is, not underſtood. (Maſſey) And ſo likewiſe, Pray with the underſtanding alſo.] That is, In a meaning underſtood; according to the note foregoing.

How ſhall he that occupieth] Our Apoſtle ſtill goes on, arguing that publick prayer ought to be made in a language underſtood by them that pray. His argument is this; The heart ought to conſent and agree with the ſupplications and prayers preſented unto God; and to teſtify its conſent by ſaying Amen: But, ſays the Apoſtle, no man can ſay Amen to that which he doth not underſtand, nor be edified by that which cannot be underſtood. For a cloſe, he tells them, That Almighty God hath given him the gift of ſpeaking more languages than all of them put together, that ſo as an Apoſtle he might plant and propagate the Chriſtian faith in and throughout all nations; yet he declares, he had rather ſpeak a few words to the inſtruction and edification of his hearers, than a multitude in a language not underſtood. The faithful miniſters of Chriſt have ſuch a regard to the end of their miniſtry, which is the communicating of divine knowledge to the underſtandings of their people, that they had much rather they ſhould be edified and profited, than their own parts and gifts applauded and admir'd. (B.) The prayers and thankſgivings to God, which are made publickly in the Church, ought to be made and offer'd there with one heart, and mind, and ſpirit of the whole congregation; which is impoſſible to be done, if they do not all underſtand the meaning. (Aſſ.) Where the prayer is not conſented to, it is not our prayer; and where it is not underſtood, it cannot be conſented to. (Williams) For the proper import of the word Amen, ſee the notes on John xxi. 25.

Be not children in underſtanding.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, " My brethren, be not like children in underſtanding," who prefer gay and gaudy things, which make a fine ſhew, (as the gift of tongues does) before things more uſeful. Thus do not ye chuſe what beſt pleaſeth you, but what moſt profits others. I would have you indeed in ſome reſpects to be as children, namely, in innocency and harmleſneſs, in freedom from malice, and all kind of wickedneſs; " but in underſtanding be (and act as) men," as perſons of mature judgment, who know what is fitteſt to be ſpoken, and beſt to be done. To be like children in the innocency of our actions, is a virtue; but to be like them in impotency and weakneſs of our underſtandings, is a reproach; " In underſtanding be men." (B)

With men of other tongues.] Obſerve here, How our Apoſtle, to take the Corinthians off from their fond admiration of the gift of tongues, tells them, That in the law (that is, in the writings of the Old Teſtament, particularly in Iſa. xxviii. 11.) it is declared, that, becauſe the people of Judah would not be inſtructed by the plain preaching of the Lord's Prophets, therefore he would cauſe them to be ſpoken to in an unknown language; namely, by outlandiſh enemies and armies, whoſe language they ſhould not underſtand: From whence he infers, that ſtrange tongues were not given for a ſign of any good to believers, but they were given as a token rather of God's diſpleaſure to unbelievers; in ſo much that, by the juſt judgment of God, their ignorance by this means would be the more increaſed: But the gift of prophecy ſerveth not only for the converſion of unbelievers, but for the edification of believers alſo; therefore prophecy or preaching intelligibly is to be preferred in the church before ſpeaking with tongues. (Idem)

Will they not ſay, that ye are mad?] To convince the Corinthians, that prophecy was far more excellent than the gift of tongues, the Apoſtle here argues from the abſurdity of ſpeaking in the congregation with a ſtrange tongue uninterpreted; " Will they not ſay ye are mad?" And from the utility and advantage of ſpeaking in a language underſtood; it convinces and converteth ſinners; " He is convinced of all, he is judged of all:" As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, When the church meets together, if all that ſpeak ſhould ſpeak in a ſtrange tongue, what will an ignorant or unbelieving perſon coming into the congregation think or ſay? Will he not apprehend you to be mad-men? Whereas if all that ſpeak do propheſy and interpret Scripture to the edification of the Church, in ſuch a caſe, if an unbeliever comes in, he is convinced, diſcovered, judged by all them that propheſy, and the ſecrets of his heart are made manifeſt to himſelf; and ſo falling down he will adore God, the ſearcher of the heart, and report from his own experience, that God is in or among you of a truth. Where note, whence propheſying or preaching of the word has its convincing power, and converting efficacy; namely, from that God who is preſent in and with his own word; " God is in (or with) you of a truth." When Almighty God quickens the word with his own ſpirit, and clothes it with his own power, when he bids it go in his might, and prevail in his ſtrength, the ſtrongeſt holds of ignorance and unbelief, of obſtinacy and rebellion, fall to the ground like the firſt ripe figs ſhaken with the wind; when the unlearned, or idiot, comes into the aſſembly of the Saints, " he is convinced of all, he is judged of all, he falls down and worſhips." What is it that works this ſudden change? Not the preaching of men, but the power of God; " He will report that God is in you of a truth:" The arm of grace in the miniſtry of the word is victorious and invincible; the efficacy and ſucceſs of the word depends not on the parts of a man, but the power of God. (Idem.)

Ver. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. How is it then, brethren? When ye come together, every one of you hath a pſalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done to edifying. If any man ſpeak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the moſt by three, and that by courſe; and let one interpret. But if there be no interpreter, let him keep ſilence in the church; and let him ſpeak to himſelf and to God. Let the prophets ſpeak two or three, and let the other judge. If any thing be revealed to another that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his peace. For ye may all propheſy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted. And the ſpirits of the prophets are ſubject to the prophets. For God is not the author of confuſion, but of peace; as in all churches of the ſaints. Let your women keep ſilence in the churches: For it is not permitted unto them to ſpeak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as alſo ſaith the law. And if they will learn any thing, let them aſk their huſbands at home: For it is a ſhame for women to ſpeak in the church. What? Came the word of God out from you? Or came it unto you only? If any man think himſelf to be a prophet, or ſpiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant. Wherefore, brethren, covet to propheſy, and forbid not to ſpeak with tongues. Let all things be done decently, and in order.

Let all things be done to edifying.] From this verſe to the end of the chapter, the Apoſtle lays down precepts for the preſervation of decency and good order in the Church of God. And firſt, He directs, that " all things be done to edifying." (B.) For our better underſtanding the true ſenſe and purport of which rule, it is neceſſary to conſider, That all Chriſtians being "of the houſhold of God, built upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner-ſtone," Eph. ii 19, 20. hence whatſoever tends to the ſtrengthening, ſupporting, cementing, or raiſing this fabrick higher; whatſoever it is whereby men are made more firm and ſolid Chriſtians, more holy and perfect men, than they were before, by that they are ſaid to be edified. And therefore 'tis a great miſtake, to think, as many do, that they are edified by what they hear, meerly becauſe they know perhaps ſome little thing which they were before ignorant of. (See the notes on ch. viii. 1.) For whatſoever knowledge we attain to, we cannot be ſaid to be edified by it, any farther than as it influenceth our minds, excites our love, and inclines our hearts to God and goodneſs. And that this is the true notion of edifying, is plain from the Apoſtle's own words, Eph. iv. 29. whence 'tis manifeſt, That that only is properly ſaid to edify, which "miniſters grace unto" us, whereby we are made more pure and holy than we were before. And therefore we read of "edifying our ſelves in love," Eph. iv. 16. and "building up our ſelves in our moſt holy faith," Jude 20. which are the two graces that make up a real and true Chriſtian: And nothing can be ſaid to edify, but what tends to the exciting and increaſing of them, "until we come, in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the ſon of God, unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt," Eph. iv. 13. Hence therefore, when the Apoſtle ſaith, "Let all things be done to edifying," his meaning, in brief, is, That in all our Chriſtian aſſemblies, when we meet together to worſhip and ſerve God, all things there are to be ſo done, that we may return home wiſer and better than we came thither, with our knowledge of God and Chriſt increaſed, our deſires enlarged, our love inflamed, our faith confirmed, all our graces quickened, and ſo our whole ſouls made more humble, more holy, more like to God, than they were before. (Bever.) See Biſhop Beveridge's Sermon at large on this text; and the notes on ver. 40. and Rom. xiv. 19.

If any man ſpeak.] Here the Apoſtle gives directions concerning the uſe of the gift of tongues; That not above two or three ſpeak at one time; and thoſe orderly, one after another; one of them interpreting all that the other had ſpoken: But if none preſent be able to interpret, he who hath the gift is not to exerciſe it, but to "keep ſilence in the Church;" reſerving his tongues for the converſion of ſtrangers, who underſtand them, and in the mean time uſing them only between God and himſelf in private. (H. and B.) The Apoſtle permits him to uſe his tongue in the preſence of one who had the gift of interpretation of tongues; becauſe then the Church was not only edified by the interpretation, but the faith of the hearers was confirm'd by the exerciſe of two miraculous gifts: But he permits him not, to be his own interpreter, tho' he could do it; becauſe his ſpeaking that firſt in an unknown tongue, which he himſelf muſt afterward interpret in a known tongue, ſerv'd only for oſtentation, not for edification; nor could it be known, whether his tongue was ſupernatural, or only acquired. (W.)

Let the Prophets ſpeak.] Here is the like rule, concerning the gift of propheſying; which is more fully explain'd in the notes following.

If any thing be revealed.] Apocalyphthe. That apocalypſis doth not always ſignify a viſion, or paſſively, a receiving a revelation, by extaſy, or dream from God, but only a ſenſe or notion, a meaning or interpretation of a piece of Scripture, which, through ſome figure (or the like) hath much difficulty in it, may appear by ver. 6. where, in oppoſition to the miraculous ſpeaking of tongues, thoſe four ways of expounding in the Church are ſet down; and the firſt of them (apocalypſis) revelation, or expounding of ſacred figures, &c. So, ver. 26. (apocalypſin echei) "hath a revelation," as "hath an interpretation" is of him who can expound any ſuch figure, as the other is he who can interpret a ſtrange language: And ſo here, in this verſe, that which is here hath a revelation muſt be expounded by the Prophet's ſpeaking, ver. 29. For thus it lies, "Let the prophets ſpeak, two or three;" that is, ſo many in a meeting: "If another that ſitteth by" have any revelation, that is, if whilſt one is ſpeaking, another be, or conceive himſelf, able to expound the difficulty, then "let the firſt," that is, the Prophet then ſpeaking, "hold his peace," give way to him: Where, as the Prophets ſpeaking is all one with having a revelation, ſo the thing thus delivered, being to be judged of by others, whether it be right or no, ("let others judge," ver. 29.) is concluded not to be any ſpecial revelation from God; for if 'twere ſuppoſed ſuch, it ought not to be ſubject to others judging of it. And then, what is here ſaid will clearly be explained by that which we read in Philo, (lib. Omnem probum liberum eſſe) where, ſpeaking of the doctors of the Jews, when they are ſet in the Synagogues, he ſaith, One reads the bible, (ſome part of it) and another of the more skilful, or doctors, paſſing through thoſe that are not known, that is, the more difficult paſſages, expounds: This was called, among the Jews, preaching, or expounding in their Synagogues. (H.) And here, by the way, let us obſerve, 1. That ſpeaking and preaching in the public aſſemblies is limited all along to the Prophets; "Let the Prophets ſpeak:" Not the common people; whoſe buſineſs was not to ſpeak, but to hear, and learn. The authoritative preaching of gifted brethren, at the call of a private congregation, was no more permitted by St. Paul, than his ſuffering of women to ſpeak in the Church: For none but Prophets, or perſons in office, appointed for the work of preaching, were ever ſuffer'd to undertake it, in the primitive times, and downwards, till very lately. Let ſuch as firſt gave, and ſtill give, encouragement to the contrary, conſider, how they will anſwer it at the bar of God; who "is not the author of confuſion, but of peace." (B.) And, 2. That the reaſon, why the other Prophets were to judge, was not only becauſe there were falſe Prophets abroad in the world; but likewiſe becauſe the true Prophets might poſſibly, from their own private judgment, make additions to, or further explications or applications of, the revelation which they had receiv'd from the Holy Spirit. (Aſſ. and Fell) 'Tis impoſſible indeed, that the Holy Spirit ſhould ſuggeſt any falſhood to him who had it: But as the devil raiſed up falſe Apoſtles to oppoſe the true, 1 Tim. iv. 1. ſo did he alſo falſe Prophets, 2 Pet. ii. 1. and 1 John iv. 1. in oppoſition to thoſe who truly were inſpired: And of theſe, ſay the Greek interpreters, the true Prophets were to judge. Or elſe diacrinetoſan may be rendred let them diſcern; to wit, the agreement of what is utter'd with the dictates of the ſame Spirit in the Old Teſtament, "comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual," ch. ii. 13. Thus, in the great conference at Jeruſalem, after St. Peter had given his judgment of the matter, St. James adds, "To this agree the words of the Prophets, as it is written," Acts xv. 15. (W.) See the notes on ch. xii. 10.

The ſpirits of the Prophets are ſubject to the Prophets.] Theſe words, according to a diverſe reference, may have a diverſe ſenſe. If they have reference to thoſe words, ver. 29. "Let the Prophets ſpeak, two or three, and let the other judge," then the meaning is, That the doctrine of every Prophet ought to be ſubject to the examination and cenſure of the other Prophets; and therefore every Prophet may ſpeak in public, to the end that he may be diſcern'd and approv'd by the reſt, (according to the foregoing explanation.) But, if theſe words look not backwards to the antecedents, but forwards to the conſequents, then the meaning is, That "the ſpirits of the Prophets are (ſo far) ſubject to the Prophets," that when they are mov'd by the Holy Ghoſt to propheſy, they either may deliver their prophecies preſently, or forbear the delivery of them for a time, as ſhall be moſt expedient for the Church; and ſo, tho' more be inſpir'd at the ſame time, yet they may ſpeak orderly, one after another. (Aſſ.) In the former ſenſe they ſeem to be underſtood by Hall, Mede and Burkitt; in the latter by Grotius, Hammond, Whitby, and Queſnel: And the rather, to diſtinguiſh the Chriſtian gifts of prophecy, from thoſe evil ſpirits which poſſeſſed the Heathen Prophets, and put them into extaſies, ſo that they could not be ſilent if they would. (See the notes on Acts xvi. 16.) But Biſhop Fell's Paraphraſe will fairly ſuit with both theſe interpretations; viz. That the ſpirits of the Prophets are ſubject to be judged, ſtinted, and regulated, both by the other Prophets that hear, and by the Prophets themſelves that have them. And hence we may obſerve the anſwer which is taken from this text, by the learned Joſ. Mede, to thoſe who object againſt our Liturgy, That the Spirit ought to be free, and unlimited; and that therefore a Book or ſet Form of Prayer, which limits the ſpirit in praying, is not to be tolerated or uſed. It is falſe, (ſays he) that the acting of the ſpirit in one Chriſtian, may not be limited or regulated by the ſpirit of another; eſpecially, the ſpirit of a particular man in the publick worſhip, by the ſpirit of the Church, whereof he is a member. For doth not the Apoſtle tell us, 1 Cor. xiv 29. that even that extraordinary ſpirit of prophecy, uſual in his time, might be limited by the ſpirit of another Prophet? "Let the Prophets (ſaith he) ſpeak two or three, and let the other judge; If any thing be revealed to another that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his peace." Is not this a limiting? He gives a reaſon, ver. 32. "For the ſpirits of the Prophets (ſaith he) are ſubject to the Prophets." Beſides, are not the ſpirits of the people, as well limited and determined by a voluntary prayer, when they join therein with their miniſter, as they are by a ſet Form? True; the ſpirit of the miniſter is then free; but theirs is not ſo, but tied and led by the ſpirit of the miniſter, as much as if he us'd a ſet Form. But to elude this, they tell us, That the queſtion is not of limiting the ſpirit of the people, but of the miniſter only; For, as for the people, no more is required of them, but to join with their miniſter, and to teſtify it, by ſaying Amen; but the ſpirit of the miniſter ought to be left free, and not to be limited. But where is this written, that the one may not be limited as well as the other? We hear the Apoſtle ſay, "The ſpirits of the Prophets, are ſubject to the Prophets." If in propheſying, why not in praying? And what ſhew of reaſon can be given, why the ſpirit of a particular miniſter in the publick worſhip of the Church, may not, yea ought not to, be limited, and regulated by the ſpirit of the Church repreſentative, as well as the ſpirit of a whole congregation, by the ſpirit of a particular miniſter? For every particular miniſter, is as much ſubordinate to the ſpirit of the Church repreſentative, as the ſpirit of the congregation is to his. (Mede)

Not the author of confuſion, but of peace.] Obſerve 1. That by the word (akataſtaſia) here render'd confuſion, is meant the unſettling, diſordering, and diſtributing of any ſociety, civil or eccleſiaſtical, whether it be by force or fraud, by words or actions: And conſequently, by peace, here oppoſed to confuſion, is meant only that external peace in this world, which is the well-ordering, or happy conſtitution, of a Church or ſtate. 2. That tho' diſorders, diſturbances, and confuſions, which, as they are mala pœnæ, or puniſhments for ſin, be aſcribed to God, as the vindicative effects of divine juſtice; yet, by confuſion here is meant only malum culpæ, the evil of ſin, in thoſe who are the diſturbers of the Churches and ſtates; and therefore God cannot be ſaid to be the author of it. For he is neither the worker of ſuch confuſion himſelf; neither doth he command, or adviſe, or direct, or allow of it: Whereas he is not only the author, but the God of peace; and his Son is the prince of peace, his ſpirit the ſpirit of peace, his Goſpel the Goſpel of peace, and his way the way of peace; neither doth he command or teach any thing inconſiſtent with peace, in any kind or in any degree whatſoever. And, 3. That the Apoſtle's intention here was not only to rectify the diſorders which he ſaw then in that Church, but to leave upon record a certain and infallible criterion, whereby to diſcover the falſhood of all ſuch doctrines, as would tend to the like, any where elſe, for the future. Now, if God be "not the author of confuſion," he cannot be the author of any doctrine tending to confuſion: And conſequently, not the author of thoſe, tending to ſedition and rebellion, which are held and taught by the ſeveral ſects of Diſſenters from our Church, tho' deriv'd and borrow'd from the Church of Rome. (Morl.) See Biſhop Morley's ſermon on this text; and the notes on chap. xi. 16. and Rom. xiv. 19.

Let your women keep ſilence.] Another rule for maintaining decency and order in the public aſſemblies; viz. That the women ſhould never preſume to ſpeak or utter any thing, as publick teachers in the congregation; no, not ſo much as to aſk any queſtion publickly; Almighty God having by his law made ſubjection, not public inſtruction, their duty, of which ſilence is a token. But note, 1. That it is not the women's ſpeaking in the public Pſalms and prayer, but by way of teaching and propheſying, that is here forbidden. 2. That the means of inſtruction were not denied to women: For they might "aſk their huſbands at home", for their own information and ſatisfaction; but to do any thing like this publickly, was a ſhame, and indecent, both to the Church, the huſband, and herſelf. And, 3. How the God of order ſtill calls for order, and delights in decency; eſpecially in places where his religious worſhip is celebrated. He has unworthy thoughts of God, who thinks him either a patron of, or pleaſed with, any diſorder, either in civil affairs, or religious ſervices. (B.) In the Church of Corinth the women did not only propheſy in the Church, but even with the head uncover'd alſo, chap. xi. 5. The former of which indecencies the Apoſtle corrects here; the latter there. (W.) See the notes there; as alſo on 1 Tim. ii. 12.

What? came the word of God out from you?] Theſe words are looked upon by interpreters, as a ſmart reflection upon ſome of the miniſters and members of the Church of Corinth; who from an high opinion which they had of themſelves and their own management, would not ſubmit to the foregoing precepts, canons and rules, for order and decency in the Church of God. What? ſays the Apoſtle, Do ye think, that ye have all the word and will of God? doth all knowledge of Scipture, and reſolution of doubts, reſt in your breaſts, and flow out of your lips? Conſider, ye are not the firſt Church that was planted, (Jeruſalem was before you) the Goſpel was ſent to you, it did not firſt come out from you. Whence learn, That all kind of ſcorn is not always uncomely. Men are apt to over-rate themſelves, and to over-value their own abilities, as if they had engroſſed all knowledge, that all muſt borrow from their ſtore, and light their candle at their torch: Now, in that caſe we may, without breach of charity, or blemiſh of holineſs, check pride with deriſion, and ſpeak them below men, who ſet up themſelves above men. Obſerve next, the Apoſtle affirms, That theſe rules for order and decency which he had given them, were from the Lord; and he expected and required, that thoſe who eſteemed themſelves prophets, ſhould obſerve and obey them as ſuch: But if men will be ignorant, and obſtinate in their ignorance, be it at their peril; and let them look to it, do not ye regard them: "If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant." (B.) The Church ought not to care for ſuch as be ſtubbornly ignorant, and will not abide to be taught; but ought to go forward, notwithſtanding, in thoſe things which are right. (Aſſ.)

Let all things be done decently, and in order] When it is ſaid, panta gineſtho, "Let all things be done," it is clear, That the doing, here ſpoken of, is the ſolemn performance of religious offices in the face of the Church: And when it is ſaid (panta) all things, without any reſtraint, it is evident, that the ſpirit riſeth from the former particulars, to a general concluſion; comprehending not only prayer, thankſgiving and propheſying, but moreover the miniſtration of the holy Sacraments, conſecration to holy orders, and univerſally the public diſcharge of ſuch ſacred and reverend duties. Concerning all which, the ſpirit requireth that they be done, 1. Euſchemonos; that is, after a good faſhion; conſiſting in time, place, apparel, and other things externally required for the due and decent adminiſtration. They muſt have an honeſt decency, and a decent honeſty: They muſt be comely to the eye, and referr'd to a godly end; that is, the advancement of God's glory, chap. x. 31. and the edification of the Church, here, ver. 26. not giving juſt occaſion of ſcandal "to Jew or Gentile, or to the Church of God," chap. x. 32. For if theſe ends muſt be duly reſpected in matters of common life, how much more reverendly and religiouſly ſhould they be regarded in the ſolemn ſervice of Almighty God? And as all things muſt be decent and honeſt before God and men; ſo it is requir'd, 2. That all things be done (kata taxin) according to order: Which order requireth authority, with godly wiſdom, in the public diſpoſer, and chearful obedience, with gracious humility, in ſuch as are ſubject to thoſe public conſtitutioms. So, this text is a canon of canons for all Church government; and all eccleſiaſtical canons muſt be caſt in this mould. For the better nnderſtanding whereof, we muſt obſerve, That ſomethings are neceſſary, and ſome things indifferent. Things, preciſely commanded in the word of God, are neceſſary to be done: Things forbidden, neceſſary to be left undone: And whatſoever God hath neither commanded, nor forbidden, is left to his vicegerents on earth; who, according to the exigence of the ſtate, may, by their diſcretion, command it to be done, or left undone. For things indifferent, being of a variable nature, are referr'd to the diſcretion of the Church; as appears by the text: Wherein the Spirit, ſpeaking to the Churches, willeth all things to be done after a good manner; not defining what manner, but referring all to the diſcretion of the Church, ſo things be order'd in an honeſt and decent manner. (Maſon) Learn hence, 1. That the whole Church in general, and every individual member of it in particular, ought to perform all the duties of God's worſhip in a decent and orderly manner. 2. That it is the duty of Church-governors to take care that order and decency be injoin'd and obſerv'd in the Church of God, to the edification of all the members of it. 3. That they only have authority to make Church orders, whom the Lord has made Church-governors. 4. That ſuch orders as relate to real decency in the worſhip of God, made and confirmed by the governors of the Church, ought to be obeyed and conformed to by the members of the Church for conſcience-ſake, that "all things may be done decently and in order." (B.) This (ſaith Theodoret) the Apoſtle had taught in the verſes foregoing; viz. 1. "Let all things be done decently," not like children, ver. 20. Not ſo as to give occaſion to others to ſay, Ye are mad, ver. 23. Not ſo as to breed confuſion, ver. 33. Not indecently, by Women ſpeaking in the Church, ver. 34, 35. And, 2. In order; that is, one after another, or by courſe, ver. 27, 31. And ſo do St. Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, deſcant upon the words to the like effect. (W.) CHAP. XV.

Proofs of Chriſt's reſurrection; and conſequently of ours. The Abſurdity of all the arguments to the contrary: The objections againſt it fully anſwer'd: And ſtedfaſtneſs in the Faith, and Diligence in the work of Chriſt, urged and enforc'd.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. MOREOVER, brethren, I declare unto ye the goſpel which I preached unto you, which alſo you have received, and wherein ye ſtand; by which alſo ye are ſaved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unleſs ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you firſt of all, that which I alſo received, how that Chriſt died for our ſins according to the ſcriptures: And that he was buried, and that he roſe again the third day according to the ſcriptures: And that he was ſeen of Cephas, then of the twelve. After that he was ſeen of above five hundred brethren at once: Of whom the greater part remain unto this preſent, but ſome are fallen aſleep. After that he was ſeen of James; then of all the apoſtles. And laſt of all he was ſeen of me alſo, as of one born out of due time. For I am the leaſt of the apoſtles, that am not meet to be called an apoſtle, becauſe I perſecuted the church of God. But by the grace of God I am what I am: And his grace which was beſtowed upon me, was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. Therefore, whether it were I or they, ſo we preach, and ſo ye believed.

I declare unto you.] In this chapter we have the fulleſt account of the reſurrection of the dead that the whole Scriptures afford, plainly deſcrib'd, ſtrongly prov'd; ennobled with the moſt auguſt myſteries and grand ſentiments, and adorn'd with all the beauty of compoſition, choice of words, vigour, variety, and magnificence of Figures. 'Tis like the richeſt and moſt delicious paradiſe in the world, that flouriſhes with every beauty, and all rich and ſalutary fruits. As to the figures, which are the leaſt beauties of this noble diſcourſe, they are more numerous and lively, than in any piece of eloquence of equal length in any language. Here you have the metaphor, with all its ſprightlineſs and clear alluſion, ver. 42, &c. The proſopopeia, with all its ſurprize and wonder, ver. 55. interrogation, with its moſt preſſing vehemence and rapidity, ver. 29, &c. Amplification, with its unexhauſted ſtores and entertaining variety, ver. 31. Repetition, with all its emphaſis, quickneſs of turn and charm of harmony, ver. 43, &c. The epiphonema, or concluding remark, with all its ſoundneſs of ſenſe and ſagicity, and its dexterity and happineſs of application, ver. 58. The great Apoſtle's entrance upon his ſubject, and addreſs to his converts, who began to waver, is ſet off in the choiceſt words and moſt perſuaſive expreſſions. He tells them, he declares no other Goſpel to them than what they receiv'd, ſtood in, and ſhould be ſaved by, if they perſever'd in the ſound faith: Ye receiv'd it not only by words, but actions, ſigns and wonders: It was deliver'd to you as a depoſitum, or ſacred pledge, which ought to be kept inviolable and undiminiſh'd; becauſe it is of infinite value, and a very ſtrict account muſt be given of it at the laſt day, ver. 1, &c. When the good man magnifies his own labours, to keep up his credit againſt a faction in this Church, he takes off the offence of ſelf-commendation by the humbleſt and ſincereſt acknowledgments of his former faults; by taking all the ſhame of his former bigotry, and ſpite to Chriſtianity, upon himſelf, and by aſcribing his pre-eminence above others, and his glorious ſucceſs in preaching the Goſpel, which before he had laid waſte, to the mighty power and free grace of God, ver. 9, &c. Then the noble champion of Chriſtianity produces his variety of ſtrong reaſons to eſtabliſh this fundamental doctrine of it, upon which all our precious hopes reſt; which the devil attacks with all his engines, and is the grand ſubject of the ſcoffs and ridicule of the Corinthian and other Pagan philoſophers, inſpir'd and deluded by that malicious impoſtor, ver. 12, &c. (Blackw.)

Unleſs ye have believed in vain.] If we do not ſtedfaſtly cleave to the Goſpel, and to this grand doctrine of it, the reſurrection, our hearing is vain, our believing is vain, our hopes of ſalvation are vain: By the Goſpel we "are ſaved if we keep it in memory," and practiſe it; otherwiſe we "have believ'd in vain." (B.)

I delivered unto you only.] Obſerve here the Apoſtle's fidelity. 1. In delivering nothing to the Church but what he had received; "I delivered to you, firſt of all, that which I alſo received;" either mediately by Ananias, or by immediate revelation from Chriſt himſelf. 2. The principal and fundamental doctrines or articles of faith, which the Apoſtle in his preaching had inſiſted upon among them; namely, the death, the burial, and the reſurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: That he "died for our ſins;" that is, a voluntary ſacrifice for our ſins, to make an atonement for ſin, as the Prophets Iſaiah and Daniel had long foretold: "And that he was buried:" The dead body of our dear Redeemer was decently buried by a ſmall number of his own diſciples, and continued in the ſtate of the dead, and under the power of death, for a time: That he was buried is a demonſtration of the certainty that he died: "And that he roſe again the third day according to the Scriptures:" Chriſt, tho' laid, was not loſt, in the grave, but, by the omnipotent power of his godhead, revived, and roſe again from the dead the third day, to the conſternation of his enemies, and the conſolation of all believers. 3. How the Apoſtle proves the truth and verity of Chriſt's reſurrection, by ocular demonſtration; he is riſen, becauſe he was ſeen alive after his paſſion: Firſt of Peter, next of the whole college of the Apoſtles, which formerly conſiſted of twelve; then of "five hundred brethren at once" in Galilee; whereof ſome were then alive to teſtify it: After which he was ſeen of James; and "then of all the Apoſtles." Theſe were all holy perſons, who durſt not deceive, and who confirmed their teſtimony with their blood. So that no article of faith, no point of religion, is of more confeſſed truth, and infallible certainty, than this of our Lord's reſurrection: And bleſſed be God it is ſo; ſeeing the whole weight of faith, hope, and ſalvation, depends upon Chriſt, as riſen from the dead. Behold how great a weight the Scripture hangs upon this nail: Thanks be to God, it is a nail faſtened in a ſure place: Our Lord's reſurrection is his church's conſolation. (Idem) But, ſince, on the return of the Apoſtles to Jeruſalem, after our Lord's aſcenſion, it is ſaid, "The number of the diſciples were about an hundred and twenty," Acts i. 15. it may be here demanded, How can our Lord be ſaid to have been ſeen (viz. before his aſcenſion) by "above five hundred brethren at once?" To which I anſwer, The one hundred and twenty does not take in all who believ'd in Chriſt; but is to be underſtood of thoſe only who were, at that time, aſſembled together: For, queſtionleſs, our Lord might, if he had pleas'd, have appear'd to ſeveral thouſands of his diſciples. For we read, That "Jeſus made and baptized more diſciples than John," John iv. 1. That "many believed on him," ch. x. 42. That "among the chief rulers alſo many believed on him," ch. xii. 42. And (to mention no more) ſo ſenſible were the Phariſees of the mighty encreaſe of his diſciples, that they complain, that all "the world was gone after him," ver. 19. (Fox) As for the note of ſome, That Chriſt was ſeen of theſe five hundred brethren in the air, becauſe the Greek word is (epano) upwards, it ſeems very light: For that word, upwards, when joyn'd with numbers, always ſignifies pluſquam, or more than; as Numb. i. 3, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28. Mark xiv. 5. and elſewhere. (W.) Which laſt remarks may ſerve to correct an overſight of Mr. Burkitt, on John xiv. 12. where (with a peculiarity of ſtyle too) he ſays, Chriſt, all his time, was angling for a few fiſhes, and catched but an hundred and twenty. See the notes on Luke xxiv. 26, 36. John xx. 19, 26. and Acts xxvi. 23.

As of one born out of due time.] Obſerve here, 1. That as Chriſt was ſeen by St. Paul, "laſt of all" the Apoſtles, ſo it is probable he was ſeen laſt by him of all perſons: We read not of any that ſaw Chriſt after St. Stephen, and St. Paul; who reckons himſelf among thoſe who were eye-witneſſes of the riſen Jeſus; "Laſt of all he was ſeen of me alſo." 2. The great humility of St Paul, in ſtyling himſelf an untimely birth, or a perſon "born out of due time." But in what ſenſe doth he mean that he was born out of due time? Anſ. 1. Negatively; Not that he was, as to his birth, born too ſoon, but rather too late. Alas! He had been too long a proud Phariſee, a formal profeſſor, a fiery perſecutor. In this ſenſe, he was no abortive, or born out of due time, but rather born too late than too ſoon. But 2. Poſitively he calls himſelf an abortive, or untimely birth; 1. Becauſe he was the laſt of the Apoſtles that was called; the reſt being called by Chriſt whilſt here on earth, Paul called by Chriſt from Heaven after his departure from the earth to Heaven. 2. Becauſe of the ſuddeneſs and violence of his converſion: An abortion is occaſioned by ſome ſudden ſurprize, ſome ſtrain, or violent motion. St. Paul's converſion was a wonderful violent converſion, out of the ordinary way and courſe; he was ſmitten from his horſe to the ground, and lay as one dead in his paſſage to his new life. 3. Becauſe abortive children are leſſer, weaker, and more imperfect children, than thoſe of full growth. As an abortive child is the leaſt of children, ſo he reckons himſelf "the leaſt of the Apoſtles," and ſtyles himſelf ſo in the next verſe. (B.) The Apoſtle ſeems here, in great humility to allude to a proverbial form of reproach among the Romans, who called thoſe abortive, who, being unworthy of the dignity, were admitted into the ſenate, after the death of Cæſar, by favour and bribery, as Suetonius relateth: As if he thought himſelf as unworthy of the apoſtolical, as thoſe were of the ſenatorial, dignity. (H.) See the notes on ch. ix. 1.

Whether it were I, or they.] That is, Whether it were I, or any other of the Apoſtles, who labour'd moſt in the preaching of the Goſpel, the doctrine is the ſame, viz. that "Chriſt died for our ſins," roſe again, and will raiſe us. (B.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Now if Chriſt be preached, that he roſe from the dead, how ſay ſome among you, that there is no reſurrection of the dead? But if there be no reſurrection of the dead, then is Chriſt not riſen. And if Chriſt be not riſen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is alſo vain. Yea, and we are found falſe witneſſes of God; becauſe we have teſtified of God, that he raiſed up Chriſt: Whom he raiſed not up, if ſo be that the dead riſe not. For if the dead riſe not, then is not Chriſt raiſed: And if Chriſt be not raiſed, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your ſins, Then they alſo which are fallen aſleep in Chriſt, are periſhed. If in this life only we have hope in Chriſt, we are of all men moſt miſerable. But now is Chriſt riſen from the dead, and become the firſtfruits of them that ſlept. For ſince by man came death, by man came alſo the reſurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive.

Now if Chriſt be preached.] Our Apoſtle, having aſſerted and proved the reſurrection of Chriſt, by ocular demonſtration, by a plentiful teſtimony of thoſe who ſaw him after he was riſen, and withal informed them that this was the doctrine of the Goſpel which both he and the reſt of the Apoſtles with one conſent preached to them, he from hence infers the certainty and neceſſity of our reſurrection. And, becauſe ſome in the Church of Corinth were tainted with the wicked opinion of the Sadducees, who ſaid there was no reſurrection; therefore, to ſtrangle this monſtrous opinion among the Corinthians in the birth, he ſhews the abſurdity of it, in theſe verſes before us. His firſt argument runs thus; If there be no reſurrection of the dead, then Chriſt the head is not riſen; for if the head be riſen, he will certainly raiſe up his members. Chriſt's reſurrection is the cauſe, the pattern and archetype of ours: He did not only raiſe his body from the grave, but his Church with him. For indeed Chriſt is not perfectly riſen, till all his members are riſen with him, and raiſed like him. True it is, that Chriſt's perſonal reſurrection was perfect when he aroſe; and it is as true, that all believers aroſe repreſentatively when Chriſt aroſe: But till all believers ariſe perſonally, the reſurrection of Chriſt has not received its utmoſt perfection. His next work is to prove the certainty of Chriſt's reſurrection, from the manifold abſurdities which would follow upon the denial of it; as namely, Firſt, If Chriſt be not riſen, then the Apoſtles preaching was vain, and their belief of it was vain alſo: "Our preaching is vain;" that is, we, who in our preaching have ſo ſtrongly aſſerted Chriſt's reſurrection, as an infallible argument of the divinity of his perſon and doctrine, have taught you a vain and idle dream: "And your faith" in Chriſt, as riſen from the dead, is no better than a fancy; "vain alſo;" ſeeing the object of it faileth, Chriſt as riſen from the dead. 2. If Chriſt be not riſen, then "we are found falſe witneſſes of God:" That is, then St. Paul himſelf, and the other Apoſtles, had given a falſe teſtimony of God to the world, in affirming that God the Father had raiſed up Chriſt the Son from the dead; which he did not do, if there be no reſurrection of the dead. To be falſe witneſſes for men is a ſin of no common guilt; but to bely God, and be falſe witneſſes for God, is a ſin of an aggravated guilt, which the holy Apoſtles could not be ſuppoſed to be guilty of. 3. If Chriſt be not raiſed from the dead, then "we are yet in our ſins;" that is, under the guilt of our ſins, and liable to condemnation for our ſins: We are not juſtified and abſolved from them, unleſs Chriſt has expiated the guilt of them; and thus he has not done, if he be not riſen, but remains himſelf under the power of death; for he was "raiſed again for our juſtification." 4. If Chriſt be not riſen, then "they which are fallen aſleep in Chriſt are periſhed:" That is, the dead Saints in general, and the holy martyrs and ſufferers for Chriſt in particular, "who are fallen aſleep are periſhed" utterly, and loſt finally, if there be no reſurrection; martyrs will be then great loſers, and martyrdom great folly. Laſtly, Then Chriſtians "are of all men moſt miſerable." As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, as thoſe martyrs were errant fools, and periſhed as ſuch, who laid down their lives for Chriſt, if they have no hopes of a reſurrection, when they ſhall take them up again: So we Chriſtians that ſurvive are the wretchedeſt creatures upon earth, who undergo all the ſufferings and hardſhips of this life, and deny our ſelves many comforts and advantages which we might enjoy. If after this mortal life we have no hope, who would care to do well, or who would fear to do ill? Were this believed, none would live ſo fleſhly and ſenſual a life as thoſe that do not believe the reſurrection of the fleſh; and none would be ſo miſerable in this life as the holy ſelf-denying Chriſtian, had he not an hope after death of a glorious reſurrection. Learn hence, That the true Chriſtians would be more unhappy than any other men, if their happineſs were confined to this life only: "We are of all men moſt miſerable;" we Apoſtles and miniſters more miſerable than other Chriſtians, who like beacons upon the top of the mountains, ſtand open continually to all ſtorms and tempeſts raiſed againſt us by men and devils. (B.) What a cloſe chain and connexion of arguments make up this very learned and elaborate diſcourſe! How do reaſons upon reaſons ariſe, and one beauty and wonder cloſely ſucceed another! There is full ſatisfaction in the ſtrength of his reaſoning, and perpetual pleaſure in the variety of it. (Blackw.) See the ſeveral Sermons of Biſhop Taylor, Biſhop Atterbury, Dr. Hewyt, Dr. Frank, and Mr. Killingbeck; and the notes on ver. 1, 30. John xi. 25. Acts ii. 24. and Rom. iv. 25.

But now is Chriſt riſen.] The Apoſtle's main argument to prove a reſurrection of the dead, is this; If Chriſt be riſen, then the dead ſhall riſe: But "Chriſt is riſen;" Therefore the dead ſhall ariſe alſo. The Minor, That Chriſt is riſen, the Apoſtle proved from the third verſe to the twelfth: And the Major, That if Chriſt be riſen, the dead muſt riſe too, the Apoſtle began to prove at the twelfth verſe; as is already noted. (Pemb.) Now we are to obſerve, That here is, 1. The reſurrection of Chriſt declared; "Now is Chriſt riſen from the dead." 2. Our reſurrection inferred and inſured; becauſe he roſe as "the firſt-fruits of them that ſlept." The term of firſt-fruits is metaphorical, alluding to the oblation of the firſt-fruits in the Levitical law, Lev. xxiii 9. Theſe were offer'd, both as an acknowledgment that the whole crop was God's, and as a pledge and aſſurance of their enjoying the whole crop from God, and as a means by which the whole crop was conſecrated and ſanctified to their uſe. As ſure as the whole harveſt follows the firſt-fruits, ſo ſhall the Saints reſurrection follow the reſurrection of Chriſt, as an effect follows its proper cauſe: For Chriſt's reſurrection is the meritorious cauſe, the efficient cauſe, and the exemplary cauſe of our reſurrection; and as it is the cauſe, ſo it is the pledge, the earneſt, and the full aſſurance of ours. 3. Chriſt is called "the firſt-fruits of them that ſlept;" that is, the firſt-fruits from the dead of them that ſlept: Not as if Chriſt were abſolutely the firſt that was raiſed from the dead; for we read of one raiſed by Elijah, and another by Eliſha, and of Lazarus raiſed by Chriſt: But theſe were ſo raiſed as to die again; they were not raiſed to a life of immortality: But now, Chriſt was the firſt that roſe never to die more; the firſt that aroſe by his own power; the firſt that aroſe to give others a pledge and aſſurance of their riſing after him, and of their riſing like unto him. His reſurrection is the cauſe, the pattern, the pledge, the aſſurance of the believer's reſurrection. (B. and Fox) See the Sermons of Biſhop Prideaux, Mr. Pemble, and Mr. John Gregory, on this text.

Since by man came death.] Here obſerve, That our Apoſtle, to prove Chriſt's reſurrection to be the cauſe of our reſurrection, makes a compariſon between Adam and Chriſt, whom he repreſents as two originals and fountains, the one of death, the other of life: As by Adam's ſin all that are partakers of his humane nature die a natural death; ſo all that are partakers of Chriſt's divine nature, all that are his ſpiritual ſeed and off-ſpring, ſhall be rais'd and "made alive" by him. For, the expreſſions, "in Adam," and "in Chriſt," denote a cauſality in both; the one of death, the other of life: As the death of all mankind came by Adam, ſo the reſurrection of all men came by Chriſt: The wicked ſhall be rais'd by him, officio judicis, by the power of Chriſt as their Lord and judge; the righteous ſhall be raiſed beneficio mediatoris, by virtue of their union with him as their head. (B.) See the notes on Rom. v. 12, &c.

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34.

But every man in his own order: Chriſt the firſt-fruits, afterward they that are Chriſt's, at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he ſhall have delivered up the kingdom to God even the Father; when he ſhall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power: For he muſt reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The laſt enemy that ſhall be deſtroyed, is death: For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he ſaith, all things are put under him, it is manifeſt that he is excepted which did put all things under him. And when all things ſhall be ſubdued unto him, then ſhall the Son alſo himſelf be ſubject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all. Elſe what ſhall they do, which are baptized for the dead, if the dead riſe not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead? And why ſtand we in jeopardy every hour? I proteſt by your rejoicing which I have in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, I die daily. If after the manner of men, I have fought with beaſts at Epheſus, what advantageth it me, if the dead riſe not? Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we die. Be not deceived: Evil communications corrupt good manners. Awake to righteouſneſs, and ſin not; for ſome have not the knowledge of God: I ſpeak this to your ſhame.

Every man in his own order.] As ſure as Chriſt is riſen, ſo ſurely ſhall we. The reſurrection ſhall be univerſal: Good and bad; all ſhall riſe, but not all together. Firſt, "Chriſt, the firſt-fruits;" And then "they that are Chriſt's." And yet there is a third order, tho' not ſpoken of here; but thus it ſhall be: "The dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt," 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. that is, next to Chriſt; and after them the wicked ſhall riſe to condemnation. The text ſpeaks only of the reſurrection of the juſt; of them who belong to Chriſt: Explicitely of theſe only; and therefore directly of reſurrection to life eternal. But becauſe he alſo ſays, there ſhall be an order for every man, and yet every man does not belong to Chriſt: Therefore indirectly alſo, he implies the more univerſal reſurrection unto judgment. But this ſhall be the laſt thing that ſhall be done: For, according to the proverb of the Jews, Michael flies but with one wing, and Gabriel with two; God is quick in ſending angels of peace, and they fly apace, but the meſſengers of wrath come ſlowly; God being more haſty to glorify his ſervants than to condemn the wicked. (Taylor) In the camp of Iſrael, the twelve tribes had between them four principal banners or ſtandards, three tribes to one ſtandard: For which reaſon, the Church is ſaid to be "terrible as an army with banners," Cant. vi. 4. The Hebrew word for a banner, Numb. ii. 2. is by the Greek tranſlated order: And ſo the Chaldee calleth it tekes (a word borrow'd of the Greek taxis) order; from whence the Apoſtle taketh his phraſe here, "every man in his own order." (Godw.) See Biſhop Taylor's Sermon on this text.

Then cometh the end] That is, the end of the world, when Chriſt will "deliver up the kingdom to God the Father:" Meaning his mediatorial kingdom, which, as mediator, he receiv'd from his Father: Not his natural and eſſential kingdom, which, as God, he had from his Father from all eternity. This ſhall never be deliver'd up; for of this "his kingdom there ſhall be no end." But, at the end of the world, Chriſt having ſubdued all his and his Church's enemies, and "having put down all rule, and all authority, and power," both in the world and in the Church, he ſhall deliver up his mediatorial kingdom to his Father, and reign no longer as Mediator, and as deputed by his Father; but he ſhall ſtill reign eternally, as God equal with the Father, for "his kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, and his dominion endureth to eternal ages." Here note, That, when our Apoſtle is ſetting forth the order, in which the Saints ſhall ariſe at Chriſt's coming, he ſays nothing of a firſt and ſecond coming of Chriſt to judgment, one to reign on earth a thouſand years, and another to judge all the world. (B.) The end, and the delivery up of his kingdom, are here made contemporary with his advent, and the reſurrection of all that are Chriſt's is to be at this very advent: But, how can he deliver up his kingdom, and yet reign on earth a thouſand years? (W.) See the Biſhop of Meath's Sermon on this text, 1678, and the notes on Acts ii. 34.

The laſt enemy.] Chriſt muſt reign till all his enemies are deſtroy'd: But death is one of thoſe enemies; the laſt of them, which keeps the believer's body from a re-union with his ſoul, and from communion with Chriſt: Therefore death muſt be deſtroy'd; and there is no other way to deſtroy death, but by a reſurrection from the dead. (B.)

When all things ſhall be ſubdued.] When our Saviour aſcended into heaven, he then triumph'd over the principalities of darkneſs; but yet this was not a final and compleat conqueſt: All things are already ſo far "ſubdued unto him," as to be under his diſpoſal and management; he reigns now, but he has not yet "put all his enemies under his feet:" He has not yet put down all contrary "rule, and authority, and power:" The infernal polity of wicked ſpirits, the ſeveral tyrannies in this world, and the maliciouſneſs of ungodly people, ſtill exerciſe their ſubtilty, rage and cruelty; yet all theſe are ſo over-rul'd, that they really ſerve the deſign of Chriſt's kingdom, tho' contrary to their own purpoſes and inclinations. But 'tis at the day of judgment, that all things ſhall be more eminently ſubdu'd to Chriſt: Then death ſhall be deſtroy'd, by a general reſurrection of all, as well as a glorious reſurrection of the juſt; the devil and his angels, and all thoſe wicked people that have finally adher'd to that accurſed party, ſhall ſink down into the depth of torments, with all the weight of God's vengeance upon them; the allotment of the angels, and of all mankind, ſhall be then everlaſtingly determin'd; the Church ſhall be deliver'd from all oppreſſion, and infirmity, and temptation and ſin ſhall be no more. And when all things ſhall be either converted or ſubdued unto Chriſt, then the divinity ſhall act without any mediation, as it did before the fall of man, and "God ſhall be all in all:" That is, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt (for that is the only true divinity or Godhead that we Chriſtians acknowledge and believe) ſhall act immediately, without any interpoſition or interceſſion; for the mediation being conſtituted on the account of the fall of man, or his apoſtacy from God, muſt naturally ceaſe when the apoſtacy is at an end, and all things are ſubdued. See Biſhop Manningham's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ch. iii. 23.

Baptized for the dead.] 'Tis to little purpoſe, to ſet down the ſeveral interpretations of this place. The moſt natural ſeems to be to underſtand it, as if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Now, for them among you, ver. 12. who "ſay there is no reſurrection of the dead," and conſequently that the dead ſhall not be raiſed at the coming of Chriſt (which was the point in hand, ver. 23. and from that verſe to this, all betwixt being to be read as in a parentheſis, ſetting down the ſtate of all things at and after that reſurrection) I ſhall only make this demand, Why then have they in their baptiſm made profeſſion of their belief of it? ver. 14, 17. it being certain, that the dead, or the reſurrection of the dead (expreſſed here, for brevity, under that word, the dead) is one of the articles, and that a prime and ſpecial one, to the belief of which they were baptized, and to which, baptiſm (being the putting in and taking out of the water) doth refer, as a ſignificant emblem, firſt of Chriſt's, then of our, reſurrection from the grave. And therefore, to what end did theſe men in their baptiſm profeſs their belief of this article, if they believed it not? To be a baptized Chriſtian, and not to believe the reſurrection, is a ſtrange ridiculous thing; an hypocriſy which they will never be able to anſwer to God or men; and that which actually deprives them of all benefits of baptiſm; and yet ſuch are they, if they make doubt of this. (H.) Divers other interpretations are ſet down at large, in the Aſſemblies Annotations, and the ſeveral Sermons of Dr. Stuart, Mr. Luke, and Dr. Ford on this text: But this which I have choſen ſeems to be well ſupported, both by Dr. Hammond, and Dr. Whitby; tho' the critical readers muſt be left to judge for themſelves, on the comparing of their ſeveral arguments, which we have not room here to bring to the ballance.

Why ſtand we in jeopardy?] What folly would it be in us Chriſtians, to chuſe a religion which expoſes us continually to death and danger? Why ſhould we run the hazard of the loſs of eſtate, liberty, and life it ſelf, if there be no reſurrection in order to a retribution, when our courage and conſtancy for Chriſt and his holy religion ſhall be acknowledg'd and rewarded? "Why ſtand we in jeopardy every hour?" Intimating, that it would be the greateſt folly and madneſs, to ſuffer the worſt of evils for the ſake of Chriſtianity, if all our hopes periſh in the grave. To which the Apoſtle adds, That, as to himſelf, he died daily; that is, he was continually expos'd to death, in danger of it, in expectation of it, and in a preparation for it; which he would never have undergone, if he had not had an expectation of a glorious reſurrection. And to confirm the truth of what he ſays, he binds it with a moſt ſolemn proteſtation; "I proteſt by your rejoicing, which I have in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, I die daily:" That is, either, by all that joy which I have in your converſion, and by all that rejoicing which is found with me, for the ſucceſs of my miniſtry among you; or elſe, by all that rejoicing which I have in common with you and all Chriſtians, under the heavieſt ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt. (B.) See the notes on ver. 19. and ch. iv. 9.

If, after the manner of men, I have fought.] That St. Paul here refers to that which befel him at Epheſus, Acts xix. may appear, 1. By 2 Cor. i. 8. where he mentions his great perſecution in Aſia (of which Epheſus was the metropolis) and preſſure ſo heavy, that, ſaith he, I "deſpaired even of liſe;" having the ſentence of death paſs'd on him, as far as he could gueſs of himſelf, and ſo making his deliverance a wonderful unexpected act of God, a kind of raiſing him from the dead; 2. By the mention of "fighting with beaſts," which was a puniſhment that malefactors were condemn'd to in thoſe days: And of that, particularly in Aſia, we have an inſtance in thoſe firſt times, in the Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna there, about the martyrdom of Polycarpus; where they call the Aſiarcha to let looſe a lion upon Polycarpe: And by his anſwer there, that he might not, becauſe the agones were ended, three things will be obſervable; 1. That at that time in Aſia, where that was done, their feſtivities or ſolemnities, kept in honour of their gods, had theſe fightings with beaſts on the theatres annex'd to them, as a chief ceremony of them (ſee note on Acts xix. 31.) 2. That malefactors were wont to be puniſh'd at ſuch their feſtivities (as among the Jews at the Paſſover) not only to make their puniſhments more exemplary, but as a piece of ſacrifice to their gods. 3. That the Aſiarchæ, the governors of Aſia, that is, the chief officers among them, as they had the ordering of the agones, ſo they had the puniſhing of malefactors committed to them. Now, that St. Paul was condemned, at leaſt by the multitude deſigned, to this puniſhment at that time, may thus appear; 1. By the expreſs words of 2 Cor. i. 9. "we had the ſentence of death in our ſelves;" that is, paſſed on us, but, as it follows, God delivered him out of it: 2. By the phraſe kat' anthropon here (in the ſame ſenſe as crithenai kat' anthropous, 1 Pet. iv. 6. and to kat' eme, "as much as in me is," nothing on my part wanting, Rom. i. 15.) that is, ſaith Theophylact, as much as related to, or concerned men, parallel to that of (en heautois) in our ſelves, in that place to the Corinthians; that is, men ſo deſign'd me, tho' God took me out of their hands, ſnatched me out of the dangers; parallel to God's raiſing him from the dead there, and delivering him from ſo great a death, ver. 10. 3. By the ſtory in Acts xix. where, ver. 29. the city being in an uproar, they all with one conſent run to the theatre, the place where theſe bloody tragedies were acted, and haled Gaius and Ariſtarchus, two of Paul's companions, thither: And if Paul had come into ſight, they would have done ſo to him alſo; but the Chriſtians there would not permit him to come among them, ver. 30. And, ver 31. the Aſiarchæ, having ſome kindneſs to Paul, (a great work of God's providence that they ſhould) ſent and gave him warning, that he ſhould keep cloſe, and not give himſelf to the theatre; that is, not run the hazard, by coming out, to be carried thither; knowing the full purpoſe of the people to ſet him to the combating with wild beaſts, if he did. Which farther appears, by the Regiſter's words (in his ſpeech whereby he pacified the people) ver. 37. "Ye have brought theſe men, being neither robbers of your temple, nor blaſphemers of your goddeſs;" that is, Ye have dealt with them, as if they were ſome notorious malefactors, to be thus publickly puniſh'd on the theatre; whereas they have done nothing worthy of ſuch proceedings. This is a clear interpretation of theſe words, and gives a fair account of the kat'anthropon, ſo as to ſignify as far as man's purpoſe concerning us, who had condemn'd us to this death, tho' God delivered us; of which learned men have given ſo many, and ſo wide conjectures. (H.)

Let us eat and drink.] The force of the argument is this; If I have undergone all this, in hopes of a happy reſurrection, "what advantageth it me, if the dead riſe not?" If matters were ſo, it would be more reaſonable to ſay, "Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we die:" Then ſenſual fools would be the wiſeſt men, who gratify their appetites and brutiſh deſires; excepting that they ſhall ſhortly die, and there will be an end of them. (B.)

Be not deceived.] The foregoing atheiſtical ſpeech of the Epicureans, the Apoſtle here reproveth; refuting the verſe of one poet by a verſe of another poet, namely, Menander: After whoſe example, Arnobius, Lactantius, and many other of the ancient fathers, were wont to confute the Heathens, by the teſtimonies of the better ſort of their own Heathen philoſophers, orators, and poets. (Aſſ.) The verſe here cited from Menander, is what we tranſlate "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Where (chreſta ethe) good manners, according to Heſychius, doth not refer to actions, but to ſimplicity and deceiveableneſs of mind: And accordingly, it is moſt properly rendred good diſpoſitions, or good natures; of which it is ordinarily obſervable, that they are ſubject to be ſeduced, and miſled into error or falſe doctrine; as here, the denying of the reſurrection. And accordingly it is introduced, and inforced with a (me planaſthe) be not deceived; noting what corruption was here to be taken heed of; that of error. The rendring the phraſe good manners, refers it peculiarly to the ſenſe of being debauch'd and corrupt in their lives, which is not commodiouſly applicable to this place, which treats only of intellectual error; and therefore this other ſenſe is with more reaſon to be here faſtned on, That converſation and diſcourſe (ſo homilia ſignifies) with Hereticks, or philoſophers, who diſputed againſt the poſſibility of the body's returning to life, after it was once perfectly dead, might probably ſeduce and deceive eaſy, well-natured auditors, who are not ſo circumſpect as they ſhould be: And thus hath Theophylact interpreted it alſo. (H.) See Dr. Bynns's Sermon on this text.

Awake to righteouſneſs.] Here the Apoſtle, having prepared the way, and gain'd authority, by a firm and reſiſtleſs chain of arguments, exhorts his Corinthians to ſuitable faith and practice, with a noble earneſtneſs, and reproves them with a charitable ſeverity, "Awake to righteouſneſs:" Awake, and be ſober, (ſo the emphatical word, eknepſate, ſignifies;) for it looks like drunkenneſs and diſtraction in any one, by infidelity and vice to extinguiſh ſuch glorious hopes, ſuch joyous expectations, which are only ſupported by this grand article of the reſurrection. (Blackw.) Note alſo, 1. That ſin is frequently in Scripture compared to ſleep; and very fitly, becauſe ſinners apprehend things no better than men aſleep: All the apprehenſions of God and Chriſt, of heaven and hell, of eternity, and a life to come, are ſlight and hovering notions, wild and uncertain gueſſes; and the moſt ſubſtantial realities are, with them, but mere fancies: Again, he that is aſleep is void of all care and fear, full of forgetfulneſs, unapprehenſive of dangers; and ſuch is the ſinner, whilſt he continues aſleep in ſin, ſecure, but not ſafe. 2. That repentance is the ſoul's awaking out of the ſleep of ſin: The ſoul rouzes up, apprehends, and conſiders its danger, whilſt there is a poſſibility to eſcape it, and accordingly by repentance flies from the wrath to come. 3. That it is not enough that we awake from ſin, but we muſt "awake to righteouſneſs:" We muſt not only "eſchew evil, but do good;" for a negative holineſs ſaves none: The poſitive fruits of holineſs towards God, and righteouſneſs towards our neighbour, muſt be brought forth by us, and the duties of both tables be obſerved of us; this will be an argument of our ſincerity, and an ornament to our profeſſion: The want of this, the Apoſtle tells the Corinthians here, argued them not to have the true "knowledge of God," which was really matter of ſhame to them, conſidering the means and advantages enjoy'd by them: "Some have not the knowledge of God; I ſpeak this to your ſhame." (B.) He who believes not any other life beſides the preſent, does not believe in God. He who believes there is another, and yet continues in ſin, is rather in a mortal lethargy, than in a ſlumber or ſleep. There were even Atheiſts in the Church, at the time when the Apoſtle wrote this: Yet, it was ſome advantage, that he could hope to make them aſhamed of that ignorance, for which ſome perſons, now-a-days, even value themſelves! (Q.) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 11.

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49. But ſome man will ſay, How are the dead raiſed up? And with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou ſoweſt is not quickned except it die: And that which thou ſoweſt, thou ſoweſt not that body that ſhall be, but bare grain; it may chance of wheat, or of ſome other grain. But God giveth it a body as it hath pleaſed him, and to every ſeed his own body. All fleſh is not the ſame fleſh: But there is one kind of fleſh of men, another fleſh of beaſts, another of fiſhes, and another of birds. There are alſo celeſtial bodies, and bodies terreſtrial; but the glory of the celeſtial is one, and the glory of the terreſtrial is another. There is one glory of the ſun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the ſtars; for one ſtar differeth from another ſtar in glory. So alſo is the reſurrection of the dead. It is ſown in corruption, it is raiſed in incorruption: It is ſown in diſhonour, it is raiſed in glory: It is ſown in weakneſs, it is raiſed in power: It is ſown a natural body, it is raiſed a ſpiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a ſpiritual body. And ſo it is written, The firſt man Adam was made a living ſoul, the laſt Adam was made a quickning ſpirit. Howbeit, that was not firſt which is ſpiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is ſpiritual. The firſt man is of the earth, earthy: The ſecond man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, ſuch are they alſo that are earthy: And as is the heavenly, ſuch are they alſo that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly.

Some man will ſay.] Our Apoſtle, having fully prov'd the doctrine of the reſurrection of the body, in the foregoing part of the chapter, comes next to anſwer the objections that might be made againſt the body's reſurrection. And 1. That it ſeems impoſſible that the dead ſhould riſe: To this he anſwers, That it is as poſſible for the dead to riſe, as it is for corn ſown in the earth to be quickned after it dies in the earth. Corn ſoon rots and dies; yet doth not periſh by dying, but riſes up green, and freſh: Thus the body ſown in the grave is not loſt; tho' the parts of the body by death are diſſolved, yet they are not annihilated; they are ſcatter'd, but they are not periſh'd; they loſe not their entity when they part with their relation to humanity; whatſoever we loſe at death is not loſt to God; his knowledge is infinite, and his power unlimited; it is as eaſy for God to raiſe our bodies out of the duſt, as to make them at firſt out of nothing: Therefore Chriſt told the Phariſees who denied the reſurrection, That they "erred, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God," Mat. xxii. 29. 2. The next objection againſt the body's reſurrection, is this; Who, ſay the objectors, can deſcribe "with what bodies" the dead ſhall ariſe? Our Apoſtle's anſwer is to this effect, That our bodies ſhall ariſe the ſame in ſubſtance, tho' not in qualities; as corn ſown is raiſed in ſubſtance and kind the ſame, but diverſe in qualities, coming up with blade and ear, and corn in it: It does not riſe in the ſame figure in which it was ſown, but it riſes in the ſame nature in which it was ſown; That which was ſown wheat, ariſes wheat. Thus our bodies ſown in the grave ſhall riſe ſubſtantially the ſame, but different in qualities. Here note, That thoſe who did not believe the reſurrection of the body, judged it not only an impoſſible, but an unworthy, thing, for God to raiſe the dead; they look'd upon the body as the ſepulchre and priſon of the ſoul, and accounted it the ſoul's chiefeſt happineſs to be deliver'd from the body, eſteeming it a real puniſhment to the ſoul to be again reunited to ſo great a clog as the body is: Therefore, to this objection the Apoſtle returns a ſatisfactory anſwer, by ſhewing the happy change which ſhall paſs upon the raiſed body; declaring, That tho' it ſhall ariſe the ſame body in ſubſtance, yet vaſtly different in qualities; of a mortal body ſown, it ſhall riſe a ſpiritual body; of a vile body, be made a glorious body. (B.) The devil lays a dangerous ſnare for us, when he engages us in the explication of the manner wherein myſteries are accompliſh'd, that he may deſtroy in us the belief of the myſteries themſelves. Nature is ſubſervient to grace: Philoſophy, well underſtood, prepares the way for faith. To ſtudy nature, without raiſing our minds up to the Creator, is no better than folly. The true wiſdom conſiſts in diſcovering and owning the Creator in his creatures; and in finding in them ſufficient arguments to prove the truths of religion. (Q.)

It is ſown in corruption.] Here the Apoſtle gives a fourfold inſtance of the body's differing qualities in the reſurrection; "It is ſown in corruption;" that is, It is here a frail, mortal body, ſubject to putrefaction; but when raiſed, ſhall be incorruptible, that is, never more ſubject to death or diſſolution. It is here a vile body, ſubject to deformity and diſhonour, and when ſown or laid in the grave, is loathſome and unlovely; but ſhall be "raiſed in glory," a bright and beautiful body, ſhining like the ſun in the firmament of the heaven. It is thought we ſhall riſe in a full and perfect age, in full ſtrength, activity and vigour; and whereas our bodies now move heavily, they ſhall then aſcend and deſcend like angels. Again, "It is ſown in weakneſs;" that is, It is ſubject to weakneſs by labour, to decays by age, to impotency and waſtings by diſeaſes; and when it dies, it appears an impotent piece of clay. But it ſhall be "raiſed in power" by God's power; it ſhall be raiſed a powerful body; no more impotent, weak, or feeble; but ſtrong and active, vigorous and nimble; never ſubject more either to wearineſs or weakneſs. Laſtly, "It is ſown a natural body," an animal body, a body ſuited to this lower ſenſible ſtate, in which we live at preſent; and when it dies, it is ſown in the grave, like the body of a beaſt: But it ſhall be "raiſed a ſpiritual body." He doth not ſay, it ſhall be changed into a ſpirit, but into "a ſpiritual body;" a body it ſhall remain ſtill, but ſpiritualized. It is probable that our bodies will then be aerial and thin and light, more ſuited to the nature of the ſoul; as active as fire, as fine and thin as the air. More particularly note here, That the raiſed body will be a ſpiritual body in a threefold reſpect; 1. As it ſhall always be ſubject and ſerviceable to the ſpirit. Here the ſoul is ſubject to the body; the ſoul muſt go the body's pace: But at the reſurrection the body ſhall be everlaſtingly ſubject to the ſoul or ſpirit, and for that reaſon it is called a ſpiritual body. 2. It may be called a ſpiritual body, in regard of the great ſtrength and activity with which the body ſhall be then endowed; ſpirits are ſtrong, and ſo is every thing that is ſpiritual: The devil is call'd a ſpiritual enemy, becauſe he is a powerful enemy. Thus our ſpiritual bodies will be ſtrong bodies, and ſtrong had they need to be, that they may be able to bear that "exceeding weight of glory," as the Apoſtle calls it, 2 Cor. iv. 17. which would cruſh our bodies under it, were they not made ſtrong to bear it. 3. It is call'd ſpiritual, becauſe it will then need no natural helps to ſupport it, as meat, drink, ſleep, and clothing: We ſhall want theſe no more than the angels want them, being immediately ſupported by the power of God, as they are. Thus "it is ſown a natural body, but raiſed a ſpiritual body;" not attenuated into a ſpirit, but ſtill a body; a real, but ſpiritual body: The body after the reſurrection ſhall be true fleſh, but ſpiritualized, rarified and refined; it ſhall not loſe any perfection which it had, but gain many perfections which it had not. Hail happy day, when ſoul and body ſhall be re-united, and the happineſs of both compleated! How will the ſoul then bleſs God for that body which was here its inſtrument and aſſiſtant in the ſervice of God; and how will the body then bleſs God for ſuch a ſoul, which was ſo careful to ſecure an intereſt in that happineſs which it was created for, and made capable of! Then will full glory be poured into the ſoul; and when it is a ſecond time married to the body, it ſhall have a greater degree of glory than ever it had. (B.)

Made a quickning ſpirit.] Divines diſtinguiſh between ſoul and ſpirit; and ſo doth the Scripture here, "The firſt man Adam was made (eis pſychen zoſan) a living ſoul, the laſt Adam was made (eis pneuma zoopoioun) a quickning ſpirit." Where (pſyche) ſoul, is that by which we live naturally; (pneuma) ſpirit, is that by which we live, through grace, ſupernaturally: Or (as Calvin) ſoul ſignifieth the will, and ſpirit the underſtanding, Hebr. iv. 12. So Mary, ſaying, "My ſoul, and my ſpirit," Luke i. 46, 47. doth intimate, That ſhe did praiſe the Lord with attention in her underſtanding, and devotion in her affection. So alſo, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. and in all places, where the ſpirit and ſoul are mention'd together, by ſpirit is meant that noble and eminent faculty of man's ſoul, called the underſtanding or mind: And under this is the conſcience included; which being renew'd, is called alſo by the name of ſpirit, Rom. viii. 16. Eph. iv. 23. (Leigh) See the notes on John iii. 6. and Rom. v. 14. and viii. 29.

Ver. 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58. Now this I ſay, brethren, that fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I ſhew you a myſtery; We ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed: In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the laſt trump (for the trumpet ſhall ſound) and the dead ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, and we ſhall be changed. For this corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal muſt put on immortality. So when this corruptible ſhall have put on incorruption, and this mortal ſhall have put on immortality, then ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, Death is ſwallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory? The ſting of death is ſin; and the ſtrength of ſin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye ſtedfaſt, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, foraſmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

Fleſh and blood cannot inherit.] That "fleſh and blood" ſignifies that ſtate of growing, feeding, corruptible bodies, ſuch as theſe we carry about us, there is little doubt. How, or with what propriety it comes to do ſo, may receive ſome light from that of Homer; where, of the Gods, he ſaith, they eat no meat, nor drink any wine; therefore they have no blood, and are called immortal. Thus, in the Goſpel, 'tis ſaid of the Saints in Heaven, which are clearly anſwerable to the ſobereſt notion of their Gods, that "they neither eat nor drink," from hence (agreeably to that which Homer concludes from thence) they are here ſaid to be "fleſh and blood:" Nor, as it follows, corruptible; denoting the difference betwixt the natural body we have here, and the ſpiritual hereafter. (H.) The plain meaning is, that theſe natural bodies of ours, conſiſting of "fleſh and blood," as they are in this baſe, dreggiſh, and droſſy condition, "cannot inherit the kingdom of God," &c. (Hall) With what becoming ſeriouſneſs and ſolemnity does the great Apoſtle here diſcover the moſt ſublime and important myſteries that ever were reveal'd to Angels or men! In what an awful manner does he raiſe their attention and reverence! "Now, this I ſay, brethren, that fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.——Behold I ſhew you a myſtery." How many ſublime and glorious doctrines does this illuminated man diſcover in one breath! The order of the reſurrection, ver. 23. The end of Chriſt's mediatorial kingdom, ver. 24. &c. The agility, the brightneſs and glory of celeſtial, or reſurrection-bodies, ver. 36. &c. The different degrees of glory in perſons differently qualified, ver. 40. &c. That ſome Chriſtians ſhall ſurvive at the day of judgment, and undergo a change equivalent to death, and be transform'd in an inſtant into inutterable brightneſs and dignity, ver. 51. &c. Thoſe awful expreſſions, "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the laſt trump; for the trumpet ſhall ſound, and the dead ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, and we ſhall be changed," ſtrike every attentive reader with ſurprize and trembling. (Blackw.) See Biſhop Beveridge's ſermon on this text, and the notes on Matth. xvi. 17. Rom. xi. 25. and Biſhop Brown (of Cork)'s letter againſt Toland's Chriſtianity not myſterious.

This corruptible muſt put on incorruption.] Obſerve here the identical expreſſions uſed by the Apoſtle. He doth not ſay, corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and mortal muſt put on immortality; but this corruptible, and this mortal; to ſhew the identity and ſameneſs of it. Every man at the reſurrection ſhall receive the ſame body that now he hath, and be the ſame perſon that now he is: Tho' he be not in every conſideration what he was, yet he ſhall be who he was. If the ſame body that falls be not raiſed, it is not a reſurrection, but a new creation. Indeed it is both unreaſonable and unjuſt, that a perſon ſhould ſin in one body, and ſuffer in another; or ſerve God in one body, and be glorified in another. Job was clear in the belief of this, ch. xix. 26, 27. "In my fleſh ſhall I ſee God ——, and mine eyes ſhall behold him." This points out the reaſon of the reſurrection, and denotes the identity of it; that the ſame body ſhall ariſe again. (B.)

Swallowed up in victory.] Eis nikos; for ever: For ſo this phraſe is uſed, 2 Sam. ii. 26. Job xxxvi. 7. Jerem. iii. 5. and elſewhere; and never in any other ſenſe in the Septuagint: Tho' therefore death is repreſented as "the laſt enemy" to be vanquiſh'd, ver. 26. and the Apoſtle asks, "O grave, where is thy victory?" ver. 57. and gives "thanks to God who giveth us the victory," ver. 57. yet, ſince he hath given us the victory, by ſwallowing up death for ever, by ſwallowing up death of life eternal, 2 Cor. v. 4. I ſee no reaſon, why we ſhould think the Apoſtle had not here reſpect to the conſtant uſe of this phraſe in the Septuagint; it being plainly taken from Iſa. xxv. 8. (W.) Some read katepothe, ſwallowed down, or drunk up as at a draught: According to that phraſe of Chriſt, where he calls his ſufferings, by which he obtain'd victory over death, a cup, Matth. xx. 23. (B.) See the notes there, and on Rom. viii. 29.

O death, where is thy ſting?] In purſuance of his moſt rational and reſiſtleſs diſcourſe, St. Paul here, in the fervour of his ſpirit, and firmneſs of his faith, breaks out into a ſong of victory and triumph over death and the grave; by him deſcrib'd as dreadful tyrants, arm'd, and long victorious over human race. He repreſents the monſters as already ſubdued, and treads on the necks of thoſe univerſal conquerors. Then he paſſes on to adore our bleſſed deliverer, the great captain of our ſalvation, and raiſe a trophy of gratitude to the Lord of Hoſts, the only giver of all victory, the reſurrection and the life; who has brought immortality to light by his Goſpel, and triumph'd over hell and death, even upon the croſs. (Blackw.) See Dr. Alleſtree's Sermon on this text, and the notes on Rom. iv. 15. and v. 13.

Therefore, my beloved brethren.] How juſt, how moving and emphatical is this practical concluſion from the foregoing doctrine? "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye ſtedfaſt, unmoveable;" Where we have two ſtrong words to the ſame ſenſe, to expreſs the importance of the doctrine, and increaſe the vehemence of exhortation: "Always abounding in the work of the Lord." He doth not barely ſay working, or doing the work of the Lord; but abounding in it: Governing your own ſouls and bodies by an unblameable conduct, a pure and ſtrict diſcipline; ſerving God with ſincerity and fervency of ſpirit, and promoting the intereſts of mankind with indefatigable diligence and unceaſing labours of love. What labour can be a trouble; nay, what labour can be otherwiſe than the higheſt pleaſure to him, who is aſſured, that his Saviour "will change his vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body," Phil. iii. 21. will give him perfect conſummation and bliſs both in body and ſoul; and beſtow on him the ineſtimable reward of an immortal life of the ſweeteſt and moſt happy enjoyments? (Blackw.) See Mr. T. Fyſon's ſermon on this text, and the notes on ch. iii. 8.

CHAP XVI.

The Apoſtle exhorteth them to relieve the wants of the brethren at Jeruſalem: Recommendeth Timothy: And after friendly admonitions, concludeth his epiſtle with divers ſalutations.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. NOW, concerning the collection for the ſaints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even ſo do ye. Upon the firſt day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in ſtore, as God hath proſpered him; that there be no gatherings when I come. And when I come, whomſoever ye ſhall approve by your letters, them will I ſend to bring your liberality unto Jeruſalem. And if it be meet that I go alſo, they ſhall go with me. Now I will come unto you, when I ſhall paſs through Macedonia (for I do paſs through Macedonia) and it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey, whitherſoever I go. For I will not ſee you now by the way, but I truſt to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit. But I will tarry at Epheſus until Pentecoſt. For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adverſaries.

Concerning the collection.] See the notes on Acts xi 29. and Rom. xv. 26.

The firſt day of the week.] See the notes on John xx. 26. and Acts xx. 27.

As God hath proſpered him.] The original word euodotai ſignifieth properly a happy journey or voyage; and by a figure is taken for any kind of proſperity or welfare: And the Apoſtle's meaning is, That every one ought to lay by and contribute, according as the Lord hath bleſſed him, 2 Cor. viii. 12. (Aſſ.) The Sunday-alms is, either the tenth of what we have received the preceding week, or elſe the firſt-fruits of what we are to ſpend the following; or rather both. (Q.)

Them will I ſend.] "Whomſoever ye ſhall approve" (di' epiſtolon toutous pempſo) them with letters will I ſend. Here the different pointing cauſes a different conſtruction. As it is commonly pointed with a comma after the word epiſtolon, our tranſlation renders it "approve by your letters:" But, Theophylact, and others, put the comma after (dokimazete) approve, and thereby make it more agreeable to good ſenſe and the Apoſtle's authority; thus, Ye ſhall have the approbation of the meſſengers, that ye may be ſatisfied of the due diſpoſal of your liberality, according to your intentions; and whom ye ſhall approve, I will ſend with my commendatory letters to Jeruſalem. This reading is preferr'd before the other, both by Grotius, Hammond and Whitby: And that it is the true ſenſe of the words, is evident; becauſe, when the Apoſtle was come to them, as he here ſuppoſes, there could be no need of their commendatory Epiſtles.

Paſs through Macedonia.] Not preſently; but after I have finiſh'd my ſtay at Epheſus, ver. 8. For that St. Paul wrote this Epiſtle from Epheſus, (as is obſerv'd in the Preface to it) and not from Philippi, may be gather'd from the ſalutations in the cloſe of it; not from the Churches of Macedonia, but of Epheſus. And 2 Cor. ii. 13. and vii. 5, 6. he ſays, he paſs'd from Troas to Macedonia; and that there Titus came to him; who was not yet come to him when he wrote this firſt Epiſtle. (W.)

Bring me on my journey.] See the notes on ver. 11. and Acts xv. 3.

Tarry at Epheſus until Pentecoſt.] See the notes on ver. 5.

For a great door and effectual.] As I have a great deal of hope, that I may be able to do much good, propagating the Goſpel in thoſe parts; ſo there are many who oppoſe the truth; which makes it the more neceſſary for me to ſtay there ſome time, to oppoſe, ſilence, and convince them. (Hall and H.) A truly faithful miniſter labours, like the Apoſtles, in the work of God; appearing in all places where he hopes to do him uſeful ſervice, without being at all affrighted at what the adverſaries of the Goſpel are able to do. (Q.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12. Now if Timotheus come, ſee that he may be with you without fear: For he worketh the work of the Lord, as I alſo do. Let no man therefore deſpiſe him: But conduct him forth in peace, that he may come unto me: For I look for him with the brethren. As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly deſired him to come unto you with the brethren: But his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he ſhall have convenient time.

If Timotheus come.] See the notes on ch. iv. 1, &c. Acts xvi. 1. and Rom. xvi. 21.

That he may be with you without fear.] That is, without fear of diſturbance from the factions which were among them at Corinth; and not expoſed to any trouble or danger from any party whatſoever. (G. and B.)

Let no man therefore deſpiſe him.] Either becauſe of his youth, or his bodily weakneſs and infirmities, or for any other cauſe whatſoever. (B.) See the notes on 1 Tim. iv. 12.

Conduct him forth in peace.] See the notes on Acts xv. 3.

Our brother Apollos.] Here obſerve, 1. How reſpectfully this great Apoſtle ſpeaks of Apollos, an inferior miniſter in the church of Corinth; "Our brother Apollos." Nothing better becomes the governors and paſtors of the Church than humility and condeſcenſion, ſincere love and affection, a due deference and regard towards thoſe who are under-labourers in our Lord's vineyard, to own and treat them as brethren, co-workers and fellow-helpers with them. God has not made his miniſters lions to tear one another, nor bulls to gore each other; but ſhepherds to watch over, and nurſes to cheriſh one another. 2. How St. Paul, tho' a dignified perſon, a great Apoſtle, left Apollos, an inferior miniſter of the Goſpel, to judge for himſelf, whether he had beſt go to Corinth or forbear; "I greatly deſired him to come to you, but his will was not to come:" He did not ſuſpend him, or ſilence him, for not obeying the voice of an Apoſtle; but let him take his choice. There may be, and ſometimes are, particular caſes and circumſtances, relating to our ſelves and our people, (as about going from them, or continuing with them) which none can adjuſt and determine ſo well as our ſelves. Perhaps Apollos here had greater and ſtronger reaſons for his refuſing, than St. Paul had for his requeſting him, to go to Corinth: However, the great Apoſtle only deſired him to go; not cenſuring him for his denial, but leaving him to the determination of himſelf, whoſe "will was not at all to go to them at that time." 3. What might probably be the reaſon, why Apollos had no inclination to go to Corinth at this time; no, not at the ſolicitation of St. Paul himſelf: Perhaps it was becauſe he would not encourage, or give the leaſt countenance to, a faction which was there begun under the authority of his name, 1 Cor. i. 12. Some ſaid, "I am of Apollos." A pious and prudent miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt ſeeks not his own applauſe, or his people's admiration; but what he does is with a ſpecial reſpect to their edification in holineſs, for preſerving unity, and promoting love, among each other. Afterwards, when St. Paul had by his Epiſtle allayed thoſe heats, and healed thoſe diviſions, which prevailed among them, we find Apollos did return to Corinth, and was no doubt very acceptable to them, and ſerviceable among them. (B.) See the notes on Acts xviii. 24, &c.

Ver. 13, 14. Watch ye, ſtand faſt in the faith, quit you like men, be ſtrong. Let all your things be done with charity.

Watch ye, &c.] Three duties are here exhorted to; namely, watchfulneſs, ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith, and holy fortitude and courage.

rage 1. Watchfulneſs, a neceſſary and daily duty: We cannot be ſafe one moment without it; ſomething we muſt watch over, ſomething we muſt watch againſt, and ſomething we muſt watch for. We muſt watch over our thoughts, our words, our actions; we muſt watch againſt all ſin, all appearance of ſin, all temptation to ſin, all occaſions of ſinning; we muſt watch for all opportunities of glorifying God, all opportunities of doing good to others, all opportunities of receiving good from others. 2. Stedfaſtneſs in the faith: Perſeverance in the faith of Chriſt, and ſtedfaſtneſs in his holy religion, is the great and indiſpenſible duty of every Chriſtian, who has a due regard to his ſoul's ſalvation; "Watch ye, ſtand faſt in the faith." 3. Chriſtian fortitude, and holy courage; "Quit your ſelves like men, be ſtrong:" Where we have the Chriſtian's ſpiritual enemies ſuppos'd and implied; ſin, Satan, and the world; and his duty declar'd, and himſelf encourag'd to play the man, in oppoſing or contending with, and ſtriving againſt them. Verily a Chriſtian, above all men, needs courage and reſolution; he can do nothing as a Chriſtian, but it is an act of valour; it requires much more courage to be a Chriſtian, than to be a captain. Alas! How many of the valiant ſword-men of the world have ſhewed themſelves mere cowards, who have come out of the field with victory, and banners diſplay'd, but after all liv'd and died ſlaves at home, ſlaves to their baſe luſts? It requires more proweſs, more bravery and greatneſs of ſpirit to conquer our ſelves, than to command an army of men. Therefore "quit ye like men, be ſtrong." (B.) A Chriſtian is a ſoldier, ſurrounded and aſſaulted on all ſides. He ought to watch always, if he would never be ſurprized: He muſt not quit the poſt of the faith, and the fort of the Church, if he would not be made a prey to the enemy: He muſt fight with courage, if he would not be ſtorm'd: And he muſt fortify himſelf, and repair the breaches after attacks, that he may be able to ſuſtain more. (Q.) See the notes on Mat. xxiv. 42.

Let all your things be done with charity] Our Apoſtle having, in the beginning of this Epiſtle, reprov'd the Corinthians for their uncharitable ſchiſms and unchriſtian diviſions, he now, at the concluſion of it, lays down this excellent rule of advice, To do all things in love, for and towards one another. Where a true principle of Chriſtian charity prevails among the members of a church, it will caſt out ſelfiſhneſs, pride, envy and diviſion, and keep them from raſh cenſuring, deſpiſing, and abuſing one another, and alſo from ſeparating from the communion of each other. The ſum of all the commandments, both towards God, and towards our neighbour, is love. It is not praying, hearing, or receiving at the Lord's table, which is the fulfilling of the commandment, but when theſe duties are done in love: And we may do many things commanded towards men, yet, if we do them not in love to men, we do nothing as the Lord commanded. Therefore, "let all things be done with charity," or love. (B.) See Dr. Rawſon's Sermon on this text, and the notes on ch. xiii. and John xiii. 34.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18. I beſeech you, brethren (ye know the houſe of Stephanas, that it is the firſt-fruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themſelves to the miniſtry of the ſaints) that ye ſubmit your ſelves unto ſuch, and to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth. I am glad of the coming of Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus: For that which was lacking on your part, they have ſupplied. For they have refreſhed my ſpirit and yours: Therefore acknowledge ye them that are ſuch.

The houſe of Stephanas] See the notes on Acts xvi. 33. and Rom. xvi. 5.

To the miniſtry of the Saints.] That is, They were very forward to aſſiſt the poor Chriſtians with their eſtate and labour. There is no better evidence of our intereſt in Chriſt, than an entire affection, and operative compaſſion, to all our fellow-members in Chriſt, for grace's ſake. (B.) See the notes on Acts xi. 29. and Rom. xii. 7.

I am glad of the coming.] The faithful in the Church of Corinth having ſent theſe three perſons (as is obſerv'd in the Preface) to St. Paul, at this time at Epheſus, to acquaint him with the ſtate of the Church, the rents and ſchiſms that were amongſt them, and to deſire the interpoſure of his authority, and the exerciſe of his apoſtolical power, in order to the healing of thoſe unhappy breaches: Now, ſays the Apoſtle, I was "glad of the coming of theſe men," whom ye ſent with your letters of enquiry to me; for that account of your affairs which was lacking on your part in your letter, they have ſupplied:" I am glad, I ſay, "for they have refreſhed my ſpirit" with their preſence and diſcourſe, and will at their return refreſh your's alſo; "therefore acknowledge ye them that are ſuch," own their ſervices, and honour them for the ſame. There is a tribute of double honour, reſpect and reverence, due and payable to ſuch as labour in the Church's ſervice, even unto wearineſs, and are willing to ſpend and be ſpent in ſuch ſervices as they are capable of for the benefit of the Church in general, or any member thereof in particular. (B.)

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. The churches of Aſia ſalute you. Aquila and Priſcilla ſalute you much in the Lord, with the church that is in their houſe. All the brethren greet you. Greet ye one another with an holy kiſs. The ſalutation of me Paul with mine own hand. If any man love not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be anathema, maranatha. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you. My love be with you all in Chriſt Jeſus. Amen.

¶ The firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians was written from Philippi, by Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus, and Timotheus.
